feſſions, at leaſt on Sir Robert's part, were only external (a). In the mean while, the Earl of Eſſex continued his ſolicitations to the Queen, with almoſt unparalelled earneſtneſs and perſeverance; nor was Mr. Bacon himſelf deficient in uſing his utmoſt endeavours to remove her Majeſty's prejudices againſt him; but all in vain. He was, at length, totally diſappointed both of the Attorneyſhip and the Solicitorſhip, which laſt his patron would gladly have procured for him, when the former could not be obtained (b). And yet it appears, that, while the affair of his preferment was depending, the Queen was pleaſed to employ him on ſome buſineſs of truſt, the nature of which is not now known (c). With reſpect to his advancement, he had ſuch a conviction of Lord Keeper Puckering's having treated him with inſincerity, that he expoſtulated with him very freely upon the ſubject, by which his Lordſhip was greatly offended (d). It is ſaid by Mr. Mallet, that Mr. Bacon's repeated diſappointments ſunk ſo deep into his ſpirit, that he was ſeveral times on the point of retiring for ever, and even of hiding his grief and reſentment in ſome foreign country (e). And a late writer informs us, that he was ſo much diſguſted with his being refuſed that preferment, which he thought he had a natural right to expect, that he had once entertained a deſign of relinquiſhing his profeſſion, and retiring to Cambridge, with a view of dedicating the remainder of his days to ſcience and philoſophy. It would probably, as the ſame author judiciouſly remarks, have been advantageous to the character of Bacon, and of the higheſt benefit to the learned world, if he had really adopted this deſign (f). Though we do not diſpute the truth of the preceding aſſertions, we have not been able to find out the authorities on which they are grounded.

(a) Ibid. 195, 196.

(b) Ibid. p. 166—168. 171, 172. 271, 272.

(c) Ibid. p. 179, 180.

(d) Ibid. Bacon's Works, Vol. ii. p. 421—424.

(e) Mallet's Life of Bacon, p. 27.

(f) Britiſh Biography, Vol. iv. p. 133.

To return a little backwards: In 1593, Mr. Bacon formed an intimacy with the famous Antonio Perez, then in England, which gave great diſguſt to Lady Ann Bacon, who expreſſed, in ſevere terms, the extreme concern ſhe felt at both her ſons having entered into a connection with a man of whom ſhe had conceived a very bad opinion (g). It is ſaid in Birch's Memoirs, that Bacon made his firſt pleading in the caſe of the heir of Lord Cheney, about the latter end of January 1593-4 (h). And he is repreſented as having been ſoon after called to diſtinguiſh himſelf, with much commendation, in other public cauſes (i). We do not well know how to reconcile this account of things with the relation that is given of his early practice, and of his having been appointed Counſel learned in the law extraordinary to Queen Elizabeth in the twenty-eighth year of his age; unleſs we ſuppoſe that his practice had hitherto been entirely of a private nature, or confined to inferior courts. If it were ſo late before he engaged in public pleadings, it is the leſs ſurprizing that there ſhould be ſome reluctance in conſtituting him Attorney or Solicitor General; and, perhaps, the zeal of the Earl of Eſſex, in ſo ſtrongly inſiſting upon the former poſt for him, is more to be commended than his wiſdom. Among the perſons of rank and diſtinction, who were attached to the intereſts of Mr. Bacon, and ſolicitous for his promotion, was Mr. Fulke Greville. This accompliſhed gentleman, who was an eminent patron of able men in their ſeveral profeſſions, exerted his influence upon the Queen with ſuch an expectation of ſucceſs, that he ſays, in a letter to Mr. Bacon, he would lay 100 l. to 50 l. that he would be her Solicitor. A few days after the writing of this letter, we find Mr. Bacon at Cambridge, where, on the 27th of July 1594, he was created Maſter of Arts (k).

(g) Birch's Memoirs, Vol. i. p. 140—145.

(h) Ibid. p. 147, 148.

(i) Ibid. p. 152. 154, 155.

(k) Ibid. p. 178, 179. 181.

Sometime after his diſappointment, her Majeſty (l) treated him with ſuch appearances of grace and truſt, as ſeemed to raiſe in him freſh hopes of profiting by her favour. Accordingly, when Sir Thomas Egerton was advanced to the dignity of Lord Keeper, Mr. Bacon had a view of ſucceeding him as Maſter of the Rolls. But, whether there was any probability or not of the ſcheme's becoming otherwiſe effectual, it was rendered impracticable by Sir Thomas's retaining that office, together with the Keeperſhip, till after the death of Elizabeth (m).

(l) In 1596.

(m) Birch's Memoirs, ubi ſupra, p. 468. 481.

In 1597, Mr. Bacon formed a deſign of bettering his fortune by marriage. The Lady he had a view to, was Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Thomas Cecil, eldeſt ſon of the Lord Treaſurer. She had lately become a rich widow, by the death of her huſband, Sir William Hatton. Mr. Bacon immediately communicated his intention to the Earl of Eſſex, who was then ſetting out upon his expedition to Spain, and deſired his Lordſhip's intereſt in ſupport of his pretenſions. That nobleman embraced the cauſe of his friend with his wonted zeal, and inſtantly diſpatched two letters from Sandwich, to be given to the father and mother of the Lady [MM]. It was not likely that Bacon ſhould [MM] To be given to the father and mother of the Lady.] The letter to Sir Thomas Cecil was as follows:

'SIR,

'I Write this letter from the ſea ſide ready to go abroad, and leave it with my Secretary to be by 'him delivered to you, whenſoever he ſhall know, 'that my dear and worthy friend Mr. Francis Bacon 'is a ſuitor to my Lady Hatton your daughter. 'What his virtues and excellent parts are, you are not ignorant. What advantages you may give both to yourſelf and to your houſe, by having a ſon-in-law ſo qualified, and ſo likely to riſe in his profeſſion, you may eaſily judge. Therefore, to warrant my moving of you to incline favourably to his ſuit, I will only add this, that if ſhe were my ſiſter or daughter, I proteſt I would as confidently reſolve to farther it, as I now perſuade you. And though my love to him be exceedingly great, yet is my judgment nothing partial; for he that knows him as well as I do, cannot but be ſo affected.

ſhould ſucceed in an application which depended ſo much on the favour of the Cecils. Lady Hatton afterwards married his great rival and antagoniſt, the Attorney General Coke (n).

(n) Ibid. Vol. ii. p. 346—348.

It was the more neceſſary for Mr. Bacon to endeavour at ſome methods of improving his fortune, as his affairs were, at this time, in the greateſt perplexity. His circumſtances were ſo embarraſſed about a year after his intention of making propoſals of marriage to Lady Hatton, that he had the mortification of being arreſted, as he returned from the Tower, where he had been attending on ſome important buſineſs of a public nature. The perſon, at whoſe ſuit he was attached, was one Sympſon, a goldſmith in Lombard-ſtreet, and the ſum was for three hundred pounds. Mr. Bacon complained heavily of this tranſaction, to Sir Thomas Egerton and Sir Robert Cecil, as a diſhoneſty to himſelf (no warning having been given him), and as a contempt thrown upon her Majeſty's ſervice (o). Notwithſtanding the uneaſineſs he muſt have felt, and the other difficulties he could not avoid being expoſed to, from the diſtreſs of his private fortune, he ſtill retained vigour of mind ſufficient to proſecute his ſtudies with ardour, and to take an active part in the debates of Parliament. In the latter end of 1597, he had made a motion in the Houſe of Commons, againſt incloſures and depopulation of towns and houſes of huſbandry and tillage; and, in his ſpeech upon this occaſion, had uſed the very ſame arguments which have been urged, again and again, in the preſent age, in oppoſition to the like meaſures (p). He had ſpoken, likewiſe, in favour of the ſubſidy (q).

(o) Letters, &c. of Lord Bacon, p. 16—19.

(p) Parl. Hiſt. Vol. iv. p. 414.

(q) Bacon's Works, Vol. i. p. 616—618.

With regard to Mr. Bacon's conduct towards the Earl of Eſſex, little needs to be added. The latter part of it is ſo far from being capable of a full vindication, that it can ſcarcely be at all extenuated; and yet it is but doing an act of juſtice to him to remark, that he ſeemed as willing to ſerve that nobleman as the timidity of his nature, and his deſire of recommending himſelf to the government, would permit. He not only diſſuaded, but proteſted againſt the Earl's going to Ireland, repreſenting to him, with as much vehemency and aſſeveration as he could, that his abſence would exulcerate the Queen's mind in a manner that would be ill for her, ill for him, and ill for the ſtate. Mr. Bacon farther inſiſted upon it, that the enterprize would be attended with ſuch difficulties as would diſappoint his Lordſhip's hopes, and greatly diminiſh his reputation (r). The Earl not paying a regard to his repreſentations, Mr. Bacon wrote to him, juſt before he ſet out on his Iriſh expedition, a letter of advice, which ſhews the real concern which the writer had for his noble friend's honour and ſucceſs (s). When the Queen expreſſed a vehement diſlike of Eſſex's proceedings in Ireland, Mr. Bacon adviſed her Majeſty to continue him about her own perſon, with a white ſtaff in his hand, as Lord Leiceſter had, for ſociety to herſelf, and for an honour and ornament to her attendance and Court (t). Upon the Earl's return, and during his impriſonment in the Lord Keeper's houſe, Mr. Bacon, as he has particularly related in his apology, endeavoured ſeveral times to ſoften the reſentment of Elizabeth (u) [NN]. But the (r) Bacon's Works, Vol. i. p. 608. Birch's Memoirs, Vol. ii. p. 395.

(s) Ibid. Bacon's Works, Vol. ii. p. 458.

(t) Ibid. Vol. i. p. 608. Birch, ubi ſupra, Vol. ii. p. 432.

(u) Bacon's Works, Vol. i. p. 606—614. Birch, as before, p. 438—440.

'affected. In this farewel of mine I pray receive the 'kindeſt wiſhes of 'your moſt affectionate

Sandwich, this 24th of June. 'and aſſured friend,

'Eſſex.'

Lady Cecil, to whom the next letter was addreſſed, was one of the daughters and co-heirs of John Nevil, Lord Latimer.

MADAM,

'THE end in my writing to your Ladyſhip now, 'is to do that office to my worthy and dear 'friend, which, if I had ſtayed in England, I would 'have done by ſpeech; and that is, to ſolicit your 'Ladyſhip to favour his ſuit to my Lady Hatton, 'your daughter; which I do in behalf of Mr. 'Francis Bacon, whoſe virtues I know ſo much, 'as you muſt hold him worthy of very good fortune. 'If my judgment be any thing, I do aſſure your 'Ladyſhip I think you ſhall very happily beſtow 'your daughter. And if my faith be any thing, I 'proteſt, if I had one as near me, as ſhe is to you, 'I had rather match her with him than with men 'of far greater titles. And if my words do carry 'credit with your Ladyſhip, you ſhall make me very 'much bound to you, and ſhall tie me to be 'at your Ladyſhip's commandment,

Sandwich, the 24th of June, 1597. 'Eſſex (138).

(138) Birch, ubi ſupra, Vol. ii. p. 347, 348.

[NN] To ſoften the reſentment of Elizabeth.] Among other inſtances of Bacon's endeavours to moderate the Queen's indignation againſt Eſſex, there is a pleaſant circumſtance recorded concerning Sir John Haywarde's firſt part of the Life and Reign of King Henry the IVth. This work, the writer (then Dr. Haywarde, a Civilian) publiſhed in 1559, at London, in quarto, with a dedication to the Earl of Eſſex, in which were theſe expreſſions, Magnus ſiquidem es, et præſenti Judicio et futuri Temporis expectatione. The dedication, and the ſubject of the book, which was the hiſtory of the depoſing of King Richard the Second, gave new offence to her Majeſty, and occaſioned the author to be committed to priſon, where he continued for a conſiderable time. The Queen, who imagined that this hiſtory was a ſeditious prelude to inſpire the people with boldneſs and faction, and who thought there was treaſon in it, aſked Mr. Bacon whether he could not find paſſages in it that might involve that crime? To which he anſwered that for treaſon, he could find none, but for felony very many. And when her Majeſty aſked wherein? He told her the author had committed very apparent theft; for he had taken moſt of the ſentences out of Tacitus, and having tranſlated them into Engliſh, inſerted them into his text. At another time when the Queen could not be perſuaded, that the book was the performance of the writer whoſe name was prefixed, but that it had ſome more miſchievous author, and ſaid, with great indignation, that ſhe would have him racked to produce that author; Mr. Bacon replied, 'Nay, Madam, he is 'a Doctor, never rack his perſon, but rack his ſtyle; 'let him have a pen, ink, and paper, and help of 'books, and be enjoined to continue the ſtory where 'it breaketh off; and I will undertake, by collating 'the ſtyles, to judge, whether he were the author or 'no (139).'

(139) Birch's Memoirs, Vol. ii. p. 439. Bacon's Works, Vol. i. p. 610.

ſequel

ſequel of the ſtory, his pleading againſt his generous patron and friend, and the publiſhing of the declaration of his practices and treaſons, can admit of no palliation.

In the laſt Parliament of Queen Elizabeth, Mr. Bacon diſtinguiſhed himſelf more than ever, by the concern he took in public buſineſs, and the ſpeeches he made on various occaſions. Beſides propoſing a bill for the ſuppreſſing of abuſes in weights and meaſures, and ſpeaking in the queſtion upon the ſupply, he was very active in the debates that aroſe with regard to monopolies (w). The points he chiefly had in view were to ſhew his duty to her Majeſty, and to moderate the proceedings of the Commons, who were greatly and juſtly alarmed at the exceſs to which monopolies had been carried. At the acceſſion of King James the Firſt, Mr. Bacon's affairs continued to be ſo embarraſſed, that he appears to have been arreſted the ſecond time. This circumſtance, together with his having three Knights in his meſs at Gray's Inn, and the ſcheme he had now begun to form of obtaining Alderman Barnham's daughter in marriage, are aſſigned by him as reaſons why he wiſhed to be knighted, though no one could be more ſenſible of the proſtitution of that honour which then took place (x). From henceforward, his fortune and his dignities were continually increaſing; and if he had maintained an integrity and prudence of conduct proportioned to his eminent abilities, no man in a public ſtation could have ſhone with equal ſplendour. A paper or two which will farther illuſtrate the corrupt practices he was charged with, and the anſwers he was capable of making to the accuſations brought againſt him, will be inſerted in a note [OO]. We ſhall ſubjoin, likewiſe, ſome additional remarks on his perſonal character, his

(w) Parl. Hiſt. Vol. iv. p. 436. 440. 452. 461, 463. 475.

(x) Bacon's Letters by Birch, p. 23, 24, 25.

[OO] Will be inſerted in a note.] Beſides the accounts of the proceedings againſt Lord Bacon which may be met with in Franklyn, Ruſhworth, and the State Trials, there is a very full relation of the whole affair in the Parliamentary Hiſtory, from which we ſhall extract the particulars of the crimes he was accuſed of, and the anſwers or acknowledgments he made to each of them.

Corruptions charged on the Lord Chancellor with the Proofs thereof.

I. 'In the cauſe between Sir Rowland Egerton, 'Knt. and Edward Egerton, Eſq; the Lord Chancellor 'received 500 l. on the part of Sir Rowland, before 'he decreed the ſame. Proved by the depoſition of 'Sir Rowland Egerton, and John Brook, who pro'vided the money, and payed it to the Chancellor's 'agent. Bevis Thelwell depoſes he delivered 200 l. 'to the Lord Chancellor he received from Edward 'Egerton, in the ſame cauſe. And 400 l. more. 'Proved by the depoſitions of Sir Richard Young 'and Sir George Haſtings, Ralph Mereſill, and 'Triſtram Woodward.

II. 'In the cauſe between Hody and Hody, he 'received a dozen of buttons of the value of 50 l. 'a fortnight after the cauſe was ended. Proved 'by the depoſitions of Sir Thomas Perient and John 'Churchill; who ſpeaks of greater value by the re'port of Hody.

III. 'In the cauſe between the Lady Wharton 'and the coheirs of Sir Francis Willoughby, he re'ceived of the Lady 310 l. Proved by the depoſi'tions of the Lady Wharton, Richard Keeling, and 'Anthony Gardner.

IV. 'In Sir Thomas Monk's cauſe, he received 'of Sir Thomas, by the hands of Sir Henry Holmes, '100 l. but this was nine months after the ſuit was 'ended. Proved by the depoſition of Sir Henry 'Holmes.

V. 'In the cauſe between Sir John Trevor and 'Aſcue, he received of the ſaid Sir John 100 l. Prov'ed by the depoſition of Richard Keeling.

VI. 'In the cauſe between Holman and Young, he 'received of Young 100 l. after the decree made for 'him. Proved by the aforeſaid Richard Keeling.

VII. 'In the cauſe between Fiſher and Wrenham, 'after the decree was paſt, he received of Fiſher a ſuit 'of hangings worth 160 l. and better; which Fiſher 'gave by advice of Mr. Duke. Proved by the de'poſition of Sir Edward Fiſher.

VIII. 'In one Kenneday's cauſe he had of him a 'rich cabinet worth 800 l. Proved by the depoſition 'of James Kenneday.

IX. 'He borrowed of one Valore 1000 l. upon his 'own bond, at one time; and the like ſum at ano'ther time, on his own note, indorſed by Hunt, 'his ſervant. Proved by the depoſition of Peter 'Valore.

X. 'He received from Richard Scot 200 l. after 'his cauſe was ended; but upon a precedent pro'miſe; likewiſe, he had in the ſame cauſe 100 l. for 'Sir John Lenthal's part. Proved by the depoſitions 'of Richard Scot and Edward Sherborne.

XI. 'In a cauſe between Wroth and Sir Arthur 'Manwaring, he had of the former 100 l. Proved 'by John Churchill and John Hunt.

XII. 'Sir Ralph Hanſby, having a cauſe depend'ing before the Chancellor, he had of him 500 l. 'Proved by the depoſitions of * * * * * * XIII. 'William Counton had an extent granted 'him for a debt of 1200 l. the Lord Chancellor ſtay'ed it and wrote his letter; on which part of the 'debt was paid preſently, and part at a future day. 'The Lord Chancellor hereupon ſends to borrow '500 l. and, becauſe Counton was to pay to one 'Huxley 400 l. his Lordſhip required Huxley to for'bear it for ſix months, and thereupon obtains the 'money from Counton. The money being unpaid, 'ſuit grows between Huxley and Counton in Chan'cery; where his Lordſhip decreed Counton to pay 'Huxley the debt, with damages and coſts, when 'the money was in his own hands. Proved by the 'depoſition of William Counton.

XIV. 'In the cauſe between Sir William Brunker 'and Aubrey, the Chancellor received from Aubrey '100 l. Proved by the depoſitions of Chriſtopher 'Aubrey, Sir George Haſtings, and the letters from 'Aubrey to the Lord Chancellor.

XV. 'In Lord Montagu's cauſe he received from 'that Lord 6 or 700 l. and more was to be paid at 'the end of the cauſe. Proved by Bevis Thelwell.

XVI. 'In Mr. Dunch's cauſe, he received from 'him 200 l. Proved by Thelwell.

XVII. 'In a cauſe between Reynel and Peacock, 'the Lord Chancellor received from Reynel 200 l. 'and a diamond ring worth 5 or 600 l. Proved by 'the depoſitions of John Hunt and Sir John Reynel. 'He took of Peacock alſo 100 l. and borrowed '1000 l. without ſecurity, intereſt, or time of repay'ment. Proved by William Peacock and James 'Rolfe.

XVIII. 'In the cauſe between Smithwick and 'Wyche, he received from the former 200 l. which 'was repaid. Proved by John Hunt.

XIX. 'In Sir Henry Ruſſel's cauſe, he received 'money from him; but it is not certain how much. 'Proved by Hunt.

XX. 'In the cauſe of Mr. Barker, the Chancellor 'received of the ſaid Barker 700 l. Proved by 'the depoſitions of Robert Barker and Edward 'Sherborne.

XXI. 'There being a reference from his Majeſty 'to his Lordſhip, for a buſineſs between the Grocers 'and Apothecaries of London, he received of the 'Grocers 200 l. Proved by the depoſitions of Sir 'Thomas Middleton, Alderman Johnſon, and John 'Banbury. And he received, in the ſame cauſe of 'the [PP], his writings and philoſophy [QQ], and ſuch other incidental circumſtances as may be worthy of notice [RR.]

'the Apothecaries, who oppoſed the Grocers, a 'taſter of gold worth 40 or 50 l. together with a 'preſent of ambergreaſe. Proved by Sir Thomas 'Middleton and Samuel Jones. Alſo, of the new 'Company of Apothecaries, in the ſame cauſe 100 l. 'Proved by John Keilet and Gabriel Sheriffe.

XXII. 'He took of the French Merchants 1000 l. 'to conſtrain the Vintners of London to take from 'them 1500 tuns of wine. Proved by the depoſitions 'of Robert Bell, William Spright, and Richard 'Peacock. To accompliſh this buſineſs he uſed very 'indirect means, by colour of his office and autho-'rity, without bill or ſuit depending; terrifying the 'Vintners by threats and impriſonments of their 'perſons, to buy wines, for which they had no uſe 'nor need, at higher rates than they were at that 'time vendible. Proved by the depoſitions of John 'Child, Henry Aſhton, Thomas Heſſelfoote, Ralph 'Moor, Thomas Knight, and the Chancellor's own 'letters and orders.

XXIII. 'The Lord Chancellor hath alſo given 'way to great exactions by his ſervants, both in re-'ſpect of private ſeals, and likewiſe for ſealing of 'injunctions, with other things. Proved by Thomas 'Manwood and Richard Keeling.'

The Confeſſion and Humble Submiſſion of me the Lord Chancellor.

I. 'To the firſt article he confeſſed, That upon 'a reference from his Majeſty, of all ſuits between 'Sir Rowland Egerton and Edward Egerton, both 'parties ſubmitted to his award, by reciprocal recog-'nizances in 10,000 marks a-piece: That after 'divers hearings, he made his award with the advice 'of Lord Hobart; and, ſome days after, the ſums 'mentioned in the charge were delivered to him 'from Sir Rowland. That Mr. Edward Egerton 'flying off from the award, a ſuit was begun in 'Chancery by Sir Rowland Egerton, to have the 'award confirmed; and a decree was made there-'upon. That ſoon after his coming to the ſeal, 'when many preſented him, he received the 400 l. 'mentioned in this article, of Mr. Egerton; but, as 'he remembered, it was for favours paſt.

II. 'That in the cauſe between Hody and Hody, 'about a fortnight after the cauſe was ended, there 'were gold-buttons, about the value of 50 l. pre-'ſented him.

III. 'That in the cauſe between the Lady Whar-'ton, and the coheirs of Sir Francis Willoughby, he 'received of the Lady Wharton 200 l. in gold, and, 'at another time, an hundred pieces, while the cauſe 'was depending.

IV. 'That he received of Sir Thomas Monk one 'hundred pieces; but it was long after his ſuit was 'ended.

V. 'That he received of Sir John Trevor, as a 'new-year's-gift, 100 l. but he confeſſed it was while 'his cauſe was depending.

VI. 'In the cauſe between Holman and Young, 'he received of Young an 100 l. but it was long after 'his cauſe was ended.

VII. 'That while the cauſe was depending be-'tween Fiſher and Wrenham (or Wraynham) he did 'receive of Sir Edward Fiſher, a ſuit of hangings 'of the value of about 160 l. towards furniſhing his 'houſe; and was at the ſame time preſented by 'others, who were no ſuitors, with furniture for his 'houſe.

VIII. 'As to the charge of his receiving a cabinet, 'of the value of 800 l. of Sir John Kenneday; a 'cabinet was indeed ſent to his houſe by Sir John, 'but not of half that value; but he refuſed to 'accept it, and was determined to ſend it back 'again: That one Pinkney, who ſtood engaged for 'the money to pay for the cabinet, deſired he might 'have it; and thereupon Sir John entreated his 'Lordſhip, that he would not diſgrace him by return-'ing the gift, much leſs put it into a wrong hand; 'and that he was ready to return it to whom their 'Lordſhips ſhould appoint.

IX. 'He confeſſed he had borrowed 1000 l. of 'Valore; but looked upon it as a debt, and was 'obliged to repay it.

X. 'He acknowledged his receiving 200 l. of Mr. 'Scot, about a fortnight after the decree paſſed for 'him: And that he received 100 l. of Sir John 'Lenthall, about a month after the decree paſſed.

XI. 'That the cauſe between Wroth and Man-'waring was ended by his arbitrement, by conſent 'of parties, and he received of Mr. Wroth 100 l. 'about a month after the cauſe was ended.

XII. 'That he received of Sir Ralph Hanſby, 'while his cauſe was depending, 500 l.

XIII. 'That he did borrow the 500 l. mentioned 'in this article of Counton; but looked upon it as a 'debt which he was obliged to repay.

XIV. 'In the cauſe between Sir William Brounker 'and Aubrey, he did acknowledge his receiving 100 l. 'of Aubrey.

XV. 'He confeſſed he received money of the Lord 'Montagu, while his ſuit was depending, to the 'amount of 6 or 700 l.

XVI. 'He confeſſed his receiving 200 l. of Mr. 'Dunch; but thought it was ſome time after the 'decree.

XVII. 'He confeſſed his receiving 200 l. of Sir 'George Reynel, his near relation, at his firſt coming 'to the ſeal, to be beſtowed in furniture; but thinks 'this was before any ſuit began: And as to the 'diamond-ring he received of him while his cauſe 'was depending, charged to be worth 5 or 600 l. it 'was not of near that value; though, he confeſſed, 'it was too much for a new-year's-gift: He alſo 'confeſſed his receiving of 100 l. of Mr. Peacock, at 'his coming to the ſeal, as a preſent, and that he 'afterwards borrowed 1000 l. of him at twice; for 'which, he ſaid, he would take no ſecurity or intereſt, 'and gave him his own time for repaying it.

XVIII. 'He confeſſed his ſervant Hunt did receive '200 l. of Smithwick; but that he ordered it to be 'repaid.

XIX. 'That he did receive of Sir Henry Ruſſel '3 or 400 l. about a month after the cauſe was de-'creed; in which decree he was aſſiſted by two of 'the Judges.

XX. 'He confeſſed he received of Mr. Barker the '700 l. mentioned in this article, ſome time after the 'decree paſſed.

XXI. 'As to this article, he confeſſed, he received 'the ſums there mentioned, viz. of the Grocers, '200 l. of the Apothecaries, that ſtood with the Gro-'cers, a taſter of gold worth 40 or 50 l. and a preſent 'of ambergreaſe; and of a new Company of Apo-'thecaries, that ſtood againſt the Grocers, 100 l. 'But this was no judicial buſineſs, he obſerved, only 'a compoſition between the parties; and he thought, 'as they all received benefit by it, and were all three 'common purſes, there was no great matter in re-'ceiving what they voluntarily preſented.

XXII. 'To this article, in which he is charged 'with taking of the French Merchants, 1000 l. to 'conſtrain the Company of Vintners to take 1500 'tuns of their wine, with threatning and impriſon-'ing the Vintners becauſe they would not take their 'wines at higher prices than they were vendible, he 'confeſſed, Sir Thomas Smith did deal with him 'in behalf of the French Company, informing him, 'That the Vintners, by combination, refuſed to take 'the wines at any reaſonable prices, and that this 'would deſtroy their trade, which the ſtate was con-'cerned in; and that the Company would gratify 'him with 1000 l. for the trouble he ſhould take 'in it. He did, he confeſſed, thereupon endeavour 'to compromiſe matters between them, and prevent 'a ſuit, propounding ſuch a price as the Vintners 'might gain 6 l. a ton; and the King afterwards 'recommending the buſineſs to him, as a matter that 'concerned his cuſtoms, he dealt the more peremp-'torily in it, and did, for a day or two, reſtrain 'ſome of thoſe that were the moſt ſtiff, in a meſſen-'ger's hands; and afterwards the Merchants pre-'ſented him with 1000 l.

XXIII. 'To this article, That he had given way 'to the exactions of his ſervants, in reſpect of pri-'vate ſeals and injunctions, he confeſſed it to be a 'great fault, that he had looked no better to his 'ſervants (140).'

(140) Parl. Hiſt. Vol. v. p. 403—406. 411—415.

[PP] Additional remarks on his perſonal character.] It muſt be confeſſed that, in the preceding article, Lord Bacon's conduct is, in two or three caſes, too much palliated. For inſtance, what is ſaid in p. 463. 'That he had not either a very aſpiring, or a 'very covetous diſpoſition, but was content to wait 'the proper ſeaſons and favourable opportunities 'of riſing, which are brought forth by time,' cannot be conſidered as ſtrictly true. For, though he was not directly covetous, his profuſeneſs led him to one of the worſt effects of avarice, the accepting of bribes: And that he was of an aſpiring temper, is evident from his reiterated ſolicitations for preferment. His application for the Chancellorſhip was not carried on with all the dignity and honour deſcribed in p. 470. It appears that he urged his devotedneſs to the prerogative as the reaſon for his being raiſed to that high office. This, indeed, is ſo plain from the letter inſerted in the note [Z], wherein he tells the King, 'that he could only 'preſent him with Gloria in Obſequio, and that he 'dared to promiſe that, if he ſat in that place, his 'Majeſty's buſineſs ſhould not make ſuch ſhort turns 'as it had done, but a direction being once given, 'it ſhould be purſued and performed,' that we are ſurprized at the commendations beſtowed on the manner of Sir Francis Bacon's ſuing for the Chancellorſhip. Neither do we think that his depreciating the other perſons who might be thought of for the ſame poſt, redounds to his credit. In a letter which he wrote to King James on another occaſion, he ſays, 'when he that letteth (Sir Edward Coke) 'is gone, I ſhall endeavour, to the beſt of my power 'and ſkill, that there may be a conſent and united 'mind in your judges to ſerve you, and ſtrengthen 'your buſineſs (141).' We are afraid that his oppoſition to the marriage of Sir Edward Coke's daughter with Sir John Villiers, did not proceed ſo much from the exceſs of his fidelity and affection to Buckingham (which is aſſerted in p. 474.) as from a ſelfiſh policy, that, in this inſtance, was equally mean and unſucceſsful. With regard to Sir Francis Bacon's general conduct as a lawyer, ſeveral caſes might be mentioned which clearly ſhew how much he was guided by the King's inclinations and directions. Not to inſiſt upon other facts, the part he took in the affair of Peacham was highly diſgraceful. This matter hath been ſo well ſtated by a late judge, of the moſt incorruptible integrity, as well as of the ſoundeſt abilities, that it would be an injury to our readers not to tranſcribe the whole paſſage. 'True it is, that in Peacham's caſe, a 'MS. Sermon, in which were ſome treaſonable 'paſſages, found in his ſtudy, never, for aught 'appearing, preached or publiſhed, or intended to 'be ſo, was thought to bring him within this branch 'of the ſtatute; (high treaſon in compaſſing the 'King's death) and accordingly he was found guilty, 'but not executed. For whatever rule the court of 'King's Bench, where he was tried, might lay down, "many of the judges, ſaith Croke, were of opinion, "that it was not treaſon." This caſe therefore 'weigheth very little; and no great regard hath 'been paid to it ever ſince.

'And perhaps ſtill leſs regard will be paid to it if 'it be conſidered, that the King, who appeareth to 'have had the ſucceſs of the proſecution much at 'heart, and took a part in it unbecoming the Majeſty of the Crown, condeſcended to inſtruct his 'Attorney-general with regard to the proper meaſures to be taken in the examination of the de'fendant; that the Attorney, at his Majeſty's com'mand, ſubmitted to the drudgery of ſounding the 'opinions of the Judges upon the point of law, 'before it was thought adviſeable to riſque it at an 'open trial; that the Judges were to be ſifted ſepa'rately and ſoon, before they could have an opportu'nity of conferring together; and that, for this pur'poſe, four gentlemen of the profeſſion in the ſervice 'of the Crown were immediately diſpatched, one to 'each of the Judges; Mr. Attorney himſelf under'taking to practiſe upon the Chief Juſtice, of whom 'ſome doubt was then entertained.

'Is it poſſible, that a gentleman of Bacon's great 'talents could ſubmit to a ſervice ſo much below his 'rank and character! But he did ſubmit to it, and 'acquitted himſelf notably in it.

'Avarice, I think, was not his ruling paſſion. 'But whenever a falſe ambition, ever reſtleſs and 'craving, overheated in the purſuit of the honours 'which the Crown alone can confer, happeneth to 'ſtimulate an heart otherwiſe formed for great and 'noble purſuits, it hath frequently betrayed it into 'meaſures full as mean as avarice itſelf could have 'ſuggeſted to the wretched animals who live and die 'under its dominion. For theſe paſſions, however 'they may ſeem to be at variance, have ordinarily 'produced the ſame effects. Both degrade the man, 'both contract his views into the little point of ſelf'intereſt, and equally ſteel the heart againſt the re'bukes of conſcience, or the ſenſe of true honour.

'Bacon, having undertaken the ſervice, informeth 'his Majeſty in a letter addreſſed to him, that with 'regard to three of the Judges whom he nameth, he 'had ſmall doubt of their concurrence; "Neither, "ſaith he, am I wholly out of hope, that my Lord "Coke himſelf, when I have in SOME DARK MANNER "put him in doubt that he ſhall be left alone, will "not continue ſingular." Theſe are plain naked 'facts, they need no comment. Every reader will 'make his own reflections upon them. I have but 'one to make in this place. This method of fore'ſtalling the judgment of a court in a caſe of blood 'then depending, at a time too when the Judges 'were removable at the pleaſure of the Crown, doth 'no honour to the memory of the perſons concerned 'in a tranſaction ſo inſidious and unconſtitutional; 'and at the ſame time greatly weakeneth the autho'rity of the judgment (142).' Another thing which gives us pain, in examining the circumſtances of Lord Bacon's life, is his having ſubmitted without complaint, or remonſtrance, to the receiving continual applications from Buckingham, in favour of perſons whoſe cauſes came judicially before him in the court of Chancery. Theſe applications are ſo numerous that they form a very diſagreeable part (in Dr. Birch's collection) of the letters written to him when Lord Chancellor. However, this diſgrace is not peculiar to Bacon. The diſhonour is, in ſome meaſure, to be imputed to the corruption of Government, and the ſervile ſpirit of that time. We find that Buckingham uſed the ſame freedom with the Lord Keeper Williams; and it is probable that ſuch recommendations were then conſidered as leſs extraordinary and irregular than they would appear at preſent. Bp. Williams, however, ſhewed ſo much diſſatisfaction at this conduct of his patron, that it occaſioned ſome coldneſs between them (143).

Among the perſons who, in his own age, ſeverely condemned Lord Bacon's public character and conduct, we are not to reckon thoſe alone who may be conſidered as libellers, or the retailers of private ſcandal. Wilſon, who is acknowledged not to have been prejudiced againſt the Chancellor, ſpeaks of him in the following terms. 'He was the true 'emblem of human frailty, being more than a man 'in ſome things, and leſs than a woman in others. 'His crime was bribery and extortion; and theſe he 'had often condemned others for as a Judge, which 'now he came to ſuffer for as a delinquent. And 'they were proved and aggravated againſt him 'with ſo many circumſtances, that they fell very 'foully upon him, both in relation to his reception 'of them, and his expending of them. For that 'which he raked in and ſcrewed for one way, he 'ſcattered and threw abroad another: for his ſer'vants being young, prodigal, and expenſive youths, 'which he kept about him, his treaſure was their 'common ſtore, which they took without ſtint, hav'ing free acceſs to his moſt retired privacies; and 'his indulgence to them, and familiarity with them, 'opened a gap to infamous reports, which left an 'unſavoury tincture on him.' Theſe reports, which, we are perſuaded, were the reſult of ſuſpicions equally groundleſs and malignant, Wilſon doth not ſeem willing to believe. 'Innocency itſelf, ſays he, 'is a crime when calumny ſets her mark upon it. 'How prudent, therefore, ought men to be, that 'not ſo much as their garments be defiled, with the 'four breath of the times (144).' The corruption of Lord Verulam muſt be conſidered as the more deplorable and criminal, when we reflect, that, from the extent of his abilities, and the juſtneſs and beauty of his ideas, no one could have a ſtronger ſenſibility of what was becoming either a man or a magiſtrate. But, not to bear too hard upon him, let us hear what he was capable of alledging in his own behalf.

When

(141) Bacon's Letters, by Birch, p. 103.

(142) Sir Michael Foſter's Report and Diſcourſes, ſecond edit. 8vo. p. 198, —200.

(143) Bacon's Letters, by Birch, p. 113. note. Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, p. 107.

(144) Kennet's compleat Hiſtory of England, Vol. ii. p. 734. 736.

When he first began to be accuſed of abuſes in the office of Chancellor, he aſſumed the language of innocence, and wrote thus in a letter to Buckingham. 'Your Lordſhip ſpoke of purgatory. I am 'now in it. But my mind is in a calm; for my 'fortune is not my felicity. I know I have clean 'hands, and a clean heart; and, I hope, a clean 'houſe for friends or ſervants. But Job himſelf, or 'whoſoever was the juſteſt Judge, by ſuch hunting 'for matters againſt him, as hath been uſed againſt 'me, may for a time ſeem foul, eſpecially in a time, 'when greatneſs is the mark, and accuſation is the 'game (145).' On the ſame occaſion, in the draught of a paper intended to be delivered to the King, he diſtinguiſhed the bribery with which a Judge might be charged, into three degrees; Firſt, of bargain, or contract, for reward to pervert juſtice: Secondly, where the Judge conceives the cauſe to be at an end, by the information of the party, or otherwiſe, and uſeth not ſuch diligence, as he ought, to enquire into it: and Thirdly, when the cauſe is really ended, and the gift is ſine fraude, without relation to any precedent promiſe. Of the firſt kind he declared his entire innocence. With regard to the ſecond, he doubts that in ſome particulars he might have been faulty. And as to the third, he conceived it to be no fault: But in this reſpect, he deſired to be better informed, that he might be twice penitent, once for the fact, and again for the error. 'For I 'had rather, ſays he, be a briber, than a defender 'of bribes (146).' In a letter written to Buckingham, after his diſgrace, he expreſſes himſelf in the following terms. 'I praiſe God for it, I never took 'penny for any benefice or eccleſiaſtical living; I 'never took penny for releaſing any thing I ſtopped 'at the ſeal; I never took penny for any commiſſion, 'or things of that nature; I never ſhared with any 'ſervant for any ſecond or inferior profit. My 'offences I have myſelf recorded, wherein I ſtudied, 'as a good confeſſant, guiltineſs and not excuſe: 'and therefore I hope it leaves me fair in the King's 'grace, and will turn many men's hearts to me '(147).' To the other things which caſt a ſhade on Lord Bacon's character, muſt be added the meanneſs of his ſupplicatory letters after his fall. A diſpoſition that could ſtoop, in the abject manner which his did, to flatter the King, and intreat his forgiveneſs, will ever be condemned by impartial perſons. The only excuſe that can be alledged for him, is the extreme perplexity of his affairs, which reduced him to the neceſſity of ſoliciting his Majeſty's aſſiſtance and favour (148). Several of his letters to Buckingham are of the moſt humiliatory nature. This, however, is not the caſe with all of them: for he ſometimes employed himſelf in giving ſound and uſeful counſel to that proud favourite. From the apprehenſions which Lord Bacon expreſſed with regard to Buckingham's journey to Spain with the Prince of Wales, it is plain that he ſecretly diſapproved of the voyage (149). And in a letter which ſeems to have been written to that nobleman, in January 1623-4, he gave him moſt excellent advice, and with a becoming freedom, concerning the Spaniſh match, and the general ſtate of public affairs (150). It appears, too, that he had held ſeveral conferences with him on theſe ſubjects (151). At this time, by one of thoſe ſtrange revolutions in politics which occaſionally happen, Buckingham ſtood in favour with the King, the Prince, the Parliament, and the people (152).

Though we have enlarged ſo much on Lord Bacon's perſonal character, we cannot avoid taking notice of what hath been ſaid concerning it by two or three late hiſtorians. Mr. Guthrie is very moderate and candid in his cenſures of our Lord Chancellor. 'Bacon, ſays he, was generous, eaſy, good-'natured, and naturally juſt. But he had the miſ-'fortune to be beſet by domeſtic harpies, who, in a 'manner, farmed out his office; and he had given 'way to intolerable impoſitions upon the ſubject 'among the Maſters in Chancery.——Even in the 'charges againſt him in the Houſe of Commons, it 'appears as if ſome of the preſents that had been 'made to influence his juſtice, had neither come 'into his own pocket, nor been made with his 'knowledge. For ſome decrees had been given 'againſt the corrupters; and reſentment for this, 'had brought them to accuſe him in the Committee 'of the Commons (153).' Mr. Hume's account of the Lord Chancellor's conduct, though written with much candour, is ſomewhat more pointed. He obſerves, that Bacon was 'a man univerſally admired 'for the greatneſs of his genius, and beloved for the 'courteouſneſs and humanity of his behaviour. He 'was the great ornament of his age and nation; 'and nought was wanting to render him the ornament of Human Nature itſelf, but that ſtrength 'of mind, which might check his intemperate deſire 'of preferment, that could add nothing to his dignity, and reſtrain his profuſe inclination to expence, that could be requiſite neither for his honour 'nor entertainment. His want of Oeconomy, and 'his indulgence to ſervants, had involved him in 'neceſſities; and, in order to ſupply his prodigality, 'he had been tempted to take bribes, and that in a 'very open manner, from ſuitors in Chancery. It 'is pretended, that, notwithſtanding this enormous 'abuſe, he had ſtill, in the ſeat of juſtice, preſerved 'the integrity of a Judge, and had given juſt decrees 'againſt thoſe very perſons, from whom he had received the wages of iniquity. Complaints roſe 'the louder on that account, and at laſt reached 'the Houſe of Commons, who ſent up an impeachment againſt him to the Peers. The Chancellor, 'conſcious of guilt, deprecated the vengeance of his 'judges, and endeavoured, by a general avowal, to 'eſcape the confuſion of a ſtricter enquiry. The 'Lords inſiſted on a particular confeſſion of all his 'corruptions. He acknowledged twenty-eight ar-'ticles (154).' Mrs. Macaulay, who doth not ſuffer herſelf to be ſeduced, by the ſhining qualities, and even private virtues, of characters, into a palliation of the delinquency of their public principles and conduct, ſpeaks of Lord Bacon with great ſeverity. 'Thus, ignominious, ſays this ingenious 'Lady, was the fall of the famous Bacon, deſpicable 'in all the active parts of life, and only glorious in 'the contemplative. Him the rays of knowledge 'ſerved but to embelliſh, not enlighten; and Phi-'loſophy itſelf was degraded by a conjunction with 'his mean ſoul: we are told, that he often lamented 'that ambition and falſe glory had diverted him from 'ſpending his whole time in the manner worthy 'of his extenſive genius: but there is too much 'reaſon to believe from his conduct, that theſe ſentiments aroſe from the weight of his mortifications, 'and not from the conviction of his judgment. He 'preferred mean applications to James, and con-'tinued to flatter him ſo far, as to paint his grand-'father Henry the Seventh, in an amiable light.' The ſame writer adds (155), with regard to the letters written by Buckingham, in favour of different people who had cauſes depending in Chancery, that 'there is great reaſon to believe, that every one of 'theſe mandates were implicitly obeyed by the obe-'dient Chancellor (156).' When, however, we recollect the aſſertion of Ruſhworth (157), 'that 'his decrees were generally made with ſo much 'equity, that, though gifts rendered him ſuſpected 'for injuſtice, yet never any decree made by him 'was reverſed as unjuſt,' we would hope that his obedience to the mandates of Buckingham was not entirely ſo implicit as Mrs. Macaulay ſuppoſes.

Upon the whole, notwithſtanding the ſoftenings which Lord Bacon's character may, in ſome reſpects, admit of, from the ſpirit of the times, from his own peculiar circumſtances, and from other conſiderations, yet, when we call to mind his ſlaviſh ſubmiſſion in general to the will of the Crown, and eſpecially his ingratitude to Eſſex, and his corruption as a Judge, we are obliged, though with the greateſt regret, to join with Mr. Pope, in ſtyling him,

The wiſeſt, brighteſt, meaneſt of mankind.

[QQ] His writings and philoſophy.] Mr. Chamberlain, in a letter to Sir Dudley Carleton, dated at London, Oct. 28, 1620, mentions, that Mr. Cuffe, the Earl of Eſſex's Secretary, having long ſince peruſed the Novum Organum, gave this cenſure, that a fool could not have written ſuch a work, and that a wiſe man would not. And in another letter, written in the February following, Mr. Chamberlain takes notice, that the King could not forbear, ſometimes, in reading that book, to ſay, that it was like the peace of God, that ſurpaſſeth all underſtanding (158). As the Novum Organum was a long time in digeſting and completing, and was not publiſhed

(145) Letters ubi ſupra, p. 265.

(146) Ibid. p. 268, 269.

(147) Ibid. p. 388.

(148) Ibid. p. 385—387.

(149) Ibid. p. 332. 337.

(150) Ibid. p. 356—362.

(151) Ibid. p. 352—358.

(152) Kennet's compleat Hiſt. Vol. ii. p. 779—780.

(153) Brit. Biog. Vol. iv. p. 147.

(154) Hume's Hiſtory of Great Britain, Vol. vii. p. 52. 8vo edit. 1763.

(155) In a note.

(156) Macaulay's Hiſtory of England, Vol. i. p. 163, 164. 4to.

(157) See note [HH].

(158) Letters, ubi ſupra, p. 236, note.

liſhed till the year 1620, it could probably be only a ſketch of it that was ſeen by Mr. Cuffe, who was executed in 1601. Even if the work had been in a more perfect ſtate, Cuffe might be incapable of judging properly concerning its merit. For, though he was a man of parts, he was a pragmatical, conceited man, who delivered his opinions with more freedom than knowledge or diſcretion, and who might be engaged too much in political intrigues, to pay a due attention to an object which required the cloſeſt thought and reflection. As to King James, it is not at all ſurpriſing that he ſhould paſs ſuch a judgment on the Novum Organum. Though not deſtitute of learning, his learning was merely of the pedantic kind, and his underſtanding was wholly unequal to the ſubject. Wiſer men have not always been ſufficiently ſenſible of Lord Bacon's philoſophical excellencies, and of the value of the new ſpecies of Logic which he attempted to introduce. In the extract from the worthy and learned Mr. Thomas Baker, given in the note [EE], we may obſerve a certain degree of prejudice; and the concluding ſentence, in particular, is very weak: for Lord Bacon meant only to encourage that kind of free-thinking, which is the true honour of Human Nature, and muſt ever be attended with the moſt beneficial conſequences. Mr. Hume was diſpoſed to qualify and leſſen the praiſes of our illuſtrious Philoſopher. 'The great glory of literature, ſays he, in this 'iſland, during the reign of James, was my Lord 'Bacon. Moſt of his performances were compoſed 'in Latin; though he poſſeſſed neither the elegance 'of that, nor of his native tongue. If we conſider 'the variety of talents diſplayed by this man; as a 'public ſpeaker, a man of buſineſs, a wit, a courtier, a companion, an author, a philoſopher; he 'is juſtly the object of great admiration. If we 'conſider him merely as an author and philoſopher, 'the light in which we view him at preſent, though 'very eſtimable, he was yet inferior to his contemporary Galileo, perhaps even to Kepler. Bacon 'pointed out at a diſtance the road to true philoſophy: Galileo both pointed it out to others, and 'made himſelf conſiderable advances in it. The 'Engliſhman was ignorant of geometry: the Florentine revived that ſcience, excelled in it, and was 'the firſt who applied it, together with experiment, 'to Natural Philoſophy. The former rejected, with 'the moſt poſitive diſdain, the ſyſtem of Copernicus: the latter fortified it with new proofs, derived 'both from reaſon and the ſenſes. Bacon's ſtyle is 'ſtiff and rigid: his wit, though often brilliant, is 'ſometimes unnatural and far-fetched; and he ſeems 'to be the original of thoſe pointed ſimilies and 'long-ſpun allegories, which ſo much diſtinguiſh the 'Engliſh authors: Galileo is a lively and agreeable, though ſomewhat a prolix writer. But 'Italy, not united in any ſingle government, and 'perhaps ſatiated with that literary glory, which it 'has poſſeſſed both in ancient and modern times, 'has too much neglected the renown which it has 'acquired by giving birth to ſo great a man. That 'national ſpirit, which prevails among the Engliſh, 'and which forms their great happineſs, is the cauſe 'why they beſtow on all their eminent writers, and 'on Bacon among the reſt, ſuch praiſes and acclamations, as may often appear partial and exceſſive (159).' In anſwer to theſe ſtrictures, it hath been juſtly obſerved by the author of the Britiſh Biography, that 'Galileo was undoubtedly an 'illuſtrious man, and Kepler an admirable Aſtronomer: but though we admit their ſuperiority in 'Aſtronomy, Mechanics, and ſome particular 'branches of phyſical knowledge, it does by no 'means follow, that either of them were greater 'Philoſophers than Bacon. The praiſe of Bacon is 'founded not upon his ſkill in this or that particular 'branch of knowledge, but on his great and comprehenſive underſtanding, which took in almoſt 'the whole extent of univerſal ſcience. And he was 'ſo little indebted to the partiality of his countrymen, that his writings appear, for ſome time at 'leaſt, to have been more eſteemed and admired in 'foreign countries than in England (160).' With theſe remarks we entirely concur; and, indeed, we think that it was wholly needleſs, and very invidious, in Mr. Hume, to make the compariſon he hath done between Lord Bacon and Galileo. The reputation of each of theſe great men ſtands upon its proper and diſtinct baſis. We have no inclination to detract any thing from the leaſt portion of Galileo's fame: but it may not be amiſs to tranſcribe an obſervation of Dr. Teniſon's. 'Galileo farther im-'proved the doctrine of Copernicus; diſcovered, by 'teleſcopes, new ſtars in the Heavens; wrote dia-'logues concerning the ſyſtem of the world, and 'touching local motion; which latter is the key 'that openeth Nature. But he deſcended not to the 'ſeveral claſſes of bodies in Nature, and the par-'ticulars contained in them, and their reſpective 'motions and uſes. Neither did he publiſh any 'thing, till many years had paſſed, ſince Mr. 'Bacon had formed and modelled in his thoughts, 'his larger idea of experimental Knowledge (161).' It is really ſurpriſing what different judgments will be formed by different perſons, in the peruſal of the ſame works. The writer of theſe notes cannot eaſily conceive how Mr. Hume could read Lord Bacon with attention, and yet deliver an opinion of him ſo phlegmatic, and, comparatively, ſo much to his prejudice. For my part, after reperuſing ſome of his capital productions, I find my admiration of him highly increaſed, and feel no diſpoſition to criticiſe on ſlight imperfections. It is not eaſy to deſcribe the ſtrength and extent of his genius: 'His precious 'bequeſts to poſterity,' as Mrs. Macaulay finely obſerves, 'paint them ſtronger than can any other 'pen (162).' It muſt, nevertheleſs, be confeſſed, that it was ſome diſcredit to him, that he could not ſee the reaſonableneſs of Copernicus's ſyſtem. Perhaps he underſtood leſs of Aſtronomy, and had leſs extenſive views wherein it was deficient, than of any other part of ſcience and philoſophy.

But, though ſome few writers have endeavoured to detract from the juſt praiſes of Lord Bacon, this is far from having been the caſe with the generality of learned men. They uſually embrace every opportunity of ſpeaking of him in terms of the warmeſt admiration and gratitude; and to the teſtimonies of applauſe, which have already been produced, in the courſe of the article, many others might be added. We ſhall conclude this note with the juſt and fine eſtimate of his merit, which hath been made by an author now living, of diſtinguiſhed eminence in the philoſophical and literary world, Monſ. D'Alembert. Not having the original at hand, we ſhall take it as it is given in the Annual Regiſter: 'On conſidering 'attentively the ſound, intelligent, and extenſive 'views of this great man, the multiplicity of ob-'jects his piercing wit had comprehended within its 'ſphere, the elevation of his ſtyle, that every-where 'makes the boldeſt images to coaleſce with the moſt 'rigorous preciſion, we ſhould be tempted to eſteem 'him the greateſt, the moſt univerſal, and the moſt 'eloquent of Philoſophers. His works are juſtly 'valued, perhaps more valued than known, and 'therefore more deſerving of our ſtudy than elo-'giums. Bacon, born amidſt the obſcurity of the 'moſt profound night, perceived that philoſophy did 'not yet exiſt, though many had undoubtedly flattered themſelves for having excelled in it; for, the 'more an age is groſs and ignorant, the more it believes itſelf informed of all that can be poſſibly 'known. He began by taking a general view of the 'various objects of all natural ſciences; he divided 'thoſe ſciences into different branches, of which he 'made the moſt exact enumeration; he examined 'into what was already known as to each of thoſe 'objects, and he drew up an immenſe catalogue of 'what remained to be diſcovered. This was the aim 'and ſubject of his admirable work, on the dignity and augmentation of natural knowledge. In 'his New Organ of Sciences, he perfects the views 'he had pointed out in the firſt work; he carries 'them farther, and ſhews the neceſſity of experimental phyſics, which was not yet thought of. An 'enemy to ſyſtems, he beholds philoſophy as only 'that part of our knowledge, which ought to contribute to make us better or more happy. He 'ſeems to limit it to the ſcience of uſeful things, and 'every-where recommends the ſtudy of Nature. His 'other writings are formed on the ſame plan. Every 'thing in them, even their titles, is expreſſive of the 'man of genius, of the mind that ſees in great. He 'there collects facts, he there compares experiments, 'and indicates a great number to be made. He in-'vites

(159) Hume, ubi ſupra, p. 133, 134.

(160) Brit. Biog. Vol. iv. p. 154, 155.

(161) Ibid. note.

(162) Macaulay, ubi ſupra, p. 165.

'vites the learned to ſtudy and perfect the arts, 'which he deems as the moſt illuſtrious and moſt 'eſſential part of human knowledge. He expoſes 'with a noble ſimplicity, his conjectures and thoughts 'on different objects worthy of intereſting men; and 'he might have ſaid, as the old Gentleman of Te-'rence, that nothing affecting humanity was foreign 'to him. Science of Nature, Morality, Politics, 'Oeconomics, all ſeemed to be within the ſtretch 'of that luminous and profound wit; and we know 'not which moſt to admire, the richneſs he diffuſes 'over all the ſubjects he treats of, or the dignity with 'which he ſpeaks of them. His writings cannot be 'better compared, than to thoſe of Hippocrates on 'Medicine; and they would be neither leſs admired 'nor leſs read, if the culture of the mind was as dear 'to mankind as the preſervation of their health. 'But there are none but the chiefs of ſects of all 'kinds whoſe works can have a certain ſplendour. 'Bacon was not of the number, and the form of his 'philoſophy was againſt it. It was too good to fill 'any one with aſtoniſhment. The Scholaſtic Philo-'ſophy, which had gained the aſcendant in his time, 'could not be overthrown but by bold and new opi-'nions; and there is no probability that a Philoſo-'pher, who only intimates to men, "This is the "little you have learned, this is what remains for "your enquiry," is calculated for making much noiſe 'among his contemporaries. We might even pre-'ſume to hazard ſome degree of reproach againſt the 'Lord Chancellor Bacon for having been perhaps too 'timid, if we were not ſenſible with what reſerve, 'and as it were, with what ſuperſtition, judgment 'ought to be paſſed on ſo ſublime a genius. Though 'he confeſſes that the ſcholaſtic Philoſophers had 'enervated the ſciences by the minutiæ of their 'queſtions, and that ſound intellects ought to have 'made a ſacrifice of the ſtudy of general beings to 'that of particular objects, he ſeems, notwithſtand-'ing, by the frequent uſe he makes of ſchool-terms, 'and ſometimes alſo by the adopting of ſcholaſtic 'principles, and by the diviſions and ſub-diviſions 'then much in vogue, to have ſhewed too much 'deference for the predominant taſte of his age. 'This great man, after breaking the ſhackles of ſo 'many irons, was ſtill intangled by ſome chains, 'which he either could not, or dared not to break 'aſunder (163).'

(163) Ann. Reg. Vol. xvi. P. ii. p. 80, 81.

[RR] Other incidental circumſtances.] Mr. Mallet, ſpeaking of Bacon's being in France when he was only ſixteen years old, takes notice, that it may juſtly be wondered at, that the Lord-Keeper, a Miniſter of great obſervation upon men and things, ſhould have ſent his ſon to travel at that age; when we need but look round us, to be convinced how little our youth of quality, who viſit foreign countries about the ſame age, are wont to profit either in taſte, wiſdom, or morals (164). The former part of this remark is not ſo well founded as the latter. For Sir Nicholas Bacon did not ſend his ſon Francis to travel in the manner which is now commonly done. He put him into the family and ſervice, and under the immediate inſpection, of Sir Amias Powlet, the Engliſh Ambaſſador at Paris. It was one of the modes of education then practiſed, for young perſons, who were intended for public life, to become part of the ſuite of eminent Stateſmen, whether they reſided at home or abroad. And this cuſtom, by training up youth to early habits of buſineſs, was attended with conſiderable advantages; though it may, perhaps, be queſtioned whether it might not contribute, among other cauſes, to the ſervility of manners which prevailed at that period.

(164) Life of Lord Chancellor Bacon, p. 6, 7.

The vindication of James the Firſt, in p. 458, with regard to the profuſeneſs with which he beſtowed his honours, on his acceſſion to the throne of England, is ingenious and plauſible. But, notwithſtanding Dr. Campbell hath alledged all that can be urged in ſupport of the matter, it doth not appear to us entirely ſatisfactory. The proſtitution of titles was carried to ſuch an exceſs, that, by rendering them too cheap and contemptible, the political purpoſes for which they were conferred were, in ſome meaſure, defeated. Of this the generality of the writers of that time were ſo ſenſible, that the affair muſt be conſidered as diſplaying more of the weakneſs than the wiſdom of the King.

Amelot, in his Memoires Hiſtoriques, tom. i. p. 361. hath aſſerted, upon the pretended authority of Caſaubon, that Lord Bacon did not underſtand Latin. This is as evident a falſehood, as any which is to be met with in Amelot's whole book. If there be any truth in Caſaubon's having ſaid that Bacon did not underſtand Latin, he muſt have meant that he did not underſtand it critically, as he himſelf did (165).

(165) From a learned correſpondent.

There ſeems to have been a notion, among the editors of Lord Bacon's works, that he uſed to lend his pen to his great friend and patron, the Earl of Eſſex, in the writing of letters. But it is certain that the noble Earl did not want ſuch aſſiſtance. It is equally certain, that he could not have received it upon many and moſt important occaſions, which required him to write ſome of the moſt finiſhed of his epiſtolary performances; the ſtyle of which is not only very different from, but, likewiſe, much more natural, eaſy, and perſpicuous than that of Bacon, who acknowledges it to be far better than his own (166).

(166) Birch's Mem. of Q. Eliz. Vol. ii. p. 20. Bacon's Works, Vol. i. p. 613.

Sir John Hawkins informs us, that 'Lord Bacon, 'in his natural Hiſtory, has given a great variety 'of experiments touching muſic, that ſhew him to 'have been not barely a Philoſopher, an enquirer 'into the phænomena of ſound, but a maſter of the 'ſcience of harmony, and very intimately ac-'quainted with the precepts of muſical compoſition.' And the ſame author quotes, with commendation, the following remark, as a ſpecimen of his Lordſhip's ſkill in the ſubject, and a proof of what were his ſentiments of harmony, and in what he conceived the perfection of it to conſiſt. 'The ſweeteſt and 'beſt harmony is, when every part or inſtrument is 'not heard by itſelf, but a conflation of them all; 'which requireth to ſtand ſome diſtance off, even as 'it is in the mixture of perfumes, or the taking of 'the ſmells of ſeveral flowers in the air (167).'

(167) Hiſtory of Muſic. Vol. i. Prel. Diſcourſe, p. 11. 83.

As the Public is not a little indebted to Dr. Rawley, Lord Bacon's Chaplain, for printing ſome of the Works, and writing the Life, of his noble patron and friend, it may not, perhaps, be unacceptable to our readers, if we cloſe the whole with a ſhort account of that gentleman. This we have been enabled to do, by the learned Mr. Maſters's valuable Hiſtory of Corpus-Chriſti College, Cambridge.

William Rawley, of Norwich, or Norfolk, was admitted a Bible-Clerk in that college, under the tuition of Mr. Chapman, on the twenty-ſecond of January 1600, and took both the degrees in Arts before the 19th of March 1609, when he was elected a Fellow of the Houſe. Upon this he commenced Tutor, and was ordained Deacon by the Biſhop of Ely, at Downham, 22d of September, 1611; not long after which, he was preſented by the Chancellor, Maſters, and Scholars of the Univerſity of Cambridge to the Rectory of Bowthorpe in Norfolk, and was inſtituted to it on the 10th of December 1612. In 1616, by the favour of Sir Francis Bacon, who procured the Living for him of the College, he obtained the Rectory of Landbeach. He had commenced B. D. the year before, and upon his patron's being made Lord-Keeper of the Great-Seal, was appointed his domeſtic Chaplain. While Mr. Rawley was in this ſituation, he proceeded D. D. in 1621. He was of great uſe to his maſter, in writing down, compiling, digeſting, and publiſhing his works; to many of which he wrote prefaces and dedications, as well as tranſlated ſeveral of them into Latin. Theſe, with ſome other pieces committed to his care, he collected together, and printed, after his Lordſhip's deceaſe, in folio, Lond. 1638, with a dedication to King Charles; one of whoſe Chaplains he then was. In 1657, he publiſhed, at London, in folio, under the title of Reſuſcitatio, ſeveral others of Lord Bacon's Tracts beſides theſe; to which publication, at the requeſt of many foreigners, and natives of the kingdom, he prefixed ſome account of his patron's life. This, which is thought to be drawn up in a clear and manly ſtyle, ſhews Dr. Rawley to have been an able writer. It was, likewiſe, tranſlated into Latin, and placed before the Opuſcula varia Poſthuma, printed in 8*vo* the year following, which, he tells us, were the laſt things he had in his hands. However, he republiſhed the Reſuſcitatio, with ſome additions, in 1661; at which time he was Chaplain in ordinary to his Majeſty King Charles the Second. So great a favourite was he of the Lord Bacon's, that, after his reſignation of the Seals, he recommended Dr. Rawley to his ſucceſſor, Biſhop Williams, for farther preferment. This the Biſhop promiſed, and deſired Lord Bacon to pitch upon ſome particular. But his Lordſhip modeſtly declining to do it, and referring the choice to the Lord-Keeper, Dr. Rawley appears to have derived no advantage from his friend's recommendation. Lord Verulam, beſides the care of his writings, left the Doctor by Will, as a farther teſtimony of his regard, one hundred pounds, with the King of Spain's great Bible. After the publication of his maſter's works, in 1638, Dr. Rawley came and reſided upon his Rectory at Landbeach. He married Barbara, the daughter of Mr. John Wickſted Alderman of Cambridge, by whom he had two children. His daughter, Mary, died in her infancy; but his ſon, William, became Fellow of Corpus Chriſti College, and was buried at Landbeach, on the third of July 1666. Dr. Rawley loſt his ſon, his wife, and his ſervants, all in the ſame year, of the plague; which probably affected him ſo much as to bring down his grey hairs with ſorrow to the grave. He died on the 18th of June 1667, in the 79th year of his age, after having been Paſtor at Landbeach fifty years, and throughout the whole of the troubles. His remains were depoſited near the Communion-table, in the chancel of his own church, under a black marble, with a Latin inſcription to his memory. Dr. Rawley was Proctor in Convocation for the Clergy of the dioceſe of Ely, in 1661, and as ſuch ſubſcribed to the Book of Common-Prayer, upon its reviſal. He had the appellation of the Lord Bacon's learned Chaplain; and that this title was juſtly beſtowed upon him, is evident from the teſtimonies of ſeveral conſiderable men, both at home and abroad. He preſented Lord Bacon's Works, as he publiſhed them, to the library of Corpus-Chriſti College; and bequeathed to it Camden's Britannia, with Ciceronis Opera, in two Tomes, and Platonis, in three Tomes folio. Theſe books were delivered by his Executor Mr. John Rawley, to whoſe care we are indebted for thoſe remains of Lord Bacon which were publiſhed by Dr. Teniſon (168).] K.

(168) Maſter's Hiſt. of Corp. Chriſt. Coll. Cambridge, p. 357—360.

BACON (ANTHONY), elder brother to the Chancellor, and eldeſt ſon to the Lord-Keeper Bacon, by his ſecond wife Anne, daughter to Sir Anthony Cook, a woman equally diſtinguiſhed by her learning and her piety, and, as ſuch, highly commended by the writers of thoſe times (a) [A]. At this diſtance, we have not been able to fix the exact time of this gentleman's birth; but it appears from a variety of circumſtances, that he was ſeveral years older than his brother Francis. He received an excellent education at home, and giving evident ſigns of pregnant parts, his father, the Lord-Keeper, thought fit to ſend him early abroad, to improve his abilities by viſiting foreign countries, in which he ſpent ſome years with great profit to himſelf, though his father did not live to ſee the fruits of his great improvements (b). But before his departure, the good old Lord-Keeper, thought proper to convey to him his manor of Gorhambury in Hertfordſhire, which he had purchaſed from Mr. Rowlet. In the courſe of his travels, Mr. Anthony Bacon was reſident for ſome time at Venice, and having viſited other parts of Italy, received the news of his father's death at Geneva, which very probably haſtened him home. While he remained in the city laſt mentioned, he entered into a very cloſe friendſhip with the famous Beza, who, by his perſuaſion, wrote to the Lord-Treaſurer Burleigh, and preſented to the library of Cambridge, a very ancient copy of the Pentateuch in ſix languages, which was eſteemed a great curioſity; and it is from his letter, dated in December 1581, that we are able to fix the time of Mr. Bacon's return from his travels (c). Whether he went abroad again or not, ſeems a little uncertain; but if he did, there is good reaſon to believe, that it was but for a very ſhort time, ſince we find, that as ſoon as his brother began to be taken notice of by the Earl of Eſſex, he made it his buſineſs to draw Mr. Anthony Bacon to that nobleman's ſervice (d). The two brothers were alike prodigies for parts, but of very different kinds: for whereas the younger ſpoke eloquently and wrote admirably, the elder was reſerved in converſation, had a deep reach in politicks, and was the beſt verſed in foreign affairs of any man of his time. Mr. Francis Bacon did not affect to hide his talents, but gave early proofs of them to the world, both by ſpeaking and writing. Mr. Anthony Bacon diſtinguiſhed himſelf neither way, but remained contented with the reputation he acquired among the circle of his private acquaintance, and the intereſt he had with ſome perſons of the firſt quality, who knew how to value as well as to employ his great abilities. We have ſeen in the former article, that (a) Chancey's Hertfordſhire, p. 464.

(b) Lloyd's State Worthies, p. 471.

(c) Strype's Annals of Queen Elizabeth, Vol. iii. p. 76.

(d) Bacon's Works, Vol. iv. p. 430.

[A] And, as ſuch, highly commended by the writers of thoſe times.] It was no unuſual things in thoſe days for ladies to apply themſelves to the ſame ſtudies, with the ſame ſtrictneſs, and, conſequently, with the ſame ſucceſs, that the other ſex did. The Lady Jane Grey was excellently learned in Greek; and Queen Elizabeth tranſlated ſeveral pieces both from that language and from the Latin. The moſt remarkable inſtance however, of the ſpirit of learning which prevailed in that age, was in the family to which this lady belonged (1): for all the four daughters of Sir Anthony Cook were perfectly ſkilled in the learned languages, and this his ſecond daughter Anne, wife to the Lord-Keeper Bacon, made both a florid and exact tranſlation of Biſhop Jewell's Apology for the Church of England from Latin into Engliſh, which was eſteemed ſo uſeful in its nature, as well as ſo correct in its manner, that in the year 1564 it was publiſhed for common uſe by the ſpecial order of Archbiſhop Parker with ſome additions of his own at the end (2). There have been many ladies remarkable for their learning and their writings, but very few whoſe works, like the Lady Bacon's, were publiſhed by authority and commended to public reading. It was this that ſtirred the gall of Father Parſons, commonly called Parſons the Jeſuit, who has reflected bitterly upon this lady (3) for her performance, without reflecting that his ill language redounded more to her reputation than all the praiſes of her friends, as a late ingenious writer has very judiciouſly obſerved (4). It was to the great abilities and tender care of ſo accompliſhed a parent, that her two ſons, Anthony and Francis, owed the early part of their education, and without doing any injuſtice to the genius of either of theſe great men we may ſafely affirm, that they were not a little indebted for the reputation they acquired, to the pains taken with them by this excellent woman in their tender years, when the mind is moſt ſuſceptible of learning, and thereby rendered more capable of retaining the principles of ſcience, than when they are inſtilled in an age farther advanced. It was in gratitude to her memory, and from a juſt ſenſe of the advantages received from her in this way, that her ſon, the Viſcount St. Albans, directed by his Will, that his body ſhould be laid near her's in the church of St. Michael within the precincts of Old Verulam (5).

(1) Lloyd's State Worthies, p. 386.

(2) Strype's Annals, Vol. ii. p. 469.

(3) A Relation of a Conference before Henry IV, of France, &c. p. 197.

(4) Mallet's Life of Lord Bacon, p. 2.

(5) Chauncey's Hertfordſhire, p. 464.

Mr.

Mr. Francis Bacon with all his knowledge wanted œconomy, and that to a very high degree, a point in which his brother Anthony chiefly excelled; for though he had a very fair eſtate of his own, yet he knew how to ſet a juſt price upon his labours, and did not think it reaſonable to waſte his time in the ſervice of others, without receiving a proper recompence (e). He had the misfortune to be very lame, ſo that he was able to ſtir little abroad, and indeed could not ſo much as move about his room, for which reaſon the Earl of Eſſex, who relied much upon his advice, and made uſe of him in all his affairs, and even in thoſe of the greateſt ſecrecy, thought proper to take him into his houſe, and to make him a handſome allowance for his ſervices (f). It was by his advice, that the Earl entered into a very early and cloſe correſpondence with the King of Scotland, preſumptive heir to the crown of England, which he carried on, chiefly by the means of Mr. Anthony Bacon, who managed it with ſuch dexterity and addreſs, that though the Cecils always ſuſpected, and left no means untried to diſcover it, yet they were never able to come at any proofs of it. It was his having this great and dangerous ſecret in his hands, that enabled him to advance his fortune very conſiderably, of which notwithſtanding the ſecrecy that muſt naturally have attended ſuch tranſactions, there are ſtill ſome teſtimonies remaining, ſupported by undeniable authority (g) [B]. We are not, however, to ſuppoſe, that though this gentleman took ſo much care of his own affairs, and though he was very nearly related to thoſe who brought about that noble Earl's ruin, he was in any degree acceſſary thereto, either by diſcovering his ſecrets, or deſerting his ſervice. On the contrary, we are aſſured by a writer of great knowledge and fidelity, that Mr. Bacon remained ever true to his noble patron; and indeed the thing ſpeaks itſelf, for when his enemies accompliſhed their deſigns, they were not able to give any thing againſt him in evidence, in reference to his correſpondence with King James, which if they had ever had it in their power, they would moſt certainly have done (h). The correſpondence between this great favourite and the ingenious Mr. Bacon, though very probably it began in convenience, very ſoon grew up into a ſtricter and more cloſe friendſhip, than, the diſtance of their circumſtances conſidered, could have been well expected; which may perhaps be juſtly attributed to the likeneſs of their tempers. For the Earl was naturally ſtudious and contemplative, with a little leaning towards melancholy, and his uſual recreations were muſic, poetry, and walking, in all which, except the laſt, he found Mr. Bacon an agreeable companion. There was another uſe which very probably my Lord Eſſex made of him, which was to examine ſuch as were commended to him for preferment, not in a ſaucy ſupercilious manner, as one who had an entire dominion over his patron's inclinations, but in a gentle and almoſt imperceptible method, that there might be none about his Lordſhip from whom he might not expect a return of credit, in proportion to that degree of favour he beſtowed. At leaſt thus much is certain, that his recommendations had always great weight with the Earl of Eſſex, who made uſe of his power and influence, not in the gratification of the common paſſions of the mind, or enriching himſelf or his family, or to ſatisfy the cravings of ſuch, as by complying with his weakneſſes had gained an aſcendency over him; but in a way becoming a great man, in relieving and ſupporting men of merit,

(e) Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 13.

(f) See this fully explained in note [B].

(g) Wotton's Remains, p. 126

(h) Diſparity between the Earl of Eſſex, and the Duke of Bucks, (ſuppoſed to be written by the Earl of Clarendon) p. 5.

[B] Supported by undeniable authority.] Amongſt other curious pieces of hiſtory penned by the celebrated Sir Henry Wotton, one of the moſt judicious as well as ingenious writers of his age, there is one intitled, A Parallel between Robert Devereux, Earl of Eſſex, and George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, in the times of their favour, which containing for the moſt part facts, that lay within the compaſs of the author's immediate knowledge, has been always, and very deſervedly, in the moſt general eſteem. It is from this treatiſe, than which certainly better authority cannot be had, that the circumſtances hinted at in the text have been taken, and that the reader may view them in a juſt and natural light, they are here preſented to him in Sir Henry's own words (6): 'The Earl of Eſſex had accommodated Maſter Anthony Bacon in a partition of his houſe, and had aſſigned him a noble entertainment: this was a gentleman of impotent feet but a nimble head, and through his hand run all the intelligences with Scotland, who being of a provident nature, (contrary to his brother the Lord Viſcount St. Albans) and well knowing the advantage of a dangerous ſecret, would many times cunningly let fall ſome words, as if he could amend his fortunes under the Cecilians (to whom he was near of alliance and in blood alſo) and who had made (as he was not unwilling ſhould be believed) ſome great proffers to win him away, which once or twice he preſſed ſo far, and with ſuch tokens and ſigns of apparent diſcontent to my Lord Henry Howard, afterwards Earl of Northampton, (who was of the party, and ſtood himſelf in much umbrage with the Queen) that he flies preſently to my Lord of Eſſex (with whom he was commonly primæ admiſſionis by his bedſide in the morning) and tells him, that unleſs that gentleman was ſatisfied with a round ſum all would be vented; this took the Earl at that time ill provided (as indeed oftentimes his coffers were very low) whereupon he was fain ſuddenly to give him Eſſex houſe, which the good old Lady Walſingham did afterward diſengage out of her own ſtore, with two thouſand five hundred pounds; and, before, he had diſtilled fifteen hundred pounds at another time by the ſame ſkill. So as we rate this one ſecret, as it was finely carried, at four thouſand pounds in preſent money, beſides at leaſt one thouſand pounds of annual penſion, to a private and bed-rid gentleman: what would he have gotten if he could have gone about his own buſineſs?' It may not be amiſs to add here, what ſeems to relate to the ſame ſubject, from another piece which bears the title of The Diſparity between the Eſtates and Conditions of George Duke of Buckingham, and Robert Earl of Eſſex: the author of which, ſpeaking of the peculiar advantages and felicities attending the laſt of theſe noblemen, ſays (7), 'In his friendſhips he was ſo fortunate, that though he contracted with ancient enemies, and ſuch as he had undeſerved by ſome unkindneſs, as grievous as injurious, it is not known that ever he was betrayed in his truſts, or had ever his ſecrets derived unhandſomely to any ears that they were not intended to, and this, if he had not planted himſelf upon ſuch, whoſe zeal to his ſervice was more remarkable than their other abilities, would have preſerved him from ſo prodigious a fate.'

(6) Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 12.

(7) Ibid. p. 47.

and thereby attaching them to his intereſts, which induced him to receive whoever was introduced to him in this light, not as a new dependant, but as a real acquiſition (i). In this way (as himſelf (k) very gratefully remembers) Richard Boyle, afterwards the great Earl of Cork in Ireland, was by Mr. Anthony Bacon brought to the notice of the Earl of Eſſex, a little before his laſt unfortunate voyage to that iſland, by whom he was very kindly received, and employed in ſeveral things relating to the ſuing out of patents, 'till Mr. Boyle's enemies procured him (on very falſe pretences) to be ſeized and impriſoned, in which condition he lay when the Earl went over to Ireland, and which accident, however unexpected or unreliſhed when it happened, very probably preſerved him from being involved in the Earl's misfortunes, and moſt certainly proved the ſource of all his future felicity, in which it is ſome honour to Mr. Bacon, that he was ſo far inſtrumental. But in regard to thoſe meaſures and counſels which were ſo fatal to his great friend, neither records, or hiſtory, private memoirs, or the libellous remembrances of thoſe times, which have deſcended in a competent proportion to manifeſt any man's character to ours, ſay ſo much as a ſyllable of this gentleman's interfering. The truth of the matter is, that this Lord had two ſets of counſellors, one who ſet him upon raſh and violent methods, which proved his undoing; and the other, thoſe who thought to raiſe their own fortunes by ſupporting the Earl's, and who conſtantly laboured to keep him within the bounds of moderation, in hopes of reſtoring him by degrees to the Queen's favour. At the head of the former was his Secretary Cuffe, a man of parts, but of a fierce and violent temper; and the chiefs of the other, were the two Bacons (l). We have an inſtance of their ſincere endeavours to ſave, and to reſtore that unfortunate nobleman, even after his raſh exploit in returning from Ireland, and a little before his much raſher exploit, which coſt him his head. They agreed together, but with his Lordſhip's conſent, that Mr. Francis Bacon ſhould pen a letter of advice, in the name of, and as if written by, Mr. Anthony Bacon, to the Earl, and an anſwer in the Earl's name to him, which Mr. Francis Bacon undertook to ſhew the Queen, and which were extremely well calculated to do him ſervice, as appears from the letters themſelves, which are ſtill extant (m) [C]. It is certain that (i) See the article of DEVEREUX, (Robert) Earl of Eſſex.

(k) See his own Memoirs preſerved in the Life of Robert Boyle, Eſq; prefixed to the firſt Volume of his Works, p. 2.

(l) Ath. Oxon. Vol. i. col 307.

(m) Bacon's Works, Vol. iv. p. 437. 5, 6.

[C] From the letters themſelves, which are ſtill extant.] Theſe letters have cauſed a great deal of noiſe, and ſome very groſs miſtakes have been made about them. The Earl at his trial provoked at hearing Mr. Francis Bacon plead againſt him, delivered himſelf thus, directing his diſcourſe to the Lord-High-Steward (8). 'May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I muſt 'produce Mr. Bacon for a witneſs; for when the courſe 'of private perſecution was in hand and moſt aſſailed 'me then Mr. Bacon was the man that proffered me 'means to the Queen, and drew a letter in my name, 'and in his brother Sir Nicholas Bacon's name, (apparently miſtaken for Mr. Anthony Bacon) which 'letter he propoſed to ſhew the Queen, and Goſnal 'was the man that brought them unto me, wherein 'I did ſee Mr. Bacon's hand pleaded as orderly, and 'appointed them out that were my enemies, as 'directly as might be; which letters I know Mr. 'Secretary Cecil hath ſeen, and by them it will 'appear what conceit he held of me, and no otherwiſe than he here coloureth and pleadeth the 'contrary.' To which Mr. Francis Bacon gave this anſwer (9): 'My Lord, I ſpent more hours 'to make you a good ſubject, than upon any man 'in the world beſides; but ſince you have ſtirred 'up this point, my Lord, I dare warrant you this 'letter will not bluſh, for I did but perform the 'part of an honeſt man, and ever laboured to have 'done you good if it might have been, and to no 'other end; for what I intended for your good was 'wiſhed from the heart without touch of any man's 'honour.' There was nothing more paſſed at this trial concerning this matter. But in the apology written by Mr. Francis Bacon, the point is ſtated as in the text, and we are aſſured that theſe letters were written at the time the Earl of Eſſex was confined to his own houſe (10). The firſt of them in the name of Mr. Anthony Bacon, is by way of advice to his Lordſhip, on the then untoward ſituation of his affairs, in which he very artfully ſets forth, that though ſome affected to give out, he had no farther room for hope left at Court, but might very well conſider himſelf as a man doomed to paſs the remainder of his years in privacy, and in the enjoyment of his particular fortune, without any farther thought of the public; yet in his, the writer's conception, there was no reaſon that his Lordſhip ſhould give into ſuch notions, or ſuffer himſelf to fall into abſolute deſpair, ſo as to frame his mind to ſuch a ſpirit of retirement, as this fancy, if he ſhould receive it, would lead him to. The firſt reaſon he aſſigns, is the temper of the Queen, that it was ſteady and conſtant, ſo that whoever ſhe once liked ſhe never abſolutely diſliked; and having preſſed this point very ſtrongly, he then proceeds to another argument, and ſo forward in theſe words: 'If I can ſpell, and ſcholar like put together, the parts of her Majeſty's 'proceedings now againſt your Lordſhip, I cannot 'but make this conſtruction, that her Majeſty, in her 'royal intention, never intended to call your Lordſhip's doings into public queſtion, but only to 'have uſed a cloud without a ſhower, in cenſuring 'them by ſome temporary reſtraint only of liberty, 'and debarring you from her preſence. For firſt, the 'handling the cauſe in the Star-Chamber, your not 'being called, was enforced by the violence of libeling and rumours, (wherein the Queen thought to 'have ſatisfied the world, and yet ſpared your Lordſhip's appearance) and after, when the means which 'was intended for the quenching of malicious bruits 'turned to kindle them, (becauſe it was ſaid, your 'Lordſhip was condemned unheard, and your Lordſhip's ſiſter wrote that piquant letter) then her Majeſty ſaw plainly, that theſe winds of rumours could 'not be commanded down without the handling of 'the cauſe, by making you a party, and admitting 'your defence; and to this purpoſe I do aſſure your 'Lordſhip, that my brother, Francis Bacon, who is 'too wiſe (I think) to be abuſed, and too honeſt to 'abuſe, though he be more reſerved in all particulars than is needful, yet, in generality, he hath ever 'conſtantly, and with aſſeveration affirmed to me, 'that both thoſe days, that of the Star-Chamber, 'and that at my Lord-Keeper's, were won from the 'Queen merely upon neceſſity and point of honour 'againſt her own inclination. Thirdly, in the laſt 'proceeding, I note three points which are directly ſignificant, that her Majeſty did expreſsly forbear any 'point, which was irreparable, or might make your 'Lordſhip in any degree incapable of the return of 'her favour, or might fix any character indelible of 'diſgrace upon you, for ſhe ſpared the public place 'of the Star-Chamber which ſpared ignominy, ſhe 'limited the charge preciſely not to touch upon any 'pretence of diſloyalty, and no record remaineth to 'memory of the charge or ſentence. Fourthly, the very 'diſtinction which was made in the ſentence of ſequeſtration from the places of ſervice in ſtate, and 'leaving

(8) State Trials, Vol. i. p. 205.

(9) Ibid.

(10) Bacon's Works, Vol. iv. p. 439.

that while things were in this ſituation, and before the Earl was hurried into his laſt unadviſed action, the Bacons had in ſome meaſure ſoftened the Queen, who frequently ſpoke to Mr. Francis Bacon of the Earl of Eſſex, with an air of concern (n). Once when he was ſpeaking to her Majeſty on this ſubject, ſhe took occaſion to aſk him, How the man had ſucceeded, who had undertaken to cure his brother Anthony of the gout? He anſwered, 'That at firſt the medicine he gave him did him good, but after a little 'while it loſt its efficacy, and at laſt he thought it did him harm.' The Queen replied to this in the following terms, 'I will tell you, Bacon, the error of it; the 'manner of theſe Phyſicians, and eſpecially theſe Empirics, is to continue one kind of 'medicine, which at the firſt is proper to draw out the ill humour, but after, they have 'not the diſcretion to change their medicine, but apply ſtill drawing medicines, when 'they ſhould rather intend to cure and corroborate the part.' Mr. Bacon immediately applied this, 'How wiſely and aptly, Madam, ſaid he, do you ſpeak and diſcern of 'phyſic miniſtered to the body, and conſider not that there is the like occaſion of 'phyſic miniſtered to the mind? as now in the caſe of my Lord Eſſex; your 'princely word ever was, that you intended to reform his mind, and not to ruin his 'fortune; you cannot but think you have drawn the humours ſufficiently, and therefore 'it is more than time, for fear of mortifying, that you miniſter ſtrength and comfort 'unto him, for theſe ſame gradations, are fitter to corrupt than to correct any great 'mind.' But however Mr. Francis Bacon might afterwards cool in his affections to that noble perſon, moſt certain it is, that Mr. Anthony Bacon loved him beyond the grave, as appears by a paper directed to him, which fully vindicates his Lordſhip's character, and ſhews that he was influenced by public ſpirit, and not by the deſire of revenging his private quarrel on his enemies (o). This paper which is ſtill preſerved, remains an inconteſtible proof of Mr. Anthony Bacon's having openly eſpouſed his Lord's cauſe, even after it had brought him to the block, and on that account doubly deſerves notice [D]. In all probability the death of the Earl of Eſſex affected him very deeply, ſince his own followed within leſs than a year. He was, as appears by various paſſages in his brother's writings, a perſon perfectly well ſkilled in polite learning, and in all the arts requiſite to the conduct of human life. How nearly ſoever he was related to the Cecils, and how great ſoever his intereſt might be with the Lord-Treaſurer, it does not by any means appear, that he had any intercourſe with that family in the latter part of Queen Elizabeth's reign, but dedicated all his time, except what was employed in the ſervice of his patron, to his ſtudies. It was owing to this reſerved life of his, that (n) Bacon's Works, Vol. iv. p. 438, 439.

(o) Camden, Annal. p. 960.

'leaving to your Lordſhip the place of Maſter of the 'Horſe, doth to my underſtanding indicativè point 'at this, that her Majeſty meant to uſe your Lord-'ſhip's attendance in court, while the exerciſes of 'the other places ſtood ſuſpended. Fifthly, I have 'heard, and your Lordſhip knoweth better than 'I, that now ſince you were in your own cuſtody, 'her Majeſty, in verbo regio, and by his mouth to 'whom ſhe committed her royal grants and decrees, 'hath aſſured your Lordſhip ſhe will forbid and not 'ſuffer your ruin.——I know your Lordſhip 'may juſtly interpret, that this which I perſuade may 'have ſome reference to my particular fortune, but 'I may truly ſay, te ſtante (not virebo, for I am 'withered in myſelf, but) manebo or tenebo, and that 'I ſhall in ſome ſort be able to hold out: But though 'your Lordſhip's years and health may expect return 'of grace and fortune, yet your eclipſe for a time 'is an ultimum vale to my fortune, and were it not 'that I deſire and hope to ſee my brother eſtabliſhed 'by her Majeſty's favour, (as I think him well worthy 'for what he hath done and ſuffered) it were time 'I did take that courſe from which I diſſuade your 'Lordſhip; but now in the mean time I cannot chuſe 'but perform thoſe honeſt duties unto you, to whom 'I have been ſo deeply bounden (11).' The anſwer to this written in the Earl's name, but by the ſame pen which drew the former, is full of duty and affection to the Queen, but with ſome free and ſharp touches on his enemies, which perhaps were thrown in to give it more the air of his Lordſhip's writing. The concluſion of it, as it relates particularly to the two brothers, it is requiſite the reader ſhould ſee in the words of the letter itſelf (12). 'But for her firſt 'love and for her laſt protection, and for all her great 'benefits, I can but pray for her Majeſty, and my 'endeavours are now to make my prayers for her 'Majeſty and myſelf better heard; for, thanks be to 'God, they that can make her Majeſty believe that 'I counterfeit with her, cannot make God believe 'that I counterfeit with him; and they which can 'let me from coming near unto her, cannot let me 'from drawing near unto him, as I hope I do daily: 'For your brother, I hold him to be an honeſt gentle-'man, and wiſh him all good, much the rather for 'your ſake: Yourſelf I know hath ſuffered more for 'me and with me, than any friend I have; yet I 'cannot but lament freely, as you ſee I do, and 'adviſe you not to do that which I do, which is, 'to deſpair; you know letters what hurt they have 'done me, and therefore make ſure of this, and yet 'I could not (as having no other pledge of my love) 'but communicate freely with you, for the eaſe of 'my heart and yours.'

(u) Ibid. p. 548.

(w) Ibid. p. 549.

[D] And on that account doubly deſerves notice.] This letter was directed to Mr. A. Bacon, and dated from the writer's chamber in London, May the 30th, 1601. In it the writer tells him, that after the Earl of Eſſex was condemned, one Mr. Aſhton, a Preacher, was ſent to him by the Lords, with intent to get out of him what he could. This man talked to him in a very high and ſaucy ſtrain, imputing to him ſuch baſe and black deſigns, that at length the Earl, who profeſſed that he feared ſuch imputations on his memory, more than he did a thouſand deaths, found himſelf obliged, in defence of all that was now left him, his good name, to ſpeak more clearly to the point, than perhaps he ever intended: Thus, being extremely urged, ſays the letter-writer, 'He 'made confeſſion, according to the premiſes, namely, 'that he meant to have eſtabliſhed the King of Scots 'his title in ſucceſſion, and that in this intention he 'had many of the worthieſt perſons of the land in 'conſent with him, which alſo he had an earneſt 'purpoſe to have revealed at his death, as Aſhton 'and others have confeſſed; but that he was ſo 'mightily diſſuaded and commanded to the contrary, 'as a thing that might tend to the great danger of 'her Majeſty's perſon: Now how little his honour 'is herein touched, and what ſmall reaſon, he had 'then, of all times, to diſſemble, your wiſe and 'religious heart may eaſily judge. Thus having, 'according to my wonted plainneſs, given you a true 'ſatisfaction in your deſire, I moſt humbly recom-'mend you to the protection of God, wiſhing much 'more health and comfort to you, than either your 'weak body hath of late enjoyed, or theſe times 'do afford (13).'

(13) Camd. Annal. edit. T. Hearne, p. 960, 961.

his father's fine ſeat fell to decay, and that the water which had been laid to it from ſprings at a conſiderable diſtance, was cut off in ſuch a manner, that it could not afterwards be recovered, but at ſo great an expence, that the Lord Viſcount St. Albans choſe rather to build a little neat houſe near the great pond; ſaying merrily (p), that Since the water could not be brought to his houſe, he would bring his houſe to the water. The friendſhip between theſe two brothers was not only warm and ſincere, but conſtant and laſting, as appears by Francis Bacon's dedicating the firſt work he publiſhed to his brother Anthony, and celebrating his memory in many of thoſe pieces which he publiſhed after his deceaſe (q). There is good reaſon to believe, that this gentleman alſo wrote ſeveral things, though none of them have come down to our times, or at leaſt none under his name; but as we ſhall ſhew in another place, it is more than probable, that ſome of thoſe ſonnets and other little pieces of poetry, that are generally aſcribed to his patron the Earl of Eſſex, were, either in the whole or in part, of his compoſition, and were owned by the Earl, not from any affectation of learning which he did not poſſeſs, for his abilities were not of a nature to need any ſuch aſſiſtance, or his ſpirit of that ſort to ſeek or deſire it, but for political reaſons, he adopted what his occaſions required, and what, if he had had leiſure, he could have performed with equal elegance and beauty (r). It does not appear whether Mr. Anthony Bacon was interred at Verulam or not: But if he had, one might reaſonably ſuppoſe, ſome monument would have been erected there to his memory, conſidering not only the obligations, but the affection of his brother towards him; and yet it is not impoſſible that the circumſtance of time might prevent his erecting ſuch a teſtimony of reſpect to his memory, as not allowing room for celebrating his attachment to the Earl of Eſſex, his fidelity in which muſt have made a principal part of the character afforded him therein. He left behind him, beſides the manor of Gorhambury, which deſcended to his brother Francis, a conſiderable perſonal eſtate, which he likewiſe bequeathed to him, and which it is believed he laid out in the purchaſe of the manor of Kingſbery (s), both of which, at the deceaſe of the Viſcount St. Albans, came to Sir Thomas Meautys, and paſſed from his heirs to the family of Grimſton, to whom they ſtill belong [E]. As he laid the foundation of his brother the (p) Bacon's Works, Vol. iii. p. 273.

(q) See his Dedication to the firſt edit. of his Eſſays, and likewiſe the Dedication to the ſecond edition, the former being to this brother, the latter to his brother-in law, Sir John Conſtable.

(r) See the article of DEVEREUX (Robert) Earl of Eſſex.

(s) Chauncey's Hertfordſhire, p. 463.

[E] And paſſed from his heirs to the family of Grimſton, to whom they ſtill belong.] Sir Thomas Meautys, who lived many years with the Viſcount St. Albans, and who upon his ſentence in the Houſe of Lords, made over his eſtate to him, was likewiſe his heir, and he marrying Anne, daughter to Sir Nathanial Bacon of Culford in the county of Suffolk, Knight of the Bath, left the manor of Gorhambury to her for her life, and ſhe afterwards marrying Sir Harbottle Grimſton, he procured from Hercules Meautys, for a valuable conſideration, an aſſignment of his right to the reverſion of this eſtate, which would have deſcended to him as nephew and heir of the beforementioned Sir Thomas Meautys (14). This Sir Harbottle Grimſton, Knight and Baronet, was the direct anceſtor of the Viſcounts Grimſton of the kingdom of Ireland, the preſent owners of this manor and ſeat (15), of which having ſo largely diſcourſed in the foregoing articles, it ſeemed requiſite for the reader's ſatisfaction to add theſe few lines here. C.

(14) Chauncey's Hertfordſhire, p. 465.

(15) See the Iriſh Compendium, under the title of Viſcount Grimſton.

[Though Lady Anne Bacon was a woman of great piety and virtue, as well as of diſtinguiſhed abilities, yet her temper ſeems to have been very diſagreeable. Her admonitions to her ſons, which were often wiſe, and undoubtedly proceeded from her ſincere regard for their welfare, were ſo harſh that they could not ſubmit to them with patience. Indeed, her expreſſions were ſometimes unreaſonably ſevere. She was ſo full of reſentment at Mr. Anthony Bacon's continuing longer abroad than appeared to her to be adviſable, that ſhe called him a traitor to God and his country, and alledged that he had undone her, and ſought her death; but that when he ſhould gain that, which he ſought for, he would have but a hundred pounds more than he had then. She was reſolved, ſhe ſaid, to procure the Queen's Letter to force him to return home; and that upon his coming back, if her Majeſty gave him his right, ſhe would commit him to priſon. Lady Bacon added, that ſhe could not bear to hear of him, and that he was hated of all the chiefeſt in France, and curſed of God in all his actions, ſince Mr. Lawſon's being with him. This Lawſon was a ſervant of Mr. Anthony Bacon's, againſt whom her Ladyſhip had conceived an unconquerable averſion; which circumſtance, together with her diſlike of ſome other connections her ſon had formed, and her fears leſt his religious principles ſhould be corrupted, gave additional ſtrength to the aſperity of her language. Her continual reproaches, addreſſed to both her ſons, at length extorted from Mr. Anthony Bacon the following letter:

'MADAM,

'FOR anſwer on my part to your Ladyſhip's letter to us both, having aſked counſel and leave of him who only knoweth and guideth the heart, I found myſelf emboldened with warrant of a good conſcience, and by the force of truth, to remonſtrate unto your Ladyſhip with a moſt dutiful mind, and tender care of your Ladyſhip's ſoul and reputation, that howſoever your Ladyſhip doth pretend and alledge for reaſon towards us in your motherly affection in that which concerneth Lawſon; yet any man of judgment and indifferency muſt needs take it for a mere paſſion, ſpringing either from preſumption, that your Ladyſhip can only judge and ſee that in the man, which never any man yet hath ſeen; or from a ſovereign deſire to over-rule your ſons in all things, how little ſoever you may underſtand either the ground or the circumſtances of their proceedings; or elſe from want of civility, abandoning your mind continually to moſt ſtrange and wrongful ſuſpicions, notwithſtanding all moſt humble ſubmiſſions and endeavours poſſible on his part to procure your Ladyſhip's ſatisfaction and contentment. This my remonſtrance, as I have juſt cauſe to fear, that it will at the firſt ſight be offenſive to your Ladyſhip, yet have I no leſs reaſon to hope, that almighty God, who knoweth with how dutiful intent, and to what end I have made the ſame, will in his mercy diſpoſe your Ladyſhip's heart not to yield to your , which you as it were ſo heinous an offence, but to truth and charity. Whereupon intirely repoſing myſelf as infallible grounds, I remain more ready to receive and endure your blame for performing with free filial reſpect this my bounden duty, than your thanks or liking, for ſoothing or allowing by ſilence ſo dangerous humours and uncharitable miſconceits. And ſo I moſt humbly take my leave (16).'

(16) Birch's Memoirs of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, Vol. p. 56. 173.

Mr. Anthony Bacon's expoſtulation with his mother did not produce the deſired effect. By continuing to write to him in her uſual ſplenetic manner, ſhe drew from him a ſecond complaint. In this he told her, that from a mother ſickly and in years he was content to take in good part any miſconceit, miſinterthe Chancellor's fortunes in one ſenſe, ſo he was very uſeful to them in another likewiſe, I mean that of favour; ſince the firſt marks which Sir Francis Bacon received of King James's kindneſs and good-will, are in the very grant expreſſed, to be in conſideration of the many good ſervices rendered him before his acceſſion to the throne of England, by his brother Mr. Anthony Bacon, as well as by himſelf (t). Such are the few ſcattered memoirs we have been able to collect of this great man, which at the ſame time that they are very curious in themſelves, render them likewiſe a very uſeful Supplement to the foregoing articles.

(t) Rymer's Fœd. Tom. xv. p. 597.

[In Birch's Memoirs of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, which are principally extracted from the original papers of Mr. Anthony Bacon, we meet with a number of circumſtances concerning him, and a full detail of his correſpondencies. Many of the particulars recorded are too minute to deſerve much attention. For though Mr. Anthony Bacon was a man of eminent political abilities and intrigue, yet his character is not, like that of his great brother, ſo intereſting as to confer an importance upon every minute event in which he was concerned. We ſhall ſelect, however, ſuch facts as may beſt ſerve to compleat the general account of his life. He was born in the year 1558 (u); ſo that he could not be three years older than his brother Francis, together with whom he received his education at Trinity College in Cambridge, both of them being matriculated in the univerſity on the ſame day (w). As Dr. Whitgift was then Maſter of the College, whatever directions he might give in the ſtudies of the young gentlemen, he could not properly be their tutor. Mr. Anthony Bacon began his travels in 1579, at the age of twenty-one, and reſided for ſome time at Paris, from whence he removed to Bourges, and thence to Geneva, where he lodged at the houſe of Theodore Beza (x). We do not find any evidence of his having been, about this period, at Venice. It is very certain that he was not returned from his travels in December 1581, as is ſuppoſed in the preceding article. He was then at Geneva (y): And there is no appearance of his having been in England at all, till his final ſettlement in his own country, many years after. From Geneva he ſucceſſively removed to Montpellier, to Marſeilles, to Bourdeaux, to Montaubon, and again to Bourdeaux, where he reſided the longeſt (z). During his ſtay abroad, he correſponded with ſeveral eminent perſons in England, and ſometimes communicated intelligence of importance to the public ſervice (a). In the year 1584, he paid a viſit to Henry, King of Navarre, at Bearn, where he became acquainted with the learned Lambert Danæus, who had ſo high an eſteem for him, that he dedicated to him ſeveral of his works (b). While Mr. Bacon was at Montaubon, in 1586, he contracted an intimacy with the famous Philip Pleſſis de Mornay, and his family. Charlotte Arbaleſte, wife of Monſ. du Pleſſis, having formed a ſcheme of marrying her daughter (probably by her firſt huſband) to Mr. Bacon, and the deſign not ſucceeding, ſhe was ſo filled with reſentment againſt him, on this and ſome other accounts, that, by alienating Philip de Mornay's mind from him, ſhe involved him in conſiderable difficulties. Nay, ſhe carried her indignation and complaints to Lady Bacon, who paid ſo much attention to her ſuggeſtions and ſurmiſes, as to procure Mr. Lawſon's being kept in priſon for ten months, though he had been ſent home by his maſter with diſpatches very important to the ſtate (c). We ought to have mentioned, that Mr. Bacon, during his firſt reſidence at Bourdeaux, in 1584, excited the jealouſy and hatred of the bigotted papiſts, and expoſed himſelf to perſonal danger, by the ſervices he rendered to the proteſtants in that city (d) He returned to England, in a very ill ſtate of health, in the beginning of February, 1591-2 (e). It was not till the latter end of the year 1595, that he took up his reſidence in Eſſex Houſe (f); in which ſituation he carried on a moſt extenſive correſpondence, as may be ſeen, at large, in Birch's Memoirs. In 1596, Mr. Bacon received a letter from Henry the Fourth, King of France, in which that illuſtrious monarch aſſured him of his high eſteem, and requeſted his intereſt with the Earl of Eſſex (g). In the ſame year he was viſited by the Duke de Bouillon, then in England (b). From the end of the year 1597, there are few letters to the Earl of Eſſex to be found in Mr. Bacon's collections. This defect was (u) Birch's Memoirs, ubi ſupra, Vol. i. p. 11.

(w) On the 16th of June, 1573, according to moſt authors, but Dr. Birch, from the univerſity regiſter, ſays the 10th.

(x) Ibid. Vol. i. p. 12, 13. 16.

(y) Ibid. p. 17.

(z) Ibid. p. 22. 28. 40. 50. 61.

(a) Ibid. p. 13. 40. 45, 46. 50. 54.

(b) Ibid. p. 49.

(c) Ibid. p. 54.

(d) Ibid. p. 49, 50.

(e) Ibid. p. 70.

(f) Ibid. p. 315.

(g) Ibid. p 461, 462.

(b) Birch, ubi ſupra, Vol. ii. p. 122.

miſinterpretations, or cauſeleſs humorous threats whatſoever. 'Only this, ſays he, I may with reaſon, 'and muſt for once, upon the warrant of a good 'conſcience, remonſtrate unto your Ladyſhip, that 'your ſon's poor credit dependeth upon judgment 'and not upon humour; and that your Ladyſhip 'cannot utter any thing in your paſſion to your ſon's 'lack, ſo long as God gives him the grace to be 'more careful in duty to pleaſe and reverence your 'Ladyſhip as his mother, than your Ladyſhip ſeem-'eth many times to be towards me as your ſon (17).' The age and bad health of Lady Bacon here mentioned form the beſt apology for her peeviſhneſs; to which it may be added, that, notwithſtanding the ſeverity of her temper, ſhe appears to have had the moſt ardent affection for her ſons, and to have exerted herſelf, with great generoſity and zeal, to promote their intereſt. We ſhall take ſome farther notice of this Lady, together with her learned ſiſters, under the article of Sir Anthony Cooke.

(17) Ibid. Vol. ii. p. 24.

If what is related, in the note [B], of Lord Henry Howard's being commonly primæ admiſſionis at the Earl of Eſſex's bedſide in the morning, be true, it is, as a valuable correſpondent obſerves, very remarkable. Lord Henry Howard was certainly an agent of Cecil's. He wrote the ſecret diſpatches ſent by Cecil to the King of Scotland, the originals of which are yet extant in the advocates library at Edinburgh, and have been publiſhed by Sir David Dalrymple. If Howard, therefore, as Wotton poſitively teſtifies, was in cloſe confidence with the Earl of Eſſex, there can be little doubt but that, as he was a bad man, he would communicate what he knew to Cecil. Hence it ſeems that Eſſex was gulled to give four thouſand pounds for the preſervation of a ſecret which Howard was acquainted with, and in all probability revealed.] K.

probably

probably owing to his having deſtroyed his later correſpondencies, when his great friend fell into his misfortunes; though it does not appear, but that Mr. Bacon was abſolutely innocent of the occaſions of thoſe misfortunes (i). Dr. Birch doubts the truth of the ſtory related from Sir Henry Wotton in the note [B.] 'Sir Henry's veracity, 'ſays the Doctor, which I have ſeen good reaſon to queſtion in other caſes, is juſtly to 'be ſuſpected in this, ſince he appears to have conceived ſome diſguſt againſt Mr. 'Bacon, while he was one of the Earl's Secretaries, that gentleman frequently complain-'ing of his behaviour towards him, and charging him with having ſuppreſſed the letters, 'which he had been ordered by his Lordſhip to write in favour of Dr. Hawkins, and 'yet affirming, that he had ſent them. Nor does he ſeem to be well-founded in his 'aſſertion, that Mr. Bacon was of a provident nature, contrary to the temper of his brother 'Francis, ſince the reverſe of that character is evident from Mr. Bacon's own papers *; 'who could not have ſo frequently been diſtreſſed in his circumſtances, if he had been 'an œconomiſt, or ſupplied by the Earl, as Sir Henry farther adds, with a noble enter-'tainment in his houſe, and at leaſt one thouſand pounds of annual penſion. And indeed of 'this pretended penſion there is not the leaſt trace in all Mr. Bacon's papers: Nor is 'there any appearance, that he was entertained at Eſſex Houſe at the Earl's charge. But 'it is, on the contrary, evident from a letter of that gentleman to his mother, dated 'October 2, 1596, that he enjoyed no other advantage in that houſe than of his lodg-'ings, his other expences being defrayed by himſelf, his Lordſhip ſeldom coming 'thither except to viſit him, or to give entertainments occaſionally to perſons of diſtinc-'tion (k).' This repreſentation of things will be deemed the more credible, when we conſider that Mr. Anthony Bacon's circumſtances, juſt before he quitted Eſſex Houſe by the Queen's command, in March, 1599-60, were ſo diſtreſſed, that it was appre-hended, he would be obliged to ſell his eſtate of Gorhambury (l). The time and place of his death have not yet been diſcovered by the ſtricteſt enquiry. It is certain that he ſurvived the Earl of Eſſex, and that he did not live till the acceſſion of King James the Firſt to the throne of England (m).] K.

(i) Ibid. p. 371.

* He was remarkably generous to his brother Francis. Ibid. Vol. i. p. 95.

(k) Ibid.

(l) Ibid. p. 443, 498, 499.

(m) Ibid.

BACONTHORP (a), or BACONDORP (b), or ſimply BACON (c) (JOHN), ſurnamed the Reſolute Doctor, and one of the learneſt men of his times, was born, towards the end of the XIIIth century, at Baconthorp, an obſcure village in Norfolk, from which he took his name. In his youth, he was a Monk in the convent of Blackney (d), a ſmall town in Norfolk, about five miles from Walſingham. After ſome years dedicated to learning and piety, he removed to Oxford, and from thence to Paris; where he was honoured with the degrees in Divinity and Laws, and acquired a great reputation for learning, being eſteemed the head of the Averroïſts [A], or followers of the Philoſopher Averroës (e). Upon his return into England, he was unanimouſly choſen the twelfth Provincial of the Engliſh Carmelites, in a general aſſembly of that order held at London, in the year 1329. Four years after, he was invited by letters to Rome; where, in ſeveral diſputations on the ſubject of marriage, he gave no little offence, by carrying the Papal authority too high in the caſe of divorces: but he thought fit afterwards to retract his opinion [B], and was held in great eſteem at Rome, and other parts of Italy. This learned Doctor wrote ſeveral pieces,

(a) Leland, Comment. de Script. Britan. c. 374. & Baleus, de Script. Brit. Cent. V. c. i.

(b) Pits, de illuſt. Angl. Script. an. 1346.

(c) Trithemius and others call him ſo. Cave, Hiſt. Literar. Sæc. Wicklev. an. 1329.

(d) Called in Latin Nigeria.

(e) Baleus, ubi ſupra.

[A] He was eſteemed the head of the Averroïſts.] Averroës, the author of this ſect, was an Arabian Philoſopher, of Corduba, who flouriſhed in the XIIth century. He was extremely attached to Ariſtotle, whoſe works he commented on with ſuch ability, that he was ſtiled, by way of eminence, The Commentator. He was Profeſſor in the univerſity of Morocco, and diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his great ſkill in the theoretical part of Phyſic. He taught that there is an intelligence, which, without multiplication of itſelf, animates all the individuals of the human ſpecies, in reſpect to their exerciſing the functions of a rational ſoul. As to religion, he had really none at all: for, according to him, Chriſtianity was abſurd, Judaiſm the religion of Children, and Mahometiſm (which he outwardly profeſſed) the religion of Swine (1). 'Averroës 'of Corduba (ſays another writer) was inſtructed by 'his father in the laws and religion of his country. 'He was extremely fat, though he uſed to eat but 'once a day. He paſſed whole nights in the ſtudy 'of Philoſophy; and when he found himſelf tired, 'he diverted himſelf with reading ſome book of 'poetry or hiſtory. He was never ſeen to play, or 'to ſeek after any amuſement. The errors, of which 'he was accuſed, drew on him a ſentence, whereby 'he was deſpoiled of his goods, and obliged to recant. 'After his condemnation, he went to Fez, and after-'wards returned to Corduba; where he ſtayed, till, 'at the earneſt requeſt of the people, he was recalled 'to Morocco, and continued there till his death, 'which happened in 1206 (2).' It was with reſpect to the philoſophical, not the religious, opinions of Averroës, that our Baconthorp was ſaid to be the head, or chief of his followers: for he underſtood the writings of Ariſtotle, and maintained his doctrines, in a manner agreeable to the explications or comments of this Philoſopher. Hence his Panegyriſt Baptiſta Mantuanus:

Nemo magis mentem cognovit Averroïs, illum
Si ſequeris, ſies alter Ariſtoteles (3).

(1) See M. Bayle, Dict. Hiſt. Crit. Art. AVERROES.

(2) Journal des Savans, 1 July, 1697, p. 475, edit. of Holland.

(3) See the whole paſſage cited in the remark [E], marg. note (9).

[B] He thought fit afterwards to retract his opinion.] Bale aſſures us, that Baconthorp not only recanted his former doctrine, but took the other ſide of the queſtion; proving, by the ſtrongeſt arguments fetched from reaſon and Scripture, that, in degrees of conſanguinity prohibited by the divine law, the Pope has no diſpenſing power. Sed erroris a Dei verbo admonitus, vitium agnovit, deteſtabat noxam, ac palinodiam modeſtiſſime cecinit, ſolidiſſimis ſcripturis et rationibus probans, in gradibus conſanguinitatis divina lege prohibitis, Papam diſpenſare non poſſe (4). It is remarkable, that Pits ſays not one word of Baconthorp's giving offence, and afterwards changing his opinion, but only tells us in general, that he was ſent for to Rome upon ſome important queſtions relating to marriage, and that he was as much eſteemed in Italy as he had been in France. Romam vocatus eſt ſuper graviſſimis de matrimonio dubiis. Tum cœpit fama hominis apud Italos, uti prius apud Gallos magis magiſque indies clareſcere (5).

(4) Baleus, de Script. Brit. Cent. V. c. i.

(5) Pits, de illuſt. Angl. Scriptor. an. 1346.

mentioned below [C]. He was ſmall of ſtature [D], but of a great and lofty genius, as is ſufficiently teſtified by writers of other nations [E], as well as our own [F]. John Baconthorp

[C] He wrote ſeveral pieces.] Among thoſe, which have ſeen the light, the moſt remarkable are the following: I. Commentaria, ſeu Quæſtiones ſuper quatuor libros Sententiarum; i. e. Commentaries, or Queſtions on the Four Books of Sentences. This book was publiſhed at Milan in 1510 and 1611; at Cremona, by John Chryſoſtom Maraſce, in 1618, in two volumes; twice at Paris, and once at Venice. II. Compendium Legis Chriſti, et Quodlibeta; i. e. An Abridgment of the Law of Chriſt, and Quodlibets. Venice, 1527. The Quodlibeta were publiſhed, together with the Commentaries on the Sentences, at Cremona, in 1618 (6). Dr. Cave mentions another piece, which he is not ſure was ever publiſhed. It is entitled, Tractatus Duo de Regula Ordinis Carmelitani, et Compendium hiſtoriarum et jurium pro defenſione ejuſdem Ordinis; i. e. Two Treatiſes concerning the Rule of the Order of the Carmelites, and an hiſtorical and juridical Compendium in defence of the ſaid Order. Leland, Bale, and Pits, give us, as uſual, a very long catalogue of our author's works never yet publiſhed; among which, the moſt worthy of notice, are theſe: I. Commentaries on all the Books of the Bible, and on St. Auſtin's Book De Civitate Dei. II. Several Treatiſes againſt the Jews. III. A Treatiſe againſt Pope John, concerning the Viſion of the Bleſſed. And IV. Diſcourſes on various Subjects.

(6) Cave, Hiſt. Literar. Sæc. Wicklev. an. 1329.

[D] He was ſmall of ſtature.] This circumſtance is pleaſantly aggravated by Pits and Fuller. 'Erat 'quidem, ut alter Zachæus, ſtatura puſillus, ſed 'ingenio magnus, ut mirum ſit in tam exili corpuſculo tantas habitaſſe virtutes, et naturam in tantillo 'homuncione tam ſublime collocaſſe ingenium. Tam 'ingentia ſcripſit volumina, ut corpus non tuliſſet 'quod ingenium protulerat. Nam ſi moles librorum 'ejus, compoſita ſarcina, auctoris humeris impoſita 'fuiſſet, homulum ſine dubio comprimere ſuffeciſſet '(7). He was, like another Zachæus, a very dwarf 'in ſtature, but of ſo great a genius, that it is ſurpriſing ſuch exalted virtues ſhould dwell in ſo ſmall 'a body, and that nature ſhould have placed ſo ſublime a wit, in ſuch an epitome of a man. He wrote 'ſuch large volumes, that his body could not have 'ſuſtained the product of his mind. For if the weight 'of his books, bundled together, had been laid upon 'their author's ſhoulders, the little man muſt undoubtedly 'have ſunk under it.' In like manner Fuller makes himſelf merry with little Baconthorp. One remarkable, ſays he, firſt for the dwarfiſhneſs of his ſtature:

(7) Pits, ubi ſupra.

Scalpellum, calami, atramentum, charta, libellus,

His pen-knife, pen, ink-horn, one ſheet of paper, and any of his books, would amount to his full height. As for all the books of his own making, put together, their burden were more than his body could bear. Secondly, For his high ſpirit in his low body. Indeed, his ſoul had but a ſmall dioceſe to viſit, and therefore might the better attend the effectual informing thereof. I have heard it delivered by a learned Doctor in Phyſic (at the Anatomy Lecture in London), who a little before had been preſent at the embowéling and embalming of Duke Hamilton and the Lord Capel, that the heart of the former was the largeſt, the latter the leaſt he had ever beheld, inferring hence, that contracted ſpirits act with the greateſt vigorouſneſs (8).

(8) Worthies of England, Norfolk, p. 255.

[E] The greatneſs of his genius is acknowledged by writers of other nations.] Baptiſta Mantuanus celebrates him in the following lines (9).

(9) Apud Leland, Comment. de Script. Britan. p. 374.

Quis liber in lucem nuper qui venit ab umbris?
Hic eſt Carmeli gloria magna Bacon.
Nemo magis mentem cognovit Averroïs, iſtum
Si ſequeris, fies alter Ariſtoteles.
Iſte tenebroſi damnat veſtigia Scoti,
Et per ſacra novis it documenta viis.
Hunc habeat, quibus eſt ſapientia grata; redundat
Iſtius in ſacris fontibus omne Sophos.

Paulus Panſa, a celebrated Orator of Italy, has immortalized the memory of Baconthorp in the following eulogium: 'Si Dei optimi maximi pene'tralia adire ſuadeat animus, nemo accurabilius eſ'ſentiam ejus mandavit literis. Si rerum cauſas, ſi 'naturæ effectus, ſi cæli varios motus, ac elemen'torum contrarias qualitates diſcere exoptet quiſquam, 'hic ſe officinam offert. Chriſtianæ religionis arma 'Vulcaniis munitiora contra Judæos, ſolus hic Re'ſolutus Doctor miniſtranda tradidit: Meſſiæ adven'tum dilucidat, Antichriſti aperit venturas fallacias, 'Mahumeti ſectam proſternit, ſcripturæ nodos ſolvit, 'et ænigmata cuncta ſerenat (10).—If your incli'nation leads you to ſearch into the nature of Almighty 'God, no one has written more accurately upon his 'eſſence. If you would inquire into the cauſes of 'things, the effects of nature, the various motions 'of the heavens, and the contrary qualities of the 'elements, here you are preſented with a magazine. 'This one Reſolute Doctor has furniſhed the Chriſtian 'religion with the ſtrongeſt arms againſt the Jews: 'he clears up the coming of the Meſſiah, detects the 'future fallacies of Antichriſt, overthrows the ſect 'of Mahomet, and explains all the difficult parts of 'the Scriptures.' The ſame author celebrates Baconthorp, both as a Philoſopher and a Divine, in the following diſtich:

(10) Apud Baleum, ubi ſupra.

Noſcere vis rerum cauſas, ipſumque tonantem,
Et Sophiæ omne genus? ſume Baconis opus (11).

(11) Apud Leland, ubi ſupra.

I ſhall conclude theſe foreign teſtimonies with certain barbarous verſes, written by Laurence Burell of Dijon, in the perſon of Baconthorp himſelf. They relate chiefly to our author's works, and their publication after his death. If the reader has a mind to ſkip over them as too long, or for any other reaſon, with all my heart; he has my free leave.

Anglia me genuit, Joannem quiſque vocabat,
Et de Bacone nomine notus eram.
Cum cuperem ſacros è fonte haurire liquores,
Pariſios petii plena fluenta lares.
Illic quod ſtudium potuit, quod cura laborque,
Præteritum ingenio nil volui eſſe meo.
Nam non ſacra fuit tantum mihi pagina curæ,
Pontificum Canones ſed placuere mihi.
Quatuor expoſui vulgata volumina Petri,
Sed magis in quarto mens mea fixa fuit.
Scripſi et Ephæmerides, quæ vos Quodlibeta vocatis,
Tum vetus atque novum clarius eſſe dedi.
Ethica nec noſtris ſine ſcriptis lentus omiſi,
In Metaphyſicis ſtat labor ipſe meus.
Inque animæ libros ſcripſi: tum multa notavi,
Auguſtine, tua rurſus in urbe Dei.
Nec quæ de trino ſimul uno ſcripta dediſti,
Sum paſſus ſcriptis illa carere meis.
Anſelmum expoſui, dum ſcripto quæritat ille,
Cur Deus è Sancta Virgine factus homo?
Et dum deſcribit quo pacto è Virgine verbum
Aſſumpſit carnem, ſedulus expoſui.
Pauperiem Chriſti ſcripſi, et quis jure tenere
Has poſſit fluxas paſtor ovilis opes.
Hiſtoriam breviter tetigi, quæ candidus ordo
Noſter, ab excelſa ſit genetrice Dei.
Tum mea Judæi ſenſerunt vulnera cæci,
Tum ſcripſi ut virgo concipit atque parit.
Scripſi alios multos, quos non te, candide lector,
Pœniteat ſtudii, ſi ſemel ipſe legas.
Et tandem in prima terra poſt fata quievi,
Dulcius eſt patrium quod tegit oſſa ſolum.
Poſt jacui tandem per tempora longa ſepultus;
Omnia ſic tempus innovat atque fugat.
Franciſcus Medicus, ſed religionis alumnus,
Vivere me rurſus et mea ſcripta dedit.
Nam mea formari per multa volumina fecit,
Cauſa fuit doctûm quod legor ore virûm.
Debeo multa viro, tum debeo multa legenti,
Multa et tu debes, dogmata quiſquis amas (12).

(12) Apud Baleum, ibid.

[F] —— As well as our own.] His virtues, according to Leland, were in themſelves ſo illuſtrious, that they ſtand in no need of borrowed colours. Virtutes hominis tam per ſe illuſtres erant, ut pigmentis aliunde adſcitis jam per ſe non egeant (13). Bale aſſures us, he was the learneded Monk of the Mendicant order that England ever produced; and that in all his writings he abhorred ſophiſtry, as hereſy, blaſphemy, and the bane of the Chriſtian faith. But this hiſtorian thinks, he would have performed much greater things, and been the completeſt writer that ever ever was, had it not been for the darkneſs of the age he lived in, under the tyranny of Antichriſt; that is, in other words, if he had not been a Papiſt: however, in the midſt of that darkneſs he ſaw many things of which he durſt not declare his opinion. The Biſhop of Oſſory adds, that he had found ſome ſentences in Baconthorp's works more weighty, than in all the other writers of his time; and that he had made a collection of them, as ſo many inſtances of the author's piety, but fears he had loſt them in Ireland. Talis ille erat in omni bonarum artium genere, qualem nec ante nec poſt habebat Anglia, ex omni Mendicantium Monachorum cumulo. —— In omnibus ſcriptis ſophiſticen, ut hæreſim, blaſphemiam, ac perniciosſimam fidei peſtem aſpernabatur. —— Si non fuiſſet hic ſcriptor ejus ætatis caligine impeditus, ſub Antichriſti tyrannide, multa et magna præſtitiſſet, nec eo fuiſſet quicquam abſolutius. Multa certe in ipſis tenebris vidit, quæ pronunciare non audebat. Porro inveni ſententias aliquot graviores apud illum, quam apud omnes ejus temporis ſcriptores: et eas, ut fragmenta quædam pietatis ejus, collegi; quæ tamen apud Hybernos periiſſe timeo (14). Pits praiſes him almoſt in the very words of Paulus Panſa (15). Nemo doctius confundebat Judæos, nemo nerveſior confutabat Turcos, vel quoſcunque infideles; nemo felicius expugnabat Hereticos; nemo ſolidius Chriſti veritatem dilucidabat; nemo manifeſtius Antichriſti falſitatem et impoſturas detegebat, ſuiſque coloribus depingebat; nemo ſubtilius difficiles nodos ſolvebat; nemo clarius obſcura ſacræ Scripturæ loca explanabat, et ſenſus reconditos et arcana myſteria dilucidius aperiebat (16).

(13) Leland, ubi ſupra.

Baconthorp died at London [G], in the nineteenth year of Edward III., A. D. 1346 (f). B.

(f) Leland, Bale, and Pits, ubi ſupra.

(16) Pits, ubi ſupra.

[G] He died at London.] It is added, that he was buried in the convent of the Carmelites there; but Leland tells us, he had in vain endeavoured to diſcover his monument. Tumulus à me Londini ſolicite quæſitus at non inventus (17). Some pretend, he was buried at Blackney, and others aſſign Norwich as the place of his interment (18).

(17) Leland, ubi ſupra.

(18) Fuller, ubi ſupra, p. 256.

[From the united teſtimonies concerning Baconthorp, it appears that, conſidering the age in which he lived, he was an extraordinary man. Were we to give full credit to the encomiums upon him inſerted in the notes [E] and [F], we might almoſt be ready to rank him with Roger Bacon, and to regret that his printed works ſhould be ſo little attended to, and that his other tracts ſhould either be loſt, or lie buried in the duſt of ſome old libraries. But when we peruſe the numerous Catalogue of his writings in Bale or Tanner, and ſee that they were moſt of them upon theological ſubjects, we ſhall be tolerably reconciled to their having ſunk into oblivion.] K.

(14) Baleus, ubi ſupra.

(15) See the preceding remark, marg. note (10).

BADEW (Richard de), the firſt and original founder of Clare-Hall in Cambridge, was deſcended from a knightly family, ſeated at Great Badew, or Badow, near Chelmsford, in the county of Eſſex (a). From this place of their reſidence they took their ſurname; and here, probably, Richard de Badew was born. In 1326, he was Chancellor of the univerſity of Cambridge (b): and having purchaſed two tenements in Miln-ſtreet of Nigel Thornton, a Phyſician [A], he laid there, in the year abovementioned, the foundation of a building, to which was given the name of Univerſity-Hall. In it he placed a Principal, who was to take care of the Penſioners that came to live there at their own expence (c); or, as others ſay, at the charges of the univerſity (d); for as yet it was not endowed. It continued in this condition for the ſpace of ſixteen years, and then by an accidental fire was burnt down (e). Richard de Badew being unable to build it, it lay for a few years in ruins. But one of the late Penſioners having a great intereſt with Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Glouceſter, and third ſiſter and coheir of Sir Gilbert de Clare, the laſt Earl of Glouceſter and Hertford [B], he prevailed upon her to undertake what de Badew was not able to perform (f). Whereupon this charitable Lady, after the reſignation of Walter Thaxtead the Principal, and with the conſent of Richard de Badew, new-built that hall, and endowed it, in the year 1347, with revenues for one Maſter, ten Fellows, and ten Scholars (g). At the ſame time ſhe named it Clare-Hall, from her own family-ſurname (h). When ſhe founded it, King Edward III. gave licence of mortmain to the Maſter and Scholars, to take lands and tenements, to the value of forty pounds a year (i). The revenues of this Hall have been augmented ſince by ſeveral benefactors [C]; ſo that at preſent it contains one Maſter, eighteen Fellows, and ſixty-three Scholars (k). Some conclude (l) from the two following verſes of Chaucer (m), that it was formerly called Sollere or Scholar-hall,

(a) T. Fuller's Hiſt. of the Univerſity of Cambridge, Lond. 1655, p. 37. Magna Britannia, by T. Cox, Lond. 1717, 4to. Vol. i. p. 245.

(b) Fuller, ibid. J. Caii Hiſt. Cantebr. Acad. p. 57, edit. 1574, Lond. 4to. Hiſt. of the Univerſ. of Cambridge, by R. Parker, Lond. 1721, 8vo. p. 42.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Scot's Tables quoted by T. Fuller, ibid. The Foundation of the Univerſity of Cambridge, Lond. 1651, 4to. p. 4.

(e) Caius, & Fuller, ibid.

(f) Caius, & Fuller, ibid.

(g) Magna Britannia, ubi ſupra.

(h) Caius, & Fuller, ubi ſupra.

(i) Stow, ubi ſupra.

(k) Magna Britannia, ubi ſupra.

(l) Caius, & Fuller, ubi ſupra.

(m) In the Reve's Tale.

> And namely there was a great college,
> Men clepen (n) it the Sollere-hall of Cambrege.

(n) i. e. call.

[A] Having purchaſed two tenements in Miln-ſtreet, &c.] Stow ſays (1), that it was founded by the Chancellor, R. Badew, and Maſters of the univerſity of Cambridge, upon a ground whereon ſtood two houſes, belonging of old time to the ſaid Chancellor and univerſity, in Miln-ſtreet.

(1) In his Account of the Univerſities in England, at the end of his Chronicle.

[B] Third ſiſter and coheir of Sir Gilbert de Clare, the laſt Earl of Glouceſter and Hertford.] Namely of that name and family. She was married three times, 1. To John de Burgh, ſon and heir to the Earl of Ulſter (2), by whom ſhe had William de Burgh, laſt Earl of Ulſter. 2. To Theobald of Verdon. And 3. To Sir Roger Damary, or Tamari (3). She had formerly been a benefactreſs to Univerſity-Hall, having beſtowed upon it the perpetual patronage of Litlington, and been otherwiſe very bountiful to that foundation (4).

(2) T. Walſingham Hiſt. Angl. edit. Francof. 1603, fol. p. 106. Dugdale's Baronage, Vol. i. p. 217.

(3) Stow's Ann. ubi ſupra, p. 1058, edit. 1631.

(4) Foundation of the Univerſity of Cambridge, ubi ſupra.

[C] The revenues of this hall have been augmented ſince by ſeveral benefactors.] The chief of them have been, John Thaxton, Editha Green, William Ducket, William Worleigh, William Marſhal, Ralph Scrivener, Thomas Cave, Thomas Stoyle, or Stoite, Edmund Natureſs, Edward Leedes, Robert Scot, Thomas Cecil Earl of Exeter, and his Lady Dorothy, who gave 108 pounds a year in rent, William Butler, John Freeman, George Ruggle, Sir Robert Heath, Thomas Binge, Humphry Hide, Robert Johnſon, Eraſmus Farrar, William Briden, Thomas Croply, &c. (5) M.

(5) Ibid. & Caius, & Fuller, ubi ſupra.

[BAILLIE (Robert), a Preſbyterian Divine of conſiderable eminence in the Church of Scotland during the laſt century, was born at Glaſgow, in the year 1599. His father, Mr. Thomas Baillie, was a citizen of that place, and ſon to Baillie of Jerviſton, viſton, who was a brother of the family of Carphin, and a branch of the ancient family of Lamington [A], all in the county of Lanerk (a). His mother, whoſe name was Helen Gibſon, was of the ſtock of the Gibſons of Durie, ſeveral of whom have diſtinguiſhed themſelves in the Law. Our Robert Baillie was educated in the Univerſity of his native city, under the direction of Mr. Sharp, who was at that time the Head of the College there. After Mr. Baillie had taken his degrees in Arts, he turned his thoughts to the ſtudy of Divinity, to which he applied with uncommon diligence. Having, about the year 1622, received orders from Archbiſhop Law, he was choſen a Regent of Philoſophy in the Univerſity of Glaſgow. While he was in this ſtation, he had, for ſome years, the care of the education of Lord Montgomery, who, at length, carried him with him to Kilwinning; to which Church he was preſented by the Earl of Eglinton. Here he lived in the ſtricteſt friendſhip with that noble family, and the people connected with it; as he did, alſo, with his Ordinary the Archbiſhop of Glaſgow, with whom he kept up an epiſtolary correſpondence. In 1633, he declined, from a principle of modeſty, an offer which was made him of a Church in Edinburgh (b). Being requeſted, in 1637, by the Archbiſhop of Glaſgow, to preach a Sermon before the Aſſembly at Edinburgh, in order to recommend the Canon and Service Book, then publiſhed and eſtabliſhed by authority, he refuſed to do it; and wrote a handſome letter to the Archbiſhop, aſſigning the reaſons of his refuſal [B] (c). In 1638, he was choſen by the Preſbytery of Irvine, a member of the famous Aſſembly at Glaſgow, which was a prelude to the civil war. Though Mr. Baillie is ſaid to have behaved in this Aſſembly with great moderation, it is evident that he was by no means deficient in his zeal againſt Prelacy and Arminianiſm [C] (d). He was a Member of all the following General Aſſemblies, till 1653, excepting (a) Vid. Some account of Mr. Baillie's Life, taken from the Archives of the Church of Scotland, and prefixed to his Letters and Journals, printed at Edinburgh, in two Vols. 8vo. 1775.

(b) Ibid.

(c) Baillie's Letters and Journals, Vol. i. p. 11, 12.

(d) Life, ubi ſupra, p. 5. Letters and Journals, Vol. i. p. 122, 123.

[A] A branch of the ancient family of Lamington.] Baillie of Hoprig and Lamington was a branch of the Baliols, Lords of Galloway. Hoprig, by marrying the daughter of the famous Sir William Wallace, Regent of Scotland, obtained the eſtate of Lamington. Their ſecond ſon was the firſt of the houſe of Carphin; and from him Jerviſton, the predeceſſor of our Robert Baillie, deſcended (1).

(1) Account of Mr. Baillie's life, prefixed to his Letters and Journals, p. 3, note.

[B] Aſſigning the reaſons of his refuſal.] The letter is dated at Kilwinning, Auguſt the 19th, 1637, and is as follows:

'Pleaſe your Lordſhip,

'YOUR Lordſhip's letter of the 7th of this inſtant, 'I received the 13th, late, wherein I am deſired 'to preach the laſt Wedneſday of this inſtant, before 'the Aſſembly, and to frame my Sermon to unite 'my hearers to the obedience and practice of the 'canon of our church and ſervice-book, publiſhed 'and eſtabliſhed by authority. I am much obliged 'to your Lordſhip's eſtimation of my poor gifts, and 'do humbly thank your Lordſhip for intending to 'honour me with ſo great a ſervice; but withal am 'ſorry that my preſent diſpoſition neceſſitates me to 'decline the charge. I will confeſs myſelf to your 'Lordſhip freely; for I have found ever ſuch equity 'in your Lordſhip, and favour and reſpect to me in 'all my affairs, that I am emboldened, without all 'diſſimulation, to ſpeak what is in my mind. The 'truth is, that as yet I have not ſtudied the matters 'contained in that book of our Canons and Common Prayer, only I have taken a ſlight view of 'them; whereby, for the preſent, my mind is no 'ways ſatisfied; yea, the little pleaſure I have in 'theſe books, and the great diſpleaſure I find the 'moſt part have, of paſtors and people wherever I 'come, to have conceived of them, has filled my 'mind with ſuch a meaſure of grief, that I am ſcarce 'able to preach to my own flock: but to preach in 'another congregation, and that in ſo famous a 'meeting, and that upon theſe matters, I am at this 'time all utterly unable. Your Lordſhip, I put no 'queſtion, is ſo equitable as to take in good part 'this my ingenuous confeſſion of the true cauſe why 'I am unable to accept that honourable compliment, 'which your Lordſhip's more than ordinary reſpect 'would have laid upon me. So for this, and many 'more favours received, far above my deſerving, I 'pray God to bleſs your Lordſhip, and to continue 'you many years to be our overſeer; for be perſuaded, that many thouſands here where I live, are 'greatly afraid, that whenever your Lordſhip ſhall go, 'their peace and quietneſs ſhall go away with you. 'This is from your Lordſhip's very loving friend, and

'obedient ſervant,

Kilwinning, Aug. 19, 1637.

'R. BAILLIE (2).'

(2) Letters and Journals, Vol. i. p. 11, 22.

Notwithſtanding Mr. Baillie's refuſal, and the reaſons of it, he was ſtill urged upon the ſubject, and, indeed, commanded, upon his canonical obedience, to preach before the Synod; the matter of the Sermon being left to his own diſcretion. Accordingly, on a very ſhort notice, he compoſed a diſcourſe, in which, without ſaying a ſyllable relative to Conformity, he inſiſted only upon the paſtoral duties in general. However, when the time appointed came, he peremptorily refuſed to preach at all (3).

(3) Ibid. p. 7, 8.

[C] In his zeal againſt Prelacy and Arminianiſm.] Out of many proofs that might be produced of the truth of our aſſertion, we ſhall only bring one paſſage from Mr. Baillie's Hiſtory of the General Aſſembly, which will ſufficiently evince his ſentiments on the points mentioned in the text, and his unfavourable opinion of thoſe who were of the oppoſite party.

'Saturday the firſt of December was our tenth ſeſſion. Mr. David Lindſay preſented to us (for he 'had chief charge of the bill; yea, the man's dexterity and diligence in that kind of employment 'was ſuch, that to the end of the aſſembly ſuch buſineſs lay upon him almoſt alone) three cloſed proceſſes before the Preſbyteries; that of Mr. David 'Mitchell, who this long time had delighted to 'grieve the whole land with the doctrine of the faction, Arminianiſm in all the heads, and ſundry 'points of Popery, proved by ſundry witneſſes, beſides his declining the Aſſembly, which alone, according to the acts of our Church, imports depoſition. He came to Glaſgow, at leaſt remained 'ſome days in Hamilton with the Biſhop of Roſs: 'no man could have kept ſuch a one in our church 'without ſerious repentance for his manifold avowed 'errors. The next was Dr. Panther, Profeſſor of 'St. Andrews. I never ſaw the man; but his Valaidos makes me love him as one of the beſt poets 'I know now living. The man has a bonny ſpirit, 'ſome things in all ſciences; but St. Andrews was 'far in the wrong to advance him to a Divinity-profeſſion before he had well learned the grounds 'of that profeſſion or ſcience. He was never diligent; but he had no ſooner ſettled himſelf in his 'charge till he began to recommend the Engliſh 'method of ſtudy, to begin with the Popiſh ſchoolmen and fathers, and to cloſe with Proteſtant Neotoretics; a moſt unhappy and dangerous order! I 'hear in his public notes he has deviated to the 'Popiſh juſtification, and in his diſcourſes to the 'groſſeſt Pelagianiſm in original ſin, let be in other 'points of Arminianiſm. Did not the Heavens cry 'for a vengeance againſt our Biſhops, though we had 'been dumb, who did hear and ſee our Church undermined with ſuch inſtruments, of their own making and maintaining? The third was Archdean 'Gladſtones, a monſter of drunkenneſs and Atheiſtic 'profanity. Rome Pagan would not have ſuffered 'ſuch ing the time in which he attended the Weſtminſter Aſſembly. In 1640, he was ſent by the covenanting Lords to London, to draw up an accuſation againſt Dr. Laud, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, for the innovations he had obtruded upon the Church of Scotland (e). While Mr. Baillie was in England upon this occaſion, he wrote to the Preſbytery of Irvine a regular account of the ſtate of public affairs; and ſent them, among other things, a large journal of the proceedings in the trial of the Earl of Strafford (f). Not long after his return to his own country (in 1642), he was appointed Joint Profeſſor of Divinity, with Mr. David Dickſon, in the Univerſity of Glaſgow. And his reputation was become ſo great, that he had before this received invitations from the other three Univerſities, all of which he refuſed. He continued in his Profeſſorſhip till the Reſtoration; but his diſcharge of the duties of it was interrupted, for a conſiderable time, by his reſidence in England: for in 1643, he was choſen one of the Commiſſioners of the Church of Scotland to the Aſſembly of Divines at Weſtminſter (g). Though he never ſpoke in the debates of the Aſſembly, he appears to have been an uſeful Member of it (b); and he entirely concurred in the principles and views of its leaders. He had, in particular, the ſame averſion to Toleration, and had imbibed a conſiderable portion of that enthuſiaſtical ſpirit which delighted in carrying on religious ſervices to a ſurpriſing length [D] (i). Mr. Baillie returned again to his own country in the latter end of the year 1646. When, after the execution of Charles the Firſt, Charles the Second was proclaimed in Scotland, our Profeſſor was one of the Divines appointed by the General Aſſembly to wait upon his Majeſty at the Hague; upon which occaſion, on the 27th of March, 1649, he made a ſpeech in the Royal Preſence, wherein he expreſſed, in the ſtrongeſt

(e) Life, ubi ſupra, p. 6.

(f) Letters and Journals, Vol. i. p. 219—297.

(g) Life, ibid.

(b) Letters and Journals, Vol. ii. p. 252.

(i) Ibid. p. 18, 19.

'ſuch a beaſtly man to have remained a Prieſt even 'to Bacchus. I hear that the man once had a very 'great appearance of much good parts; they ſay he 'was a trim perſonage of a man, had a pretty eſtate, 'was a ſcholar in all faculties; right eloquent, wiſe, 'and diſcreet, and free of all ſcandalous vices; in 'favour with the King, court, and country: but 'long ſince, having caſt away the fear of God, all 'theſe gifts of body, eſtate, mind, has evidently 'left him. Theſe proceſſes were read and conſi'dered, but ſentences delayed becauſe their errors 'ran much on Arminianiſm. It was thought meet 'to appoint ſome to ſpeak at our next meeting 'againſt theſe errors. Mr. D. Dickſon and I were 'nominate. Very evil will I had of that taſk. My 'diligence upon the books was not yet delivered off 'my hand. Arminianiſm is a deep, large, and in'tricate ſubject. Our time was the next meeting. 'Whatever I do, I would do it in earneſt; ſo with'out time I can do nothing. Always there was no 'remeid; that night, and to-morrow at night, I 'did what ye ſaw, and with which the aſſembly was 'pleaſed on that ſubject (4).'

(4) Ibid. p. 122—124.

[D] The ſame averſion to Toleration, &c.] Mr. Baillie's diſlike of the ſectaries is apparent through the whole of his letters; and he ſcarcely omits any convenient opportunity of ſhewing his diſapprobation of the doctrine of Toleration. His views upon theſe heads, together with a remarkable inſtance of the length to which the devotional acts of the Preſbyterians were ſometimes extended, and of the delight he received from them, will be diſplayed in the following extract. It ſhould be remembered that the letter it is taken from, was addreſſed to a Scotch Miniſter who was ſettled in Holland.

'The Independents here, finding they have not 'the Magiſtrate ſo obſequious as in New England, 'turn their pens, as you will ſee in MS. to take 'from the Magiſtrate all power of taking any coer'cive order with the vileſt Hereticks. Not only they 'praiſe your Magiſtrate, who for policy gives ſome 'ſecret tolerance to divers religions, wherein, as I 'conceive, your Divines preach againſt them as 'great ſinners; but avow, that by God's command, 'the Magiſtrate is diſcharged to put the leaſt diſcour'teſy on any man, Jew, Turk, Papiſt, Socinian, or 'whatever, for his religion. I wiſh Apollonius 'conſidered this well. The five he writes to will not 'ſay this; but M.S. is of as great authority here as 'any of them. Your courſe of engaging the other 'provinces is very good. I ſend this incloſed to a 'friend here, who is well acquainted in Paris, 'Bern, Leyden, Sedan, and Geneva, who accord'ingly has written to all theſe five places for their 'aſſiſtance in the common cauſe. My correſpon'dence with you is ſo ſecret as may be. Some of 'them ſuſpect ſomewhat of you; but know little: 'however, they muſt be content that all the Re'formed, whom they openly avow to oppugn, ſhould 'declare what ſenſe they have of their wounds and 'danger from them. I long for Morellius and Sa'dael, alſo if by Mr. Paget, or any of your friends 'at Amſterdam, you could find any of the writs of 'Brown, the firſt ſectary; for however I have uſed 'all poſſible diligence, yet cannot I find any of that 'man's writs here: they would, I conceive, be very 'uſeful to me. This day was the beſt that I have 'ſeen ſince I came to England. General Eſſex, 'when he went out, ſent to the Aſſembly, to in'treat, that a day of faſting might be kept for him. 'We appoint, this day, four of our number to 'preach and pray at Chriſt's church; alſo, taking 'the occaſion, we thought it meet to be humbled in 'the Aſſembly, ſo we ſpent from nine to five very 'graciouſly. After D. Twiſſe had begun with a 'brief prayer, Mr. Marſhall prayed large two hours, 'moſt divinely, confeſſing the ſins of the Members 'of the Aſſembly, in a wonderful, pathetic, and 'prudent way. After, Mr. Arrowſmith preached an 'hour, then a pſalm; thereafter Mr. Vines prayed 'near two hours, and Mr. Palmer preached an hour, 'and Mr. Seaman prayed near two hours, then a 'pſalm; after Mr. Henderſon brought them to a 'ſweet conference of the heat confeſſed in the Aſſem'bly, and other ſeen faults, to be remedied, and the 'conveniency to preach againſt all ſects, eſpecially 'Anabaptiſts and Antinomians. Dr. Twiſſe cloſed 'with a ſhort prayer and bleſſing. God was ſo evi'dently in all this exerciſe, that we expect certainly 'a bleſſing both in our matter of the Aſſembly and 'whole kingdom (5).'

(5) Ibid. Vol. ii. p. 18, 19.

We cannot paſs over the preceding letter, without making a few obſervations upon it. Even the moſt devout perſon would find it difficult to conceive, at preſent, how a religious ſervice could be extended, with any degree of advantage and ſatisfaction, to ſuch a diſproportionable length. But the ardour of thoſe times, whether we impute it to the ſpirit of piety, or to the ſpirit of enthuſiaſm, was ſurpriſingly great. The minds of men were raiſed, by an amazingly ſerious education, by their theological diſputes, and their warm conteſts for civil liberty, to a prodigious pitch of fervour. The union of ſuch cauſes enflamed their devotional zeal to a height, which, in this phlegmatic age, will almoſt be thought to have bordered on lunacy. And yet many of the perſons who could thus engage in, or attend upon preaching and praying for eight hours together, with the utmoſt delight, were not mere Fanatics. They were not only men of learning, but of underſtanding, who had eminent talents for buſineſs, and the conduct of affairs. They did not ſo reſt in the hopes of the Divine Interpoſition, as to neglect applying, with ſagacity and attention, to the natural means of ſucceſs.

When

ſtrongeſt terms, his abhorrence of the murder of the late King [E] (k); and, in his ſentiments upon this event, it appears, that the Preſbyterian Divines of that period, both at home and abroad, almoſt univerſally agreed [F]. After the Reſtoration of King Charles the Second, Mr. Baillie, on the twenty-third of January, 1661, by the intereſt of the Earl of Lauderdale, with whom he was a great favourite, was made Principal of the Univerſity of Glaſgow, upon the removal of Mr. Patrick Gilleſpie, who had been patronized by Cromwell. It is ſaid, by ſeveral writers, that Mr. Baillie, had the offer of a Biſhopric, which he abſolutely refuſed (l). Though he was very loyal, and moſt ſincerely rejoiced in his Majeſty's reſtoration, he began, a little before his death, to be extremely anxious for the fate of his beloved Preſbytery [G]. His health failed him in the ſpring of the year 1662. During his illneſs, he was viſited by the new-made Archbiſhop

(k) Ibid. p. 333

(l) Life, ubi ſupra.

When abilities and activity are united with an enthuſiaſm, which, inſtead of totally ſwallowing up, ſerves but to impel the faculties of the mind, then it is, perhaps, that mankind are capable of the greateſt efforts, and that their exertions are moſt to be apprehended.

Extravagant as the devotion of the Preſbyterians of the laſt century may be eſteemed, that is far from being the thing for which they chiefly deſerve to be condemned. They are infinitely more worthy of cenſure on account of their narrow and intolerant ſpirit. The Preſbyterians of Scotland, and the Preſbyterians of England, were, in this reſpect, alike blameable. They had not learned wiſdom and moderation from the dangers and ſufferings they had been expoſed to from the Epiſcopal Party. The Puritans had been depreſſed for almoſt a century; and yet when they came into power, they immediately ſet up the divine right of Preſbytery, and would not permit ſects and ſectaries to be tolerated. Could any thing be more abſurd, than for men, who had long been perſecuted themſelves, to apply to the infamous work of perſecution? And their conduct was ſtill the more criminal, as their having been ſo earneſtly engaged in the cauſe of civil liberty, ought to have given them juſt and enlarged views, with regard to the general rights of human nature. Even the Independents of that age, who were the firſt in this country that promulgated the doctrine of Toleration, probably owed their ſentiments more to the peculiarity of their ſituation, than to the liberality of their minds. Standing in a critical ſituation between two powerful parties, and expoſed to the danger of being cruſhed, which ever of them became uppermoſt, they were under a neceſſity of pleading for indulgence to tender conſciences. In judging, therefore, of theſe times, an impartial and candid man will be obliged to condemn both Epiſcopalians and Preſbyterians, and to lament that ſo bigotted and perſecuting a ſpirit pervaded the Clergy on each ſide. To whatever denomination we belong, we ſhould freely and equally cenſure the intolerant principles and practices of our anceſtors, and rejoice that better principles and practices now prevail. We ſhould guard, alſo, againſt judging of general bodies of men, at preſent, from what hath been done formerly by thoſe who have borne the ſame name, without adverting to the alterations which have gradually been produced in their ſentiments and manners. If individuals write with a malignant and perſecuting ſpirit, let them be treated with the contempt or indignation they may deſerve. But let not the Church of England, or the Church of Scotland, or the Engliſh Diſſenters, as ſuch, be charged with principles, which, in general, have long ſince been diſcarded.

[E] His abhorrence of the murder of the late King.]

'Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

'IN theſe very ſad and calamitous times,' ſays Mr. Baillie, 'the Church of Scotland hath ſent ſome 'of us who are here, Miniſters and ruling Elders, and 'others who are yet behind, in commiſſion to your 'Majeſty, to declare, in their name, not only the 'ſincere and deep grief of that whole Church for your 'Majeſty's moſt lamentable afflictions, but alſo their 'real and great joy for your Majeſty's ſucceſſion to 'the throne, and their confident hopes, by the bleſſ-'ing of the Moſt High, on your royal perſon and 'government, now at laſt to come up out of that 'pit of grievous confuſions, calamities, fears, and 'dangers, wherein long they have been ſinking.

'According, therefore, to this our truſt, we do 'declare, what in our own breaſts often we have felt, 'and generally in the people among whom we live, 'have ſeen with our eyes an mournful ſorrow for that 'execrable and tragic parricide, which, though all 'men on earth ſhould paſs over unqueſtioned, yet 'we nothing doubt but the great judge of the world 'will ariſe, and plead againſt every one, of what 'condition ſoever, who have been either authors, or 'actors, or conſenters, or approvers, of that hardly 'expreſſible crime, which ſtamps and ſtigmatizes, 'with a new and before unſeen character of infamy, 'the face of the whole generation of ſectaries and 'their adherents, from whoſe hearts and hands that 'vileſt villany did proceed (6).'

(6) Ibid. p. 333.

This part of Mr. Baillie's ſpeech, together with his warm commendations of King Charles the Second, and a diſapprobation he had expreſſed, in a private letter, of the too rigid proceedings of the Scotch Clergy, expoſed him to ſome degree of obloquy among ſeveral of his brethren; which being a new thing to him, he felt in a ſenſible manner. However, he appears to have vindicated his conduct to general ſatisfaction; and, when he made his report of the proceedings of the Committee appointed to wait upon his Majeſty, he obtained the unanimous approbation and thanks of the whole Aſſembly (7).

(7) Ibid. p. 337, 338.

[F] Both at home and abroad, almoſt univerſally agreed.] How highly the Preſbyterian Clergy of this country diſapproved of the beheading of King Charles the Firſt, and how ſincerely they lamented it, is evident from the hiſtory of that time, and eſpecially from the remonſtrance which was preſented by the principal Miniſters, in and near the city of London, to Fairfax and his Council of War (8). What ſentiments the Divines of Holland entertained of this event, will appear from a paſſage in a letter written from that country, in March 1649, to Mr. Baillie, by Mr. Spang, his principal correſpondent:

(8) Neal's Hiſt. of the Puritans, Vol. iii. p. 532—537.

'I am ſure it has been a matter of inconceivable 'grief to you all, when you heard of that bloody 'murdering of the late King; and it is reaſon. that 'following the examples of the zealous preachers in 'London, you teſtify your utter abhorring of it, that 'there may be an extant teſtimony to the world of 'the loyalty of your hearts, whereby the foul mouths 'of Papiſts and malignants may be ſtopt, as Jacob 'did, Gen. xlix. 6.; and David, 2 Sam. iii. 35, 36, '37. All the Miniſters in this province do publicly 'declare their utter abhorring of it, and many have 'choſen ſelect texts for that purpoſe, and ever with 'that tender reſpect to our country and their pro-'ceedings, as was matter of joy for us to hear, now 'you have proclaimed the Prince to be King; and 'bleſſed be God who hath put it in your hearts ſo to 'do. This makes your names like a fragrant ſmell: 'and if you be put to any hazard for the maintenance 'of that action, if you will manage your credit well 'abroad, you will find real friends (9).'

(9) Letters and Journals, Vol. ii. p. 313.

[G] Anxious for the fate of his beloved Preſbytery.] His concern in this reſpect is manifeſt in one of his laſt letters to Mr. Spang, dated, January 31ſt, 1661. 'But as nothing is perfectly bleſſed on earth, ſome 'water was quickly poured in the wine of many; 'I am ſure in mine, as I expreſſed it in a ſharp and 'free letter to Lauderdale. Biſhops and Liturgies 'were every where ſet up in England and Ireland 'without contradiction; our League and Covenant, 'by a number of printed pamphlets, was torn to 'pieces. This was the more grievous, that at the 'beginning it appeared moſt eaſy to have been reme-'died. His gracious Majeſty was ready to have been 'adviſed by his Parliament; the leading men there 'were avowed Covenanters and Preſbyterians; Lau-'derdale and Mr. Sharp, both at Breda and London, 'had biſhop of Glaſgow, to whom he is ſaid to have addreſſed himſelf in the following words: 'Mr. Andrew, I will not call you my Lord. King Charles would have made me one 'of theſe Lords: but I do not find in the New Teſtament, that Chriſt has any Lords in 'his Houſe.' However, he treated the Archbiſhop very courteouſly. Mr. Baillie died in July 1662, being ſixty-three years of age. By his firſt wife, who was Lilias Fleming, of the family of Cardarroch, in the pariſh of Cadder, near Glaſgow, he had many children, five of whom ſurvived him; viz. one ſon, and four daughters. The poſterity of his ſon, Mr. Henry Baillie, who was a Preacher, but never accepted of any charge, ſtill inherit the eſtate of Carnbroe in the county of Lanerk, an ancient ſeat of the Baillies. The Principal's four daughters married into reſpectable families. Mrs. Baillie, who was an excellent woman, and much lamented by her huſband, died, after a long and lingering diſorder, June 7th, 1653. On the firſt of October 1656, Mr. Baillie took, for his ſecond wife, Mrs. Wilkie, a widow gentlewoman, daughter of Dr. Strang, Principal of the univerſity of Glaſgow. By this lady he had one daughter, who was married to Mr. Wilkinſhaw of Borrowfield (m). Mr. Baillie's character has been drawn to great advantage, not only by Mr. Wodrow, but by an hiſtorian of the oppoſite party [H]. His works [I], which were very learned, and acquired him reputation in his own time, are probably little attended to, in the preſent age. The memory of him, as a writer, will now chiefly be preſerved by his Letters and Journals, lately publiſhed; which, though they do not contain many things very remarkable or intereſting, will, nevertheleſs, as they relate to a moſt important period, be found of ſome uſe to the diligent reſearchers into Britiſh hiſtory [K].]

(m) Ibid.

'had very much of the King's ear; Monk was for 'us in that at the beginning, firm enough; the 'Queen and her party was on our ſide; the Epiſco-'pal men were ſundry of them as evil as before; 'Bramhill, Wren, Heylin, Thorndyke, Coſſings, 'Sydſerf, Hammond, Pierce, none of the beſt or 'moſt orthodox; Juxon and Duppa ſmally 'learned; Sheldon, Morley, able indeed, and very 'wiſe men; but the overturning of all the Reforma-'tion of England, without a contrary petition, to 'me was ſtrange, and very grievous, and I ſuſpect 'we know not yet the bottom of that myſtery. I 'wiſh all our friends, Scots and Engliſh, have been 'honeſt and faithful. Sure they have not been ſo 'prudent and induſtrious as, I think, they ſhould 'have been. However, as this was the original of 'all our late troubles, I think it will not fail in time 'to procure new commotions, if petitions and re-'monſtrances do not prevent them.

'It is like the general joy for the King's happy 'return, and the general abhorrence of our late 'confuſions and miſeries, together with fear leſt any 'juſtling, even by petitions, might give occaſion to 'theſe who were watching for it to make ſome new 'commotions, made our friends eaſy to be prevailed 'with not to oppoſe the King's deſires; eſpecially 'the King promiſing, by conference with the chief 'Preſbyterians and Epiſcopals, to do his endeavours 'for their agreement; as indeed he laboured much 'in this, and, by his declaration, drew both ſome 'nearer than they were; but for little ſatisfaction of 'either of the parties; the Epiſcopals, not having 'all they were wont, were diſcontent: the Preſby-'terians found the other had got too much, and 'more than in conſcience they could ever aſſent to; 'yet, for love to the King, they were ſilent, when 'all the biſhops were ſolemnly inſtalled, and the 'liturgy every where reſtored, clean contrary to our 'covenant, and acts of the Engliſh Parliament ſince '1641. Chancellor Hyde was thought the great 'actor in this Epiſcopal buſineſs, while a few hours 'treaty, or but a petition from the Houſes, Gene-'ral, and city, ſent with the Commiſſioners to 'Breda, might eaſily have freed us, for the great 'good of them, and of all theſe vexations (10).'

(10) Ib. p. 443, 444.

[H] Not only by Mr. Wodrow, but by an hiſtorian of the oppoſite party.] 'Mr. Robert Baillie,' ſays Mr. Wodrow, 'may moſt juſtly be reckoned among the 'great men of this time, and was an honour to his 'country, for his profound and univerſal learning, 'his exact and ſolid judgment, that vaſt variety of 'languages he underſtood, to the number of twelve 'or thirteen, and his writing a Latin ſtyle which 'might become the Auguſtan age. But I need not 'enlarge on his character; his works do praiſe him in 'the gates. He had been employed in much of the 'public buſineſs of this church ſince the year 1637, 'and was a worthy member of the venerable aſſem-'bly at Weſtminſter, and at London almoſt all the 'time of it, and hath left behind him very large 'accounts of matters both of Church and State. He 'was of a moſt peaceable and healing temper, and 'always a vigorous aſſerter of the King's intereſt: 'and although, at the firſt, he wanted not his own 'difficulties, from his education, and tenderneſs of 'the King's authority; yet after reaſoning, reading, 'and prayer, as he himſelf expreſſeth it, he came 'heartily into the meaſures of the Covenanters. I 'have it from an unqueſtionable hand, one of his 'ſcholars, who afterwards was his ſucceſſor, and 'waited on him a few weeks before his death this 'year [1662], that he died under a rooted averſion 'to Prelacy in this Church. My author deſired Mr. 'Baillie's judgment of the courſes this Church was 'ſo faſt running into. His words to him were, 'Prelacy is now coming in like a land-flood: for 'my ſhare, I have conſidered that controverſy as far 'as I was able, and after all my inquiry, I find it 'and am perſuaded it is inconſiſtent with Scripture, 'contrary to pure and primitive antiquity, and 'diametrically oppoſite to the true intereſt of theſe 'lands (11).' It is not to be wondered at that ſo zealous a writer as Mr. Wodrow, ſhould give a very high character of a man, who joined to his abilities and virtues, a warm attachment to the Preſbyterian diſcipline. But Mr. Baillie's reputation was not confined to his own religious party. The author of the Appendix to Archbiſhop Spottiſwood's Hiſtory ſpeaks of him in the following terms. 'Robert Baillie, 'Profeſſor of Divinity, and afterwards Principal, 'a learned and modeſt man. Though he publiſhed 'ſome very violent writings, yet theſe flowed ra-'ther from the inſtigations of other perſons than his 'own inclinations. He has left a great evidence 'of his diligence and learning in his Opus Chro-'nologicum (12).'

(11) Life of Mr. Baillie, prefixed to the 1ſt Vol. of his Letters and Journals, p. vii, viii.

(12) Ibid.

[I] His works.] Theſe were, 'Opus Hiſtoricum 'et Chronologicum, in folio, printed at Amſterdam.—'A Defence of the Reformation of the Church of 'Scotland, againſt Mr. Maxwell, Biſhop of Roſs.—'A Parallel betwixt the Scottiſh Service-Book and 'the Romiſh Miſſal, Breviary, &c.—The Canter-'burian Self-Conviction.--Queries anent the Service-'Book.—Antidote againſt Arminianiſm.—A Treatiſe 'on Scottiſh Epiſcopacy.—Laudenſium.—Diſſuaſive 'againſt the Errors of the Times, with a Supple-'ment.—A Reply to the Modeſt Enquirer.—With 'ſome other Tracts, and ſeveral Sermons upon pub-'lic occaſions (13).' It is plain from the preceding catalogue, that Mr. Baillie's Opus Hiſtoricum et Chronologicum was his capital production. The reſt of his writings, being chiefly on controverſial and temporary ſubjects, can, at preſent, be of little or no value.

(13) Ibid.

[K] His Letters and Journals, lately publiſhed, &c.] This publication is intitled, 'Letters and Journals, 'written ' written by the deceaſed Mr. Robert Baillie, Prin' cipal of the Univerſity of Glaſgow. Carefully

' tranſcribed by Robert Aiken. Containing an ' impartial Account of public Tranſactions, Civil,
' Eccleſiaſtical, and Military, both in England and ' Scotland, from 1637 to 1662; a Period, perhaps,
' the moſt remarkable that is to be met with in the ' Britiſh Hiſtory. With an Account of the Author's
' life, prefixed; and a Gloſſary, annexed.' Two volumes 8vo, printed at Edinburgh, for W. Gray, 1775. The chief correſpondents of Mr. Baillie were, Mr. William Spang, Miniſter firſt to the Scotch Staple at Campvere, and afterwards to the Engliſh Congregation in Middleburgh in Zealand, who was his couſin-german; Mr. David Dickſon, profeſſor of Divinity, firſt at Glaſgow, then at Edinburgh, and Meſſrs. Robert Ramſay and George Young, who were Miniſters in Glaſgow. There are, in this collection, letters to ſeveral other perſons: but Mr Spang was the gentleman with whom Mr. Baillie principally correſponded. The Journals contain a hiſtory of the General Aſſembly at Glaſgow, in 1638; an account of the Earl of Strafford's trial; the tranſactions of the General Aſſembly and Parliament, in 1641; and the proceedings of the General Aſſembly, in 1643.] K.

BAINBRIDGE (JOHN), an eminent Phyſician and Aſtronomer of the XVIIth century, was the ſon of Robert Bainbridge by Anne his wife, daughter of Richard Everard, of Shenton in Leiceſterſhire, and born, in the year 1582, at Aſhby de la Zouch, in the ſame county. He was educated at the grammar-ſchool in that town, and from thence removed to Emanuel College in Cambridge, under the tuition of his kinſman Dr. Joſeph Hall, afterwards Biſhop of Norwich. He took the degrees of Batchelor and Maſter of Arts, and ſtudied Phyſic in that univerſity; after which he retired to his own country, where he taught a grammar-ſchool for ſome years, and practiſed Phyſic (a). He applied himſelf likewiſe to the ſtudy of the Mathematics, eſpecially Aſtronomy, of which he had been extremely fond from his earlieſt years. By the advice of his friends, he removed to London, where he was admitted a Fellow of the college of Phyſicians (b). His Deſcription of the Comet in 1618 brought him acquainted with Sir Henry Savile, who, without any application or recommendation in favour of Dr. Bainbridge, appointed him his firſt Profeſſor of Aſtronomy at Oxford, in the year 1619; whereupon he removed thither, and was entered a maſter-commoner of Merton College; of which ſociety he continued a member ſome years. In 1631, he was appointed by the Maſter and Fellows of Merton, Junior-Reader of Linacre's lecture, and in 1635 Superior Reader of the ſame lecture (c). Having reſolved to publiſh correct editions of the ancient Aſtronomers, agreeably to the ſtatutes of the founder of that profeſſorſhip, in order to acquaint himſelf with the diſcoveries of the Arabian Aſtronomers, he began to ſtudy the Arabic language, being then about forty years of age (d). Some time before his death, he removed to an houſe over againſt Merton College church, and died there November the 3d, 1643, in the ſixty-ſecond year of his age. His body was conveyed to the public ſchools, where it reſted ſome time; and, an oration having been ſpoken in praiſe of the deceaſed by Mr. William Strode, the univerſity Orator, it was carried from thence, attended by a great number of members of the univerſity, to Merton College, and there depoſited near the high altar (e). An epitaph, ſaid to be written by his ſucceſſor Mr. Greaves [A], was inſcribed on his

(a) Wood, Athenæ Oxonienſes, Vol. ii. col. 34. and Th. Smith Commentariolus de vita et ſtudiis Joannis Bainbridgii, p. 3. publiſhed in his Vitæ quorundam eruditiſſ. et illuſtriſſ. virorum, London, 1708. 4to.

(b) Th. Smith, ubi ſupra, p. 4.

(c) Id. ib. p. 5, 6. & Wood, ubi ſupra.

(d) Th. Smith, ib. p. 10, 11.

(e) Wood, 10. & Smith, ib. p. 12.

[A] His epitaph ——— ſaid to be written by Mr. Greaves.] It is as follows: Si ſcire cupias, viator, quis et quantus hic jacet, alibi quæras oportet; dicere ſatis nequeo. Britannia tota viri famam non capit. Ne cætera tamen ignores, in rem tuam pauca hæc accipe. JOANNES BAINBRIDGIUS, vir famæ integerrimæ, et doctrinæ incomparabilis; Medicinæ profeſſor et Matheſeos, morborum tam felix expugnator novorum, quam ſagax indagator ſyderum; Quem primum Aſtronomiæ profeſſorem, et dignum collegam, in mathematicis prælecturis, quas magnificè erexerat, prudens hominum et librorum æſtimator, elegit Savilius; Quem Cantabrigiæ educatum Academia Oxonienſis fovit ut ſuum, defunctum publicè flevit, ut par utriuſque ornamentum; Qui Scaligerum felicius correxit, quam Scaliger tempora; In non levem literarum jacturam, immaturus obiit MDCXLIII. Abi jam; cætera quær vel ab exteris.

In Engliſh.

' If, paſſenger, you would know who, and how ' great a man lies here, you muſt enquire elſewhere;
' I cannot ſufficiently inform you; all Britain is too
' little for his fame. But that you may not be ig' norant of the reſt, take the following account for ' your benefit. JOHN BAINBRIDGE, a perſon of the ' moſt unblemiſhed character, and unequalled learn' ing, Profeſſor of Phyſic and Mathematics, as ſuc-
' ceſsful in removing new diſeaſes, as ſagacious in his ' obſervations on the ſtars; whom Sir Henry Savile,
' that excellent judge of men and books, appointed
' his firſt Profeſſor of Aſtronomy, and his worthy col' league in the mathematical lectures he had ſo nobly
' founded; who, having been educated at Cambridge,
' was cheriſhed by the univerſity of Oxford as her
' own ſon, and honoured by her with a public oration
' and funeral, as equally an ornament of both; who ' corrected Scaliger with more ſucceſs than Scaliger
' had corrected Chronology: He died too early for the ' intereſt of learning, in the year 1643. Go now
' and learn the reſt even from foreigners.'

Dr. Smith, who gives us this epitaph (1), tells us, he is not certain it was written by Mr. Greaves, though many aſſert it was; and that he had tranſcribed the following epitaph from a manuſcript of that gentleman's. Quod ſupereſt clariſſimi viri D. Joannes Bainbridge, in Academia Oxonienſi publici Aſtronomiæ Profeſſoris, ſub hoc marmore clauditur. Quod vero amavimus, quod ſuſpeximus, quod mæſti deſideramus, fruſtra hic quæras: illud cælo, cui vivus animo cogitationeque incubuit, receptum eſt. Obiit A. D. CIↃ. IↃ. XLIII. IX*bris* III. ætatis ſuæ LXII. hora ſexta matutina.

(1) Comment. de vit. et ſtud. J. B. p. 13. apud Vit. quorund. erudit. et illuſtr. viror. Lond. 1708, 4to.

In Engliſh.

' Under this marble is depoſited, what remains of ' the celebrated Dr. John Bainbridge, public Profeſſor
' of Aſtronomy at Oxford: but it is in vain to look
' for, in this place, what we loved, what we ad-
' mired, and what we now lament the loſs of; that ' part of him is raiſed to heaven, on which, while
' he lived, his mind and thoughts were earneſtly in' tent. He died the third of November 1643, aged
' ſixty-two, at ſix o'clock in the morning.'

monument.

monument. We ſhall give an account of Dr. Bainbridge's works in the remark [B], and ſhall ſet down an odd ſtory concerning him from Dr. Walter Pope [C].

[B] 1. His works.] An Aſtronomical Deſcription of the late Comet from the 18th of November 1618, to the 16th of December following, London 1619 in 4to (2). This piece was only a ſpecimen of a larger work, which the author intended to publiſh in Latin under the title of Cometographia, i. e. 'the doctrine 'of Comets.' He ſeems indeed to have given a little too much into the vulgar notion of comets being preſages of ſome impending calamity; with which perſuaſion he has ſubjoined to this treatiſe, certain Moral Prognoſtics (3). 2. Procli Sphæra and Ptolomæi de Hypotheſibus Planetarum liber ſingularis; to which he added Ptolemy's Canon regnorum: both collated with manuſcripts, put into Latin, and publiſhed by our author with figures: Printed 1620 in 4to. 3. Canicularia; being a treatiſe concerning the Dog-ſtar and the Canicular Days; publiſhed at Oxford in 1648 by Mr. Greaves, together with a demonſtration of the Heliacal riſing of Sirius or the Dog-ſtar for the parallel of Lower Egypt (4). Dr. Bainbridge wrote this treatiſe at the requeſt of Archbiſhop Uſher, but left it imperfect, being prevented either by the troubles, which followed upon the breaking out of the civil war, or by death; ſo that he was not able to finiſh his demonſtration of the Heliacal riſing of the Dog-ſtar, which, as Mr. Greaves ſays, was the only pillar of that diſcourſe (5). Theſe are all our author's writings that have been publiſhed: but there were ſeveral diſſertations of his prepared for the preſs, the year after his death, with the approbation of the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, though the edition of them was never compleated. The titles of them are as follows, 1. Antiprognoſticon, in quo μαντικῆς aſtrologicæ, cæleſtium domorum, et triplicitatum commentis, magniſque Saturni et Jovis (cujuſmodi anno 1623 et 1643 contigerunt, et viceſimo fere quoque deinceps anno, ratis naturæ legibus, recurrent) conjunctionibus innixæ, vanitas breviter detegitur: i. e. 'Antiprognoſtics, in which is briefly 'detected the vanity of Aſtrological predictions, 'grounded upon the idle conceits of celeſtial houſes 'and triplicities, and the grand conjunctions of Sa-'turn and Jupiter, ſuch as happened in the years '1623 and 1643, and will recur once in almoſt every 'twenty years hereafter, agreeably to the ſtated laws 'of nature.' 2. De Meridianorum ſive Longitudinum differentiis inveniendis Diſſertatio: i. e. 'A Diſſer-'tation concerning the method of finding the diffe-'rences of the Meridians or Longitudes.' 3. De Stella Veneris Diatriba: i. e. 'A Diſſertation con-'cerning the Planet Venus.' To theſe pieces was added, the oration ſpoken at his funeral by the Univerſity Orator, Mr. William Strode. They fell into the hands of Dr. Thomas Smith, who promiſed to publiſh them, if the avarice of the Bookſellers, as he terms it, would give him leave (6). Beſides theſe, a ſpecimen of Celeſtial Obſervations, made by Dr. Bainbridge at Oxford, may be ſeen in Iſmael Bullialdus's Aſtronomia Philolaica (7), publiſhed at Paris in 1645. But the pieces hitherto mentioned are very inconſiderable in compariſon of thoſe other tracts of our author's, which never were publiſhed, but left by his will to Archbiſhop Uſher; among whoſe manuſcripts they are preſerved in the library of Trinity College in Dublin. Among others, are the following: 1. A Theory of the Sun. 2. A Theory of the Moon. 3. A Diſcourſe concerning the Quantity of the Year. 4. Two volumes of Aſtronomical Obſervations; and 5. Nine or ten volumes of Miſcellaneous Papers relating to the Mathematics (8). Dr. Bainbridge undertook likewiſe, A Deſcription of the Britiſh Monarchy, diſtinguiſhed into three columns, in order to ſhew the advantages of the union of England and Scotland under one Monarch; as appears from his dedication of the Deſcription of the Comet in 1618 to King James I.; but this treatiſe was either ſuppreſſed by him, or is loſt (9).

[C] An odd ſtory concerning Dr. Bainbridge related by Dr. Walter Pope.] That writer, in his Life of Seth Ward, Biſhop of Saliſbury (10), ſpeaking of the Doctor, ſays, 'This was the ſame Dr. Bambridge (*), 'who was afterwards Savilian Profeſſor of Aſtronomy 'at Oxford, a learned and good Mathematician: 'yet there goes a ſtory of him, which was in many 'ſcholars mouths, when I was firſt admitted there, 'that he put upon the ſchool-gate an Affiche, or writ-'ten paper, as the cuſtom is, giving notice, at what 'time, and upon what ſubject, the Profeſſor will 'read, which ended in theſe words, lecturus de polis 'et axis, under which was written by an unknown 'hand as follows;

'Doctor Bainbridge
'Came from Cambridge,
'To read de polis et axis:
'Let him go back again,
'Like a dunce as he came,
'And learn a new Syntaxis.'

Dr. Smith takes notice of this ſtory, and tells us, the Doctor's reputation had ſuffered, upon the moſt trifling account, from the falſe and malicious calumny of ſome perſons, who charged him with an offence againſt Syntax in one of his lectures; which abſurd and ridiculous ſtory he ſhould have omitted, as unworthy of any reply, had not a certain eminent buffoon inſerted that ſtupid epigram in a late book of his. In vindicias illius famæ, quam licet in re leviculaæ, læſit vendaciſſima quorundam obtrectatio, quaſi in prælectione habita contra Grammaticæ Syntaxeos regulas ex ignorantia ſemel peccaſſet; quam utpote ſcomma abſurdum ridiculumque, et quod ſerio refutetur prorſus indignum, penitus omiſiſſem, niſi inſignis quidam Sannio in nupero libello epigramma illud inficetum, rythmis Anglicanis olim conſcribillatum, ad captandum puerorum plauſum, irriſorium planè id modum inſeruiſſet (11). But by Dr. Smith's leave, he had no good reaſon for being ſo very angry with this epigram; which does not, as he pretends, charge Dr. Bainbridge with committing an error in Syntax in one of his lectures, but only in the Affiche or written paper; and it is nothing more than a pleaſant banter upon the miſtake of axis for axibus, which might happen through haſte and inadvertency. B.

(2) Wood, Athenæ Oxonienſes, Vol. ii. col. 34.

(3) Th. Smith, Comment. ubi ſupra, p. 5.

(4) Wood, ubi ſupra.

(5) Smith, ubi ſupra, p. 14.

(6) Id. ibid.

(7) Lib. xii. p. 467.

(8) Smith, ibi p. 15.

(9) Id. ib. p. 15, 16.

(10) Ch. iii.

(*) Erroneouſly for Bainbridge.

(11) Smith, ibi p. 16.

BAKER (Sir RICHARD) a writer in the XVIIth century, and noted chiefly for being the author of a Chronicle of the Kings of England [A], was born at Siſſingherſt

[A] Noted chiefly for being the author of a Chronicle of the Kings of England.] The whole title of it was as follows, 'A Chronicle of the Kings of England, 'from the time of the Romans Government unto the 'death of King James. Containing all paſſages of 'State and Church, with all other Obſervations pro-'per for a Chronicle. Faithfully collected out of 'Authors ancient and modern; and digeſted into a 'new method. By Sir Richard Baker, Knight.' The firſt edition of it was publiſhed at London in 1641, fol. the ſecond in 1653, and the third in 1658. To this third edition was added, 'The reign of King 'Charles the Firſt,' with 'A Continuation from his death to 1658.' By Edward Phillips, ſometime a ſtudent of Magdalen-Hall, Oxon, and nephew to the celebrated poet J. Milton. The fourth edition came out in 1665, having a continuation of the Chronicle to the coronation of King Charles the Second: in 'which were many material Affairs of State never 'before publiſhed; and likewiſe the moſt remarkable 'Occurrences relating to his Majeſties Reſtauration, 'by the prudent conduct of General Monck, Duke 'of Albemarle, and Captain-General of all his Ma-'jeſties Armies: as they were extracted out of his 'Excellencies own Papers, and the Journals and Me-'morials of thoſe imployed in the moſt important and 'ſecret Tranſactions of that Time.' The account of the Reſtoration was ſaid to be moſtly done by Sir Thomas Clarges, whoſe ſiſter the duke of Albemarle had married, and put into the hands of Edward Phillips, who attributing more to the Duke's glory than was true, got his ill-will (1). This Chronicle was in great

(1) Wood, Athen. Vol. ii. col. 72, 73.

Siſſingherſt in Kent, (a), about the year 1568 (b). His mother was Catherine, daughter of Sir Reynold Scot of Scots-hall in Kent, Knight; and his father, John Baker of London, Gentleman, a younger ſon of Sir John Baker, of Siſſingherſt abovementioned, Knight, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and one of the Privy-Council to King Henry VIII. (c). Our author was entered a Commoner of Hart-Hall in Oxford, in 1584, and matriculated in Michaelmas-term the ſame year, being in the ſixteenth year of his age (d). After he had ſpent in this place about three years, in the ſtudy of Logic and Philoſophy [B], he went to one of the Inns of Court, and compleated his education by travelling into foreign parts; nothing being omitted by his parents to render him an accompliſhed gentleman. In 1594, after the celebration of a ſolemn act, he was, with other perſons of quality, created Maſter of Arts at Oxford (e); and in May 1603 [C], he received the honour of knighthood from King James I. at Theobalds (f). At that time he lived at Highgate near London, and was eſteemed a moſt compleat and learned perſon (g). In 1620 he was High-Sheriff of Oxfordſhire, being poſſeſſed of the manor of Middle-Aſton, and other eſtates in that county; and was alſo a Juſtice of Peace for the ſame (h). He married Margaret, daughter of Sir George Manwaring of Ightfield in Shropſhire, Knight; which marriage cauſed him a great deal of trouble, and involved him into inextricable difficulties. For, engaging unwiſely for the payment of ſome of that family's debts (i), he was thereby reduced to poverty; and forced to betake himſelf for ſhelter to the Fleet-priſon, where he compoſed ſeveral books [D]; and ſo reaped, in his old age, the benefit of his learning, when his conſiderable eſtate, through ſurety-ſhip, was very much impaired (k). At length, after a life full of troubles and cares, he died very poor in the Fleet-priſon in London, February the 18th, 1644-5, and (a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. edit. 1721, Vol. ii. col. 71. Fuller, by miſtake, ſays, that he was a native of Oxfordſhire, Worthies of England, &c. in Oxfordſhire, p. 338, edit. 1662, fol.

(b) For in 1584, when he was admitted in Oxford, he was in the 16th year of his age. Wood, ibid. col. 72.

(c) Wood, ibid. col. 71.

(d) Ibid.

(e) Ibid. & Faſti, Vol. i. col. 149.

(f) See his Chronicle, in the beginning of the reign of King James I.

(g) Wood, ubi ſupra, col. 72.

(h) Ibid.

(i) Ibid. col 74.

(k) Hiſt. of the Worthies of England, by T. Fuller, D. D. in Oxfordſhire, p. 339.

great vogue for ſeveral years, being a common piece of furniture in almoſt every country Eſquire's hall. And juſtly indeed if what the author of it ſaid in its commendation was true, 'That it was collected with ſo 'great care and diligence, that if all other of our 'Chronicles ſhould be loſt, this only would be ſuffi-'cient to inform poſterity of all paſſages memorable 'or worthy to be known (2).' But all perſons have not entertained the ſame favourable opinion of that performance. One ſays (3), 'that it being reduced to 'method, and not according to time, purpoſely to 'pleaſe gentlemen and novices, many chief things to 'be obſerved therein, as name, time, &c. are egre-'giouſly falſe, and conſequently breed a great deal of 'confuſion in the peruſer, eſpecially if he be curious 'or critical.' Another (4) allows, that 'the author 'was a perſon of thoſe accompliſhments in wit and 'language, that his Chronicle has been the beſt read 'and liked of any hitherto publiſhed; and that his 'method is new, and ſeems to pleaſe the rabble; but, 'adds he, learned men will be of another opinion.' The greateſt adverſary to that book, was Thomas Blount, Eſq (5); who in 1672, publiſhed at Oxford in 12*mo*, 'Animadverſions upon Sir Richard Baker's 'Chronicle and its Continuation. Wherein many 'Errors are diſcovered, and ſome Truths advanced.' In the preface, he expreſſes his wonder, to ſee that Chronicle twice printed by itſelf, and three times with a Continuation (6), and no perſon ſhould impugn it, being ſtuffed with ſo many contradictions and repetitions, ſo many miſtimings and miſtakes, as of other things of moment, ſo eſpecially of the pedigrees, names, and places of our ancient Nobility, Biſhops, Baronets, Gentry, &c. In the ſame preface, he calls the Continuator, 'a perſon of incompetent parts for 'ſo great an undertaking; and obſerves, that many 'paſſages are omitted in the reign of King James, 'which was the time Sir Richard lived in, and had 'been fit for the Continuator to have ſupplied; who 'inſtead thereof, has ſwelled the Continuation into 'ſuch a bulk of indigeſted matter, as is not at all 'ſuitable to the reſt of the Hiſtory.' Notwithſtanding theſe Animadverſions, that Chronicle was reprinted ſince that time, and ſold as well as ever, though no notice was taken of the animadverſions, but all the old faults remained uncorrected, as Mr. Nicolſon complained (7). In 1730, a new edition of this Chronicle was printed at London, fol. with E. Phillip's Continuation; and a 'ſecond Continuation, containing 'the Reigns of King Charles II. from his Reſtoration, 'King James II. King William and Queen Mary II. 'Queen Anne, and King George I.; by an impartial 'Hand.' Many miſtakes are ſaid to be corrected in Sir Richard Baker's part; and E. Phillips's Continuation is contracted, many public pieces, liſts of names, &c. being either omitted, or the ſubſtance of them only given in this edition. But, after all, it is a very mean and jejune performance; and no wiſe to be relied on.

(2) Preface to his Chronicle.

(3) Wood, ubi ſupra, col. 72.

(4) Mr. Nicolſon, in his Hiſtorical Library, Part i. p. 196.

(5) See the article BLOUNT (Thomas).

(6) For there was a fifth edition publiſhed in 1671, and ſeveral ſince.

(7) Hiſt. Library, ubi ſupra, p. 197.

[B] After he had ſpent in Hart-Hall about three years in the ſtudy of Logic and Philoſophy, &c.] He had there for his chamber-fellow the eminent Henry Wotton, Eſq; who was knighted afterwards, and employed in ſeveral embaſſies (8).

(8) Wood, Athen. Vol. i. col. 623.

[C] In May 1603 he received the honour of knighthood.] A. Wood ſays (9), it was May 17; which ſeems to be a miſtake, for King James ſtaid no longer at Theobalds than May the 7th, when he removed to London (10).

(9) Athen. Vol. ii. col. 72.

(10) See Camden's Ann. of King James I. in Compl. Hiſtory, Vol. ii. — and Stow's Annales, edit. 1631, fol. p. 822.

[D] Where he compoſed ſeveral books.] Namely, I. Cato Variegatus, or Cato's Moral Diſtichs varied; in verſe. Lond. 1636. II. Meditations and Diſquiſitions on the Lord's Prayer. Lond. 1637, 4*to*. The fourth edition of it was publiſhed in 1640, 4*to*. A copy of this book being ſent to Sir Henry Wotton, formerly his chamber-fellow, before it went to the preſs, he returned this teſtimony of it. 'I much 'admire the very character of your ſtile, which 'ſeemeth unto me to have not a little of the African 'idea of St. Auſtin's age, full of ſweet raptures and 'of reſearching conceits; nothing borrowed, nothing 'vulgar, and yet all flowing from you (I know not 'how) with a certain equal facility.' III. Meditations and Diſquiſitions on the three laſt Pſalms of David. Lond. 1639. IV. Meditations and Diſquiſitions on the fiftieth Pſalm. Lond. 1639. V. Meditations and Diſquiſitions on the ſeven penitential Pſalms, which are, the 6. 32. 38. 51. 102. 130. 143. Lond. 1639, 4*to*. VI. Meditations and Diſquiſitions on the firſt Pſalm. Lond. 1640. 4*to*. VII. Meditations and Diſquiſitions on the ſeven conſolatory Pſalms of David, namely, the 23. 27. 30. 34. 84. 103. and 116. Lond. 1640, 4*to*. VIII. Meditations and Prayers upon the ſeven days of the week. Lond. 1640, 16*to*. which is ſuppoſed to be the ſame with his 'Motive of Prayer on the ſeven days of the week.' IX. Apology for Laymens writing in Divinity. Lond. 1641. 12*mo*. X. Short Meditations on the fall of Lucifer ——printed with the Apology. XI. A Soliloquy of the Soul, or a Pillar of Thoughts, &c. Lond. 1641. 12*mo*. XII. Theatrum Redivivum: or the Theatre vindicated, in anſwer to Mr. Prynne's Hiſtrio-maſtrix, &c. Lond. 1662. 8*vo*. XIII. Theatrum triumphans: or a Diſcourſe of Plays, Lond. 1670. 8*vo*. XIV. He tranſlated from Italian into Engliſh, the Marquis Virgilio Malvezzi's 'Diſcourſes on Tacitus,' being 53 in number. Lond. 1642. fol. And from French into Engliſh, the three firſt parts of the 'Letters of Mon-'ſieur Balzac.' Printed at London 1638, 8*vo*. and again in 1654, 4*to*. with additions; and alſo in 8*vo*. The fourth and laſt part ſeem to have been done by another hand; the preface to it being ſubſcribed F. B. Sir Richard wrote alſo his own life, and left it in manuſcript; but it was deſtroyed by one Smith, who married one of his daughters (11).

(11) Wood, Ath. Vol. ii. col. 72, 74.

was buried the next day about the middle of the ſouth iſle of St. Bride's church in Fleet-ſtreet (l). 'He was a perſon tall and comely, of a good diſpoſition and admirable 'diſcourſe, religious, and well read in various faculties, eſpecially in Divinity and 'Hiſtory (m).' By his wife Margaret abovementioned, he had iſſue Thomas, Arthur, Cæcilia, Anne, Margaret, &c. [E].

(l) Wood, Athen. ubi ſupra, col. 74.

(m) Ibid. col. 72.

[E] He had iſſue Thomas, Arthur, Cæcilia, &c.] His family being left in very moderate circumſtances, one of his daughters married —— Bury, a Seedſman at the Frying-pan in Newgate-ſtreet, London; and another one Smith, of Pater-noſter Row (12). M.

(12) Ibid. col. 71, note (s) and col. 74.

[Sir Henry Wotton's encomium upon Sir Richard Baker's meditations and diſquiſitions on the Lord's Prayer, is a ſufficient proof of the bad taſte in which they were written. A judicious author, in the preſent times, would not be highly delighted with being told that his ſtyle had not a little of the African idea of St. Auſtin's age, and that it was full of ſweet raptures, and of reſearching conceits.] K.

BAKER (THOMAS) an eminent Mathematician in the XVIIth century, was the ſon of James Baker of Ilton in Somerſetſhire, Steward to the family of the Strangways of Dorſetſhire (a). He was born at Ilton about the year 1625 (b), and entered in Magdalen-Hall Oxon, in the beginning of the year 1640. On the 27th of April 1645, he was elected ſcholar of Wadham-College; and did ſome little ſervice to king Charles I. within the garriſon of Oxford. He was admitted Batchelor of Arts April 10, 1647, but left the univerſity without compleating that degree by determination. Afterwards he became Vicar of Biſhop's-Nymmet in Devonſhire, where he lived many years in a moſt retired and ſtudious condition. What he chiefly applied himſelf to, was the ſtudy of the Mathematics, in which he made a very great progreſs. But in his obſcure neighbourhood, he was neither known, nor ſufficiently valued for his eminent ſkill in that uſeful branch of knowledge, till he publiſhed a book entitled, 'The Geometrical 'Key, &c [A].' A little before his death, the members of the Royal Society ſent him ſome mathematical queries: to which he returned ſo ſatisfactory an anſwer, that they gave him a medal with an inſcription full of honour and reſpect. He died at Biſhop's-Nymmet aforementioned, on the 5th of June 1690, and was buried in his own church (c).

(a) Wood, Athen. Oxon. Vol. ii. col. 850, edit. Lond. 1721.

(b) See Wood, ibid. He was about 15 years old in 1640.

(c) Wood, ubi ſupra.

[A] The Geometrical Key, &c.] The whole title of the book, is 'The Geometrical Key; or, the 'Gate of Equations unlocked; or, a new Diſcovery 'of the Conſtruction of all Equations, howſoever af-'fected, not exceeding the fourth degree, viz. of 'Linears, Quadratics, Cubics, Biquadratics, and the 'finding of all their Roots, as well falſe as true, with-'out the uſe of Meſolabe, Triſection of Angles, with-'out Reduction, Depreſſion, or any other previous 'Preparations of Equations, by a Circle, and any '(and that one only) Parabole, &c.' London 1684, 4*to*. in Latin and Engliſh. An account is given of this book in the Philoſophical Tranſactions (1). And it is there obſerved, that the author, in order to free us of the trouble of preparing the equation by taking away the ſecond term, ſhews us how to conſtruct all affected equations, not exceeding the fourth power, by the interſection of a circle and parabola, without omiſſion or change of any terms. And a circle and a parabola being the moſt ſimple, it follows, that the way which our author has choſen is the beſt. In the book (to render it intelligible even to thoſe who have read no conics), the author ſhews, how a parabola ariſes from the ſection of a cone, then how to deſcribe it in plano, and from that conſtruction demonſtrates, that the ſquares of the ordinates are one to another, as the correſpondent ſagittæ or intercepted diameters; then he ſhews, that if a line be inſcribed in a parabola perpendicular to any diameter, a rectangle made of the ſegments of the inſcript, will be equal to a rectangle made of the intercepted diameter and parameter of the axis. From this laſt propriety our author deduces the univerſality of his central rule for the ſolution of all biquadratic and cubic equations, however affected or varied in terms or ſigns. After the ſyntheſis the author ſhews the analyſis or method, by which he found this rule; which, in the opinion of Dr. R. Plot (who was then Secretary to the Royal Society) is ſo good, that nothing can be expected more eaſy, ſimple, or univerſal. M.

(1) Vol. xiv. No. 157. p. 549, 550.

[BAKER (THOMAS), an ingenious Writer, and eminent Antiquary, was born at Lancheſter, in the county palatine of Durham, on the 14th of September, 1656 (a). When of a proper age, he was ſent to St. John's college in Cambridge, where he was choſen ſcholar, and afterwards elected into a fellowſhip founded in that college by Dr. Aſhton, dean of York (b). He appears to have applied himſelf to his ſtudies with great aſſiduity; and in the year 1699, he publiſhed in 8*vo*. but without his name, "Reflections upon Learning, wherein is ſhewn the inſufficiency thereof, in its ſeveral "particulars; in order to evince the uſefulneſs and neceſſity of Revelation [A]." This work

(a) Biograph. Britan. firſt edit. art. SMITH (Dr. JOHN) note [E], Vid. alſo Maſters's Hiſt. of Corpus Chriſti-college in Cambridge, Appendix, No. LIX. p. 84.

(b) Anecdotes of Britiſh Topography, 4*to*. 1768, p. 102.

[A] He publiſhed,—Reflections upon Learning, &c.] In this work our author treated of Language, Grammar, Rhetoric and Eloquence, Logic, Moral Philoſophy, Natural Philoſophy, Aſtronomy, Metaphyſics, Hiſtory, Chronology, Geography, Civil Law, Canon Law, Phyſic, Critical Learning, Oriental Learning, Jewiſh and Arabian, and Scholaſtical Learning. Mr. Baker ſeems to have regretted, that the Ariſtotelian philoſophy was ſo much out of vogue. 'Since 'Ariſtotle's philoſophy (ſays he) has been exploded in 'the ſchools, under whom we had more peace, and 'poſſibly almoſt as much truth as we have had ſince, 'we have not been able to fix any where, but have 'been wavering from one opinion to another (1).'

In his Preface, he ſays, 'I have treated all men 'with decency and reſpect, except Monſ. Le Clerc, 'who has not deſerved ſuch treatment.' But from whence it aroſe, that M. Le Clerc, who was one of the moſt illuſtrious members of the republic of letters in that age, was not entitled to decent and reſpectful treatment, Mr. Baker has not informed us. Le Clerc's obſervations concerning Eraſmus, on which Baker has animadverted, were certainly no ſufficient ground for ſuch an aſſertion. The late learned Dr. Jortin, after obſerving that Le Clerc hath cenſured ſome of the Geographical errors of Eraſmus, ſays, 'Baker, in his Reflections upon Learning, defended 'Eraſmus; and attacked Le Clerc with a virulence, work met with a very favourable reception from the public, paſſed through ſeveral editions, and procured Mr. Baker a conſiderable reputation. In 1708, he reprinted, in 8*vo.* Biſhop Fiſher's "Funeral ſermon of Margaret, Counteſs of Richmond and "Derby, Mother of King Henry VII. and Foundreſs of Chriſt's and St. John's "college in Cambridge:" to which he prefixed, "A Preface, containing ſome further 'which one would not have expected from a man, 'who, as I remember, was accounted, and who de-'ſired to be accounted, a candid, genteel, and po-'lite perſon. But party zeal guided his pen:

(1) Reflections upon Learning, p. 4.

'Tantum religio potuit!

'Le Clerc gave him a ſhort anſwer, in the Index 'to the fourth edition of the Ars Critica, under the 'word Eraſmus.

'Baker hath one chapter upon Metaphyſics, in 'which he hath made no mention of Locke; juſt 'as if a man ſhould write the lives of the Greek 'and Latin poets, and only omit Homer and Vir-'gil!

'He obſerved, c. 16. that there was little or no-'thing left for the ſagacity and induſtry of modern 'critics; and thereby he ſhewed that he was no cri-'tic himſelf, and not at all acquainted with the true 'ſtate of claſſical books, and particularly of Greek 'authors (2).'

(2) Life of Eraſmus, p. 550, 551.

Mr. Baker's ſtrictures on M. Le Clerc were certainly far enough from being liberal: however, Le Clerc's anſwer, as referred to above by Dr. Jortin, is ſufficiently ſevere. It is in the following terms: Cùm in priore editione Criticæ, æquè ac in hacce altera, ſignificaſſem qua editione operum Eraſmi uſus eſſem; exortus tamen eſt neſcio quis Anonymus in Anglia, qui Animadverſionum de Eruditione, cap. xvi. acerbè in me eſt invectus, quaſi malâ fide ſummum virum carpſiſſem. At oportuit ab eo conſuli eam Editionem, quam laudavi; nam eſt intolerandæ audaciæ negare rem, quæ ſub oculos cadit, præſertim cum agitur exiſtimatio hominis honeſti, & qui malæ fidei jure numquam eſt accuſatus. Paullò poſt, poſtquàm me iterum ridiculè conatus eſt ſuſpectum malæ fidei facere, quod ex memoria aliquid de Eraſmo dixiſſem, fatetur tamen eſſe verum; nimirum, eum Mitylenen cum Melita miſcuiſſe in notis ad Hieronymi epiſt. ad Oceanum quæ mihi memoriâ exciderat. Hæc inconſtantia, in duabus paginis, an ſit hominis candidi viderit ipſe. Quod mirabilius eſt, hic novus Eraſmi patronus, qui mihi conviciatur, quòd auſus fuerim peccata ejus Geographica retegere, poſtea eum graviter accuſat corrupti Hieronymi, in cujus MSS. legitur Melita, pro quo Eraſmus non modò imperitè, ſed & malâ fide, ſubſtituerit Mitylenen. Non poterat meliùs confirmari quod dixi de imperitia Eraſmi in Geographicis, ſi verum ſit. Sed quamvis in MSS. Anglicanis ita legeretur, non ſequeretur eandem fuiſſe lectionem eorum, quos habuit Eraſmus. Triumphat Anonymus, quòd inſpexerit MSS. quos non vidi, quaſi res ſit laude digna in Bibliotheca oculis ſuis aliquando eſſe uſum. Cetera quæ habet de Hieronymo nihil ad rem faciunt. Poſtea, pro ſolita audacia ſua, in dubium revocat an Cotelerius vocem κεφαλαιωδῶς capitulatim verterit, quod locum non indicarim, in Præfatione ad Patres Apoſtolicos. At non exſtat in primis illis Epiſtolis, ſed alibi, quod quærat; neque enim rationem dictorum meorum reddere volo homini, qui audet negare quod ipſe ſentit, ut vidimus in Eraſmo. Quæ habet in ſequentibus, de Græca lingua ſcriptorum Eccleſiaſticorum, perinde ſunt ἀπροσδιόνυσα, produntque hominem qui nihil penſi habet quid dicat. Malim me ad θηριομαχίαν damnatum, quàm cum ejuſmodi hominibus certare. Triumphent, ſi libeat, de ſenſu communi, victo ac debellato; non invidebo. i. e. 'Although in the firſt edition of 'the Ars Critica, as well as in this, I have particu-'larly mentioned what edition of the works of Eraſ-'mus I had made uſe of; yet, notwithſtanding this, 'a certain anonymous writer in England, in his Re-'flections upon Learning, ch. xvi. hath attacked me ve-'ry acrimoniouſly, as if I had cavilled at that great 'man without regard to truth. But it certainly be-'came him to have conſulted the ſame edition to 'which I referred; for it is intolerable inſolence in 'a man, to deny what he might have ſeen with his 'own eyes, and eſpecially when the character of a 'perſon of integrity was in queſtion, who never yet 'was juſtly charged with want of fidelity. A little 'farther on, he again ridiculouſly endeavours to ren-'der me ſuſpected of citing Eraſmus falſely, be-'cauſe I did it from memory only, and yet at the 'ſame time admits, that Eraſmus has a paſſage to 'the purpoſe that I mentioned; and in which he 'confounds Mitylene with Melita. This paſſage is in 'his notes to Jerome's epiſtle to Oceanus; but that 'circumſtance had eſcaped my memory. Whether 'in thus attacking me, he has not ſhewn, within the 'compaſs of two pages, an inconſiſtency totally un-'ſuitable to the character of a man of candour, let 'my examiner himſelf determine. But what is more 'admirable, this new patron of Eraſmus, who abuſes 'me becauſe I have ventured to correct his geogra-'phical errors, afterwards very ſeverely accuſes him 'of having corrupted Jerome; in ſome of the manu-'ſcripts of which Father, he ſays, the word Melita is 'uſed, and where, he would inſinuate, Eraſmus has 'changed the word to Mitylene, not only from want 'of knowledge, but from want of fidelity. He could 'not better have confirmed what I have obſerved 'concerning the unſkilfulneſs of Eraſmus in Geogra-'phy, if what he aſſerts be true. But it does not fol-'low, that becauſe there is ſuch a reading in the 'Engliſh manuſcripts, that therefore there was ſuch 'a reading in thoſe manuſcripts which were in the 'poſſeſſion of Eraſmus. This anonymous writer 'triumphs much, becauſe he hath inſpected ſome 'manuſcripts which I have not ſeen, as if it were a 'thing of great merit, to have ſometimes made uſe of 'his eyes in a library. His other obſervations con-'cerning Jerome are nothing to the purpoſe. After-'wards, with his uſual effrontery, he makes it a mat-'ter of doubt, whether Cotelerius hath rendered the 'word κεφαλαιωδῶς capitulatim, as I had ſaid, becauſe 'I have not pointed out the particular place, in my 'Preface to the Apoſtolical Fathers. But it is not to 'be found in the firſt of thoſe epiſtles, though it is in 'another place, which he is at liberty to ſeek; for I 'am not inclined to give a reaſon for my words to a 'man, who has the temerity to deny what he himſelf 'knew, as we have ſeen in the caſe of Eraſmus. What 'follows afterwards, concerning the Greek uſed by 'eccleſiaſtical writers, is little better than mere in-'digeſted effuſions, the obſervations of a man who 'writes without giving himſelf the trouble of think-'ing. I had rather be condemned to fight with 'wild beaſts, than contend with ſuch kind of men. 'Let them triumph, if they pleaſe, over common 'ſenſe: I ſhall not envy them the glory of their 'victory.'

The ſeventh edition of the Reflections upon Learning was publiſhed in 1738. Mr. Baker's book hath been held in great eſteem, and, for many years after its publication, it was even commended as a ſtandard of fine writing. In this view it was formerly put into our hands by a tutor. But, though the ſtyle is perſpicuous and manly, it can ſcarcely be applauded as riſing to any high degree of elegance. It is undoubtedly, in ſeveral reſpects, a work of very conſiderable merit. No one can deny that it is evidently the production of a man who was poſſeſſed of real erudition, and that the remarks are often acute and ingenious. But the deſign of the author being to ſhew the weakneſs of the human underſtanding, and to decry learning, in order to evince the neceſſity of revelation, this hath led him to an undue diſparagement of the writings of able men, and the diſcoveries of modern ſcience. If he had not been too much prejudiced againſt the new philoſophy, he could never have praiſed Bacon ſo coldly as he did, or entirely have omitted the name of Locke. He ſpeaks contemptouſly and ignorantly of the Copernican ſyſtem. He was not, however, ſo abſolutely devoted to Ariſtotle, but that he could diſcern ſome faults in him; as appears from his juſt cenſure of that philoſopher's phyſics. In the preſent improved ſtate of knowledge, a work ſimilar in kind to that of Mr. Baker, but which ſhould diſplay the progreſs and improvements of ſcience and literature without either exaggeration or diminution, and, at the ſame time, point out the deſiderata, would be a very valuable performance. Perhaps it would require almoſt the genius and comprehenſion of a Lord Verulam to execute it in a proper manner.

" account of her charities and foundations, together with a catalogue of her profeſſors " both at Cambridge and Oxford, and of her preachers at Cambridge." This book is grown extremely ſcarce: but a copy of it, with manuſcript notes in Mr. Baker's own hand-writing, is now in the poſſeſſion of the reverend and learned M. Beadon, public orator of the univerſity of Cambridge (c).

(c) From the information of the Rev. Mr. Robinſon, of Cheſterton, near Cambridge, whom Mr. Beadon politely favoured with the inſpection of the book.

Beſides taking the degrees in arts, Mr. Baker alſo took the degree of batchelor in divinity, at Cambridge; but was ejected from his fellowſhip, ſoon after the acceſſion of King George the Firſt, in conſequence of his refuſal to take the oaths to the government (d). He retained a lively ſenſe of this deprivation; which he particularly expreſſed, by writing in the blank leaves of all the books he afterwards gave to the college, Tho. Baker, Coll. Jo. ſocius ejectus. He was the more offended, becauſe he thought the maſter of the college, Dr. Jenkins, might have ſcreened him by connivance, as he had done in the preceding reign (e). We learn from Mr. Whiſton, that after the death of King James II. Mr. Baker had ſome thoughts of taking the oaths to the government [B]; but was prevented by the abjuration oath being alſo enjoined, which put an end to his deliberations on the ſubject. After his ejectment, Mr. Baker ſtill kept his chamber in St. John's college, and reſided there as a Commoner-Maſter during the remainder of his life. But though he loſt his fellowſhip, it appears that this was in part made up to him by the generoſity of a friend. The celebrated Matthew Prior, not ſcrupling the oaths, or needing the profits of a fellowſhip, took the oaths, kept his fellowſhip, and gave Mr. Baker the profits of it (*).

(d) Anecdotes of Britiſh Topography, ubi ſupra.

(e) Biog. Britan. firſt edit. ut ſupra.

* This curious fact was communicated to the Rev. Mr. R. Robinſon, of Cheſterton, by the Rev. Dr. Goddard, Maſter of Clare Hall, Cambridge. The Doctor remembers Mr. Baker well; and ſays, he was one of the beſt men in his moral conduct.

He particularly applied himſelf to the ſtudy of antiquities. This was his favourite purſuit; and he was indefatigable in his inquiries concerning whatever related to the hiſtory of the univerſity of Cambridge. He was alſo very ready to afford information and aſſiſtance to thoſe who were engaged in ſimilar ſtudies; and among others who derived benefit from his communications, was the learned archbiſhop Wake. Beſides tranſmitting to this prelate ſome informations concerning the Hiſtoriola, &c. relative to Archbiſhop Parker, which was diſcovered during the correſpondence between Archbiſhop Wake and Father Courayer, in Bennet-college-library, Mr. Baker alſo aſſiſted the archbiſhop in writing his State of the Church. After the completion of that work, his grace wrote a letter of thanks to Mr. Baker; and, as a farther teſtimony of his ſenſe of the ſervice he had done him, offered to accept his recommendation of a friend (as he could not receive it himſelf) to a benefice worth 200l. a year, then vacant. But this offer Mr. Baker declined; and only requeſted of the archbiſhop, that he would be pleaſed to evidence his favour towards him, by a preſent of a copy of the work before mentioned, with his grace's corrections and additions in his own hand-writing. With this the archbiſhop complied, and ſent beſides many manuſcript evidences bound up with the volume: and this book is now in the public library of the univerſity of Cambridge (f).

(f) Biograph. Britan. firſt edit. art Wake, note [W], p. 4096.

Mr. Baker alſo correſponded with Dr. Browne Willis, and Mr. Le Neve (*); and, notwithſtanding their difference of ſentiments, was upon very friendly terms with Biſhop Kennet. He likewiſe communicated to Biſhop Burnet a variety of corrections and obſervations reſpecting his Hiſtory of the Reformation [C]. In the preface to the third volume of that work, the biſhop ſpeaks of Mr. Baker under the title of a learned and worthy perſon, to whom he expreſſes himſelf much obliged for the care with which he had read his work, and the obſervations that he had communicated concerning it. He adds, 'In ſeveral particulars I do not perfectly agree with theſe corrections; but I ſet 'them down as they were ſent to me, without any remarks on them; and I give my 'hearty thanks in the fulleſt manner I can, to him who was firſt at the pains to make 'this collection, and then had the goodneſs to communicate it to me, in ſo obliging a 'manner: for he gave me a much greater power over theſe papers, than I have thought 'fit to aſſume (g).' Mr. Baker's name is not mentioned in this preface; but that he was the perſon referred to, appears from his own manuſcript notes, in his copy of the Hiſtory of the Reformation, which is preſerved in the public library at Cambridge (h). And in the third volume Mr. Baker has written as follows: 'Ex dono doctiſſimi Auctoris, ac 'celeberrimi Præſulis Gilberti Epiſcopi Sariſburienſis.—I ſhall always have an honour 'for the author's memory, who entered all the corrections I had made, at the end of

(*) Some letters from theſe gentlemen to Mr. Baker are preſerved in the public library at Cambridge.

(g) Pref. to the third vol. of the Hiſt. of the Reformation, Vol. iii. p. 10.

(h) From the information of the Rev Mr. R. Robinſon.

[B] After the death of King James II. Mr. Baker had ſome thoughts of taking the oaths to the government.] Mr. Whiſton ſays, 'I remember to have heard him (Biſhop 'Lloyd) once ſay, that after the aſſaſſination plot, 'A. D. 1696, the odium of it was ſo great, that not 'a Jacobite would have remained in the nation, had 'not the extreme rigour of the following act of parliament againſt thoſe that would not ſign an aſſociation, kept up that ſpirit of oppoſition to the government ever afterward; which puts me in mind 'of the like caſe, of two of the non-jurors of St. John's college, Cambridge, Mr. Billers and Mr. Baker, 'who loved their religion and their country as well 'as any jurors whomſoever: but having once taken 'an oath to King James, could not ſatisfy their conſciences in breaking it, while he lived, for any conſideration whatſoever. Theſe two were long my 'particular acquaintance: and I well remember, 'that when king James died, which was in 1701, 'they began to deliberate about taking the oath, and 'coming into the government, till the unhappy abjuration oath, which was made the ſame year, had 'ſuch clauſes as ſtopped all their further deliberations (3).'

(3) Whiſton's Memoirs of his own life and writings, ſecond edit. p. 29.

[C] He communicated to Biſhop Burnet a variety of corrections and obſervations reſpecting his Hiſtory of the Reformation.] 'Theſe corrections, &c. are in the Appendix to the third volume of the Hiſtory of the Reformation, No. IV. p. 743—758.

'this

'this volume. If any more are found, they were not ſent: for he ſuppreſſed nothing (i).' This teſtimony of Baker, in favour of the candour of Burnet, whoſe principles were ſo different from his own, is certainly worthy of attention; and, indeed, does honour to them both.

(i) Communicated by the ſame gentleman.

It appears to have been the deſign of Mr. Baker, to write an hiſtory of the univerſity of Cambridge, and ſome account of the moſt eminent perſons educated there [D]; and accordingly he made very large collections for that purpoſe; but did not live to execute his deſign [E]. It is much to be regretted, that he did not form his collections into ſuch a work as that which he intended: but he appears to have been extremely ſolicitous to accumulate a large ſtock of materials, and too backward in attempting to methodize and digeſt them. By this means the expectations of the public were in a great degree diſappointed; it being ſuppoſed, that Mr. Baker would have produced a very capital work reſpecting the univerſity of Cambridge, as he was underſtood to poſſeſs all the induſtry of Anthony Wood, at the ſame time that he was maſter of a much better ſtyle, and had a ſuperior degree of taſte and judgment (k). The collections which he left behind him are very conſiderable, and very valuable. Twenty-three volumes of theſe in folio, written with his own hand, he gave to his friend Lord Oxford; and being accordingly part of the Harleian collection of manuſcripts, they are now depoſited in the Britiſh Muſeum [F]. He alſo left fifteen volumes (k) Vid. Anecdotes of Britiſh Topography, p. 103.

[D] An Hiſtory of the Univerſity of Cambridge, and of the moſt eminent perſons educated there.] It is obſerved by the author of Anecdotes of Britiſh Topography, p. 102. from Tanner, p. 384. that 'Dr. Hatcher, of 'King's college, a phyſician, and able antiquary of 'the 16th century, had compiled ſome Latin me-'moirs of the eminent perſons educated here (the 'univerſity of Cambridge) in two books, in the man-'ner of Bale.' And in the Harleian collection of manuſcripts, No. 7176, 7167, are two volumes of lives of illuſtrious perſons educated at Cambridge, from its foundation to 1715, collected from printed books, by Morris Drake Morris, of Mount Morris, in Kent, Eſq; who was fellow-commoner of Trinity-college (4).

(4) Vid. Anecdotes of Britiſh Topography, ubi ſupra; and the Harleian catalogue.

[E] Did not live to execute his deſign.] This naturally reminds us of a paſſage in a juſtly celebrated work of Dr. Samuel Johnſon: 'It is lamented by 'Hearne, the learned antiquary of Oxford, that the 'general forgetfulneſs of the fragility of life, has re-'markably infected the ſtudents of monuments and 'records. As their employment conſiſts firſt in col-'lecting, and afterwards in arranging, or abſtracting 'what libraries afford them, they ought to amaſs no 'more than they can digeſt; but when they have un-'dertaken a work, they go on ſearching and tranſ-'ſcribing, call for new ſupplies, when they are alrea-'dy over-burdened, and at laſt leave their work un-'finiſhed. It is, ſays he, the buſineſs of a good anti-'quary, as of a good man, to have mortality always 'before him (5).'

(5) Rambler, No. 71.

[F] Are now depoſited in the Britiſh Muſeum.] In the firſt of theſe volumes is a ſuccinct account of St. John's Houſe and St. John's College, with ſome occaſional and incidental account of the affairs of the univerſity, and of ſuch private colleges, as held communication or intercourſe with the old houſe or college. The ſecond volume contains, among other particulars, Diſciplina eccleſiæ ſacræ ex Dei verbo deſcripta, auctore Tho. Cartwright. Aula Clar. ſive miſcellanea quædam ad Aulam Clarenſ. ſpectantia. De cuſtodibus & Sociis Pembrochianis, authore Math. Wrenn. Biſhop Overall's opinion of the five points. In the third volume is Vita Joannis Fiſheri Epiſcopi Roffin. ex codice MS. D. Gale Decani Eboracenſis. Roper's life of Sir Thomas More. An account of Sir Thomas More's life wrote by others, with ſome particulars concerning Dr. Harding, &c. In the fourth volume are letters and other particulars concerning King's College, Trinity College, Chriſt's College, Corpus Chriſti College, Trinity Hall, Peter Houſe, Pembroke Hall, Queen's College, Sydney College, Magdalen College, and Caius College, &c. In the fifth volume are Statuta antiqua Academiæ Cantabr. Articuli in ſynodo Lond. an. 1562. Collectiones ex MSS. codicibus Coll. Gaio. Gonv. Cant. &c. The ſixth volume contains particulars concerning Corpus Chriſti College, Bennet College, Sidney College, Jeſus College, and Emanuel College. An account of the ſeveral colleges, with the names of the fellows, ſcholars, &c. when Queen Elizabeth was at Cambridge in 1564, together with Dr. Perne's Latin ſermon on that occaſion. An account of the queen's reception at Oxford in 1566. A curious paper relative to irregularities and neglect of diſcipline in the univerſity of Cambridge, in 1636. Letters between Archbiſhop Laud and that univerſity, relative to his claim of a right to a metropolitical viſitation of the univerſity. Account of proceedings againſt ſome perſons at Cambridge, who were deemed factious. An hiſtorical account of the univerſity and colleges of Cambridge, Lat. ſuppoſed to be written by Dr. Fuller.

In the ſeventh volume are, Orationes funebres, epitaphia, &c. a narrative of Blood's attempt on the crown in the Tower, written by Sir Gilbert Talbot, maſter and treaſurer of the jewel-houſe. Characters of Henry Duke of Norfolk, Daniel earl of Nottingham, Sidney Lord Godolphin, and John Marquis of Normanby, as entered in the heralds office, by the Duke of Norfolk, towards the latter end of the reign of King William. Papers and letters concerning the Earl of Strafford, &c. The eighth volume contains, Literæ et Orationes attingentes Hiſtoriam et Statum Academiæ Oxon. Cartæ nonnullæ Henrici II. de libertatibus Villæ Oxon. P. Candidi Decembris epiſtolæ ad ducem Gloceſtr. ſuper nova traductione totius Platonicæ politiæ. An account of the death of Walter Earl of Eſſex. Talbot's notes upon the itinerary, as far as concerns Britain. An account of the King of Portugal's expedition in 1578, &c. In the ninth volume, are acts and inſtruments taken from the Black Book, viz. Decree concerning Lady Margaret's reader and preacher, Henry the Seventh's Dirige, &c. and notes concerning God's houſe and Chriſt's college, &c.

The tenth volume contains Σχέλετος Cantabr. una cum Catalogo Epiſcoporum Cantabr. Account of the ceremonies uſed, and the public acts held at Cambridge, when Queen Elizabeth viſited that univerſity, in 1564. An account of the foundation of the univerſity of Cambridge, with a catalogue of the principal founders and benefactors of the colleges, public ſchool, and library; together with the names of the then maſters and fellows of every particular college, the number of magiſtrates, governors, and officers, and the total number of ſtudents then reſiding in the univerſity: collected in 1619. Particulars relative to the viſitation of the univerſity in the reign of King Edward the Sixth, &c. In the eleventh volume are particulars concerning Trinity College, Sidney College, and Jeſus College, and vita et mors D. Batteman epiſcopi Norwic. Catalogues of chancellors, profeſſors, heads, fellows, ſcholars, &c.

The twelfth volume conſiſts of papers and collections relative to St. John's College, digeſted for the moſt part according to the order of time. Among theſe is a copy of the will of the foundreſs, Margaret, Counteſs of Richmond and Derby, mother to King Henry the Seventh; a letter from that prince to her; & Carta fundationis collegii S. Johannis Evangeliſtæ. This volume alſo contains wills of ſeveral perſons benefactors to the college; an indenture relative to ſix exhibitions in the college, to which Mr. Baker himſelf contributed, and had a conſiderable ſhare in their eſtabliſhment; a Latin letter from Roger Aſcham to Cardinal Pole; two letters from Dr. Andrew Pern to Lord Burghley; a ſermon of St. Cyprian, concerning volumes in folio, of manuſcript collections, entirely written with his own hand, a very few pages excepted, to the public library at Cambridge [G]: beſides which he bequeathed

ing the ſupper of our Lord, and the firſt inſtitution of the ſacrament, tranſlated by Dr. Watſon, Biſhop of Lincoln; ſeveral letters to Lord Burleigh, relative to diſputes in the univerſity of Cambridge; ſundry papers relative to a conteſt there between Dr. William Whitaker, and Everard Digby; articles exhibited in parliament againſt Dr. William Beale, maſter of St. John's college, in 1641; an ordinance of parliament for ejecting Dr. Beale from that office, and appointing Mr. Arrowſmith in his room; a ſpeech of Dr. Spencer, vice-chancellor, and maſter of Bennet College, addreſſed to the Duke of Monmouth, chancellor of the univerſity, at his inſtalment at Worceſter-houſe in the Strand, in 1674; and Latin orations addreſſed to King Charles I. and the Duke of Buckingham, &c.

The thirteenth volume contains tranſcripts of charters, grants, privileges, exemptions, immunities, &c. In the fourteenth volume are particulars concerning the priory at Royſton, the church at Durham, the church of St. Paul at London, the Epiſcopus Puerorum Eleemoſynary there, &c. An account of the reception of King James, King Charles, the Prince, and the Palſgrave at Cambridge; with the manner of the funerals of King James, Prince Henry, Dr. Whitaker, Soame, Clayton, &c. A collection of letters to Mr. Abraham Wheelock from Sir Henry Spelman, Sir Thomas Adams, &c. concerning the Saxon and Arabic lecture, with other letters to Mr. Wheelock. A petition of the biſhops to the queen, concerning the articles of 1562, &c. In the fifteenth volume, are papers concerning Perry, Udall, Barrow, Greenwood, Cartwright, and other puritans, with ſome original letters from Dr. Bancroft, T. Cartwright, and others. Letters from Lord Burleigh, Sir Robert Cecil and ſeveral other perſons of rank to Sir John Puckering, lord-keeper of the great ſeal. Particulars concerning Mr. Peter Wentworth, &c. in the caſe of the ſucceſſion. Letters, &c. between T. F. and Juſtus Lipſius, &c. And in the ſixteenth volume are particulars concerning Biſhop Overall, and memoirs of Mr. Moſes, Dr. Mapletoft, and Dr. Hewyt, with a letter concerning printing at Harlem, &c.

The ſeventeenth volume contains a collection of letters relating to the univerſity of Oxford, with various papers concerning the ſtatutes, &c. of the univerſity of Cambridge. In the eighteenth volume are particulars concerning Peter Houſe, Caius college, Pembroke-hall, Trinity-hall, King's college, &c. In the nineteenth volume, are particulars concerning Bennet college, Jeſus college, and St. John's college. Computus Academiæ made by the vice-chancellors and the ſeveral proctors. Aſſertio de antiquitate Acad. Cant. Letters tranſcribed out of the orator's book, &c. The twentieth volume contains letters from ſeveral perſons to Lord Burleigh; a licence for Dr. Gwent to wear his bonnet in the King's preſence; account of monuments in and about the cathedral at Norwich, by Sir Thomas Brown; an account of the birth of the pretended prince of Wales, by Dr. Lloyd, Biſhop of Worceſter, &c.

In the twenty-firſt volume are letters of Mr. Joſeph Mede concerning Cambridge; an account of the foundation and diſſolution of the priory of Higham, and of the annexing and appropriating of it to St. John's college, with the proceedings againſt the nuns for their lewdneſs and incontinence. Letters to Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, concerning the diſſolution of monaſteries, reformation, &c. Laſt wills and teſtaments of Biſhop Sanderſon, Biſhop Juxon, and Dr. Buſby, and ſeveral others. Collections from the council-book of Queen Elizabeth in 1573. An account of the effect of the Bartholomew act in the dioceſe of Lincoln. Account of the progreſs of King Henry VII. Ceremonial of the baptiſm of Prince Arthur; of the receiving a cap and ſword from the pope; of the creation of the Prince of Wales, and his being dubbed knight; and of the Queen's taking her chamber, in the fifth year of the reign of King Henry VII. Inſtructions to the abbot of Thorney concerning the confinement of Reginald Peacock. Letters of Mr. Thomas Cartwright, Dr. Peter Baro, Dr. Whitaker, &c. In the twenty-ſecond volume, are papers ſent by Dr. Humphreys, Biſhop of Bangor, to Anthony Wood, giving an account of the learned men in Wales. Inſcriptiones deſumpta ex veteri tabula Acad. et Oppidi Cantabr. Inſcriptiones e veteri tabula Oxon. Particulars concerning King's-hall, &c. And the twenty-third volume contains the ſtatutes of St. John's college, with an account of the private foundations, together with a copy of the univerſity-ſtatutes, interpretations, decrees, &c.

Beſides theſe twenty-three volumes in folio, there is alſo in the Harleian collection of MSS. at the Britiſh Muſeum, a quarto volume of Mr. Baker's, which contains the ſtatutes, and gives ſome account of the foundation of King's college in Cambridge. There are added, at the end, interpretations of ſome doubts in the ſtatutes, by Biſhop Wickham, viſitor in 1604.

It may be proper to obſerve, that the firſt of Mr. Baker's manuſcript volumes in the Muſeum, is numbered No. 7028; and the reſt follow in regular ſucceſſion to 7050. There is the more occaſion to mention this, as there is no reference to theſe manuſcripts of Mr. Baker's, in the Index to the Catalogue of the Harleian collection (6).

(6) This account of ſome of the principal contents of Mr. Baker's manuſcript in the Britiſh Muſeum, is given partly from the Harleian catalogue, and partly from an inſpection of the manuſcripts themſelves in that valuable repoſitory.

[G] He alſo left fifteen volumes in folio, of manuſcript collections, written with his own hand, to the public library at Cambridge.] Of theſe manuſcripts of Mr. Baker, we are enabled to give the more ſatisfactory account, in conſequence of the kind aſſiſtance afforded us by the Rev. Mr. Robert Robinſon, of Cheſterton, near Cambridge. This gentleman, who is already known to the literary world by his own ingenious performances, hath obligingly taken the trouble of inſpecting all Mr. Baker's manuſcripts: which he was politely permitted to have the uſe of, by the preſent vice-chancellor, the learned and worthy Dr. Plumtree: and from the account which Mr. Robinſon hath tranſmitted to us, we ſhall ſelect the following particulars of the principal contents of theſe manuſcript volumes.

VOL. I.

[This volume is numbered on the back 24; and the other volumes have the following numbers on the backs in regular ſucceſſion.]

In this volume are contained Tranſcripta quædam e veteri regiſtr. ab anno 1488 ad an. 1544. An account of the building of St. Mary's church. Miſſa pro benefactoribus. The manner of the veſpers in Divinity, &c. Commencement in Divinity, Canon and Civil Law, Arts, Grammar, &c. Order of the Queſtioniſts, &c. The manner of the reception of the French Ambaſſador, Lord Burleigh, Chancellor, and others of the nobility, 1571; and of the univerſity's attending the Queen at Audley-end, 1578. The manner of the univerſity of Oxford, in creating their Chancellor, Sir Chriſtopher Hatton. Nomina graduatorum, &c. gratiæ conceſſæ, &c. ab anno 1589 uſque ad annum 1620. Letters from Privy-counſellors, &c. to the Vice-chancellor, &c. Tranſcript from the Leidger-book of Waltham-abbey. Chronicon Monarcharum Angl. &c. cum aliis pertinen. ad Cœnobium S. Edmundi Regis et Mart. &c. Tranſcript from a Leidger-book of Battel Abbey, &c.

VOL. II. [25]

Burgus Cantabr. ſive liber privilegiorum et libertatum, et rerum memorabilium, burgum et villam Cantabrig. Gratiæ et gradus ab anno 1620 ad annum 1639 e regiſtr. Acad. Cantabr. Particulars concerning Trinity-hall. Gradus diplomatici [Lambeth.] admiſſi Cantabrigiæ. Particulars from the regiſter of Queen's college, Cambridge. Privy ſeals, &c. concerning King's college, King's hall, Queen's college, or the univerſity, from originals. Two Latin letters from Limborch to Dr. Oliver D'Oyley, fellow of King's college, &c.

VOL. III. [26]

An account of eminent men in the Welch dioceſſes: ſent by Biſhop Humphreys to Mr. Wood. An account of the interment of biſhops, from their wills. Collectiones e veteri libro MS. Tho. Markaunt. Wills, and extracts of wills, from the year 1602 to the year ed ſeveral other manuſcripts, and ſundry printed books, with notes and obſervations in his own hand-writing, to the ſame library [H]. He alſo left ſome manuſcripts to St. John's college.

year 1658. Orationes et ſcripta quædam Joan. Overall, S. T. P. Epiſc. Norv. Two letters concerning Biſhop Henſhaw, and Dr. Lowth, Biſhop of Cheſter. Degradatio, M. Gul. Prinn. Anecdote of Biſhop Holgate, Biſhop Barlow, &c.

VOL. IV. [27]

Particulars concerning Catharine-hall, and Emanuel-college. Particulars concerning Dr. Andrews, and Jeſus college. Particulars concerning the reforming the ſtatutes of St. John's college, with the commiſſion ad viſitand. Account of the proceedings in the caſe of a controverted election to the maſterſhip, between Dr. Lane and Mr. Holdſworth. Account of ſome diſturbances in St. John's college, an. 1647. Letters concerning the univerſity, and inſtructions for the clergy. Scargell's recantation, expulſion, abſolution, &c. A catalogue of univerſity-preachers, from the year 1604 to the preſent time; with a catalogue of inceptors and batchelors of arts, from the year 1620, to the year 1639. The biſhop of Ely's return of his clergy to the archbiſhop, in 1560. Letters concerning St. John's college, and the univerſity. The univerſity caſe concerning printing, by Mr. Tabor. Particulars concerning the cardinals Wolſey and Pole, the King's divorce, &c. Particulars concerning Trinity-hall, St. Edward's and St. John's churches, the church of Peterborough, &c. Tho. Earl's note-book, from 1564 to 1600. Ejectments of the parochial Clergy, from the books of the Committee for plundered Miniſters, and the Earl of Mancheſter's books, &c.

VOL. V. [28]

Acta, inſtrumenta, &c. ſtatum eccleſiæ vel dioc. Elien. attingentia. Mr. Worthington's collections of church matters relating to the dioceſe of Ely. Tranſcripts relating to the dioceſe of Ely, from Mr. Tabor's book, in the Regiſter's office, with ſome particulars concerning the Univerſity, &c. Notes from the diary of Dr. Goſtlin, maſter of Caius-college. Notes from Tho. Caius of Oxford, his Examen, &c. Letters to Dr. Chaderton, Maſter of Queen's-college, Biſhop of Cheſter, &c. Letters from Oliver Cromwell, Gen. Harriſon, Capt. Hotham, Sir John Coke, &c. Notes from a manuſcript life of Sir John Packington. The ſtate of the dioceſe of Cheſter, under Biſhop Bridgeman, who was conſecrated in 1619.

VOL. VI. [29]

Subſcriptiones præfectorum, profeſſorum, ſociorum, &c. ab an. 1662 ad an. 1719. Particulars concerning Dr. Perne, Maſter of Peter-houſe, Dr. Peter Baro, and Sir Nathan Wright, Lord-Keeper. Copy of a paper left by Mr. John Hampden. Original letters from Mr. Hartlib to Dr. Worthington. Collectiones e Chartulario Coll. Caii, et Annales Joannis Caii, et D. Goſling. Copies of letters from Lord Burleigh, Robert Earl of Leiceſter, Archbiſhops Parker, Whitgift, and Bancroft, Lord North, Robert Earl of Saliſbury, Henry Earl of Northampton, Sir Edward Coke, Sir Walter Raleigh, &c. with mandates from Queen Elizabeth, King James, &c. Biſhop Fiſher's foundation of four Fellowſhips and two Scholarſhips, &c.

VOL. VII. [30]

Memoranda Coll. Corp. Chr. Cant. tempore J. Botwright, magiſt. The remarkable will of William Noy, Attorney-General. The Queen's letters-patent, and confirmation of the Statutes, for the Aſtronomy-Profeſſor, of the foundation of Dr. Plume, with a grant from Trinity-college, of a room and obſervatory for his uſe. A collection of letters mandatory from King Charles, James, William and Mary, with other letters from Chancellors, &c. Mr. Bagford's notes concerning printing, printers, &c. The King's letters-patent for a Profeſſor of modern hiſtory, with the nomination of Samuel Harris, M. A. as firſt Profeſſor. Particulars concerning Magdalen-college, St. John's-college, Caius-college, Emanuel-college, Jeſus-college, and Trinity-hall. Epitaphs and inſcriptions. Genealogies of Biſhop Davenant, Andrew Bing, Hebrew-Profeſſor, and Charles Wright, Arabic-profeſſor. Letter to Lord Townſhend upon receiving King George's ſtatue, &c.

VOL. VIII. [31]

Acts and inſtruments concerning Michael-houſe in Cambridge, with the ſtatutes of that houſe, the firſt that were given to any college in Cambridge. Petitions of the univerſity and town of Cambridge, for relief of grievances from draining of the Fens. Extracts from the Univerſity-regiſter of graces, from the year 1501 to the year 1542, being the firſt regiſter we have. Tranſcripts from Mr. Tabor's book, public regiſter, viz. Sir Edw. Sandys's will for a metaphyſical lecture; office of the Beadleſhip; precedency of the Vice-Chancellor; orders at the King's coming to Cambridge; inſtallation of the Duke of Monmouth, Chancellor; Literæ patentes lectoris juris civilis; inſtructions how to appeal from the Vice-Chancellor to the delegates; particulars relative to the peſt-houſes, the building of St. Mary's church and ſteeple, &c. Tranſcripts from another book of Mr. Tabor, viz. concerning the town to be made a city, objections, anſwers, petition of the town, &c. De dominio ſoli villæ Cantabr. &c. Inſtrumentum univerſitatis Cantabr. circa privilegia quædam academiæ, an. 1420. Hiſtoriola Joſſelini de Matthæo archiep. Cant. MSS. C. C. C. An account of a book, formerly Mr. Wharton's, afterwards Lord Sunderland's, wherein are inſerted ſeveral original charters, letters, manuſcript notes, &c. which book is a copy of the Antiq. Brit. Notes from Sir Roger Twyſden's copy of the ſame book, containing a map of Cambridge, wanting in the other copies. Extracts from a manuſcript, intitled, the Hiſtory or Memoirs of Framlingham. Copies of two papers concerning Archbiſhop Parker's conſecration, &c.

VOL. IX. [32]

Original letters to or from Lord Burleigh. Copies of letters from Queen Elizabeth to foreign princes. Account of the ſickneſs and death of Prince Henry. Count Arundell's apology, being reſtrained, for accepting the honour of comes imperii, without the Queen's leave. The forerunner of revenge upon the Duke of Buckingham, for poiſoning King James; by George Egliſham. Collections from a MS. volume, entitled, Regiſtrum vagum, &c. tempore J. Jegon, epiſc. Norvic. &c. The firſt plan or proportion of Trinity-college, with the names of the firſt Fellows, their ſtipends, &c. Copies of letters concerning the maſſacre at Paris, written by Sir Francis Walſingham. Particulars concerning Michael-houſe, and Onyng's inn. The roll of Ely, with the hiſtory of the Knights and Monks. Collect. e veteri chartulario prioratus de Thurgarton. Extracts of letters from Mr. Joſeph Mede. Ejectments at Trinity-college, in 1649, 1650, &c. Collectiones circa domum S. Michaelis, e libro Otryngham. Original letters written to Mr. Anthony Gilby, by Puritans. Letters written to Archbiſhop Whitgift. Particulars concerning the Earls of Oxford, and Lord-Chief-Juſtice Coke. Mr. Richard Smith's Obituary, from the year 1628 to 1675. Letters from or to Mr. Roger Aſcham. Particulars concerning Biſhop Overall, Dr. Robert Scott, Dr. Manwaring, Mr. Edward Elton. The curſe belonging to Sherborne-caſtle, &c. Notes from Mr. Richard Smith's Hiſtory of Printing. Notes concerning Felton, Thomas Scott, &c. A letter from Mr. Roger Aſcham to Dr. John Seton. Mr. Richard Hill's donation of Livings to St. John's-college, with ſome account of the donor. Letters concerning the collection for the city of Geneva in 1603, 1604. Archbiſhop Wake's letter to the Paſtors and Profeſſors of Geneva. More particulars concerning printing, &c.

Mr. Baker lived to a very advanced age, exceedingly reſpected, and died at Cambridge, on the 2d of July, 1740. He was buried in the anti-chapel of the college. In a MS. letter of Dr. Waterland, dated Magdalen-college, Cambridge, July 6, 1740, is the following

VOL. X. [33]

Original letters from Cardinal Wolſey. A ſpecimen of Capgrave's Chronicle, dedicated to King Edward IV. Particulars concerning Corpus Chriſti and Trinity-colleges. A letter from Germany, concerning Dr. Cudworth's Intellectual Syſtem. A letter concerning Archbiſhop Laud and Mr. Herne. Particulars concerning Biſhop Goodman, the Earl of Eſſex, Merrick, Cuffe, and Biſhop Middleton. A letter from the Univerſity, concerning Dr. Cudworth's Intellectual Syſtem. Liſt of degrees conferred when King George II. was at Cambridge, April 25, 1728. Notes concerning Godfrey Goodman, Biſhop of Glouceſter, under his own hand. Particulars concerning Dr. Beaumont, and Dr. Bern. Hale. Subſcriptions of graduates from the year 1638, to the year 1725. Letters to and from Archbiſhop Laud, concerning his power of viſitation, with reaſons to prove, that the univerſity of Cambridge is exempt from archiepiſcopal juriſdiction. Letters to and from the Dutcheſs of Buckingham, Archbiſhop Harſnet, Biſhop Andrews, the Earl of Holland, &c. The bill in Star-Chamber againſt Baſtwick, Burton, Prynne, &c. A letter from the Biſhop of Bangor to Mr. Anth. Wood. An obituary of the deprived or non-complying Clergy. An account of a Conſuetudinary of the abbey of Bury, St. Edmund's. Two letters from Lord Clarendon and Biſhop Sanderſon. Carta fundationis eccleſiæ Elien. A catalogue of Fellows, Scholars, &c. of Trinity-college. A ſpeech in Parliament in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign. A ſpecimen of Biſhop Godwin's firſt Eſſay, in a catalogue of Biſhops of Bath and Wells. Letters from King James I. and King Charles I. Letter from Cardinal De Fleury to Lord Oxford, with his anſwer. A catalogue of Doctors and Maſters of Arts at Oxford, from the year 1565, to the year 1609. An epiſtle dedicatory to John Duke of Bedford, Regent of France. Collections from Dr. Brady's manuſcripts. Mr. Abraham Wheelock's life, character, &c.

VOL. XI. [34]

Sundry other papers from Dr. Brady's manuſcripts. Archbiſhop Sancroft's collections, containing letters concerning Cambridge, Durham, Divines in exile, Coſin, Earl, Creighton, &c; conference at Hampton-Court; Caſe between the Biſhop of Ely and Lord Hatton, Hatton-gardens; Dr. Sparrow and Mr. Patrick's caſe; Dr. Board's caſe, letters of King James, and of Bacon; diſpenſations, &c. Life of Lord Burleigh, from a manuſcript at Burleigh. Epitaphs. A catalogue of Cambridge and Cambridgeſhire Worthies. Particulars concerning Thomas Duke of Norfolk, and religious houſes diſſolved in Norfolk. Book of fare and expences of the Duke of Norfolk. An account of the proceedings of the convocation for the years 1603, 1604, 1605, 1606, &c. Addreſſes of the Dutch and French Churches, an. 1604. A letter from Archbiſhop Sandys, and two from Robert and Peregrine Bertie, and T. Bell. Collections from Liber rerum memorabilium, or Nath. Stokys's book. Original letters from the Archbiſhops Grindal, Whitgift, and Matthews, to Archbiſhop Hutton penes ejuſdem familiam in agro Ebor. Collectiones e Chartophylacio Regio, &c. The Duke of Buckingham's will. Biſhop Beveridge's will. Account of the foundation of Michael-houſe, King's hall, &c. Expulſion and degradation of Philip Nichols, LL. D. Original letters from Dr. John Wallis to Mr. Matthew Poole. Letter of Biſhop Atterbury to Mr. Pope, &c.

VOL. XII. [35]

Original letters from King Charles I., the Prince, Prince Rupert, &c. Original letters from the Earls of Eſſex, Warwick, and Mancheſter, Oliver Cromwell, Sir John Hotham, W. Mountagu, Secretary Nicholas, Sir John Strangways, Sir Thomas Fairfax, General Monk, William Lenthall, &c. Treaty at Uxbridge, and at Newport in the iſle of Wight. Two receipts from the Scots for 200,000 l. paid by the Engliſh in 1646. Speaker Lenthall's petition for leave to quit his employment. Mr. Robert Yeoman's caſe. Prince Rupert's diſmiſſion. Invitation of the Parliament to the Prince, concerning the King's remove from Holdenby. Mr. Tutty's caſe, by Dr. Duck. Sir Edward Deering's caſe, and that of the ſeven Prieſts condemned. Proviſion for the King's children. Lord Savile's caſe. Mr. Brydle's caſe condemned at Oxford. Examination of Mr. Hudſon and others concerning the King's eſcape from Oxford. Dr. Baker's ejectment. Mr. Rolfe's and Mr. John Lilburne's caſe. Manner of reception of the Houſe, 1649. The Speaker empowered to confer knighthood. Particulars concerning the Princeſs Elizabeth and the Duke of Glouceſter. The King's march out of Scotland, and defeat at Worceſter. Carew Raleigh's caſe. Letters relating to France, Spain, &c. from Aſcham, Blake, &c. Account of the death of Doriſlaus. The King's commiſſion to Oneal. Aſſembly of Divines, their acts, advice, petitions ſigned by the Clergy, their names, ſubſcriptions, their power limited, &c. Petitions of the Counteſs of Leiceſter, the Earl of Derby, Mr. Hotham, Mr. Ryley, James Nayler at Bridewell; of the Biſhops in Parliament, &c. Particulars concerning Mr. Marſden, Dr. Wroe, Mr. Crompton, Sir Thomas Ramſay, Lady Mary Ramſay, &c. Letters from Dr. Hickes out of Scotland, to Dr. Patrick, &c. Letter from Archbiſhop Wake to M. Du Pin. Letters concerning the Church and King of Pruſſia, King James the Second, &c. Materials for writing the life of Mr. Nicholas Ferrar. Dr. Atterbury's, Speaker Harley's, and Sir George Rooke's ſpeeches. Some particulars concerning the author of the Whole Duty of Man.

VOL. XIII. [36]

Memoirs of the Earl of Mancheſter. Account of the life and death of Wentworth, Earl of Roſcommon, by Dr. Chetwood. An account of Richard Plantagenet, the laſt of that name. Account of Cevalerius, Hebrew reader, and his iſſue. Proclamations of King Edward the Sixth. Particulars concerning Trinity-hall and Pembroke-hall. De Cantariis fundatis in eccleſia S. Pauli Lond. The life of Mr. Tho. Hearne, in his own hand. Mr. Anthony Wood's laſt will. Particulars concerning Mary Queen of Scots. The foundation of the college of Dublin, Adam Loftus's ſpeech, &c. Collections from Mr. William Bedford's manuſcripts, in which are particulars relative to Archbiſhop Uſher, Biſhop Burnet, Dr. Baſtwick, Biſhop Coſins, and Archbiſhop Laud; and letters from Hugh Broughton, Edward Pococke, Edmund Caſtell, Biſhop Nicolſon, Biſhop Gibſon, Cromwell Earl of Eſſex, Sir William Cecil, Dr. Perne, &c. A journal of the proceedings of the Aſſembly of Divines. A liſt of the Bailiffs of Shrewſbury, from the year 1372 to 1603, with ſome hiſtorical paſſages concerning the ſaid town. Particulars relative to Biſhop Overall. Queen Elizabeth's entertainment at Oxford in 1592, and King James's entertainment there in 1605. Remarkable particulars concerning Charles I., Colonel Hammond, Aſhburnham, &c. Gul. Grocini epiſtolæ Aldo Manutio Romano. Lives and characters of Admiral Benbow and Sir Roger L'Eſtrange, &c.

VOL. XIV. [37]

Collectanea e veteri cartulario Eccleſiæ Cath. Lich. Reformation of the univerſity of Cambridge, from the books of the Committee. D. Thomæ Smith, LL. D. oratio de dignitate legum, &c. ejuſdem altera oratio, de ratione ſtudii juris civilis. Inſtructions for Sir Thomas Smith, relative to Calais, ſent into France in 1566. Mr. Thomas Hearne's will, &c.

VOL. XV. [38]

Reaſons for the reſtitution of Calais. A letter to the Queen, from Sir Tho. Smith, on that ſubject. A conſultation held, May 1, 1561, about receiving a Nuncio from the Pope. Biſhop White's ſermon, at following paſſage: 'We have lately here loſt an excellent man, who lived and died 'in that pleaſurable kind of toil, entertaining himſelf, and ſerving diſtant friends, in a 'literary way. I am juſt come from hearing a fine panegyric of him from St. Mary's 'pulpit. Mr. Baker was the perſon I mean, as you would have imagined without my 'naming him. He lived to a great age: but ſo lived, as to make it neceſſary for 'thoſe he leaves behind him, to think he died too ſoon (l).' Mr. Walpole informs us, that Mr. George Vertue, the engraver, made a journey to Cambridge, in order to draw Mr. Baker's picture. 'He had been privately engaged,' ſays that gentleman, 'to 'draw by ſtealth the portrait of old Mr. Thomas Baker of St. John's, then an eminent 'antiquary, earlier in his life the modeſt author of that ingenious and poliſhed little 'piece, Reflections on Learning (m).' Mr. Baker was nephew to Sir George Baker of Crooke, a gentleman who was eminent for his attachment to the crown, and his gallant defence of Newcaſtle againſt the Scots. He was buried in the chancel of the great church at Kingſton upon Hull, in Yorkſhire, where a monument was erected for him in 1710, by Mr. Baker.

(l) Communicated by John Loveday, Eſq; of Caverſham, near Reading, Berks.

(m) Life of Mr. George Vertue, annexed to the Catalogue of Engravers, 2d edit. p. 8.

We are informed, that a life of Mr. Baker was prepared by the late Dr. Zachary Grey; and that the manuſcript is now in the poſſeſſion of a reverend gentleman, who has digeſted and improved it: another life of Mr. Baker appears alſo to have been drawn up by a different hand: and one or both of theſe may, perhaps, hereafter be printed. In the mean time, we have laid before the public the moſt ſatisfactory account of this indefatigable Antiquary, which we have been able to collect.] T.

at the funeral of Queen Mary. Lives of George Duke of Buckingham, Dr. Mapletoft, and Sir John King. A memoir concerning Mr. Tobias Ruſtat. An inſtrument concerning Chriſt's college, and God's houſe. Oliver Cromwell's birth and family. Addreſs of the college of Durham to Richard Lord Protector. Catalogue of the honourable perſons ſummoned by writ to ſit in the other houſe. Two letters from Biſhop Bedell. Life of Dr. Sibbs, by Mr. Zach. Catlin. Letters from the Earl of Northampton to Lord Rocheſter, &c.

Beſides theſe fifteen volumes, there is another manuſcript volume, in folio, numbered at the back [39], which was given by Mr. Baker to the univerſity library, and which contains a catalogue of Engliſh printed books, by Andrew Maunſell, bookſeller, in two parts, printed at London in 1595. This book is interleaved, and a great number of titles of books, omitted by Maunſell, are inſerted by Baker in the blank leaves. At the end there are eleven leaves written by Mr. Baker, concerning the Bibles of the Engliſh tranſlation, firſt Printers, &c.

[H] He bequeathed ſeveral other manuſcripts, and ſundry printed books, with notes and obſervations in his own hand-writing, to the ſame library.] Among theſe is a large quarto volume, all in Mr. Baker's own hand-writing, which, among other particulars, contains the following. Notes concerning the coronation-office by the Archbiſhops Laud and Sancroft, with the coronation-office at large uſed by Archbiſhop Sancroft. Particulars concerning the oaths, deprivations, names, qualities, and preferments of perſons deprived. Short memoirs of the Parliament held at Weſtminſter in 1685, by the Biſhop of Norwich. A remembrance of certain matters concerning the Clergy and their juriſdiction, by James Morice, a member of Parliament. Proceedings againſt, and expulſion of, Mr. Ducket, Fellow of Caius-college, for atheiſtical opinions, &c.

Another manuſcript volume given by Mr. Baker to the Univerſity-library, is in folio, and filled with ſermons of Archbiſhop Uſher: but theſe are not in Mr. Baker's hand-writing. There are alſo two other volumes of collections in 4to; partly written by Mr. Baker, and partly by other hands.

Among the printed books given to the Univerſity by Mr. Baker, is a ſet of Wood's Athenæ Oxonienſes, with many manuſcript notes; and alſo a ſet of Anſtis's Regiſter of the moſt noble order of the garter, with manuſcript corrections, &c.]

[BAKER (HENRY)*, an ingenious and diligent Naturaliſt, was born in Fleet-ſtreet, London, either near the end of the laſt, or very early in the beginning of the preſent century. We know not what was his father's profeſſion; but his mother was, in her time, a Midwife of great practice. He was brought up to the buſineſs of a Bookſeller, in which, however, he appears not to have engaged at all after his apprenticeſhip; or, if he did, it was ſoon relinquiſhed by him. For Mr. Baker being of a philoſophical turn of mind, and having diligently attended to the methods which might be practicable and uſeful in the cure of ſtammering, and eſpecially in teaching deaf and dumb perſons to ſpeak, he made this the employment of his life. In the proſecution of ſo valuable and difficult an undertaking, he was very ſucceſsful; and ſeveral of his pupils, who are ſtill living, bear teſtimony to the ability and good effect of his inſtructions. He married Sophia, youngeſt daughter of the famous Daniel Defoe, who brought him two ſons, both of whom he ſurvived. On the 29th of January 1740, Mr. Baker was elected a Fellow of the Antiquarian Society (a); and, on the twelfth of March following, the ſame honour was conferred upon him by the Royal Society. For nearly thirty years together, he was a conſtant attendant at the meetings of the laſt Society, and was frequently choſen one of the Council. His attendance, as a member of the other learned body, was, we doubt not, equally punctual and regular. In 1744, Sir Godfrey Copley's gold medal was beſtowed upon him, for having, by his microſcopical experiments on the cryſtallizations and configurations of ſaline particles, produced the moſt extraordinary diſcovery during that year (b). This medal was preſented to him by Sir Hans Sloane, late Preſident of the Royal Society, and only ſurviving truſtee of Sir Godfrey Copley's donation, at the recommendation of Sir Hans's worthy ſucceſſor, Martin Folkes, Eſq; and of the Council of the ſaid Society (c). Mr. Baker was one of the firſt members of the Society for the encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce. Having led a very uſeful and honourable life, he died, at his apartments

* Several of the materials of this article have been collected from the information of different perſons: but the writer is the moſt indebted to the friendly communications of Dr. William Watſon.

(a) From the information of the Rev. Mr. Norris, Secretary to the Antiquarian Society.

(b) From the Regiſter of the Royal Society, by favour of the Preſident, Sir John Pringle.

(c) Employment for the Microſcope, 2d edit. p. 3. note.

in the Strand, on the 25th of November 1774 (d), being then above ſeventy years of age. His wife had been dead ſome time before; and he only left one grandſon, to whom he bequeathed the bulk of his fortune, which he had acquired by his profeſſion, of teaching deaf and dumb perſons to ſpeak. He gave alſo, by will, a hundred pounds to the Royal Society, for an anatomical or chymical Lecture (e), which hitherto hath been drawn up by Mr. Wolfe.

(d) Gent. Mag. for Nov. 1774. p. 543.

(e) From the information of his executor.

Such are the few circumſtances we have been able to collect concerning Mr. Henry Baker's private life: but we have it in our power to add ſomething farther with regard to his endeavours for advancing natural Knowledge, and promoting the general welfare of mankind. From the time of his belonging to the Royal Society, he was not only a conſtant attendant upon its meetings, but an active and zealous inſtrument in carrying on its laudable purpoſes. He wrote a number of Papers, many of which have been printed in the Philoſophical Tranſactions. It may be ſufficient to refer to the ſeveral places wherein they may be found (f). Mr. Baker was peculiarly attentive to all the new improvements which were made in Natural Science, and very ſolicitous for the proſecution of them. Thus, when the wonderful properties of the Water Polype were made known, he purſued the ſubject with great ardour and ſucceſs; and, as is evident from his writings, extended his curious enquiries to many other minute animals. So, likewiſe, after the extraordinary diſcoveries in electricity, he was one of the firſt to announce to the Public, the apprehended medicinal effects that might ariſe from the application of it, and to relate the experiments of this kind which had been made at Rome and Bologna. Though he was ſo reſpectable a member of the Royal Society, he did not eſcape the ſtrictures of Dr. Hill, in the Doctor's review of the works of that illuſtrious Body (g). But a publication, which appeared to be more the reſult of reſentment and ſpleen, than of a regard for true philoſophy, could not greatly injure either the reputation of the Society in general [A], or of Mr. Baker in particular. Beſides the papers written by himſelf, he was the means, by his extenſive correſpondence, of conveying to the Society the intelligence and obſervations of other inquiſitive and philoſophical men. From the reſt of his communications, we ſhall ſelect, and inſert, in a note, the extraordinary caſe of Margaret Cutting, a young woman who could ſpeak readily and intelligibly, though ſhe had loſt her tongue [B]. Mr. Baker's correſpondence was not confined to his own country. It extended far into foreign parts, and was rendered uſeful to

(f) Philoſophical Tranſactions, No. 457. p. 441. Do. p. 448. No. 458. p. 503. No. 459. p. 655. No. 471. p. 616. No. 472. p. 35. Do. p. 77. No. 477. p. 520. No. 482. p. 432. No. 483. p. 557. No. 484. p. 576. No. 486. p. 174. Do. p. 270. No. 491. p. 37. No. 494. p. 334. No. 497. p. 601. Do. p. 617. To which ſome other references might, we believe, be added.

(g) Monthly Review, Vol. iv. p. 285—291.

[A] The reputation of the Society in general.] Should it be allowed that ſome leſs important papers had been admitted into the Tranſactions, ſuch a circumſtance could derogate very little from the honour of a Society, which had always numbered among its members the moſt eminent names in the philoſophical and literary world, and had been diſtinguiſhed by the extent and value of its experiments and diſcoveries. If, however, there was formerly any cauſe for blame, that cauſe is now removed, by a greater attention in determining what communications are proper to be publiſhed. The affair was heretofore left to the diſcretion of the Secretaries, who, from the fear of giving offence, or from other reaſons, might, perhaps, ſometimes print too much. But ſince the death of Dr. Mortimer, every paper is read before the whole Council, and the fitneſs for publication is adjudged by the majority of votes. Even ſtill, this muſt always be a work of greater difficulty and delicacy than many people may imagine. Perſons of a lively, but ſuperficial turn of mind, and eſpecially ſuch as are no great adepts in philoſophy, are apt to condemn whatever doth not ſuit their particular taſte. They do not reflect that what is diſliked by themſelves, may be approved of by others, who have equal pretenſions to knowledge and judgment. Neither do they conſider, that even imperfect papers, by furniſhing valuable hints, and leading to better things, may often have great collateral utility. It requires no ſmall degree of diſcernment and diſcretion, to pronounce concerning the merit of thoſe publications which come from a body of men. Such publications muſt neceſſarily partake of the different talents of the contributors. Their deſign, likewiſe, ſhould be taken into conſideration. Where the principal intention is to collect the materials of knowledge, we ought not to be diſpleaſed, ſo long as that intention is properly kept in view. If theſe thoughts had been attended to, much trifling and petulant criticiſm might have been avoided.

[B] A young woman who ſpoke readily and intelligibly, though ſhe had loſt her tongue.] Her name was Margaret Cutting, and ſhe was born at Turnſtall, a village within four miles of Wickham Market, in Suffolk, where ſhe loſt her tongue by a cancer, being then about four years old. It firſt appeared like a ſmall black ſpeck on the upper ſuperficies of the tongue, and ſoon eat its way quite to the root of it. She was under the care of Mr. Scotchmore, a Surgeon of Saxmundham, who ſoon pronounced the caſe incurable. However, he continued uſing the beſt means he could for her relief. One day when he was ſyringing of it, the tongue dropped out, and they received it into a plate, the girl, to their amazement, ſaying to her mother, 'Don't be frighted, Mamma; it will grow again.' It was near a quarter of a year after, before it was quite cured. Her mouth was afterwards examined, with the greateſt exactneſs, by Mr. Hammond, Apothecary, a gentleman who perfectly underſtood anatomy, the Rev. Mr. William Notcutt, and Mr. Benjamin Boddington, a Turkey merchant, but they found not the leaſt appearance of any remaining part of a tongue, nor was there any uvula. Theſe gentlemen ſay, in one of the papers on this caſe tranſmitted to the Royal Society, 'We obſerved a fleſhy 'excreſcence on the under left jaw, extending itſelf 'almoſt to the place where the uvula ſhould be, 'about a finger broad: this excreſcence, ſhe ſaid, 'did not begin to grow till ſome years after the 'cure: it is by no means moveable, but quite fixed 'to the parts adjacent. The paſſage down the 'throat, at the place where the uvula ſhould be, or 'a little to the right of it, is a circular open hole, 'large enough to admit a ſmall nutmeg. Notwithſtanding the want of ſo neceſſary an organ as the 'tongue was generally ſuppoſed to be, to form a 'great part of our ſpeech, and likewiſe to be aſſiſting in deglutition, to our great admiration ſhe performed the office of deglutition, both in ſwallowing 'ſolids and fluids, as well as we could, and in the ſame 'manner: and as to ſpeech, ſhe diſcourſed as fluently 'and well as other perſons do; though we obſerved 'a ſmall ſound, like what is uſually called ſpeaking 'through the noſe; but, ſhe ſaid, ſhe had then a 'great cold, and ſhe believed that occaſioned it. 'She pronounced letters and ſyllables very articulately; the vowels ſhe pronounced perfectly, as 'alſo thoſe conſonants, ſyllables, and words that 'ſeemed neceſſarily to require the help of the tongue, 'as d, l, t, n, r, at, al, ath, aſh, cha, la, ta, ja.

'Thi

to this kingdom. To him we are obliged for a true hiſtory of the Cóccus Polonicus, tranſmitted by Dr. Wolfe. It is to Mr. Baker's communications that we owe the Alpine Strawberry, of late ſo much cultivated, and approved of, in England. The ſeeds of t were ſent in a letter, from Profeſſor Bruns of Turin, to our Philoſopher, who gave them to ſeveral of his friends, by whoſe care they furniſhed an abundant increaſe. The ſeeds, likewiſe, of the true Rhubarb, or Rheum Palmatum, now to be met with in many places of our own country, were firſt tranſmitted to Mr. Baker by Dr. Mounſey,

'This little dog did not eat bread.——Touch the tooth.——Try to light the candle.——Thrice thirty-three.——Let the large cat ſcratch the little dog.—The church.——Doth.——Lilly.——All theſe ſhe pronounced perfectly. She read to us a book very diſtinctly and plain; only, we obſerved, that ſometimes ſhe pronounced ſome words ending in ath as et—end as emb—ad as eib—; but it required a nice and ſtrict attention, to obſerve even this difference of ſound. She ſings very prettily, and pronounced her words in ſinging as in common. What is ſtill very wonderful, notwithſtanding the loſs of this uſeful organ the tongue, which is generally allowed by Anatomiſts, and Natural Philoſophers, to be the chief, if not the ſole, organ of taſte, ſhe diſtinguiſhes all taſtes very nicely, and can tell the leaſt perceivable difference in either ſmell or taſte (1).'

(1) Philoſ. Tran. No. 464. p. 143, and Abridgment of the ſame, Vol. IX. P. iii. p. 116, 127.

This caſe being thought a very extraordinary one, and the members of the Royal Society being divided in their opinions concerning it, the girl was brought up to town, and attended a meeting of the Society. In conſequence of which the following phyſiological account of her caſe was publiſhed in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, No. 484, by James Parſons, M. D. F. R. S. 'The apex and body of the tongue (being the only parts that fill the cavity of the mouth) are entirely wanting in this woman, as cloſely to the region of the os hyoides, which is the root of the tongue, as can well be conceived; and which is now ſituated too low in the throat to be perceived, even when ſhe opens her mouth at the wideſt. But let any one lay the tops of the finger and thumb to the ſides of her throat, and let her at the ſame time pronounce the letter k, he will feel the remaining root of the tongue riſe towards the roof of her mouth, in order to perform it; however, ſhe cannot keep it there any longer than the moment of thruſting it up, for want of the ligament (which was deſtroyed with the tongue) that is deſtined, together with the following muſcles, to keep the whole tongue forwards in its due ſituation. The genioglóſſi are a pair of muſcles which ariſe from the fore part of the inſide of the lower jaw, and are inſerted into the body of the tongue by three different directions; the anterior part is carried forwards towards the apex: the poſterior runs obliquely backwards towards the root, ſending a narrow ſlip on each ſide to the cornua of the os hyoides; and the middle part ends about the middle of the tongue. Now there are certain inequalities appearing on, and cloſely adhering to the floor of the cavity of the mouth, one of which being the moſt conſiderable, and having a reſemblance in its ſubſtance to that of the ſurface of the tongue, has been, if I am rightly informed, inadvertently miſtaken for a tongue, by a gentleman profeſſing ſurgery in the country; and which he thought for want of a careful examination, performed the offices proper to the apex; but a little care and circumſpection would have informed him, that thoſe appearances are only fragments of the genioglóſſi mentioned before, and that upon the ſeparation of the ſound parts from thoſe mortified, ſuch fragments, as had eſcaped, were retracted, and cicatrized down into their preſent ſtate; nor is it difficult to conceive how the root of the tongue muſt of neceſſity ſink lower down into the throat, by the loſs of theſe muſcles and the proper ligament; which, as I have obſerved before, naturally kept it higher than it could remain ever ſince their deſtruction. If the mortification had reached the os hyoides, it muſt have reached, and deſtroyed the muſcles of the larynx, and then the voice would have been deſtroyed; and alſo thoſe of the pharynx, and then deglutition could never have been performed; the dreadful conſequences of which need not be enumerated here; but ſhe ſwallows well, and her voice is perfect, and therefore it is not very extraordinary ſhe ſhould command her voice by the proper muſcles which remain untouched. The naſal opening is quite expoſed, becauſe the uvula which covered it was alſo deſtroyed; for one pair of its muſcles (the gloſſoſtaphilini) ariſe from the tongue; by which, no doubt, the diſtemper was communicated to this part alſo. She has her taſte perfectly, which is hereafter accounted for. The tongue is a fleſhy ſubſtance, chiefly made up of muſcles: and conſiſts of a baſis, or root, a body, and an apex; the baſis is the thickeſt and moſt ſubſtantial part, contains the os hyoides, and is naturally ſituated very low in the throat: from which the body riſes upwards and forwards, and is terminated by the anterior part or apex; proceeding under the uvula and roof, and lying upon the floor (if I may ſo call it) of the mouth. As to its uſes, it is ſaid to be the inſtrument of ſpeaking and taſting; as to the latter, experience ſhews us that the very apex of the tongue is leſs capable of diſcerning taſtes than the next part to it, and this than the parts yet farther back, all along the body to the root; ſo that although the taſte of any thing is firſt perceived by the apex, yet the guſt increaſes, the more the morſel approaches to deglutition, until it is quite protruded into the gula; becauſe as the tongue grows more thick backwards, it contains more of the nervous papillæ than the ſmaller part, and alſo becauſe there is a capacity of taſting in the membranes of the back part of the roof to the root; as if nature intended to increaſe the guſt, that deglutition may be the better and more eagerly performed for the ſervice of the animal: hence, although the apex and body of the tongue be gone, yet there is not a deprivation of taſte, which is the caſe of the perſon now under your conſideration. As to ſpeech, which is only ſound or voice articulated into expreſſion, the tongue is not the ſole organ for ſuch articulation; the lips, teeth, and roof of the mouth, are inſtruments for the ſame purpoſe; the two latter for the neceſſary reſiſtance to the apex of the tongue, and the lips for the abſolute articulation, and pronunciation of many letters; however, the following ſhort examination of the letters of the alphabet, as expreſſed by theſe organs will demonſtrate it. The tongue expreſſes ſome letters with its apex and ſome with its root. Thoſe abſolutely proper to the apex are only five, d, l, n, r, t; and thoſe to which it aſſiſts are the following letters, as c, g, ſ, x, z; all which can be performed by the teeth alone, and which this perſon does very well. Now the lip letters, and thoſe expreſſed by the root of the tongue, ſhe alſo performs as well as any perſon; the former are b, f, m, p; and the latter are, k, q, x; and as to the vowels, and the aſpiration h, ſince they are chiefly ſounded by the exahlation of the voice, commanded partly by the lips in widening or ſtraitening the capacity of the mouth, theſe ſhe can alſo expreſs: ſo that there is no letter ſhe cannot pronounce but the five apex letters; and thoſe ſhe manages ſo well by bringing the under lip to her upper teeth, in the courſe of her converſation, that any one can inſtantly apprehend every word ſhe ſays; and ſhe further plainly proves the lips are a better ſuccedaneum to the apex, than that could be to the lips if they were wanting. Indeed it is natural enough for thoſe who make the tongue the abſolute and ſole inſtrument of ſpeech, to imagine it as abſurd to ſay a woman ſpoke without a tongue, as that ſhe ſaw without an eye; but when we conſider the proviſional aſſiſting organs ordained by the wiſe AUTHOR of PROVIDENCE, ſerving to this neceſſary and expreſſive accompliſhment, I hope it will not ſeem ſo extremely marvellous, that ſhe ſpeaks without the body and apex of her tongue, as to create any farther doubt of the matter.'

Phyſician

Phyſician to the Empreſs of Ruſſia. Theſe, like the former, were diſtributed to his various acquaintance, and ſome of the ſeeds vegetated very kindly. It is apprehended that all the plants of the true Rhubarb now in Great Britain, were propagated from this ſource.

Though Mr. Henry Baker communicated ſome papers to the Antiquarian Society, we do not meet with any of them in the four Volumes of the Archæologia. The reaſon of this probably is, that it is but a few years ſince the Society of Antiquaries began to publiſh their Memoirs. Two or three of Mr. Baker's Papers, which relate to Antiquities, may be found in the Philoſophical Tranſactions (b).

(b) Phil. Tranſ. No. 477. p. 520. No. 483. p. 557.

The Society for the encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce, is under ſingular obligations to our worthy Naturaliſt. As he was one of the earlieſt members of it, ſo he contributed in no ſmall degree to its riſe and eſtabliſhment. At its firſt inſtitution, he officiated for ſome time, gratis, as Secretary. He was many years Chairman of the Committee of Accounts: and he took an active part in the general deliberations of the Society. In his attendance he was almoſt unfailing, and there were few queſtions, of any moment, upon which he did not deliver his opinion. Though, from the weakneſs of his voice, his manner of ſpeaking was not powerful, it was clear, ſenſible, and convincing. What he ſaid being uſually much to the purpoſe, and always proceeding from the beſt intentions, had often the good effect of contributing to bring the Society to rational determinations, when many of the members ſeemed to have loſt themſelves in the intricacies of debate. He drew up a ſhort account of the original of this Society, and of the concern he himſelf had in forming it; a ſight of which account, if it be ſtill preſerved, we have not been able to obtain.

Mr. Baker's principal writings are, 'The Microſcope made Eaſy,' and 'Employment 'for the Microſcope.' The firſt of theſe, which was originally publiſhed in 1742, or 1743, hath gone through five editions. The ſecond edition of the other, which, to ſay the leaſt of it, is equally pleaſing and inſtructive, appeared in 1764. Theſe Treatiſes, and eſpecially the latter, contain the moſt curious and important of the Obſervations and Experiments which Mr. Baker either laid before the Royal Society, or ſeparately publiſhed [C]. Perſons of leiſure may hence learn to employ themſelves in a very innocent, agreeable, and uſeful manner. The author always takes care to lead his readers to right views concerning the wiſdom and goodneſs of the Supreme Being. It has been ſaid of Mr. Baker, that he was a Philoſopher in little things. If it was intended by this language to leſſen his reputation, there is no propriety in the ſtricture. For the minute productions of Nature diſplay the great firſt cauſe as much as the largeſt. Whoever will peruſe the two laſt chapters of 'The Microſcope made Eaſy,' will be fully ſatisfied of the wiſdom and utility of Mr. Baker's enquiries and purſuits. To conclude, he was an intelligent, upright, benevolent man, much reſpected by thoſe who knew him beſt. His friends were the friends of Science and Virtue: and it will always be remembered by his contemporaries, that no one was more ready than himſelf to aſſiſt thoſe with whom he was converſant, in their various reſearches and endeavours for the advancement of knowledge, and the benefit of Society.] K.

[C] Theſe Treatiſes contain, &c.] The titles of them are as follows: I. The Microſcope made Eaſy: or, 1. The Nature, Uſes, and Magnifying Powers of the beſt Kinds of Microſcopes Deſcribed, Calculated, and Explained: For the Inſtruction of ſuch, particularly, as deſire to ſearch into the Wonders of the Minute Creation, though they are not acquainted with Optics. Together with full Directions how to prepare, apply, examine, and preſerve, all Sorts of Objects; and proper Cautions to be obſerved in viewing them. 2. An Account of what ſurpriſing Diſcoveries have been already made by the Microſcope: with uſeful Reflections on them. And alſo, A great Variety of new Experiments and Obſervations, pointing out many uncommon Subjects for the Examination of the Curious. II. Employment for the Microſcope. In two Parts. 1. An Examination of Salts and Saline Subſtances, their amazing Configurations and Cryſtals, as formed under the Eye of the Obſerver: with plain Directions how to prepare ſuch Subſtances, and preſerve them in conſtant Readineſs for Inſpection; whereby the Curious may always be furniſhed with numberleſs Objects hitherto little known. Alſo, Occaſional Conſiderations on Gems, Poiſons, the Vegetation of Metals, the Reſuſcitation of Plants, the Formation of Amber, Corals, and many other Subjects. 2. An Account of various Animalcules never before deſcribed, and of many other Microſcopical Diſcoveries: with Obſervations and Remarks. Likewiſe, A Deſcription of the Microſcope uſed in theſe Experiments, and of a new Micrometer ſerving to ſhew the Size of magnified Objects. Together with Inſtructions for printing off any Medal or Coin.]

BALDOCK (RALPH DE), Biſhop of London in the reigns of Edward I and II. (a), was educated at Merton-College in Oxford (b), became Archdeacon of Middleſex, and, in 1294, Dean of St. Paul's (c). The See of London being vacant by the death of Richard de Graveſend, Baldock was unanimouſly choſen, September the 20th, 1304 (d). But, his election being controverted, he was obliged to repair to Rome [A], and, having obtained the Pope's confirmation, was conſecrated at Lyons by Peter Hiſpanus, Cardinal of

(a) Hen. Wharton, Hiſtor. de Epiſc. Londinenſ. p. 108. edit. 1695.

(b) Godwin, de Præſul. Angl. inter Epiſc. Lond. an. 1305.

(c) Cave, Hiſt. Literar. Sæc. Wicklev. an. 1304.

(d) Wharton, ibid.

[A] His election being controverted, he was obliged to repair to Rome.] During the vacancy of the See, the Archbiſhop had viſited the church of St. Paul's, and ſuſpended three of the Canons, one of whom was Peter de Dene. Afterwards, when the Chapter met for the choice of a Biſhop, the three deprived Canons demanded their ſeat among the reſt; but being refuſed it, they proteſted againſt the election, and appealed to the Pope. The chapter nevertheleſs proceeded in their choice; after which Peter de Dene, of Alba, January the 30th, 1306 (e). Being returned into England, he made profeſſion of canonical obedience to the Archbiſhop in the church of Canterbury, March the 29th, 1306 (f), and was inthroned, the 27th of July, in St. Paul's church (g). The ſame year, he was appointed by the Pope one of the Commiſſioners for examination of the articles alledged againſt the Knights Templars (h). The year following, he was made Lord High-Chancellor of England: but, Edward I. dying ſoon after, he held that poſt ſcarcely a year (i). December the 2d, 1308, this Prelate, with the approbation of the Chapter, ſettled a ſtipend on the Chancellor of St. Paul's for reading lectures in Divinity in that Church, according to a conſtitution of his predeceſſor Richard de Graveſend (k). He contributed two hundred merks towards building the chapel of St. Mary [B] on the eaſt ſide of St. Paul's. He founded alſo a chantry of two prieſts in the ſaid church, near the altar of St. Erkenwald (l). He was a perſon of a very amiable character [C] both for morals and learning, and deſerved well of his country by his writings, which were; I. Hiſtoria Anglica, or 'An Hiſtory of the Britiſh Affairs down to his 'own Time.' It is not now extant, though Leland ſays (m) he ſaw it at London [D]: II. A Collection of the Statutes and Conſtitutions of the church of St. Paul's, extant in the library of that church in 1559 (n). Biſhop Baldock died at Stepney, July the 24th, 1313, having ſat from his conſecration a little more than ſeven years, and was buried under a marble monument in the chapel of St. Mary (o).

There was about the ſame time a ROBERT DE BALDOCK, a Canon of London, and Archdeacon of Middleſex, who, upon the vacancy of the See of London by the death of Biſhop Baldock, was (together with John Colcheſter, another Canon) preſented by the Chapter of London to the Chapter of Canterbury (that See being likewiſe vacant) for the choice of one of them to be official of the dioceſe of London (p). This Robert Baldock was in great favour with King Edward II., who made him his Chancellor, and nominated him to the Biſhopric of Norwich, into which he was elected about the middle of the year 1325, and confirmed by the Archbiſhop in the month of Auguſt. But he could not obtain the See, by reaſon of a Papal proviſion in favour of William de Ayremin. Soon after, he loſt his liberty and life by the national commotions, which deprived King Edward of his crown: for, being ſeized by the enraged populace, he was dragged to the priſon of Newgate, where he died in a moſt wretched condition, and was buried, May the 8th, in St. Paul's church (q). B.

(e) Epiſtola Clementis Papæ, in Regiſtr. Cant. data Febr. 1, 1306.

(f) Regiſtr. Cranborn.

(g) Wharton, ubi ſupra, p. 109.

(h) Th. Stubbs, Act. Pontiff. Ebor. apud X. Scriptores, col. 1730.

(i) Adam Murimuth. Continuat. Matth. Weſtm. ap. Wharton, ii. p. 110.

(k) Regiſtr. Baldock.

(l) Adam Murim. ubi ſupra.

(m) Comment. de Script. Brit. n. 333.

(n) Dugdale's Monaſt. Angl. T. iii. p. 365.

(o) Adam Murim. ubi ſupra, p. 111.

(p) Ex Inſtrum. Autograph.

(q) Adam Murim. ubi ſupra.

in the name of the three Canons, appealed a ſecond time againſt the election and confirmation, and obtained from the Pope a citation to the Biſhop elect, to appear on a certain day at Rome, before Landulph Cardinal Deacon of St. Angelo, who was appointed to hear and determine the cauſe. Accordingly the new Biſhop ſet out for Rome the 8th of September (1); but Pope Benedict dying in the interim, Cardinal Landulph referred the cauſe to his ſucceſſor Pope Clement. In ſhort, Baldock and Peter appeared on the day aſſigned; but, Peter renouncing his appeal, and dropping the cauſe, the Pope ratified Baldock's election and confirmation, and ordered him to be conſecrated (2).

(1) Matth. Weſt. Flor. Hiſtor. ap. Hent. Wharton, Hiſtor. de Epiſc. Londinenſ. &c. p. 108, 109. edit. 1695.

(2) Epiſtola Clementis Papæ in Regiſtr. Cant. data Lugduni, Feb. 1. 1306.

[B] The chapel of St. Mary.] It was called the New Work *, and in 1312 was paved with marble. Three years after, a great part of the ſpire, being decayed with age, was taken down, and rebuilt with greater magnificence; and on the top was fixed a very large croſs, in which were placed the relics of ſeveral ſaints (3). As the magnificent cathedral of St. PAUL'S was now finiſhed by the building this chapel, it will not be improper in this place to mention the conjecture of our great Antiquarian Mr. Camden, that a temple of Diana formerly ſtood upon the ſame ſpot. But take it in his own words, as tranſlated by his learned editor (4). 'Some have fancied that the 'temple of Diana formerly ſtood here; and there 'are circumſtances that ſtrengthen their conjecture; 'as the old adjacent buildings being called in their 'records Dianæ Camera; i. e. the chamber of Diana; 'the digging up in the church-yard in Edward the 'Firſt's reign (as we find by our annals) an incredible 'number of ox-heads; which the common people 'at that time, not without great admiration, looked 'upon to have been Gentile-ſacrifices; and the learned 'know, that the Tauropolia were celebrated in honour of Diana. And when I was a boy, I have 'ſeen a ſtag's head fixed upon a ſpear (agreeable enough to the ſacrifices of Diana) and carried about in the very church with great ſolemnity and ſounding of horns. And I have heard, 'that the ſtag, which the family of Baud in Eſſex 'were bound to pay for certain lands, was uſed to 'be received at the ſteps of the choir by the members 'of this church, in their ſacerdotal robes, and with 'garlands of flowers about their heads. Whether 'this was the cuſtom before the Bauds were obliged 'to the payment of this ſtag, I know not; but certain it is, this ceremony ſavours more of the worſhip of Diana and the Gentile errors, than of the 'Chriſtian religion. And it is beyond all doubt, 'that ſome of theſe ſtrange rites did creep into the 'Chriſtian religion; which the primitive Chriſtians 'either cloſed with, out of that natural inclination 'mankind has to ſuperſtition, or bore with them 'in the beginning, with deſign to draw over the 'Gentiles by little and little to the worſhip of the 'true God.' Whether theſe arguments are ſufficient to ſupport Mr. Camden's conjecture, is not our buſineſs here to enquire.

(*) Novum Opus.

(3) Adam Murimuth. apud Wharton, ubi ſupra, p. 111.

(4) See Camden's Britannia by Biſhop Gibſon, 2d edit. Vol. i. col. 377.

[C] He was a perſon of a very amiable character.] Pits tells us (5), he was a man of a mild and gentle diſpoſition, a wonderful affability, and incredible ſweetneſs of manners; which qualifications of mind, joined with an extraordinary piety, and no leſs learning, recommended him to the favour of great men and Princes, eſpecially the Kings Edward I and II. Vir miti placidoque ingenio, mira affabilitate, incredibili morum ſuavitate. Propter quas animi dotes cum ſingulari pietate et eruditione pari conjunctas magnatum et principum benevolentiam gratiamque mirifice conciliavit. Imprimis eum magno in pretio habuerunt Reges Edwardus primus, ejuſque filius Edwardus ſecundus.

(5) De illuſtr. Angl. Scriptor. an. 1313. n. 459.

[D] Leland ſays, he ſaw it at London.] That writer tells us (6), that, carefully peruſing John Abbot of Burgh's Annals of the Engliſh Affairs, and coming to the year 1292, he met with a paſſage, in which honourable mention was made of Baldock's hiſtory. This put our Antiquarian upon enquiring after the book, which at length he found in the library of St. Paul's church, and read it through. Nuper enim cum ſtudioſe legerem Joannis, Abbatis Burgenſis, Annales de rebus Anglicis, et pervenirem ad annum D. 1292, incidi in locum, ubi honeſtam mentionem fecit hiſtoriæ Radulphi Baldochii. Hinc ego, juſtam nactus occaſionem, quæſivi librum non contemnendum, et tandem Londini in fano Pauli inveni et perlegi.

(6) De Script. Brit. c. 333.

[It appears that Ralph de Baldock was not conſtituted Lord-High-Chancellor of England in 1307, as is aſſerted by Wharton and other writers, but in 1306 (7). In that caſe, he might continue in the office more than a year.] K.

(7) Richardſon's Edition of Godwin de præſulibus, p. 284. Note, m.

BALDWIN, Archbiſhop of Canterbury in the reigns of Henry II. and Richard I., was born of obſcure parents at Exeter, where he received a liberal education, and in his younger years taught ſchool (a). Afterwards, entering into Holy Orders, he was made Archdeacon of Exeter. But ſoon quitting that dignity and the world together, he took the habit of the Ciſtertian order in the monaſtery of Ford in Devonſhire, and in a few years became Abbot thereof (b). From thence he was promoted to the See of Worceſter and conſecrated Auguſt the 10th, 1180 (c). Upon the death of Richard Archbiſhop of Canterbury in 1184 (d), he was tranſlated to that See, not without ſome difficulties in the way of his election [A], being the firſt of his order in England, that was ever advanced to the archiepiſcopal dignity (e). He was inthroned at Canterbury the 19th of May 1185, and the ſame day received the pall from Pope Lucius III. (f), whoſe ſucceſſor Urban III. appointed him his Legate for the dioceſe of Canterbury (g). Soon after he was ſettled in his See, he began to build a church and monaſtery at Hackington near Canterbury, in honour of St. Thomas Becket, for the reception of ſecular Prieſts: but, being violently oppoſed by the Monks of Canterbury, ſupported by the Pope's authority, he was obliged to deſiſt [B]. The 3d of September 1189, he ſolemnly performed the ceremony

(a) Bale de Script. Brit. Centur. III. n. 27.

(b) Gervaſ. Act. Pontif. Cant. ap. X. Scriptor. col. 1675.

(c) Annal. Eccleſ. Wigorn. ap. Wharton, Anglia Sacra, Vol. i. p. 477.

(d) Canon. Lichfield. de ſucceſſ. arch. Cant. apud Wharton, ubi ſupra, p. 113.

(e) Parker, de Antiq. Brit. Eccleſ. edit. S. Drake, 1729. p. 214.

(f) Gervaſ. ubi ſupra, col. 1676.

(g) Rad. de Diceto, de arch. Cant. apud Wharton, ubi ſupra, Vol. ii. p. 692.

[A] Some difficulties in the way of his election.] The See of Canterbury being vacant, the King came to Reading, and ſummoned thither the Biſhops and Monks of Canterbury, in order to proceed to an election. And here there happened a conteſt between the Monks and the Biſhops. The Monks pretended to the privilege of voting firſt, and the greateſt intereſt in the election; for which they produced the King's charter. The Biſhops, on the other ſide, argued againſt the authority of the charter; that it was a grant againſt common right, and made in prejudice of the Church of England; inſiſting at the ſame time, that Suffragans ought to have the liberty of chuſing their Metropolitan. The diſpute running high, the aſſembly broke up without effect. But not long after, the King convened the Biſhops and Monks of Canterbury at London for the ſame purpoſe. Here the Monks reviving the diſpute, Gilbert, Biſhop of London, who, in right of his See, had the privilege of voting firſt, choſe Baldwin, Biſhop of Worceſter. All the reſt of the Biſhops concurred in this election; but the Monks of Canterbury refuſing to comply, appealed to the Pope, and went off. The Biſhops preſented their elect of Canterbury to the King, who received him as Archbiſhop; and he was ſaluted as ſuch by Richard, Geoffry, and John, the King's ſons. Soon after, the King came to Canterbury, to ſatisfy the peeviſhneſs of the Monks, and put an end to the conteſt. And, at laſt, giving them the formality of a new choice, he prevailed with them to pitch upon Baldwin. Whereupon Alan, Prior of Chriſt-church, with a ſelect number of the Chapter, came to London, with letters of deputation from the whole houſe; and meeting in the Chapter-houſe at Weſtminſter, choſe Baldwin Archbiſhop of Canterbury. And that they might not ſeem to own any thing done already, or aſſent to the Biſhop's election, they ſung Te Deum, led the Archbiſhop to the altar, and, ſaluting him on the cheek, preſented him to the King and his ſons, when the ſame ceremony was repeated to him (1).

(1) Gervaſ. Act. Pontif. Cant. ap. X. Scriptor. col. 1675, 1676. Rog. Hoveden. Annal. apud Scriptor. poſt Bedam. Francof. 1601, p. 623, & M. Parker, De Antiq. Brit. Eccl. edit. S. Drake. 1729. p. 214, 215.

[B] He was obliged to deſiſt from building the church and monaſtery of Hackington.] The circumſtances of this affair merit a particular detail. The Monks of Canterbury having been troubleſome at the late election, the King and the Archbiſhop projected an expedient to check their influence, and render them leſs offenſive for the future. This was by founding a ſociety of ſecular Canons, and building a college upon St. Stephen's church-yard at Hackington, about half a mile from Canterbury. This college was to conſiſt of twenty Canonries, one of which was to be endowed by the King, and the reſt by each of the ſuffragans of the province. Theſe benefices, as they became vacant, were to be filled up by the reſpective founders. The Archbiſhop's part was to build the church and the college, for which he had drawn a very magnificent model. The foundation was to be in honour of Archbiſhop Becket, whoſe memory and martyrdom made ſo great a blaze in Chriſtendom; and the King's eſtabliſhing a Prebend was to be, as it were, a perpetual penance upon the Crown for the death of that Prelate. Theſe appearances gave ſo honourable a colour to the undertaking, that the Pope gave Baldwin a commiſſion to purſue his model, and granted him a fourth part af the offerings made from that day forward at Becket's tomb. But, in truth, the ſecret of the project was, to draw the election of the Archbiſhop from the convent of Chriſt-church to this new foundation; it being reaſonably ſuppoſed, that the Canons would prove more manageable upon ſuch occaſions than the Monks, and be influenced by the directions of their reſpective patrons. In ſhort, there were great preparations of materials; the building was begun, and carried on with great diligence; and ſeveral eſtates were ſettled for the maintenance of the Canons. But the Monks at laſt penetrated the deſign, and, perceiving how prejudicial it would be to their convent, made a heavy complaint to the Pope upon that ſubject, ſetting forth that the Archbiſhop deſigned to ſtrip them of their ancient privileges, that his intention in building this collegiate church was, to make the holy Chriſm, and conſecrate Biſhops there, to injure their convent in its authority and revenues, and to remove the archiepiſcopal See to this new foundation. To give this remonſtrance the greater force, they complained, that Baldwin was in a manner forced upon them by the over-bearing influence of the Court; that he had ſhewn himſelf diſaffected to their ſociety; that he had ſeized the cuſtomary preſents made to them, deprived them of their advowſons, expelled ſome of their members, and excommunicated others. The Archbiſhop, it ſeems, had ſent agents to Rome, to complain of the ſtubborn and intractable behaviour of the Monks, and particularly their intolerable pride and perverſeneſs in reſpect to the late election. Theſe commiſſioners repreſented, that Baldwin was both their Metropolitan and Abbot; that the Archbiſhops, in this double character, had all along had the diſpoſal of every thing belonging to the See of Canterbury; that the placing and diſplacing the Prior, Sub-Prior, and all other officers and members of the ſociety, belonged to them; whence they argued à fortiori, that, if the Archbiſhop could make and unmake the Prior, other buſineſs of leſs conſequence muſt, of courſe, fall within his juriſdiction. But, to return to the remonſtrance of the Monks. They informed the Pope farther, that the Archbiſhop had ſuſpended their Prior, and ſome others of their members, who were ſent to his Holineſs with their appeal; that he had publiſhed an order to forbid the Monks going out of the cloiſter upon any occaſion whatever; that he had ſent Clerks into all parts of the kingdom, to preach up a contribution for the new church; that he had brought the Crown into his intereſts, and was become irreſiſtible in his encroachments; that he endeavoured to make the King and the Biſhops the judges of the controverſy; and that by this means the convent would be brought under this dilemma, either to incur the diſpleaſure of the King and kingdom, or be forced to betray their ſociety, and put a contempt upon his Holineſs. But, notwithſtanding this application to Rome, the Archbiſhop went on with his ſtructure, conſecrated the church, and inſtalled ſeveral Prebendaries. Whereupon the Prior Honorius poſted to Rome with all ſpeed imaginable. The King being willing to put an end to the conteſt, and underſtanding that the Monks refuſed to refer the difference to himſelf and the Biſhops, went down to Canterbury, in hopes to bring the con-ceremony of crowning King Richard I. at Weſtminſter (b). The ſame year, the King having given the See of York to his baſtard brother Geoffry Biſhop of Lincoln, Archbiſhop Baldwin took this occaſion to aſſert the pre-eminence of the See of Canterbury, forbidding the Biſhops of England to receive conſecration from any other than the Archbiſhop of Canterbury (i). The next year deſigning to follow King Richard to the Holy Land [C], he made a progreſs into Wales [D], where he performed maſs pontifically in all the cathedral churches, and induced ſeveral of the Welſh to join the Cruſade (k). Afterwards embarking at Dover, with Hubert Biſhop of Saliſbury, he arrived at the King's army in Syria; where being ſeized with a mortal diſtemper, he died at the ſiege of Acres or Ptolemais [E], and was buried there (l). His character [F], and works [G], are taken notice of in the remarks.

(b) Id. ibid.

(i) Parker, ubi ſupra, p. 219.

(k) Girald. Cambrenſ. de reb. à ſe geſt. c. 17, &c. apud Wharton, ib. p. 490.

(l) Gervaſ. ibid. col. 1678.

vent off from their obſtinacy. But the Monks rejected the King's mediation, and alledged in excuſe, that the matter lay before the Pope, and could not be referred to any other deciſion. An accommodation being thus impracticable, the King and the Archbiſhop ſent their agents to Rome; who, beſides their inſtructions, were charged with letters to the Pope from each of the Biſhops of the province of Canterbury. The Pope, upon the hearing of both parties, gave judgment in favour of the Prior and Monks, and ordered the Archbiſhop to reſtore the religious he had diſplaced. Baldwin took little notice of this order, and, inſtead of reſtoring the Monks, gave the convent a new provocation by conſecrating the Chriſm at London. The Monks addreſs his Holineſs for relief, and Baldwin receives a menacing order from the Pope to pull down the new church, and proceed no farther in the undertaking. And thus the King, the Archbiſhop, and his ſuffragans, were over-ruled by the Pope's authority, and ſuffered themſelves to be baffled by the Monks. Not long after, Pope Urban III. being dead, and Gregory VIII. advanced to the Papal chair, the Archbiſhop, expecting more favourable treatment from this Pope, attempted to carry his point another way. To this end he purchaſed, of the Biſhop and convent of Rocheſter, a manor at Lambeth in Surrey, and ordered all the timber and materials, prepared for the college at Hackington, to be brought thither. And here, where the palace of the Archbiſhops now ſtands, he began to build upon the old plan; but did not live long enough to carry it on (2).

(2) Gervaſ. de Diſcord. inter monach. et Baldw. apud X Scriptor. col. 1303, &c. Id. Act. Pontif. Cant. ibid. col. 1676. M. Parker, ubi ſupra, p. 216, 217, 218.

[C] —Deſigning to follow the King to the Holy Land.] The Chriſtians in Paleſtine being hard preſſed by the Mahommedan Prince Saladin, and deſpairing to reſtore their affairs by their own ſtrength, Baldwin King of Jeruſalem ſent Heraclius the Patriarch, and the Maſters of the Knights Hoſpitalers and Templars, embaſſadors to the King of England, to entreat him to ſend ſpeedy relief to the Holy Land, and to preſent him with a Royal Standard, and the keys of our Saviour's Sepulchre, of the Tower of David, and of the City of Jeruſalem. They had an audience of King Henry at Reading, where they delivered a very preſſing letter from Pope Lucius III. The King promiſed to let them know his intentions upon the firſt Sunday in Lent; at which time the Lords ſpiritual and temporal being convened, the convention came to a reſolution, that Philip King of France ſhould be conſulted, and ſo broke up. As for the King of England, he gave all his ſubjects, both Clergy and Laity, leave to undertake the Cruſade. Upon which permiſſion, a great number of Earls, Barons, and gentlemen of note, and, among the reſt, our Archbiſhop of Canterbury, engaged in the undertaking. The next year, the Kings of England and France had an interview; at which time, my author ſays, the ſign of the croſs was plainly ſeen in the ſky by all the company; which miraculous appearance encouraged great numbers to the expedition; and, the undertaking being reſolved upon, the Kings took leave of each other to prepare for the ſervice (3). But King Henry dying ſoon after, his ſon and heir Richard I. took upon him the execution of this deſign, and accordingly tranſported an army into Paleſtine (4).

(3) R. Hoveden, ubi ſupra, p. 628, 629, 630.

(4) Id. ib. p. 664.

[D] He made a progreſs into Wales.] The Archbiſhop was accompanied in this journey by Giraldus Cambrenſis, who has deſcribed it at large (5), with a plentiful mixture of miracles, prodigies, and other ſuperſtitious accounts, too tedious and ridiculous to be ſet down in this place. After his return, he held a council at Weſtminſter, in which he pronounced ſentence of excommunication againſt all who ſhould invade or diſturb the rights of the See of Canterbury, during his abſence (6).

(5) De Reb. a ſe geſtis. Apud Wharton, Anglia Sacra, Vol. i.

(6) M. Parker, ubi ſupra, p. 119.

[E] He died at the ſiege of Acres or Ptolemais.] At his arrival in the Holy Land, he found the affairs of the Chriſtians in an ill ſituation, and the army much diſtreſſed by ſickneſs and famine. He was not at all wanting to the cauſe, but endeavoured to encourage the troops both by his preaching and his purſe. Finding himſelf near death, he made Hubert Biſhop of Saliſbury his executor, and ordered him to diſtribute his effects among the ſoldiers at his own diſcretion; which office that Prelate faithfully and exactly performed (7).

(7) Rad. de Diceto, Imag. Hiſtoriar. apud X. Script. col. 658. M Parker, ubi ſupra, p. 219.

[F] His character.] Giraldus Cambrenſis, who accompanied this Prelate, both in his progreſs through Wales, and in his expedition to the Holy Land, tells us (8), he was of a dark complexion, an open and pleaſing aſpect, a middling ſtature, and a ſpare, but healthful, conſtitution of body; modeſt and ſober, of great abſtinence, of few words, and not eaſily provoked to anger. The only fault he charges him with, is, a remiſſneſs in the execution of his paſtoral office, ariſing from an innate lenity of temper; whence Pope Urban III., in a letter addreſſed to our Archbiſhop, began thus, Urbanus Epiſcopus, ſervus ſervorum Dei, Monacho ferventiſſimo, Abbati calido, Epiſcopo tepido, Archiepiſcopo remiſſo; i. e. 'Urban, &c. to the moſt 'fervent Monk, warm Abbot, lukewarm Biſhop, 'and remiſs Archbiſhop;' plainly intimating, that he behaved better as a Monk than as an Abbot, and as a Biſhop than as an Archbiſhop. With reſpect to his temperance, he is ſaid never to have eaten fleſh from the time he became a Monk to his death: concerning which particular, Brompton relates (9), that, once on a journey, he was met by a very lean and ſkinny old woman; who aſking him, if it was true, that he had never eaten fleſh, he anſwered, it was. It is falſe, replied the old woman, for you have eaten my fleſh to the very bones. The Archbiſhop demanding what ſhe meant, ſhe acquainted him, that ſome of his officers had taken from her a cow, which was her only ſupport. The Archbiſhop, not offended at her freedom, promiſed to repair her loſs with as good a cow. I ſhall ſubjoin four verſes by Joſeph of Exeter, (the beſt Poet of that age, whoſe book paſſes under the name of Cornelius Nepos) addreſſed to Archbiſhop Baldwin (10).

(8) De Vit. ſex Epiſc. coætan. ap. Wharton, Anglia Sacra, Vol. ii. p. 429, 430. Idem, de jure et ſtatu Menev. Eccleſ. ibid. p. 523.

(9) Chron. J. Br. apud X. Scriptor. col. 1143.

In numerum jam creſcit honor, te tertia poſcit
Inſula, jam meminit Wigornia, Cantia diſcit,
Romanus meditatur apex, et naufraga Petri
Ductorem in mediis expectat Cymba procellis.

(10) Apud Camd. Britannia, by Biſhop Gibſon, fol. Vol. i. col. 622.

Now thy vaſt honours with thy virtues grow,
Now a third mitre waits thy ſacred brow.
Deſerted Wigorn mourns that thou art gone,
And Kent's glad ſons thy happy conduct own.
Now Rome deſires thee; Peter wants thy hand,
To guide his leaky veſſel ſafe to land.

[G] His works.] He wrote ſeveral Tracts; particularly, I. De Sacramento Altaris; i. e. 'Of the 'Sacrament of the Altar.' II. De commendatione Fidei; i. e. 'Faith recommended.' III. De Orthodoxis Dogmatibus; i. e. 'Of Orthodox Opinions.' IV. De Sectis Hereticorum; i. e. 'Of Heretical Sects.' V. De Unitate Charitatis; i. e. 'Of the Unity of Charity.' VI. De Amore; i. e. 'Of Love.' VII. De Sacerdotio Joannis Hircani; i. e. 'Of the Prieſthood of John 'Hircanus.' VIII. De Eruditione Giraldi; i. e. 'Of 'the Learning of Giraldus.' IX. Thirty-three Sermons. X. De Hiſtoriis Regum; i. e. 'Concerning the 'Hiſtories of Kings.' XI. Contra Henricum Wintonienſem; i. e. 'Againſt Henry Biſhop of Wincheſter.' XII. De

XII. De Commendatione Virginitatis; i. e. 'In Praiſe 'of Virginity.' XIII. De Angeli Nuntio; i. e. 'Concerning the Meſſage of the Angel.' XIV. De Cruce; i. e. 'Of the Croſs.' XV. De Mythologia; i. e. 'Concerning Mythology.' XVI. Carmen Devotionis; i. e. 'A Devotionary Poem.' XVII. Epiſtolæ; i. e. 'Letters (11).' Our author's works were collected and publiſhed by Bertrand Tiſſier (12), in 1662. B.

[Tanner hath mentioned ſeveral other tracts of Archbiſhop Baldwin; moſt of which have been publiſhed by Tiſſier (13).] K.

(11) Bale, de Script. Brit. Cent. III. c. 27. Pits, de illuſtr. Angl. Script. an. 1193, n. 270.

(12) Apud Script. Biblioth. Ceſtercienſ. Tom. V.

(13) Biblioth. Brit. Hibern. p. 67, 68.

BALE (JOHN), in Latin Baleus or Balæus, Biſhop of Oſſory in Ireland, about the middle of the XVIth century, was born the 21ſt of November 1495, at Cove, a ſmall village in Suffolk, near Dunwich. His parents, whoſe names were Henry and Margaret, being incumbered with a large family, young Bale was entered, at twelve years of age, in the monaſtery of Carmelites at Norwich (a); and from thence was ſent to Jeſus College in Oxford (b). He was educated in the Romiſh religion; but, afterwards, at the inſtigation of the Lord Wentworth, turned Proteſtant [A]. This expoſed him to the perſecution of the Romiſh Clergy, againſt whom he was protected by Lord Cromwell, favourite of King Henry VIII. But, that Lord being dead, Bale was forced to retire into the Low-Countries, where he reſided eight years; during which time he wrote ſeveral pieces in the Engliſh tongue (c). He was recalled into England by King Edward VI. (d), and obtained the living of Biſhop's Stocke in the county of Southampton (e). The 15th of Auguſt 1552, he was nominated by King Edward, then at Southampton, to the See of Oſſory [B]; and, the 25th of March following (f), was conſecrated, at Dublin, by the Archbiſhop of Dublin (g) [C]. He underwent a variety of perſecutions from the Popiſh party in Ireland [D]; till at length having intimations given

(a) Baleus, de ſeipſo, apud Script. Brit. Cent. VIII. c. ult. See alſo Fuller's Abel Redivivus, p. 502.

(b) Fuller's Worthies of England, Suffolk, p. 60.

(c) See the remark [I].

(d) Baleus, ubi ſupra, & Abel Redivivus, ubi ſupra, p. 503—506.

(e) See an old piece intitled The Vocacyon of Johan Bale to the Biſhopricke of Oſſorie in Irelande, &c. Rome, 1533, fol. 16.

(f) Not the 2d of February, as Jac. Waræus (de Script. Hibern. l. ii. c. 5.) ſays.

(g) The Vocacyon of Johan Bale, &c. fol. 16—18.

[A] He turned Proteſtant.] Let us hear his own account of his converſion. 'In omni literarum barbarie ac mentis cœcitate illic et Cantabrigiæ pervagabar, nullum habens tutorem aut Mecænatem; donec, lucente Dei verbo, eccleſiæ revocari cœpiſſent ad veræ theologiæ puriſſimos fontes. In eo autem ſplendore ortus novi Hieruſalem, non à monacho aut ſacrifico vocatus, ſed ab illuſtri domino Wenfordo, tanquam a Centurione illo qui Chriſtum Dei filium eſſe dicebat, ſerio excitatus, deformitatem meam quam primum vidi et agnovi. Protinuſque divina bonitate ab arido monte in floridam ac fœcundum Evangelii vallem transferebar; ubi omnia reperi non in arena, ſed ſupra ſolidam petram ædificata. Unde ſceleſtiſſimi Antichriſti characterem illico abraſi, jugaque ejus omnia à me longe projeci, ut eſſem in ſortem et libertatem datus filiorum Dei. Et ne deinceps in aliquo eſſem tam execrabilis beſtiæ creatura, uxorem accepi Dorotheam fidelem, divinæ huic voci auſcultans, Qui non continet, nubat (1). ——— I wandered in utter ignorance and blindneſs of mind both there (at Norwich) and at Cambridge, having no tutor or patron; till, the word of God ſhining forth, the churches began to return to the pure fountains of true divinity. In which bright riſing of the New Jeruſalem, being not called by any Monk or Prieſt, but ſeriouſly ſtirred up by the illuſtrious the Lord Wentworth, as by that Centurion who declared Chriſt to be the ſon of God, I preſently ſaw and acknowledged my own deformity. And immediately through the divine goodneſs, I was removed from a barren mountain to the flowery and fertile valley of the Goſpel, where I found all things built, not on the ſand, but on a ſolid rock. Hence I made haſte to deface the mark of wicked Antichriſt, and entirely threw off his yoke from me, that I might be partaker of the lot and liberty of the ſons of God. And that I might never more ſerve ſo execrable a beaſt, I took to wife the faithful Dorothy, in obedience to that divine command, Let him that cannot contain, marry.' Biſhop Nicolſon would inſinuate, that a diſlike of celibacy was the grand motive of Bale's converſion. 'He was converted (ſays he) by 'the procurement of Thomas Lord Wentworth; 'though (in truth) his wife Dorothy ſeems to have 'had a great hand in that happy work (2).'

(1) Baleus, de ſeipſo, apud Script. Brit. Centur. VIII. c. ult.

(2) Nicolſon's Engliſh Hiſtorical Library, Part ii. c. 8.

[B] He was nominated —— to the See of Oſſory.] We have a very particular account of our author's advancement to this biſhopric, his ſufferings in Ireland, and his eſcape from thence, in a piece written by himſelf, intitled, The Vocacyon of Johan Bale to the biſhopricke of Oſſorie in Irelande, his perſecutions in the ſame, and final delyverance. Printed in 1553, in a black letter, 12*mo*. Here we are told (3), that our author, who had lived retired at Biſhop's Stocke, waited upon the King, who was then at Southampton, about five miles from his living. His Majeſty, who had been informed that he was dead, was ſurprized to ſee him, and, the biſhopric of Oſſory being then vacant, ſummoned his Privy Council, and appointed him to that See: whereupon the Lords preſent wrote the following letter to our author:

(3) The Vocacyon, &c. fol. 16.

To our very lovinge friende Doctour Bale. After our hartye commendacyons. For as much as the Kinges Majeſtie is minded in conſideracyon of your learninge, wyſdome, and other vertuouſe qualityes, to beſtowe upon yow the biſhopricke of Oſſorie in Irelande preſently voyde, we have thought mete both to give yow knowledge thereof, and therwithall to lete you underſtande, that his Majeſtie wolde ye made your repayre hyther to the courte as ſoon as convenientley ye may, to thende that if ye be enclined to embrace this charge, his Highneſſe may at your comynge give ſuch ordre for the farther procedings with yow herin, as ſhall be convenient. And thus we bid yow hartely farewell. From Southampton the 16 daye of Auguſt 1552. Your lovinge frendes, W. Wincheſtre, J. Bedford, H. Suffolke, W. Northampton, T. Darcy, T. Cheine, J. Gate, W. Cecill.

Our author tells us (4), he refuſed this offer at firſt, alledging his poverty, age, and want of health. But the King not admitting this excuſe, Dr. Bale went to London about ſix weeks after, where every thing relating to his election and confirmation were diſpatched in a few days, without any manner of charge or expence. On the 19th of December he ſet out, with his books and other effects, and arrived at Briſtol, where he waited 26 days for a paſſage to Ireland. On the 21ſt of January, he embarked, with his wife and one ſervant, and in two days arrived at Waterford; and from thence went by land to Dublin.

(4) Ib. fol. 17.

[C] He was conſecrated — by the Archbiſhop of Dublin.] The Archbiſhop was aſſiſted by the Biſhops of Kildare and Down; and at the ſame time Hugh Goodacre, a particular friend of our author's, was conſecrated Archbiſhop of Armagh. There was ſome diſpute about the form of conſecration. The Dean of the Church, Dr. Lockwood (*), deſired the Lord Chancellor, that he would not permit the form, in the Book of Common Prayer lately ſet forth in England by Act of Parliament, to be uſed on this occaſion, alledging that it would cauſe a tumult, and that it was not as yet conſented to by the Parliament of Ireland. The Lord Chancellor propoſed the affair to the Archbiſhop and the Biſhops, who agreed in opinion with the Dean. Dr. Goodacre wiſhed it might be otherwiſe, but was unwilling to diſpute the matter with them. But our author poſitively refuſed being conſecrated according to the old Popiſh form, alledging, that, as England and Ireland were under one King, they were both bound to the obſervance of the ſame laws. Upon which, the Lord Chancellor ordered the ceremony to be performed according to the new book, and afterwards entertained the Biſhops at dinner (5).

(*) Blackheade he myght well be called, ſays our author.

(5) Ib. fol. 18, 19.

[D] He underwent a variety of perſecutions from the Popiſh party in Ireland.] The reader may ſee a full account of them in our author's own narrative given him, that the Romiſh Prieſts were conſpiring his death, he withdrew from his See; and lay concealed in Dublin (h). Afterwards, endeavouring to make his eſcape in a ſmall trading veſſel in that port, he was taken priſoner by the Captain of a Dutch man of war, who rifled him of all his money, apparel, and effects. This ſhip was driven by ſtreſs of weather into St. Ives in Cornwall, where our Prelate was taken up on ſuſpicion of treaſon, but was ſoon diſcharged (i) [E]. From thence, after a cruize of ſeveral days, the ſhip arrived in Dover Road, where the poor Biſhop was again put in danger by a falſe accuſation [F]. Arriving afterwards in Holland, he was kept a priſoner three weeks, and then obtained his liberty on the payment of thirty pounds (k) [G]. From Holland he retired to Baſil in Switzerland; and continued abroad during the ſhort reign of Queen Mary. On the acceſſion of Queen Elizabeth, he returned to England, but not to his biſhopric in Ireland, contenting himſelf with a prebend in the cathedral church of Canterbury (l), to which he was promoted the 15th of January, 1560 (m). This Prelate is author of a celebrated work, containing the Lives of the moſt eminent Writers of Great Britain in Latin [H], beſides ſeveral other pieces mentioned in the remark

†

(h) Ib. fol. 31.

(i) Ib. fol. 33—36.

(k) Ib. p. 37—41.

(l) Baleus & Waræus, ubi ſupra. See alſo Abel Redivivus, p. 506, 507.

(m) Rymer. Fœd. T. xv. p. 563.

tive (6), which it would be tedious here to tranſcribe. We ſhall only obſerve, that all his endeavours to reform the manners of his dioceſe, to correct the lewd practices and debaucheries of the Prieſts, to aboliſh the Maſs, and to eſtabliſh the uſe of the New Book of Common Prayer ſet forth in England, were not only rendered abortive by the death of King Edward, and acceſſion of Queen Mary, but expoſed him ſo much to the fury of the Papiſts, that his life was frequently endangered thereby. Once in particular (7), they murdered five of his domeſtics, who were making hay in a meadow near his houſe, and would probably have done the ſame by him, if the Sovereign of Kilkenny, hearing of it, had not come to his defence, with an hundred horſemen and three hundred footmen.

(6) Ib. fol. 20.

(7) Ib. fol. 28.

[E] He was taken up on ſuſpicion of treaſon, but was ſoon diſcharged.] The accuſation was brought againſt the Biſhop by one Walter an Iriſhman, who was Pilot of the Dutch ſhip, in hopes of coming in for a ſhare of the Biſhop's money, which was in the Captain's hands. When our author was brought to his examination before one of the Bailiffs of the town, he deſired the Bailiff to aſk Walter, How long he had known him, and what treaſon he (the Biſhop) had committed. Walter replied, he had never heard of, nor ſeen him, till he was brought into that ſhip. Then ſaid the Bailiff, What treaſon have you known by this honeſt gentleman ſince? For I promiſe you he looks like an honeſt man. Marry, ſaid Walter, he would have fled into Scotland (*). Why, ſaid the Bailiff, know you any impediment why he ſhould not have gone into Scotland? If it be treaſon for a man, having buſineſs in Scotland, to go thither, it is more than I knew before. Walter was ſo confounded by what the Bailiff ſaid, that he had nothing to reply. In the interim, the Captain and Purſer coming in depoſed in favour of the Biſhop, aſſuring the Bailiff that he was a very honeſt man, and that Walter was a vile fellow, and deſerved no credit. For the Captain, our author obſerves, was afraid leſt the money he had ſtripped him of ſhould be taken out of his hands. Thus he was diſcharged (8).

(*) The veſſel, in which our author embarked in the port of Dublin, was bound for Scotland.

(8) Ib. fol. 34, 35.

[F] The Biſhop was again put in danger by a falſe accuſation.] One Martin, a Frenchman by birth, but an Engliſh Pirate, perſuaded the Dutch Captain and his crew, that our author had been the principal inſtrument in putting down the maſs in England, and in keeping the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Dr. Gardiner, ſo long in the Tower; and that he had poiſoned the King. With this information the Captain and Purſer went aſhore, carrying with them our author's epiſcopal ſeal, and two letters ſent him from Conrad Geſner, and Alexander Aleſius, with commendations from Pellicanus, Pomeranus, Philip Melanchthon, Joachimus Camerarius, Mathias Flacius, and other learned men, who were deſirous to inform themſelves in the doctrines and antiquities of the Engliſh Church. They had likewiſe taken from him the letter from the Council (9), concerning his appointment to the biſhopric of Oſſory. Theſe things aggravated the charge againſt him. For the epiſcopal ſeal was conſtrued to be a counterfeiting of the King's ſeal, the two letters were heretical, and the Council's letter a conſpiracy againſt the Queen. When the Captain returned to the ſhip, it was propoſed to carry the Biſhop to London: But at length they reſolved to ſend the Purſer and one more, with a meſſage to the Council in relation to the affair. However this reſolution was dropped upon our author's ſtrong remonſtrances to the Captain, and his agreement to pay fifty pounds for his ranſom, on his arrival in Holland.

(9) See the remark [B].

[G] He obtained his liberty, on the payment of thirty pounds.] He was carried into Zealand, and lodged in the houſe of one of the four owners of the ſhip, who treated the Biſhop with great civility and kindneſs. He had but twenty-ſix days allowed him for raiſing the money agreed upon for his ranſom, and could not obtain the liberty of going abroad to find out his friends. In the mean time he was ſometimes threatened to be thrown into the common gaol, ſometimes to be brought before the magiſtrates, ſometimes to be left to the examination of the Clergy, at other times to be ſent to London, or elſe to be delivered to the Queen's embaſſador at Bruſſels. At laſt his kind hoſt interpoſed in his behalf, and deſired the Captain to conſider, how far he had exceeded the limits of his commiſſion, in miſuſing a ſubject of England, with which nation they were not at war. This produced the deſired effect, and the Captain was perſuaded to take only thirty pounds for the Biſhop's ranſom, as he ſhould be able to pay it, and ſo to diſcharge him (10).

(10) Ib. fol. 40. 41.

[H] Author of a celebrated work, containing the Lives of the moſt eminent Writers of Great-Britain in Latin.] This work was not publiſhed complete at firſt, but came out at three different times. The author publiſhed, firſt, his Summarium illuſtrium Majoris Brytanniæ Scriptorum, in quarto. Weſel, 1549. This performance was addreſſed to King Edward VI., and contained only five centuries of writers. Afterwards he added to theſe four more, and made ſeveral additions and corrections throughout the whole work. The title of the book, thus enlarged, is as follows: Scriptorum illuſtrium majoris Brytanniæ, quam nunc Angliam et Scotiam vocant, Catalogus; à Japheto per 3618 annos uſque ad annum hunc Domini 1557, ex Beroſo, Gennadio, Beda, Honorio, Boſtono Burienſi, Frumentario, Capgravo, Boſtio, Burello, Triſſa, Tritemio, Geſnero, Joanne Lelando, atque aliis authoribus collectus, et IX Centurias continens: In quo Antiquitates, Origines, Annales, Loca, Succeſſus, celebriora-que cujuſque Scriptoris facta, dicta, conſilia, ſcripta, obitus, et alia ſcitu non indigna recenſentur; recta ubique annorum ſupputatione ſervata, ut inde tam reproborum quam electorum eccleſiæ miniſtrorum facta, myſteriis in S. Joannis Apocalypſi deſcriptis, in ſtellis, angelis, equis, tubis, tonitruis, capitibus, coronis, montibus, phialis, et plagis, per ætates ejuſdem eccleſiæ ſingulas, hiſtoricè et aptè reſpondeant. Autore JOANNE BALEO Sudovolgio Anglo, Oſſorienſi apud Hybernos jam pridem epiſcopo, nunc apud Germanos pro Chriſti profeſſione peregrino. Accedunt his Appendices, una cum actis Romanorum Pontificum, quæ eorum Adulatores Carſulanus, Platina, Stella, et ſimiles omiſerunt. Accedunt et filiorum monachorum ſuorum facta, præcipuè fraterculorum mendicantium, quos in quarta tertiæ claſſis ſectione locuſtæ adumbrant. Atque hæ Appendices adjunctam habent tam piorum patrum, quam Antichriſtorum in eccleſiis quaſi perpetuam ſucceſſionem, cum rariſſimis diverſarum terrarum ac gentium hiſtoriis et exemplis; ex quibus apparebunt eorum adulteria, ſtupra, contentiones, ſeditiones, ſectæ, invidiæ, fallaciæ, veneficia, homicidia, ac principum proditiones, cum innumerabilibus impoſturis. Baſil, apud Joannem Oporinum. —— I have ſet down the title at length, becauſe it is the beſt remark [I]. Biſhop Bale died in November 1563, in the 68th year of his age, at Canterbury, and was buried in the cathedral of that place (n). No character has been more variouſly repreſented than our author's, as will be ſeen in the Teſtimonies of authors concerning him [K].

(n) Waræus, 162.

Analyſis of the author's deſign in this work. It informs us, that the writers, whoſe lives are there treated of, are thoſe of the Greater Britain, namely, England and Scotland; that the work commences from Japhet, one of the ſons of Noah, and is carried down through a ſeries of 3618 years, to the year of our Lord 1557, at which time the author was an exile for religion in Germany; that it is collected from a great variety of authors, as Beroſus, Gennadius, Bede, Honorius, Boſton of Bury, Frumentarius, Capgrave, Boſtius, Burellus, Trithemius, Geſner, and our great Antiquarian John Leland; that it conſiſts of nine Centuries, compriſing the antiquity, origin, annals, places, ſucceſſes, the more remarkable actions, ſayings, and writings of each author; in all which a due regard is had to Chronology: the whole with this particular view, that the actions of the Reprobate as well as the Elect Miniſters of the Church may hiſtorically and aptly correſpond with the myſteries deſcribed in the Revelation, the ſtars, angels, horſes, trumpets, thunderings, heads, horns, mountains, vials, and plagues, through every age of the ſame Church. There are Appendixes to many of the articles; alſo an account of ſuch actions of the contemporary Popes as are omitted by their flatterers, Carſulanus, Platina, and the like; together with the actions of the Monks, particularly thoſe of the mendicant order, who (he pretends) are meant by the locuſts in the Revelation, ch. ix. ver. 3 & 7. To theſe Appendixes is added a perpetual ſucceſſion both of the Holy Fathers and the Antichriſts of the Church, with curious inſtances from the hiſtories of various nations and countries; in order to expoſe their adulteries, debaucheries, ſtrifes, ſeditions, ſects, deceits, poiſonings, murders, treaſons, and innumerable impoſtures. The book is dedicated to Otho Henry, Prince Palatine of the Rhine, Duke of both the Bavarias, and Elector of the Roman Empire; and the epiſtle dedicatory is dated from Baſil in September, 1557. On the back of the title page is a print of the author, and under it the following diſtich and tetraſtich:

DISTICHON ÆGIDII SYNEGORI.
Germani in effigiem Joannis Balei.
Hæc eſt effigies Docti genuina Balei,
Quem ſtudiis natum terra Brytanna dedit.
Ætatis ſuæ 62.

IN EANDEM TETRASTICHON.
Cur ſic attentus pictum mirare Baleum?
Οὐκ ἀνθρωπω ὁλω δερκεαι, ἀλλα μέρος.
Sculptor non animum finxit, ſed tu cape librum;
Ες. γαρ ουκ εἰκων σωματος, αλλα ψυχῆς.

In February 1559, came out a new edition of this work, with the addition of five more centuries, making in all fourteen; to which is prefixed an account of the writers before the deluge and the birth of Chriſt, with a deſcription of England from Paulus Jovius, George Lilly, John Leland, Andrew Althamerus, and others. This volume is dedicated to Count Zkradin, and Dr. Paul Scalichius of Lika.

[I] He wrote ſeveral other pieces.] Namely, firſt, thoſe he compiled while he was yet a Papiſt: viz. 1. A Bundle of Things worth knowing. 2. The Writers from Elias. 3. The Writers from Berthold. 4. Additions to Trithemius. 5. German Collections. 6. French Collections. 7. Engliſh Collections. 8. Divers Writings of divers learned Men. 9. A Catalogue of Generals. 10. The Spiritual War. 11. The Caſtle of Peace. 12. Sermons for Children. 13. To the Synod at Hull. 14. An anſwer to certain Queſtions. 15. Addition to Palaonydorus. 16. The Hiſtory of Patronage. 17. The Story of Simon the Engliſhman. 18. The Story of Francus Senenſis. 19. The Story of St. Brocard. 20. A Commentary on Mantuan's Preface to his Faſti. Secondly, thoſe he wrote after he had renounced Popery; Firſt, in Latin: viz. 1. The Heliades of the Engliſh. 2. Notes on the three Tomes of Walden. 3. On his Bundle of Tares. 4. On Polydore de Rerum Inventionibus. 5. On Textor's Officina. 6. On Capgrave's Catalogue. 7. On Barnes's Lives of the Popes. 8. The Acts of the Popes of Rome. 9. A Tranſlation of Thorp's Examination into Latin. Secondly, in Engliſh; Firſt in Engliſh metre, and divers ſorts of verſe: viz. 1. The Life of John Baptiſt. 2. Of John Baptiſt's Preaching. 3. Of Chriſt's Temptation. 4. Two Comedies of Chriſt's Baptiſm and Temptations. 5. A Comedy of Chriſt at twelve Years old. 6. A Comedy of the raiſing of Lazarus. 7. A Comedy of the High Prieſt's Council. 8. A Comedy of Simon the Leper. 9. A Comedy of the Lord's Supper, and the Waſhing of the Diſciples Feet. 10. Two Comedies (or rather Tragedies) of Chriſt's Paſſion. 11. Two Comedies of Chriſt's Burial and Reſurrection. 12. A Poem of God's Promiſes. 13. Againſt thoſe that pervert God's Word. 14. Of the corrupting of God's Laws. 15. Againſt Carpers and Traducers. 16. A Defence of King John. 17. Of King Henry's two Marriages. 18. Of Popiſh Sects. 19. Of Popiſh Treacheries. 20. Of Thomas Becket's Impoſtures. 21. The Image of Love. 22. Pamachius's Tragedies, tranſlated into Engliſh. 23. Chriſtian Sonnets. Secondly, in Engliſh proſe: viz. 1. A Commentary on St. John's Apocalypſe. 2. A Locupletation of the Apocalypſe. 3. Wickliffe's War with the Papiſts. 4. Sir John Oldcaſtle's Trials. 5. An Apology for Bernes. 6. A Defence of Grey againſt Smith. 7. John Lambert's Confeſſion. 8. Anne Aſkew's Martyrdom. 9. Of Luther's deceaſe. 10. The Biſhops Alcoran. 11. The Man of Sin. 12. The Myſtery of Iniquity. 13. Againſt Antichriſts, or falſe Chriſts. 14. Againſt Baal's Prieſts, or Baalamites. 15. Againſt the Clergy's ſingle Life. 16. A Diſpatch of Popiſh Vows and Prieſthood. 17. The Acts of Engliſh Votaries, in two parts. 18. Of Heretics indeed. 19. Againſt the Popiſh Maſs. 20. The Drunkards Maſs. 21. Againſt Popiſh Perſuaſions. 22. Againſt Standiſh the Impoſtor. 23. Againſt Bonner's Articles. 24. Certain Dialogues. 25. To Elizabeth the King's Daughter. 26. Againſt Cuſtomary Swearing. 27. On Mantuan of Death. 28. A Week before God. 29. Of his Calling to a Biſhopric. 30. Of Leland's Journal, or an Abridgement of Leland, with Additions. 31. A Tranſlation of Sebald Heyden's Apology againſt Salve Regina. 32. A Tranſlation of Gardiner's Oration of true Obedience, and Bonner's Epiſtle before it with a Preface to it, Notes on it, and an Epilogue to the Reader (11). In this catalogue of John Bale's works, taken from the author cited in the margin, we have not the titles of each piece at length, but merely the ſubject, briefly expreſſed. For example, in the laſt claſs, N° 16, the title at length is; The Apology of Johan Bayle agaynſte a ranke Papiſt, aunſwering both hym and hys Doctours, that neyther their Vowes nor yet their Prieſthode are of the Goſpell, but of Antichriſt. And N° 29 is intitled, The Vocacyon of Johan Bale to the Biſhopric of Oſſorie in Irelande, his perſecutions in the ſame, and finall Delyverance. But, as our author's pieces are very ſcarce, it was impoſſible to ſupply all the titles.

(11) Fuller's Abel Redivivus, p. 509, 510.

[K] The Teſtimonies of authors concerning him.] I ſhall throw together the praiſes and cenſures beſtowed on Biſhop Bale, as they ariſe. Geſner, in his Bibliotheca, calls him vir diligentiſſimus, 'a writer of the 'greateſt diligence;' and Biſhop Godwin, in his treatiſe of the Converſion of the Britons to Chriſtianity, gives him the character of a laborious enquirer into the Britiſh antiquities; Antiquitatum Britannicarum diligentiſſimus perſcrutator. The reverend Laurence Humphrey, in his Vaticinium de Roma, has this diſtich on our author:

Plurima Lutherus patefecit, Platina multa, Quædam Vergerius, cuncta Baleus habet.

i. e. Luther and Platina diſcovered many things, and Vergerius ſome; but Bale detected them all; viz. the errors and frauds of the Papiſts. Valentine Henry Vogler, in his Introduct. Univerſal. in notit. Scriptor. c. 22. thinks, 'it will be leſs matter of wonder, that Bale 'inveighs with ſo much aſperity againſt the power of 'the Pope, when it is conſidered, that England was 'more grievouſly oppreſſed, by the tyranny of the 'Holy See, than any other kingdom.' Quod vehementius in Pontificium Dominatum invehatur Baleus, tanto tanto minus forte quiſpiam mirabitur, quanto gravius præ aliis regnis ſacram tyrannidem Anglia fuit experta. But he adds, that, notwithſtanding our author had rendered himſelf ſo odious to the Papiſts, yet his very enemies could not help praiſing his Catalogue of Engliſh Writers. Tametſi vero Baleus adeo inviſus fuerit Pontificiis, tamen ipſimet Catalogum ejus de Anglicis ſcriptoribus coguntur commendare. Biſhop Montague, in his Apparat prim. Sect. 83. though he cenſures our author for his unjuſtifiable freedom in writing and ſpeaking, yet thinks him of credit and weight in many things. Impotentis linguæ et calami ſcriptor, ſed in multis non rejectitius. Valerius Andreas, in his Pref. Biblioth. Belgic. calls him an impious wretch and a wicked apoſtate; but at the ſame time allows him his merit as a writer. Joannes Balæus, homo impius quidem et infamis apoſtata; nominari tamen hoc loco vel ideo potuit, ut quis è ſordibus gemmas legat (12). Voſſius charges him with diſingenuity in his accounts of antient writers. Unum ſcio, in priorum ſæculorum ſcriptoribus non raro Balei fidem claudicare (13). But of all the writers, who have cenſured Bale, no one has fallen upon him with greater ſeverity than his follower John Pits. Here are a few of thoſe invenomed arrows he has ſhot at him. Hic Lelandi Catalogum non tam prolixè auxit, quam prodigioſè depravavit. Omnia namque fœdiſſimis mendaciis et calumniis replevit, et opus Lelandi pollutiſſimo ſtylo turpiter conſpurcavit. Multa habet ille digna quidem hæretico ſpiritu et ore, ſed ab omni urbanitate et morali honeſtate prorſus aliena, et Chriſtianis auribus nonnulla plane indigna.—Ille miſer homuncio, præter calumnias in homines, et blaſphemias in Deum et ſanctos, nihil habet ſuum, quod notatu dignum judico.—In illo ſterquilinio ſperabam ſaltem aliquam antiquitatis gemmam me inventurum. Sed Eſopico Gallo infortunatior, ſpe mea fruſtratus ſum (14). i. e. 'This writer did 'not ſo much enlarge Leland's catalogue, as corrupt it 'in a monſtrous manner. For he has ſtuffed it full of 'lies and calumnies, and ſpoiled Leland's work, by 'his own barbarous ſtyle. He ſays many things worthy 'indeed of the mind and mouth of an heretic, but 'abſolutely void of all civility and moral honeſty, 'ſome things plainly unworthy of a Chriſtian ear.— 'If we except his ſlanders againſt men, and his blaſ-'phemies againſt God, the poor wretch has nothing 'of his own, which deſerves our notice.—I hoped 'to have found at leaſt ſome gem of antiquity in that 'dunghil: But, more unlucky than Eſop's cock, I was 'diſappointed in my expectation.' He gives us ſome inſtances of the ſeverity and injuſtice, with which Bale treats the moſt famous Doctors of the Church, ſuch as Venerable Bede and St. Aldhelm; and of the ſcurrility, which he uſes towards Biſhops, Monks, and Prieſts, whom he accuſes of hypocriſy, ſuperſtition, and the worſt of crimes (15). He brands him with the name of Bal or Baal, and calls him an apoſtate Carmelite Monk, and a married prieſt. Idolum apud ſimpliciores Anglos Joannes Bal, qui ſe Latinè Balæum cognominat, fuit hæreticus Anglus, ab ordine Carmelitarum apoſtata Monachus, et Sacerdos (ſalva Lectoris reverentia) maritatus (16). But it will take off from the edge of this author's ſatire, if we recollect, that he was a zealous Papiſt, and an exile for his religion; and that he is here declaiming againſt a writer, who was a furious enemy to the Papiſts, by whom he had been ill treated, and who never ſpoke of their religion but with peculiar bitterneſs and aſperity. But to go on with our Teſtimonies. Dr. Fuller ſays: 'One 'may wonder, that being ſo learned a man, who had 'done and ſuffered ſo much for religion, higher pro-'motion was not forced upon him; ſeeing about the 'beginning of Queen Elizabeth, biſhoprics went 'about begging able men to receive them. But pro-'bably he was a perſon more learned than diſcreet, 'fitter to write than to govern, as unable to command 'his own paſſion; and Bilioſus Balæus paſſes for his 'true character (17).' Wharton, in the preface to his Anglia Sacra (18), tells us, Bale paid very little regard to truth, provided he could increaſe the number of the enemies of the Romiſh Church. Veritas Balæo parum curæ erat, dummodo Romanæ eccleſiæ numerum augere poſſet. And again (19): Clauſis vero plerumque oculis Scriptorum Anglicorum ætates Balæus deſinivit; i. e. 'Bale for the moſt part ſettled the Chro-'nology of the Engliſh writers with his eyes ſhut.' Biſhop Nicolſon ſays: 'The ground-plot of this 'work (the Script. Brit.) was borrowed from Le-'land; and the chief of his own ſuperſtructure is ma-'licious and bitter invectives againſt the Papiſts.—— 'Some have thought his making of books of ſome 'little Saxon epiſtles excuſable, and what would ad-'mit of an apology. But if we mark him well, he 'is continually multiplying the writings of all his au-'thors at a very unſufferable and unjuſtifiable rate (20).' Laſtly, Mr. Harrington of Chriſt-church in Oxford, in his preface to the firſt volume of Wood's Athenæ Oxonienſes, paſſes this cenſure on both Bale and Pits: 'All good Antiquaries, men of enlarged ſouls, and 'of an even temper, however of divers profeſſions, 'have always been of the ſame principle: they all 'equally ſacrificed to truth and learning, and ſuffered 'not their private opinions to put a biaſs on their 'hiſtory. And whoever will compare the Centos of 'Bale and Pits with the excellent works of Leland and 'Camden, muſt neceſſarily diſcern, how near an 'alliance there is between zeal and ignorance, and 'between learning and moderation.' And again, in the introduction to the ſecond volume: 'Before this 'age, and ſomewhat within it, Leland, who, by the 'command of King Henry VIII., had undertaken to 'ſurvey and perpetuate books of the antient mona-'ſteries, after the diſſolution thereof, hath compleated 'that work with ſo great exactneſs, that Bale and Pits, 'who have ſince attempted the ſame, have only made 'uſe herein of the Gorgon's common eye, and have 'reflected that ſingle light only upon poſterity.' Our author's books are prohibited by the Church of Rome, among thoſe of the firſt claſs of Heretical books; and the Index Expurgatorius, publiſhed at Madrid in 1667, calls him a moſt impudent and ſcurrilous writer againſt the See of Rome, the Maſs, and the Euchariſt, and one that is perpetually breathing out poiſon; for which reaſon, it forbids the reading any of his works for ever. Scriptor impudentiſſimus ac maledicentiſſimus adverſus Romanam Sedem, Miſſam, et Euchariſtiam, virus nunquam non ſpirans; nihil propterea ex ejus operibus unquam permittendum (21). B.

†

[Of all the accuſations brought againſt Bale, the moſt ſevere one, if true, is, that, after he had tranſcribed the titles of the volumes of Engliſh writers which fell into his hands, he either burnt them or tore them to pieces. This charge is to be met with in Struvius's Acta Literaria, upon the authority of Barthius; who ſays, 'J. Piccandus in notis ad G. 'Nebrigenſem, Paris, 1610. 8*vo*. p. 771, tradit J. 'Baleum, referente viro perdocto Baleoque notum, 'quotquot vidiſſet volumina ſcriptorum Anglicorum, 'ut exſcripſerat titulos, aut igne aut ungue diſper-'diſſe.' We have no doubt of this being a mere calumny (22).

Dr. Leland is far from being favourable to the memory of our Prelate. After calling him the violent and acrimonious impugner of popery, and relating his rigid and uncomplying conduct at his conſecration, the Doctor adds, that 'Bale inſulted the pre-'judices of his flock without reſerve, or caution. 'They were provoked; and not ſo reſtrained, or 'awed by the civil power, as to diſſemble their 'reſentments. During the ſhort period of his reſi-'dence in Ireland, he lived in a continual ſtate of 'fear and perſecution. On his firſt preaching of the 'reformed doctrines, his Clergy forſook him, or 'oppoſed him; and to ſuch violence were the popu-'lace ſpirited againſt him, that five of his domeſtics 'were ſlain before his face; and his own life ſaved 'only by the vigorous interpoſition of the civil 'magiſtrate. Theſe outrages are pathetically relat-'ed; but we are not informed what imprudencies 'provoked them, or what was the intemperate con-'duct which his adverſaries retorted with ſuch ſhock-'ing barbarity (23).'

Mr. Walter Harris thinks that Biſhop Bale's ſufferings from the Roman party may be ſome apology for his ſevere treatment of them; and ſays, that the obſervation, made by the editor of the laſt edition of Bale's account of the condemnation of Sir John Oldcaſtle, may with equal juſtice be applied to ſome of his other works, viz. that he wrote his narrative with all the warmth of one that had eſcaped the flames (24). Though we entirely agree with Mr. Granger, in his Biographical Hiſtory of England (25), that the intemperate zeal of our Prelate often carries him beyond the bounds of decency and candour in his accounts of the Papiſts; yet, perhaps, ſome allowance is to be made not only for his own reſentment of what he had ſuffered, but for the age in (12) Sir Thomas Pope-Blount, Cenſura celebriorum Authorum, Lond. 1690, p. 481, 482.

(13) De Hiſtor. Lat. l. iii. c. 16.

(14) Jo. Pits, Relat. de reb. Angl. edit. Pariſ. 1619, p. 53.

(15) Ibid. p. 58.

(16) Ibid. p. 53.

(17) Worthies of England, Suffolk, p. 61.

(18) Vol. i. p. 31.

(19) Ibid. p. 47.

(20) Engliſh Hiſtorical Library, ubi ſupra.

(21) Apud Sir Thomas Pope-Blount, ubi ſupra.

(22) From a learned correſpondent.

(23) Leland's Hiſt. of Ireland, Vol. ii. p. 200, 201.

(24) Harris's edit. Sir James Ware's Works, Vol. i. p. 417.

(25) Vol. i. p. 139. 8*vo* edit.

in which he lived. His induſtry as a writer is commendable; and it would be doing him great injuſtice, to form our ideas of him from the Roman Catholic authors, many of whom were exceedingly exaſperated againſt him, on account of the vehemence with which he had attacked the errors and ſuperſtitions that were ſupported by the Papal See.

Bale's 'Comedy or Interlude, of Johan Baptyſt's 'Preachynge in the Wilderneſſe, opening the Crafts 'of Hypocrytes,' is printed in the 'Harleian Miſcellany.' 'There was a time, ſays Mr. Granger, 'when the lamentable Comedies of Bale were acted 'with applauſe. He tells us, in the account of his 'vocation to the biſhopric of Oſſory, that his Comedy 'of John Baptiſt's Preaching, and his Tragedy of 'God's Promiſes, were acted by young men at the 'market-croſs of Kilkenny, upon a Sunday. Surely 'this Tragedy muſt be as extraordinary a compoſi-'tion, in its kind, as his Comedies (26).' A new edition of Bale's Chronicle, &c. concerning Sir John Oldcaſtle, was publiſhed in 1729. Before this, the firſt edition, in conſequence of its rarity, has been known to ſell for three guineas (27). Biſhop Tanner hath given an account of Bale's Collectanea, preſerved among the Cotton Manuſcripts, and in the library of Sir Hans Sloane; and, which, therefore, muſt now be in the Britiſh Muſeum (28).

H. Holland affirms that Bale died in Ireland, in 1558, in the 67th year of his age. But this relation is by no means probable (29).] K.

(26) Ibid.

(27) Ibid.

(28) Bibliotheca Brit. Hibern. p. 69.

(29) Harris apud Ware, ubi ſupra, Vol. i. p. 417.

BALES (Peter), the moſt famous maſter in the art of Penmanſhip, or Fair Writing, and all its relative branches, of his time, in our country. He was born in 1547, and he is ſtiled by Anthony Wood, 'a moſt dextrous perſon in his profeſſion, 'to the great wonder of ſcholars and others:' who adds, 'That he ſpent ſeveral years 'in ſciences among the Oxonians; particularly, as it ſeems, in Glouceſter-Hall: but 'that ſtudy which he uſed for a diverſion only, proved at length an employment of 'profit (a).' Nevertheleſs it ſeems more likely, that he reſided not at that univerſity, ſo much to attain ſciences, as to teach his own art; and that he uſed it rather for profit than diverſion [A]. The earlieſt account we have of his perfection therein, takes notice of a Micrographical performance, in which the writing was ſo wonderfully ſmall, yet ſo very legible, that it ſurprized all who ſaw it, and honourably advanced his name into the moſt noted Chronicle of the times (b). This delicate ſpecimen of his art, is alſo thus celebrated by Mr. Evelyn. 'Adrian Junius ſpeaks of that perſon as a miracle [B], 'who wrote the Apoſtles Creed, and beginning of St. John's Goſpel, in the compaſs of a 'farthing: What would he have thought of our famous Bales, ſays he, who, in 1557, 'wrote the Lord's Prayer, Creed, Decalogue, with two ſhort Latin Prayers, his own 'name, motto, day of the month, year of our Lord, and of the Queen's reign, to 'whom he preſented it at Hampton-Court, all within the circle of a ſingle penny; 'enchaſed in a ring and border of gold, and covered with cryſtal! ſo nicely wrote as to 'be plainly legible, to the admiration of her Majeſty, her Privy-Council, and ſeveral 'Ambaſſadors who then ſaw it (c).' He was alſo well ſkilled in many other excellencies of the pen, beſides ſuch matters of mere curioſity in miniature, which ſeem to have recommended him to ſome employment, upon certain particular emergencies, under the Secretary of State, about the year 1586, when the conſpiracies of Mary Queen of Scots with the Popiſh faction, were diſcovered. And as Sir Francis Walſingham had other able inſtruments to unveil the diſguiſed correſpondence which paſſed between them; ſuch as Arthur Gregory, who could unſeal a letter, and ſo dextrouſly cloſe it again, under the ſame impreſſion, that no eye could diſcern its having ever been opened; and likewiſe Thomas

(a) Athen. Oxon. the laſt edit. Vol. i. col. 289.

(b) Holinſhed's Chron. anno 1575.

(c) Evelyn's Numiſmata, &c. fol. 1697, p. 268.

[A] For profit rather than diverſion.] As A. Wood affirms not poſitively, that Bales was a regular ſtudent in any college, but only that he ſeems to have been in Glouceſter-hall; we may give the greater regard to a tradition which has paſſed among our old Writing-maſters, that it was uſual for the beſt of their profeſſion, in Queen Elizabeth's days, and afterwards, to repair to the univerſities; and that they reſided, or were employed in the colleges and ſchools, to inſtruct the younger ſtudents in the arts of Writing and Arithmetic: In which light, Bales will appear rather a teacher, than a ſcholar at Oxford; not one who ſpent ſeveral years in ſciences there, or practiſed writing for his diverſion only, but only for his profit. Not but there might be a mutuality of inſtruction or improvement, by ſuch his reſidence at that ſeat of the Muſes: And as he improved the hands of ſeveral in the art of fair writing; ſo ſome of them might improve his head with learning, and a taſte of ſome ſciences, and more viſibly that of Poetry; which we find in his works ſo often interſperſed. In the like obſcure manner A. Wood intimates, that John Davies of Hereford was afterwards alſo ſent to the Univerſity of Oxford, as if to be a ſtudent there; though he knows not in what houſe of learning (1): Whereas it plainly appears, in his own works, that he went for no other end, but to teach the arts of writing and accompts there; and he tells us, that he thrived by it, as one of his brothers named James did alſo after him, in the ſame Univerſity; to whom, and his brother Richard, likewiſe maſter in the ſame faculty, he has addreſſed two of his poems (2).

[B] —— Speaks of that perſon as a miracle.] This perſon ſeems to have been Francis Alumnus, who wrote the Apoſtles creed, and the firſt fourteen verſes of St. John's Goſpel in the compaſs of a penny, and in full words, which he did in the preſence of the Emperor Charles V., and Pope Clement the VIIth, as Genebrand relates (3), and Simon Mayolus out of him; who had in his own poſſeſſion, ſuch a miracle, as he calls it, or the very ſame; Nos domi idem miraculum ſervamus, being his words (4). Such examples render Pliny's account more credible, of the penman who wrote all Homer's Iliad, ſo very ſmall and cloſe, that it was contained in a nut ſhell; which Cicero, and others alſo mention, though Lancelotti puts it among his Farfalloni, and reckons it one of the popular errors of Pliny; as a learned author has obſerved (5): Which he might not ſo readily have done, had he ſeen the performances in this kind of Micrography, by thoſe two late famous Scots, John Dundaſs the father and the ſon; 'The latter of whom wrote, 'in the compaſs of a guinea, the Lord's Prayer, Creed, 'Ten Commandments, Pſalms 117. 120. 131. and '134. Collect for the 10th Sunday after Trinity, Pre-'vent us, O Lord; Prayers for the Royal Family, 'Clergy, Gentry, and Commonalty; with vacant 'ſpace for much more.' This curioſity a late eminent Writing-maſter ſays he was poſſeſſed of (6); which we take to be the ſame that we have alſo ſeen afterwards in other hands, and is ſtill to be ſeen; the ſaid writing being preſerved in a locket of gold, covered with chryſtal, and ſet round with pearls; and was deſigned as a preſent to the late Princeſs Sophia.

[Huetius, in the account of his own life, ſays, that he himſelf wrote a line in ſo ſmall a hand, that if all Homer's Iliad had been written as ſmall, it would, without any difficulty, have been contained in a nutſhell. This experiment he made in the preſence of the Dauphin, ſon of Louis XIV. (*)]

(1) Athen. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 444.

(2) In his Scourge of Folly, conſiſting of ſatirical Epigrams, and others, in honour of many noble and worthy perſons of our Land, &c. 8vo, without date, p. 218.

(3) In Chron.

(4) In Colloq. 23.

(5) Human Induſtry: or, a Hiſtory of moſt Manual Arts, &c. 8vo, 1661. p. 49. 50.

(6) See an Eſſay of the Firſt Invention of Writing, &c. by Mr. Robert Mave before his Copy Book, printed in oblong fol. 1716. 1725. p. 5.

(*) From a learned correſpondent.

Thomas Philips, whoſe buſineſs was to tranſcribe and decypher ſuch letters as were written in ſecret characters; of which that Queen had no leſs than threeſcore tables or alphabets (d): ſo had the ſaid Secretary alſo, occaſionally, need of ſome one who was expert in the imitation of hands; and could add, according to inſtruction, any poſtſcript, or continuation of one, in the very form and turn of letters wherein the reſt of the epiſtle was written, to draw out ſuch farther intelligence as was wanted for a compleat diſcovery, from the traitors themſelves, of their treaſonable intercourſe. And as we ſhall preſently obſerve alſo from Camden, that Mr. Bales was famous for this talent, on another extraordinary occaſion, which hereafter happened, ſo it ſeems he was now employed to exerciſe the ſame, ſometimes, for the ſervice of the State, in the dangerous machinations aforeſaid againſt it. For ſome few years after, that is, in 1589, and not long before the death of the ſaid Secretary, Bales, by a friend, got it remonſtrated to Mr. Randolph the Ambaſſador, who was intimate with the Secretary, that ſome preferment which Bales had been led in expectation of, had not been ſettled upon him, for what he had formerly performed in behalf of the government before the ſaid Queen's death (e). And we ſhall farther perceive, that he was ſeveral years after in queſt of a place at Court, though we cannot find that he ever obtained it. The death of that Secretary might weaken his intereſt, or make way for other competitors. It appears alſo, that he had ſome occaſion given him to write or ſpeak ſomething in defence of accurate penmen, or thoſe who were maſters in the art of writing, againſt the unreaſonable and illiberal inſinuations of ſome ſupercilious or malignant courtier, who would have objected his profeſſion againſt his promotion; as if Writing were but a mechanic art, and the maſters of it, fitter to guide the hands of boys than the heads of men; and though ſome perſons might have been advanced for the dexterity and readineſs of their pens, to places of eminence and even titles of honour, yet afterwards they uſually affected an inability of exerciſing that inſtrument with any degree of elegance, leſt, as a French author has obſerved, they ſhould be ſuſpected to owe their advancement to ſuch an ordinary acquiſition (f). Bales did, it ſeems, ſufficiently confute theſe ſophiſtical objections in that Defence; though his arguments, as well as his adverſary's, are but lightly touched upon in the letter aforeſaid, and ſo, as rather to deſcribe their way of thinking in general, than to repeat their particular words [C]. However, that application for ſome convenient preferment, did not ſlacken his induſtry, or avert him from the purſuit of his buſineſs; for he taught the ſons and daughters of many perſons of diſtinction, ſome at their own houſes, others at his ſchool, ſituated at the upper end of the Old Bailey; where alſo ſome of the beſt citizens ſent their children. Here we find him in the year 1590, and then he ſet forth in print, the firſt fruits of his pen, as he obſerves in his epiſtle, which he communicated to the Public, his Writing Schoolmaſter, in three parts [D]: From the firſt of which, ſhewing how by the contraction of words into literal abbreviations, the pen of a writer ſhould

(d) Camden's Annals of Queen Elizabeth, anno 1580, & W. Udall's Hiſt. of the Life and Death of Mary Stuart Queen of Scotland, Lond. 8vo. 1636, p. 342. 350.

(e) Copy of Mr. P. Ferriman's Letter to T. Randolph, Eſq; among the MS. collections of Nat. Boothe, Eſq; late of Gray's-Inn.

(f) Montaigne's Eſſays.

[C] Their way of thinking in general, than their particular words.] As for Mr. Bales's thoughts in general, they appear to have been, that he conceived, it became every body, who could write, to ſhew their gratitude, rather than detraction, towards an art, of which they were ſo conſtantly in need, and from which, only their own indiſcretion could hinder their deriving the greateſt advantages; that thoſe who are but meanly accompliſhed with it, would be worſe without it; that a bad hand might be affected by ſome men, more out of policy to conceal bad ſenſe, than ſhame of getting good preferment by a good pen; it being leſs diſgrace to ſuch, that they be not underſtood through the badneſs of their hands, than of their heads. He alſo thought, that Fame's higheſt flights were made with thoſe plumes, which have been lent her by good writers; and that the greateſt Miniſters of ſtate have ſprung even out of their own inkhorns. Of which our own hiſtory is not wanting to furniſh, among others, a very conſpicuous example. For there was in the reign of King Henry III., one Manſel, an inferior Clerk, or Prieſt, who beſides fifty promotions, with the cure of ſouls, roſe to expend an annual revenue of four thouſand merks; how much more becoming ſoever, more moderate profits may have been thought, for a penman, no better qualified than with the ordinary fruits of a writing-ſchool (7). Yet ſuch a Penman, whoſe qualifications, perhaps, at this diſtance, ſhould not be ſeverely judged of; ſince he appears to be the ſame Manſel, whoſe merits made him a companion for Kings, Queens, and Nobles; and whoſe hoſpitality was ſuch, that he once entertained an illuſtrious aſſembly of them, with 700 diſhes of meat, in the year 1256 (8); and ſince he appears to be the ſame perſon with that Sir John Manſell, who is deſcribed to have been about the ſame time a faithful Counſellor to the ſaid King (9). In ſhort, after Bales had hinted many inconveniences which have happened, through the want of fair, diſtinct, and legible writing, eſpecially to the works of the learned; many having been ſpoiled at the preſs, becauſe they could not be read, or tranſcribed; and more turned to waſte paper, for the ſame reaſon: he concludes with much the ſame way of conſidering this qualification, as another late profeſſor of the art has done; who, in his excellent copy-book, has theſe words: 'To write a good hand is a fine accompliſhment; 'and is as uſeful to the gentleman and ſcholar, as to 'the man of buſineſs: for as a graceful manner of 'ſpeaking, gives a luſtre to good ſenſe; ſo a bad 'hand, like a ſtammering tongue, very often ob-'ſcures it (10).'

[D] In three parts.] It is more particularly intitled, The Writing School-Maſter; containing Three Books in One. The firſt, teaching ſwift writing; the ſecond, true writing; the third, fair writing: The firſt book intitled, the Art of Brachygraphy; that is, to write as faſt as a man ſpeaketh treatably, writing one letter for one word, &c. The knowledge whereof may eaſily be attained, by one month's ſtudy; and the performance, by one month's practice; the proof alreadie made, by divers ſchollars therein. The ſecond book, named the Order of Orthographie; ſhewing the perfect method to write true Orthographie in our Engliſh tongue, as it is now generally printed, &c. to be attained by the right uſe of this booke without a ſchool-maſter, in a ſhort time, &c. The third book is, the Key of Calligraphie; opening the ready way to write fair, in a very ſhort time, &c. invented by Peter Bales; the firſt of January, 1590; imprinted at London by T. Orwin, &c. in quarto. After this title, follows our author's dedication to the Lord Chancellor Hatton: there are Latin verſes before it,

(9) Dr. Hakewill, in his Anſwer to the Biſhop, in his Apology of the Power and Providence of God in the Government of the World, folio, third edit. Oxon. 1635, l. v. p. 178.

(10) Writing Improved: or, Penmanſhip made Eaſy, in its uſeful and Ornamental Parts, &c. by John Clark, fol. 1714, oblong. plate 12.

(7) Sir Robert Cotton's Short View of the Long Life and Reign of Henry the Third King of England, 4to, 1627, p. 24.

(8) Dr. G. Goodman, Biſhop of Gloucester; Touching the Decay of the World; in Dr. Hakewill's Apology, &c. lib. v. p. 177.

ſhould ſoon learn to keep pace with the tongue of a moderate ſpeaker, Mr. Evelyn, as aforeſaid, thinks he was the inventor of thoſe Short-Hand cyphers, and other notæ furtivæ, ſo much in uſe among us [E]; And whereby, as a learned foreigner has obſerved, we Engliſhmen have the reputation abroad, of being the moſt expert Short-Hand writers in the it, by T. Newton, of Cheſhire; alſo in Engliſh and Latin, by P. Hunſdon of Cambridge, and in Engliſh, by Tho. Lodge. His rules in the laſt part, or Key of Calligraphy, are written in verſe as well as proſe: and indeed we may obſerve ſeveral of his fraternity ſince addicted to poetry; which may be naturally accounted for, from their being ſo converſant with the Poets; by tranſcribing their moral ſentences, ſhort maxims, and diſtichs, to ſet their ſcholars as copies; which is certainly laudable, to ſeaſon their youthful minds with elegant admonitions, at the ſame time that they are forming their hands to buſineſs; beſides the precepts of any art are well known to be moſt ſucceſsfully communicated in verſe; which, beſides the pleaſure of rhime, is alſo even thereby, not to mention other advantages, rendered more engaging to the memory, which rhime ſo knits up, by the affinity of ſounds, that in remembering the laſt word of one line, we often call to mind both verſes; as the critics have judiciouſly obſerved (11). Our author concludes his whole work with one epigram, from the book to the reader; and another, from himſelf to his countrymen. The former is as follows:

Swift, True, and Fair, good Reader, I preſent;
Art, Pen, and Hand, have played their parts in me:
Mind, Wit, and Eye, do yield their free conſent;
Skill, Rule, and Grace, give all their gains to thee:
Swift Art, true Pen, fair Hand, together meet;
Mind, Wit, and Eye, Skill, Rule, and Grace to greet.

The ſecond edition of this work was publiſhed in twelves, ſeven years after the former. Among the many verſes in our author's praiſe before it, four copies, or more, were compoſed by the ſcholars at Glouceſter-Hall; among whom, Edward Michelbourne, a noted Poet of his time, hath two: and there are three or more copies by the Students of St. John's College, as A. Wood has obſerved (12).

[E] Inventor of thoſe Short-Hand cyphers, &c. ſo much in uſe among us.] A learned author, who lived at the time that this art of Short-Hand was firſt invented, or newly revived among us, ſpeaks of it after this manner: 'In this cittie, be taught the arts of 'Calligraphie, or faire writing of divers handes, and 'characters; and of ciphering, and algoriſme; and '(which is much to be regarded) the art of Brachygraphie; which is an art newly diſcovered, or newly 'recovered; and is of very good and neceſſarie 'uſe, being well and honeſtly exerciſed: for by 'the meanes and helpe thereof (they which know 'it) can readily take a ſermon, oration, play, or 'any long ſpeech; as they are ſpoken, dictated, 'acted, and uttered, in the inſtant: it hath a good 'part in the art of Steganographie, and is a principall 'member thereof (13).' Mr. Bales may in effect be called the firſt inventor among us, of this art, as Mr. Evelyn thought him to be; ſince he was the firſt who made it practicable, the firſt who made it commodious, and comprehenſible even to children; the firſt who publicly taught it, and whoſe method firſt induced others to build improvements upon his foundation. But his ſcheme was not indeed the firſt that appeared in print, by two years; for a learned Phyſician of Cambridge, Dr. Timothy Bright, ſet forth, ſo long before him, a little treatiſe upon the ſame ſubject (14), which he dedicated to the Queen; and obſerves to her Majeſty therein, that Cicero accounted it worthy of his pains, and profitable to the public, to invent a more expeditious kind of character, as we may read in Plutarch's life of Cato the younger. His invention, as he alſo informs her, was mere Engliſh; without precept, or imitation: but it has, in the judgment of ingenious men, been thought difficult to be underſtood, much more to be put in practice. The improvement made by Bales in his book aforeſaid, was to write after the Doctor's charactery words, divided into dozens, by the Roman letter, with certain commas and other periods or ſhort marks, to be ſet about each letter in twelve ſeveral places, for the diſtinction of every word. But the love of variety, or ambition after perfection, would not let the art reſt here; for about the time of the Queen's death, or ſoon after, Mr. John Willis, a Divine, publiſhed a new Art of Stenography, or ſhort Writing, by Spelling Characterie; and he promoted it to many editions; but that greater ſimplicity from which he had deviated, and the greater multiplicity of which he compounded and perplexed his character, brought it, after a courſe of years, into total diſuſe, notwithſtanding his high opinion of it, and the advantages he imagined others drew from it; notwithſtanding that he publiſhed it in Latin (15), as well as Engliſh; and ſet forth a ſchoolmaſter beſides, to his own art (16). His ſucceſſor upon this topic, Mr. Edmund Willis, a man leſs conceited of his own offspring, and of clearer conceptions for ſuch a work, produced a neater, and more conſpicuous Abbreviation of Writing by Character (17); but not without regard to, and ſome directions from, Mr. Bales's invention. Yet much more popular became the method of Theophilus Metcalfe, whoſe Eſſay paſſed thirty-five editions, or more (18); notwithſtanding he alſo thought it neceſſary to publiſh another, which he called a School-Maſter, to explain it. Thomas Shelton became famous after him for his Tachygraphy; or eaſy, exact, and ſpeedy ſhort writing: and ſome years after, he publiſhed his Zeiglography; or New Art of Short Writing; the former was tranſlated into Latin (19), for the benefit of foreigners. The acute and comprehenſive Jeremiah Rich, had a diſtinguiſhed genius for this ſort of contractions, and was ſo expert in executing his own rules, that John Lilburne would have acknowledged under his hand, had it been permitted him, that he had minuted down his trial at the Old-Bailey with the utmoſt exactneſs. We have the Pſalms in his ſhort-hand; his Semigraphy; or Arts Rarity (20), recommended by ſeveral hands; and his Pen's Dexterity; approved by both Univerſities. Some have attempted to improve upon him, who ſtill want improvement; and others, by enlarging his Short-Hand, have been thought to prolong it. The chief excellence in him, and his followers, conſiſts in contracting ſentences, by points and marks placed about the characters; ſtill preſerving, we ſee, ſome traces of Mr. Bales's device. But others ſtill found room for alterations, and ſome for amendments. Mr. Everard publiſhed a Short-Hand not long after (21). Mr. Noah Bridges ſet forth his Art of Short and Secret Writing within a twelvemonth after him (22); and Thomas Heath appeared not long after the Reſtoration (*). But William Maſon's improvements in the art for above twenty years, has advanced his reputation perhaps above them all. He firſt grounded himſelf upon Mr. Rich's ſcheme, in his Pen plucked from an Eagle's Wing; but built more ſucceſsfully upon a new plan, in his Art's Advancement; or exact Method of Short-Hand, and his Table of Natural Contractions, by Perſons, Moods, and Tenſes, &c. and eſpecially in his laſt treatiſe, intitled, La Plume Volante; in which he has brought the art nearer to perfection than others who had taken that, or the like path to it. Yet is not Mr. Steel, a School-maſter of Briſtol, to be overlooked, who has ſeveral particulars new and conſiderable in his Short Writing begun by Nature, completed by Art; manifeſting the irregularity of placing the artificial before the natural, or ſymbolical contractions, &c. The book conſiſts of three parts; firſt, the emblems; ſecond, the expreſſion of words conciſely, that are not to be emblematically expreſſed; and third, the contraction of ſentences like words. Mr. Eliſha Coles, who was a Schoolmaſter in Ruſſel-ſtreet, near Covent-Garden, and author of two moſt compendious and well known Dictionaries, publiſhed alſo upon this ſubject (23) a book which has been deſervedly well received; for his brief Account of the Short-Hands extant; his method leſs burthenſome than others to the memory; and his new inventions, for contracting of words and ſentences; with other ingenious devices, pleaſant and profitable. He propoſes by a variety of letters, in variety of places, ſuppoſe a threefold

(11) Sir Philip Sidney's Defence of Poeſie; and Mr. Dryden's Dedic. of his Rival Ladies to the Earl of Orrery.

(12) Ath. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 289.

(13) Sir George Buc's Third Univerſitie of England: or, A Treatiſe of the Foundations of all the Colleges, Ancient Schools of Privilege, and of Houſes of Liberal Arts, within and about the City of London, fol. 1615, annexed to E. Howe's edit. of Stowe's Annals, p. 984.

(14) Entitled, Characterie: An Art of ſhort, ſwift, and ſecret Writing, by Character. Printed by J. Windet, &c. 12mo, 1588.

(15) Stenographia: ſ. Ars Compendioſa ſcribendi, 8vo. Lond. 1618.

(16) Octavo, 1628.

(17) Octavo, London, 1618; and with enlargements, 8vo. 1627.

(18) Entit. Radio Stenography; the moſt eaſy, exact, lineal, and ſpeedy Method that hath ever been attained or taught, 8vo. one edit. 1635.

(19) Tachygraphia, five exactiſſima & compendioſiſſima breviter ſcribendi Modus, &c. Lond. 8vo. 1671.

(20) Octavo, Lond. 1654.

(21) Octavo, London. 1658.

(22) Octavo, Oxon. 1659.

(*) Stenography: or the Art of Short-Writing, &c. 8vo. 1664.

(23) The neweſt, plaineſt, and ſhorteſt Short-Hand, 8vo. 1674.

the world (g). In, or not long after the year 1592, he was employed in writing for, or to, Sir John Puckering, Lord Keeper of the Great-Seal; whoſe ſervant, as I remember, he ſomewhere ſtiles himſelf: and it is certain there were ſeveral petitions, letters, &c. about that time, written in the fine ſmall Secretary and Italian hands, by this Bales, among that Lord-Keeper's papers; many of which are ſtill in being (b). Among the reſt, there are ſeveral letters written by one Topcliffe, who was much employed about the country, in ferreting out the Popiſh Prieſts and their plots, in thoſe times, and he made ſome diſcoveries, which he wanted to communicate in a ſecret manner; but diſliking the uſe of multiplied alphabets, as a method too tedious, preferred an invention of Bales's, which is called his Lineal Alphabet, or Character of Daſhes, as the ſhorteſt and ſimpleſt he had heard of; wherein every letter was expreſſed by a ſingle ſtraight ſtroke, only in different poſtures and places [F]. We are informed alſo, by ſome of our beſt Antiquaries in the profeſſion, and thoſe who have been moſt converſant in threefold ſituation, above, upon, or under a line, real or imaginary, wherein ſomething of Bales is ſtill diſcernible, to comprehend monoſyllables of every ſort; has given us ſome judicious obſervations upon the ſchemes of others, and made ſeveral commendable advancements of the art in his own. After him Mr. William Addy publiſhed another Short-Hand with applauſe (24), and choſe rather to improve upon the principles of the ingenious Mr. Rich, than to raiſe a fabric de novo. He alſo publiſhed the Bible, and, if we miſtake not, the Teſtament, in a beautiful little character, engraved by the curious hand of John Sturt, and bound in a ſmall pocket volume. We ſhould be too extenſive upon this ſubject of brevity, were we to mention all who have refined upon it; ſeeing that an author who offered a new character, moſt ſimple and ſuccinct, above thirty years ſince, acknowledged he had conſulted above thirty ſhort-hand writers then in print, to compoſe it (25). We ſhall therefore only mention Mr. J. Weſton's book, called Stenography completed, or the Art of Short-Hand brought to Perfection, which is now in ſome vogue; and Mr. John Byrom's Univerſal Engliſh Short-Hand; and conclude with the obſervation of a learned gentleman, who has alſo publiſhed An Eſſay towards a farther Improvement of Short-Hand; and prefixed to it a diſcourſe, whereby we have been much enabled to deduce the ſhort Succeſſion aforeſaid of our Short-Hand writers; and wherein are theſe words: 'I think, that, both 'with reſpect to the cultivation, and practice of ſuch 'a way of writing, no people upon earth can juſtly 'pretend to diſpute the pre-eminence with the Engliſh. 'The neighbouring nations, indeed even the moſt 'celebrated for ſkill in other arts, muſt be reckoned 'ſtrangers to Short-Hand; if not abſolutely, yet in 'compariſon with us. Accordingly, Mr. Locke ſays 'he has been told, that this was an art known only in 'England (26). And the author of the Eſſay on 'Literature declares, that he ſcarce ever met with 'any who underſtood it in France or Spain (27): 'Though as to the French, I am aſſured, they have 'got a Short-Hand book, which was publiſhed a good 'while ago, and is intitled, Tachygraphie, ou l'Art 'd'ecrire auſſi vit qu'on parle, 12mo. But not-'withſtanding ſo many of the Engliſh have laboured 'and done worthily in cultivating Short-Hand; and 'it is now certainly far improved among us, beyond 'what it was at the beginning; I cannot agree that 'this art has been yet completed, much leſs can I 'agree that it has been brought to the utmoſt per-'fection it is capable of (28).'

(g) Monſ. Bayle, in his Dictionary, under the article Quinctilian, has the following remark: 'There were at 'that time (i. e. 'in the firſt century) ſome men 'at Rome (thoſe 'men were called Notarii), 'who could 'write a whole 'ſpeech in Short-hand, though 'the Orator 'ſpoke ever ſo 'faſt. That art 'is, at preſent, 'better known 'and practiſed in England, than in any other country.'

(b) In the Harleian Library of Manuſcripts.

(24) Stenographia, &c. 8*vo.* 1695.

(25) The plaineſt, eaſieſt, and prettieſt Method of writing Short-Hand, ever yet publiſhed, by F. T. 12*mo.* 1712. In Pref.

(26) Locke's Eſſay on Education, p. 72.

(27) Printed for T. Bowles, 8*vo.* Lond. 1726, p. 108.

(28) An Hiſtorical Account of compendious and ſwift Writing, by Philip Gibbs, 8*vo.* Lond. 1736, p. 56.

[Several other perſons have publiſhed books of Short-Hand, ſince this article was originally written; particularly Macaulay, Annet, and Gurney. The latter was for many years writer of the Seſſions-Paper; and his Brachygraphy, or Short-writing, made eaſy to the meaneſt Capacity, has been well received, and paſſed through eight editions. In 1771, was publiſhed, in 8*vo.* 'Natural Short-Hand. Wherein the 'Nature of Speech, and the Manner of Pronuncia-'tion, are briefly explained, and a natural Reaſon 'aſſigned from thence for the particular Form of every 'Stroke, every ſingle Articulation, whether Vowel 'or Conſonant, is marked by a diſtinct ſingle line. 'All the ſimple Characters are as analogous to each 'other as the Sounds they repreſent; alſo their Con-'veniencies for joining is commenſurate to the Fre-'quency of their Uſe; the Number of aſcending and 'deſcending Lines are duly proportioned to each 'other, and the Rules for writing and contracting 'are few, plain, and familiar. To which is annexed, 'a Short-Hand Character for expreſſing muſical or 'inarticulate Sounds without the Uſe of ruled Lines. 'By Holdſworth and Aldridge, of the Bank of Eng-'land.' Concerning which, the authors of the Monthly Review obſerve (), that 'the deſign of this 'publication is, to obviate thoſe difficulties with 'which this uſeful art is encumbered—" to bring it " nearer to perfection, to render its utility more ex-" tenſive, to make the learning of it more eaſy, and " the practice more pleaſant and familiar."—And 'though the authors may not have ſucceeded to the 'degree they might wiſh, the ingenuity and pains 'diſcovered in their performance, entitle them to 'juſt commendation.' After ſome farther obſerva-tions, theſe critics add, that 'the curious will be 'entertained by the peruſal of this work, and will 'have reaſon to commend the ingenuity and induſtry 'of the authors. But, upon the whole, we cannot 'help remarking, that the performance is more in-'genious than uſeful—that it is better calculated for 'amuſement than profit—that though the method of 'Stenography here propoſed be more natural than 'many others, it is not entirely what we could wiſh 'in point of eaſe and expedition.' The Chevalier Ramſey, the writer of the Travels of Cyrus, publiſhed, when he firſt went abroad, a little treatiſe of Short-Hand, which is ſuppoſed to have been taken from ſome of the Engliſh authors (). Within theſe few years, a new method of Short-Hand hath appeared, by the Rev. Mr. Palmer, a diſſenting Clergyman, at Macclesfield, in Cheſhire.] T.

(*) Vol. xliv. p. 69—72.

(*) From the Correſpondent before referred to.

[F] Every letter was expreſſed by a ſingle ſtraight ſtroke, only in different poſtures and places.] We are left to gueſs at the ſcheme itſelf of this improvement in Cryptography, or Stenography, or both, from what has deſcended to our ſight, through very eminent hands, of the like nature, or anſwering much to the ſaid deſcription. This invention ſeems to have regarded a double improvement; a ſhort, as well as ſecret way of writing, at once; and more ſpeedy than any ordinary alphabet: however, it may not ſeem to have been fully intended to anſwer the deſign of Short-Hand; the uſe of daſhes, or ſingle ſtraight ſtrokes for every letter, as in the deſcription of that cypher, implying an inconnection of them, and no abbreviation of words or ſyllables; no ſuch contraction and concurrence, as we find in thoſe compendious and expeditious characters, which will beſt hold any pace with the voice. The other part of the deſcription, calling it a Lineal Alphabet, might partly intend to deſcribe the marks uſed for the letters themſelves, ſtraight ſtrokes being lines of what continuance ſoever; but might chiefly import, that thoſe ſubſtituted marks, which have no diſtinction of ſhape, though they may of height and diſpoſition, to anſwer the remainder of the deſcription, as to their poſture and place, ſhould be principally diſtinguiſhed by their vicinity, inclination, and contiguity to, or tranſciſſion of, ſome one or more lines, running quite through, or between them. For example, if you draw an horizontal line as far as it will conveniently receive over it half the alphabet, and diſpoſe of four perpendicular ſtrokes, or daſhes, each under a letter; ſo as one ſtroke ſhall be ſome ſpace above the line; another, come down near it; a third, touch it; and the fourth, paſs in the works of our ancient Calligraphers, that he was one of the earlieſt Writing Maſters among us, who had his pieces engraven upon copper-plates [G], and printed off at the rollingpaſs ſomewhat through it; they will ſufficiently diſtinguiſh any four of the letters; then the eight remaining, may be as diſtinctly ſignified, by ſo many ſtraight ſtrokes diagonally diſpoſed, after the ſame manner; four, ſloping to the right, and four, to the left. Thus half the alphabet is accounted for; and it is but doing the like, beneath the line, as you have done above, and you have a moſt ſimple, or unperplexed, and compendious ſupply for the whole. This cypher is ſo obvious to the eye, ſo familiar to the hand, and eaſy to the memory, that a child may learn it without a maſter. We cannot ſay poſitively, that this was exactly Mr Bales's ſcheme, though it may anſwer the deſcription of it abovementioned in the text; and therefore we do not offer to give any diagram, or figure of it; for he might uſe more horizontal lines than one; or fewer daſhes, and in more varied poſitions; ſo approach nearer the ſcale of Muſic; which alſo, by the way, has been propoſed to perform the offices of any, or all alphabets, with great advantage; ſo that the words of a Pſalm, or a ſonnet, might be couched in the notes of it; ſeeing that two of them only, upon the five bars, will expreſs all the neceſſary letters; by the uſe of which, the inſtruments of muſic would become the inſtruments of ſpeech; and all practitioners might parley with, in playing to one another. All lawyers, termagants, and other ſtrife-mongers, might then wrangle and ſcold melodiouſly; and all inſtructions, intelligence, conference, and correſpondence, vocal or inſtrumental, might be carried on to ſome tune. For the learned have preſumed, that muſical ſounds and ſigns might not only ſignify and communicate all letters and words, but all things and notions; that the uttering of them would ſerve for an univerſal language, as the writing of them would for an univerſal character (29); and ſo the whole globe being turned into an orcheſtra, we ſhould all live and die in univerſal harmony. But to return; that ſcheme which we have ſeen, as was beforeſaid, ſo much correſponding with the explanation above attempted of that we have not ſeen, we ſhall here produce to the reader's ſight; as what may not only conduce to the better comprehenſion, and perhaps to the recovery of that of Mr. Bales, but it may be with improvements. We muſt firſt obſerve this more modern ſcheme differs from that, already propoſed to anſwer the foregoing, not only in one point, which is indifferent, the extending of all the alphabet above the line; but in others, which are material; as varying the poſition of the ſignatures, in two inſtances, and augmenting them in two more: the variations are in having but one diſtance from the line, and two degrees of perpendiculars that touch it; and the augmentations are, of two parallel lines, and two dots, or full points; which is more complex, leſs uniform, and deviates more from the name of a lineal character; if the propriety of that expreſſion is to be preſerved in the ſubſtitutes for the letters themſelves, as well as the tranſverſe line which is the rule of direction to them. However, this character has a diſtinct brevity, and beautiful ſimplicity in it: it is moſt eaſily learnt, readily written, and not readily diſcovered. The ſaid cypher, in its original, with its alphabetical key over it, is ſtill to be ſeen, under the hand and ſeal of King Charles I., as he incloſed it in one of his letters to Edward Somerſet, Earl of Glamorgan, dated at Oxford, April the 5th, 1646 (30). In which letter, the concluſion is written in this character, interpretable by the ſaid key; which are as follow:

(29) Biſhop Wilkins's Mercury: or Secret and Swift Meſſenger, &c. edit. 1694, cap. xviii.

(30) And preſerved in the Collection of Royal Letters in the Harleian Library of Manuſcripts.

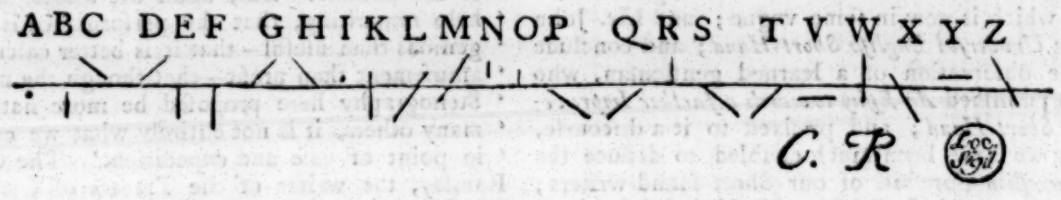
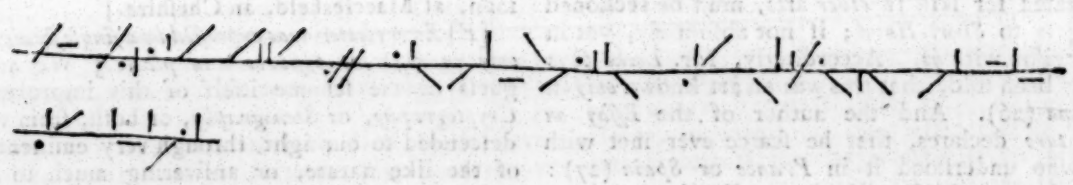
ABC DEF GHIKLMNOP QRS TVWXYZ



C. R

Thus, when you read, in this cypher, his Majeſty's aſſurance, to that Earl, in the ſaid letter, of



You will more eaſily decypher it by that key, than by all the rules in Mr. Falconer's Cryptomenyſis Pateſacta (31). That Earl of Glamorgan, ſoon after Marquis of Worceſter, publiſhed, not long after the Reſtoration, an ingenious little book, full of rare improvements in art; and among his ſecret ways of writing, or communication, he has undoubtedly deſcribed this in the following words: — 'A cypher 'and character, ſo contrived, that one line, without 'returns, and circumflexes, ſtands for each, and every 'of the twenty four letters; and as ready to be made 'for one, as the other.' And the title he gives it, in his table of contents, is, A One Line Cypher (32).'

(31) Or the Art of Secret Information diſcloſed, without a Key: containing plain and demonſtrative Rules, for decyphering all Manner of Secret Writing &c. by John Falconer, 8vo. 1685.

(32) See his Century of Names, and Scantlings of Inventions, &c. 24to. 1663, No. 3. Reprinted in the Harleian Miſcellany, Vol. iv. p. 493.

[G] He was one of the earlieſt Writing-Maſters among us, who had his pieces engraven on copper-plates.] When Jodocus Hondius, who was a fine Penman himſelf, as well as Deſigner, and Engraver, undertook to collect and engrave ſeveral copies from his own writings, and thoſe of the moſt celebrated maſters of the pen in Europe, he ſeems to have invited Mr. Bales, among the reſt, to communicate ſome ſpecimen of his performance, in a ſize propoſed, to make a regular and uniform copy-book; and we are informed by a late famous Profeſſor of the art, who was very curious in his inquiries after our ancient improvers of it, that thoſe copies of the ſeveral maſters engraven by Hondius, appeared in 1594 (33). The ſame author, in that Eſſay from which we receive this intelligence, having ranked Mr. Bales, as earlieſt in time, at the head of the Engliſh maſters, who publiſhed their works at the rolling-preſs, ſays again, 'That his, with Mr. Mar-'tyn's, and other pieces, made part of a copy-book 'engraven by Hondius; one of which, with many 'valuable fragments in it, I have, ſays he, in my 'collection (34).' The edition of Hondius's book which we have ſeen, was publiſhed twenty years after that date above (35), and among other copies written by the admired J. Vauden Velde, Hondius himſelf, J. Honthuſius, Solomon Henrix, one of whoſe pieces is dated 1594; beſides Fælix Van Sambix, E. Goos, Il Curione in Roma, J. Beau Cheſne of Paris, and M. Martyn, our countryman; there is alſo one piece ſubſcribed with the name of Peter Bales: it is written in the Latin tongue, and in the Engliſh character; but it is very probable that there were more of his copies engraven and printed in that manner; and we have read, that many ſuch valuable pieces of his writing were publiſhed by Hondius as aforeſaid. However, when fame had found a channel through his example, for this kind of publication, other artiſts of his own country, by their labours kept it open, for the ſtream to refine in, as it rolled down to us. It has been thought, that the reaſon our

(33) Mr. Robert More's Eſſay on the Invention of Writing, &c. prefixed to his Copy Book, entitled, The General Penman, in its laſt edition. fol. oblong. 1725, p. 4.

(34) Ibid. p. 5.

(35) With this title: Theatrum Artis Scribendi, varia ſumm rum n ſtri ſeculi, Artificum Exemplaria comp ectens N vem diverſis Lineis exarata. Jodoco Hondio cæ atore. Amſt. apud Joan. Janſon. fol. oblong, 1614.

rolling-press; and, therefore, he is ranked the foremost amongst those English masters of the pen, who have, by such publications, rendered themselves capable of being marshalled according our countrymen did not appear earlier in public, with their writings, by this means of letter-graving on copper, was their not having the Rolling-press in England, until it was introduced from Antwerp, by Mr. John Speed, about the year 1610; as a late author has surmised (36). But we certainly had the custom by some engine or other, to print off copper-plates, though not in Calligraphy, long before that time, and even before Justus Lipsius is reported to have invented it; though the use of it might not be so common in England as abroad. Among those who followed the steps of Mr. Bales, Mr. John Davies of Hereford was not the least conspicuous, who has been celebrated for his fast, fair, close, and various writing, of the Secretary, Roman, Court, and Text hands, by Dr. Fuller (37), who says, he could also flourish matter, as well as letters; and with his fancy, as well as with his pen: indeed he published several books of Poetry, as may be seen elsewhere (38); and some few of penmanship (39); something also In Laudem Artis Scriptoriæ. The praise he sought as a Poet, obstructed his acquiring much profit by his practice as a Penman, though he had taught his art successfully at Oxford; where Magdalen College was his best beloved patroness; as in one of his poems, addressed thereto, he confesses (40): he was also some time tutor in his art to Prince Henry, as he writes before one of his copy-books; and elsewhere, calls the Lord Chancellor Ellesmere his good Lord and Master (41). He certainly envied Mr. Bales the credit of that golden pen, we shall hereafter mention him to have won from one, or more competitors in the art; but in divulging his malignity, Mr. Davies has exposed his own Disposition, more than the other's Reputation; by not only falsely traducing him in the character of a fair writer, but against all laws of humanity, made his inculpable exigencies the subject of lampoon; and in many other instances, justified the epigram that was composed by another Poet upon him; wherein it is said, he would make a good author, if he could pen as well as he could write (42); as he has recorded himself, against himself; and in his Scourge of Folly, shewed the scourging of his own. He died about the year 1618, and was buried in St. Giles's in the Fields. His countryman, J. Gethinge, was a man of more modesty, and brought the art to greater perfection; some of his plates were graved in the year 1615. And Martin Billingsley, another eminent hand, whose works were also well received (43), is commonly joined with him in the applauses which were paid to the art, or those who excelled in it, by some noted Poets of their time. Not long after, William Comley of Henley, published his Copy-Book of the most useful English Hands; with an Alphabet of the Capital Text Letters: to which is joined, A new Alphabet of the Capital, Roman, Knotted Letters; fit and ready to set any manner of hand to: and there is further joined, A Book of the Secretary and Round Hands; with another Alphabet of Capital Antique Letters (44), as he calls them; being composed of human postures; afterwards imitated by succeeding publishers, in a smaller size; that youth might, with writing, learn drawing at the same time. Speedily after, Mr. David Browne, an ingenious Scotchman, addressed his Examples of Fair Writing to King James (45), whose Scribe, he stiles himself. His work is said to have been printed at the letter-press, but more probably was from wooden blocks, like the foregoing author's; whose method also he seems to follow, in leaving blanks for learners to fill up. Afterwards Mr. Goodere, Richard Weston, and Peter Gery (46), kept up the art in its various excellencies with good commendation; and it was carried on in this flourishing state till the death of that great ornament of it, Mr. Thomas Fayle, who had a curious felicity in all his performances, but could not be induced to make them public. Edward Cocker, on the contrary, was thought too general a publisher; he was the engraver of his own writings; and some of them on silver plates: he first published in the early part of his life; and before Oliver Cromwell died. We have at least fourteen or fifteen copy-books of his in print (47); for he kept writing and printing himself off, till the time of his death, which was about the year 1677. Mr. Evelyn having mentioned Mr. Gethinge, Billingsley, Gery, and Cocker, says of them, 'That what they published of letters and flourishes, 'are comparable to any of those masters whom we 'have so much celebrated among the Italians and 'French, for Calligraphy, and fair writing (48).' But then followed such an incontinency of publication and piracy, that the very press groaned under the prostitution of the art. Passing over therefore Mr. Watson, James Seamer, J. Hodder, J. Fisher, Louis Hughes, M. Johnson, besides others; who indulged their pens so much in sprigging of capitals, knotting of figures, pencilling of flourishes; in twirling and tangling the heads and tails of letters together, with such extravagance; and in hunting a single line through such unnatural, perplexing, and tedious labyrinths, as no eye could follow without pain; we shall only mention those who retrieved the art from these exorbitant fancies, and attired it in that most unaffected and becoming dress it now wears. Among the first, appears to be Colonel John Ayres, who introduced the plain, neat, Bastard-Italian-hand, and by the assistance of Mr. John Sturt, that excellent letter-graver, carried the glory of English penmanship far beyond those who went before him (49). [It is said, that Mr. Ayres's business, as a writing-master, when it was in its most flourishing condition, brought him in near 800 l. per annum (*).] Then also Mr. Eleazar Wigan charmed his readers with boldness and volubility in command of hand: Mr. John Seddon (50), with the choice variety of his fruitful fancy, and neatness in his compositures: Mr. Booting, who excelled most, when he copied most: Mr. Peter Story, an universal artist, but peculiarly eminent for his masculine and beautiful disposition of large and elaborate pieces; as were the Dundasses, for the marvellous minuteness of their writings, before taken notice of. These were followed by the late Mr. Charles Snell, George Shelly, John Clarke, and Robert More, to whose Essay, before quoted, we have been much indebted for several parts of this brief Descent of his famous predecessors. The former of these, Mr. Snell, published several pieces (51), and so rigidly opposed all moderate use of those decorations, even under due propriety and regulation, in his rules, though he retained them in his practice, that the others, his contemporaries, therein opposed him; and restored the use of judicious embellishments upon proper occasions. For Mr. More admonishes the Ornamentator to be upon his guard, lest he merit the character of a fancy-monger; and says, he must have regard to time, place, and circumstances; that the sportive faculty must be banished the court of business, and he must neither ludere cum seriis, nor paratragœdiare in trifles (52). Mr. Shelley having made a glance at engrossers of reputation, says of ornaments in fine Penmanship, as the divine Herbert does of Poetry, with some alteration,

A knot may take him, who from letters flies,
And turn delight into an exercise (53).

Agreeable to whom, Mr. Clarke was rather for correcting the false taste of ornament, than abolishing a true one; and has given good directions for conduct, in his arguments, as well as good improvements of the more essential part, fine writing itself, in his own copies of it (54). Under these masters, and one or two more, whose works gained them a character of supremacy in their profession, in the reigns of Queen Anne, and his late Majesty (55), the fair Italian, and especially, the free Round-text, and the Round-hand, those two genuine parents of the freest, most commodious, and most expeditious hand of business, which we call a Running-hand, prevailed over all others, and were brought to that perfection they are still preserved, or even improved in, by those masters who are the ornament of the art at this day; above twenty of whom have permitted many curious pieces of their writing to be engraved and published, not many years since, in a fair and elegant volume together (56); which being written and printed, from the top of the pages to the bottom, like the generality of other books, and not from end to end of the leaf, or in the oblong form, as the practice of our Writing-Masters, from

(36) John Bagford, in his Account of his Collections for an History of Printing, published in the Philosophical Transactions, anno 1707, No. 312.

(37) Worthies of England, in Herefordshire.

(38) Ath. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 444.

(39) The Writing Schole-Master: or The Anatomie of Fair Writing; wherein is exactly expressed each several character. Together with other Rules and Documents coincident to the Art of Fair and Speedy Writing. By John Davies of Hereford, 4to, oblong, the latter editions dated 1663—1669. In the 15th plate the Engraver's name appears to have been John Ingbeenram.

(40) Davies his Scourge of Folly, p. 221.

(41) Ibid. p. 184.

(42) By J. Heath, idem. p. 120.

(43) His Pen's Perfection. And his Copy-Book, containing Variety of Examples of all the most curious Hands written; with the Breaks of each Letter: With the three usual and most necessary Hands of our Nation, &c. 4to, oblong.

(44) All printed together in fol. oblong, May 22, 1622, and dedic. to Robert Earl of Sussex.

(45) Entitled, Calligraphia, &c. fol. oblong, 1622.

(46) His Copy Book, containing 42 Copies of all the Hands in Use; performed according to the natural Freeness of the pen, fol.

(47) As his Introduction to Writing. His England's Penman. His Penna Volans. Magnum in Parvo. Multum in Parvo. Youth's Directions. Pen's Facility. London Writing Master. Lawyers Writing-Master. Country School-Master, &c. &c.

(48) Evelyn's Sculptura: or the History and Art of Chalcography, and Engraving on Copper, &c. 8vo, 1662, p. 99.

(49) See his Book of Arithmetic and Writing, fol. &c.

(*) Massey's Origin and Progress of Letters, &c. Part ii. p. 13.

(50) His Penman's Magazine perfected by Geo. Shelley, and published by T. Read, fol. 1705, &c.

(51) The Art of Writing, in its Theory and Practice, fol. also —The Standard Rules of the Round, and Round Text Hands, &c. necessary to be known by all Writing-Masters, &c. —The Penman's Treasury opened, &c. Done by Command of Hand, &c.

(52) His Essay on the Invention of Writing, &c. before his Copy Book, as above, fol. 6. First printed before Mr. Shelley's Book of Natural Writing, afterwards with his own Copy-Book, about 1716 and lastly in 1725. He also published a Striking Book.

(53) G. Shelley's second Part of Natural Writing, &c. fol. 1714, in the Introduction. He also published a new Striking-Book, and a new Book of Alphabets for the Use of Christ's Hospital, where he was Master, &c.

(54) J. Clarke's Writing Improved, or Penmanship made easy in its Useful and Ornamental Parts, &c. fol. oblong, 1714, in 31 Plates. He also published The Penman's Diversion, &c.

(55) See A Poem on Writing; printed on a Sheet, Broadside; with the Effigies of Six of the most celebrated Writing-Masters of London, engraved by G. Bickham, about the year 1714.

(56) The Universal Penman: engraved by Geo. Bickham, folio, 1733, &c. This is one of the most capital works of the kind ever published; and is still held in great esteem by the admirers of fine penmanship.

according to their ſeniority, and judged of according to their merits, by thoſe of their ſucceſſors, who have gratefully undertaken to preſerve their memory. On Michaelmas-day, in 1595, he being then forty-eight years of age, had a great trial of ſkill in the Black-Fryers, with one Daniel Johnſon, for a Golden Pen, of twenty pounds value; and won it, though his antagoniſt was a younger man by above eighteen years (i), and was therefore expected to have the advantage of a greater ſteadineſs, or other command of hand. We are further told by a contemporary author, that he had alſo the Arms of Calligraphy given him, which are, Azure, a Pen, Or, at a prize, where ſolemn trial was made for maſtery in this art, among the beſt pen-men in London (k), which being a trial among more opponents than one, this, wherein the ſaid arms were given to him, ſhould ſeem different from that, wherein he won the golden pen of Daniel Johnſon aforeſaid. That is the firſt contention we meet with for the golden pen, though other memorable ones have ſince occurred [H]. In 1597, when he republiſhed his Writing School-Maſter, he was in ſuch high

(i) An Account of this Trial of Skill, written by Bales himſelf, was preſerved in a MS. Vol. in Biſhop Stillingfleet's Library, No. 216, as the late Biſhop Tanner has remarked in one of his MS. Note Books, now in the Hands of Mr. Joſeph Ames, Secretary to the Soc. of Antiquaries.

(k) Sir George Buc's Third Univerſity of England, fol. 1615, at the end of Stowe's Annals, as before, p 984.

from the example of the old foreigners, has before been; and there being alſo enough of the leaves in that collection to gain them the preſervation of binding, the impreſſion will not be ſo liable to be loſt, or ſoiled, and torn, as the works of our beſt Penmen uſually in a few years are, through the publication of them in the manner aforeſaid, moſt liable to all the caſualties of deſtruction.

[Beſides the eminent maſters in the art of Penmanſhip mentioned in the preceding note, the following may deſerve to be enumerated.

John Bland was remarkable for his neat manner of writing, and curious improvements in the practical hands, for mercantile buſineſs. His 'Eſſay in Writ-'ing, exemplified in Forms of Buſineſs,' contains twenty-one folio plates, engraved by George Bickham. This work is executed with great neatneſs, as well as judiciouſly adapted to the uſes of trade, and mercantile affairs. He publiſhed alſo ſome ſmaller pieces.

William Brooks publiſhed, in 1717, his 'Delight-'ful Recreation for the Induſtrious.' It contains twenty-one plates in an oblong folio of plain and practical writing, very neat and true, with his picture in the front, agreeably to a very common practice among Writing-Maſters, who ſeem, generally, to have had a very ſufficient idea of their own importance. 'Our author, in the dedication of this book 'to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, &c. informs us, 'that a young Indian Prince brought from South-'Carolina, whoſe name was George Forcenza, was 'committed to his care, by the Society for the pro-'pagation of the Goſpel in foreign parts, to be 'inſtructed in Writing, Arithmetic, and the prin-'ciples of the Chriſtian religion; who, in about ſix 'months time, he ſays, by his aſſiduous application, 'could read the Bible, and made ſuch a progreſs in 'Writing and Arithmetic, as was ſcarcely to be 'paralleled, in ſo ſhort a time (*).'

(*) Maſſey's Origin and Progreſs of Letters, comprehending a compendious account of the moſt celebrated Engliſh Penmen, &c. 8vo, 1763, p. 31.

William Chinnery had alſo conſiderable merit in his profeſſion, but does not appear to have publiſhed much. Zachary Chambers, Eſq; Deputy-ſurveyor of the royal lands to King George II. and Regiſter of all his Majeſty's manors, meſſuages, woods, parks, foreſts, chaces, &c. has alſo been much celebrated for his Penmanſhip.

But one of the modern maſters of the greateſt merit in this way is Mr. Joſeph Champion. Mr. Maſſey ſays, 'In the account that I give of ſome of our 'Penmen, I am obliged to ſpeak with a ſort of cold-'neſs and reſerve. But in deſcribing the works of 'this gentleman, I am under no apprehenſion of 'letting my pen run too faſt, in the tract of pane-'gyric. So many beauties, in every part of his 'Chirographic performances appear; ſuch a maſterly 'command in the execution of them, that they merit 'a general indiſcriminate applauſe (57).' His principal works are, 1. The Parallel, or Comparative Penmanſhip, exemplified in four of the greateſt original foreign maſters, viz. L. Materot, L. Barbedor, J. V. Velde, and Amb. Perlingh. It contains twenty-four oblong folio plates. It was publiſhed in 1750, and engraved by Mr. Thorowgood, one of the beſt Writing-Engravers in the kingdom. But this artiſt declared, that 'no graver could fully come up to 'the neatneſs, ſpirit, and freedom, that there was 'in Mr. Champion's hand.' 2. New and complete Alphabets, with the Hebrew, Greek, and German Characters. It contains twenty-one plates, in an oblong folio, engraved by Geo. Bickham, and publiſhed in 1754. 3. The Tutor's Aſſiſtant in teaching Arithmetic, forty plates, in 4*to*. 1747. 4. The living Hands, above forty plates, in 4*to*. 'Our author 'was likewiſe a great encourager of, and contributor 'to, that very large and elaborate work, Mr. George 'Bickham's Univerſal Penman; for which he de-'ſigned and wrote forty-ſeven folio pieces; wherein 'is exhibited, a delightful and exquiſite variety of 'Penmanſhip both for uſe and ornament (58).'

(57) Maſſey, ubi ſupra, p. 37.

(58) Maſſey, ubi ſupra, p. 40.

Solomon Cook was alſo an eminent Writing-Maſter, and publiſhed, about the year 1730, in folio, The Modiſh Round-hand, in twenty-ſix plates, engraved by W. Fryer. Mr. Maſſey ſays, 'The ex-'amples are all in the Round-hand, which now prin-'cipally obtains, and is happily practiſed in almoſt 'all ſorts of pen-buſineſs; ſo that a remark of our 'late celebrated engraver, Mr. George Bickham, in 'his Britiſh Youth's Inſtructor, is very juſt and 'pertinent. "Our forefathers, ſays he (properly "ſpeaking, about fourſcore years ago), practiſed a "ſmall running Secretary-hand; and it was as great "a rarity to meet with a perſon, who had not been "ſo taught, as it is now to meet with one that is. "To talk then of Round-hand, and perſuade the "practice of it, was the ſame thing, as it would be "now to introduce a new character, unknown to "the generality of mankind. But at length, the "excellency and uſefulneſs of the Round-hand pre-"vailing with many eminent Penmen to ſhew the "delicacy of it, and its natural tendency to facilitate "and diſpatch buſineſs, being conſidered, it is uni-"verſally received, and practiſed by all degrees of "men, in all employments, the law only excepted "(59)."

(59) Maſſey, ubi ſupra, p. 66.

As we are on the ſubject of hands, and the different methods of writing at different periods, it may not be improper to add another extract from Mr. Maſſey's book, as before referred to, relative to the ſeveral kinds of hand uſed by ſome of our Princes: And there is the greater propriety in our inſerting theſe obſervations here, becauſe they appear to have been written by Mr. Oldys, the original author of this article. Mr. Maſſey ſays, 'I copied theſe obſerva-'tions from the MS. Adverſaria of my friend William 'Oldys, Eſq; of the Heralds Office, viz.

"King Henry VIII. wrote a ſtrong hand, but as "if he had ſeldom a good pen.

"King Edward VI. wrote a fair legible hand.

"Queen Elizabeth wrote an upright hand, like "the baſtard Italian.

"King James I. wrote a poor ungainly character, "all awry, and not in a ſtraight line.

"King Charles I. wrote a fair open Italian hand, "and more correctly perhaps than any Prince we "ever had.

"King Charles II. wrote a little fair running "hand, as if he were in haſte, or uneaſy till he had "done.

"King James II. wrote a large fair hand.

"King William had a cloſe and ſlender free "hand.

"Queen Anne wrote a fair round-hand (60)."] T. [H] Other memorable ones have ſince occurred.] Among which none was perhaps more remarkable than that trial for a golden pen, made within the memory of many living, between one Mr. German, a Writing-Maſter of note in Queen Anne's reign, and one of the ſix, at that time moſt celebrated for the art; but whether it was Mr. Snell, or Mr. More, we cannot now poſitively recollect. It ſeems there was a competition high reputation for it, that no leſs than eighteen copies of commendatory verſes, compoſed by learned and ingenious men of that time, were printed before it, as A. Wood has obſerved (l). He alſo, by other exerciſes of his pen, recommended himſelf to many other perſons of knowledge and diſtinction; particularly by making fair tranſcripts of the learned and ingenious compoſitions of ſome honourable authors, which they deſigned as preſentation-books to the Queen, or others their friends or patrons, of high dignity: ſome of which Manuſcripts have been, for the beauty of them, as well as for their inſtructive contents, preſerved as curioſities to theſe times. ['Among the Harleian 'MSS. (now in the Britiſh Muſeum) No. 2368, there is a thin vellum book in ſmall 'quarto, called Archeion. At the end of that treatiſe is a neat flouriſh, done by com-'mand of hand; wherein are the letters, P. B. which ſhews (ſays a note in that book), 'that this copy was written by the hand of Peter Bales, the then famous Writing-Maſter 'of London (*).'] We know not very particularly, what other branches of the art he cultivated, more than that we ſhall, in our future obſervation, find him diſtinguiſhed alſo with the title of a Scrivener, as if he had ſome time profeſſed the buſineſs of writing contracts, or drawing deeds, or other inſtruments; unleſs the ſignification of that word was not then ſo confined as it is now, to that particular buſineſs, but was uſed in a general ſenſe, as the word Scribe ſometimes is, to ſignify a practitioner in any branch or degree of penmanſhip. A. Wood was not ſufficiently acquainted with the matter of fact, to repreſent it with due diſtinction, when he ſaid that Bales was engaged in the Earl of Eſſex's treaſons in the year 1600 (m), as if he were an adherent to that unfortunate nobleman, or inſtrumental in promoting his tumultuous inſurrection. The truth is, he was innocently engaged, in ſerving the treacherous purpoſes of one of the Earl's mercenary dependants, named John Danyell of Dereſburie, Eſq; as he ſtyles himſelf. This man, reſolving out of the diſtreſſes of his Lord, to raiſe a conſiderable addition to his own ſubſtance, already ſufficient, being worth, by his own confeſſion, above twenty thouſand pounds (n), contrived, in compaſſing the ſame, through his deceitful procurement of Bales to imitate ſome of that Earl's letters, which he would have ſold to his Lordſhip's enemies, as he did the copies to his friends for a large ſum of money, contrived, I ſay, the abſolute loſs of his own eſtate, liberty, and reputation, the complete ruin of himſelf and his family; being ſentenced in the Star-Chamber, upon the evidence of Bales, and other witneſſes, in June 1601, to pay a fine of three thouſand pounds, for which his whole effects were extented, alſo to be expoſed on the pillory, and endure perpetual impriſonment beſides, for his ſaid forgery, fraud, and extortion. As this will appear a notable example, how a comfortable and creditable competency may be deſtroyed, by covetous and diſhonourable courſes to augment it, it will deſerve a more ample Memorial than has been hitherto divulged in print; not only to deter others from the guilt of any ſuch like impoſition, but to clear Mr. Bales from having any guilty hand in this. He was indeed, for a ſhort time, under ſome confinement, that they might be certain of his evidence at the trial; and we find alſo, that Bales wrote a large Declaration to the Counteſs of Eſſex, and, it ſeems, at her requeſt or command, wherein he ſet forth the whole manner of his engagement, and the juſtification of his conduct in this buſineſs; which narrative would no doubt have laid open this black contrivance to our full ſatisfaction. But though we ſhall be chiefly obliged for the particulars thereof, to another Declaration alſo in manuſcript, written by that criminal himſelf [I], this cunning contriver of his own ruin; yet were he calmly to have reviſed, (l) Athen. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 287.

(60) Maſſey, Part. i. p. 100.

(*) Maſſey, ubi ſupra, p. 7.

(m) Ibid.

(n) Danyell's Dyſaſters, 4to, MS. fol. 2. Dedicated to Sir Thomas Houlcroft, and annexed to his Declaration, hereafter more particularly cited.

petition between German and More; and the former inſiſted that the latter ſhould ſet the copy, which More did in theſe words:

As more and More our underſtanding clears,
So more and more our ignorance appears.

German fell ſhort of the art, as well as the wit of his antagoniſt; but in the judgment given for the golden pen, it was ſaid, that the umpires found ſuch an equality of excellence in the two copies, that they could not, for ſome time pronounce a determination, till one of them eſpying in Mr. German's piece, the omiſſion of one ſingle point, only the tittle of an i, they gave their verdict againſt him, and ſo he loſt the prize. The ſaid Mr. More has made ſome ingenious reflexions upon ſuch like vain and impotent oppoſitions, as are made againſt thoſe who have approved themſelves maſters of their Art, upon the occaſion of what was firſt begun by that Daniel Johnſon againſt Bales; where he ſays, 'Art with me is of 'no Party.' A noble emulation I would cheriſh, while 'it proceeded neither from, nor to, malevolence. 'Bales had his Johnſon, Norman his Maſon, Ayres 'his (61) Matlock and his Shelley; yet art the while 'was no ſufferer. The buſy-body, who officiouſly 'employs himſelf in creating miſunderſtandings be-'tween artiſts, may be compared to a turn-ſtile, 'which ſtands in every man's way, yet hinders no-'body; and he is the ſlanderer, that gives ear to 'the ſlander.'

(61) So in the laſt edit. of Mr. More's Eſſay on the Invention of Writing, &c. p. 5. In the firſt edit. before his friend Mr. Shelley's ſecond Part of Natural Writing, it is only A— had his S—, which ſeems rather to be meant for Mr. Snell. Quære, How is it in the ſecond edition? when we know Mr. More was alive, and whether he died not before the Third?

[I] We ſhall be obliged for the particulars thereof, to another Declaration in manuſcript, written by that criminal himſelf.] The ſaid author, John Danyell, was a different perſon from that John Daniel, who was a Maſter of Arts at Oxford, in the beginning of King James the Firſt's reign, and a publiſher of ſome muſical compoſitions; alſo different from that John Daniel, who was brother to Samuel Daniel, the noted Poet and Hiſtorian; and publiſher of ſome of his poetical works, after his death, towards the latter end of the ſame reign; nor yet the ſame with that John Daniel contemporary with this laſt, who publiſhed ſeveral ſea-charts, or maps of the coaſts of England, and other countries. But this John Danyell of Dereſbury (62), whereof we are farther to ſpeak, having ſerved the Earl of Ormond in Ireland above twenty years, procured to be recommended by him to the Earl of Eſſex, for ſome employment under his Lordſhip, or in the court. He mentions a preferment or two, which he expected through the Earl's means, but failed of; and appears to have been very diligent in procuring advantageous leaſes, or purchaſes of ſeveral parſonages in Cheſhire: He cites two letters, he ſays the Earl wrote to the Dean and Chapter of Chriſt Church in Oxford, the one in May 1594, to favour him in renewing a leaſe of the rectory of Runcorne in revised, and at sufficient distance of time had thought maturely on it, he might have perceived enough therein, under his own hand, to account for his sufferings; like that bird in that county, and the other in July following, wherein the Earl appears to recommend his servant T. Brook to the same, adding,—'I understand that one 'Danyell, pretending a desire to take a lease of certain 'concealed tithes, hath, under that colour, got certain 'hamlets, which were before demised in my servant's 'lease, and now seeketh to take advantage against 'him, upon some words mistaken; wherein my ser-'vant is chiefly to be holpen and relieved.' He pretends also the Countess had written several letters against him to the Lord-Keeper about that lease; and that for these disappointments, his expences, and loss of time, in service and attendance upon them, he looked upon the Earl and his Lady to be greatly indebted to him. The first step he took to make himself reparation, was to marry the Countess's gentlewoman, with whom, as he insinuates, he received hopes of an handsome portion: He cites the release, which the Countess gave his wife for eight thousand pounds, and all other accounts that had passed between them, dated in May 1596. And in 1598 appears to have solicited the Earl for a commission, or company of soldiers in Ireland, through the mediation of Sir Edward Dyer; who, by his answer, seemed not very forward to espouse his pretensions. But through the interest of his father-in-law, Sir Guyllyam Merrycke, his Lordship was persuaded to stand godfather at the christening of one of his children, which was termed the first badge of his Lordship's favour or reconciliation. But he never received further countenance or confidence of trust, in any negociations of importance; nor recompence for his services, or preferment with his wife, as he says, except some plate at their marriage, and at the christening of two of his children. But when the fatal impetuosity in that Earl's disposition, gave way to further inflammations by his parasites and incendiaries; till at last he made that turbulent eruption, in order to remove an opposite party at the court, which proved the cause of his untimely end; Danyell found an opportunity to throw his angle into the troubled stream; resolved to raise himself a profit upon the Earl's ruin; and that, out of some letters written by his Lordship to his Lady, which fell into his hands. Some of those letters, were eight or nine years old; mentioning matters of affection, and perhaps courtship; some expressed his dislike of divers persons; others treated of some solicitations made to, and transactions with, or for him; some contemning the time he spent at court, and shewing his desire of a private life; others describing his loathsome and unpleasant employments; and in many of them, a continual impatience and disquiet of mind. Danyell pretends he could not read any of these letters, till Bales had copied them; to serve a purpose which will hereafter appear. Indeed the Earl, like many others who write in great hurry, was apt to make his pen, in some syllables, or terminations of a word, dwindle away oftentimes into a scrawl, or strait line; but nothing so illegibly as is here pretended, by a man who had been conversant with him at least six years, and could give us the purport of his letters above, and make quotations from two of them, written to his Lady from Ireland, in August 1599; from the one, as follows:—

(62) There is a Book in print, entitled, The Birth, Life, and Death, of the Jewiſh Unction, by John Daniel of Dereſbury, Eſq; Lond. 8vo, 1651.

'The Queene's commandment in her servyces may 'breake my necke; but my enemyes practyces shall 'never trouble my hearte.' And these words from the other,—'I trust, (*) or longe, to reduce Ireland to a 'peaceable government; if the traytors of England 'be not confederates with the traytors of Ireland.' And yet there was nothing in these letters that the Law took exceptions at, to the Earl's detriment at his trial; though Danyell, to terrify his afflicted Lady into a compliance with his barbarous extortions for them, falsely threatened her he could sell them to his Lordship's enemies, the Lord Cobham and Sir Walter Raleigh, for three thousand pounds (63); and the counterfeits he imposed upon her, for which she gave him more than half that money, might aggravate the Earl's rashness, and consequently his guilt; therefore the covetous impostor escaped no kind of reproach when his deeds were detected, and suffered the censure for them without any compassion. Thus much was thought necessary to be premised of this story, that our readers might not be misled by his palliated representation of it. They may therefore now behold the juggle in the shape and colours he has transformed it into, for want of Master Bales' more ingenuous discovery; and these are Danyell's words:——'About the '20th of October 1599, I found bie chance, under 'my bed, in my house, then at Charing Crosse, a 'verie fayre caskett covered with purple velvett and 'laced with gould lace, which I thought strange in 'that place; and fynding the same easye to be opened, 'I satysfyed my desyre; wherein appeared letters, 'sent from the late Earle to his Ladie, wrytten in 'such a hand as I coulde not reade. But whyleft I 'was thus perusing these letters, my wyffe, being 'abroade came suddenlie into the howse; so that I 'tooke onlie one bundle of those letters hastilie owt 'of the caskett, and sett the caskett under the bed 'agayne, locked with the ffall of the cover, for it 'was a spring locke; which bundle of letters I carried into my studie, where yt remained careleslie above three monethes, before I dyd any thynge 'with them, for I could not understand the contents 'of any of them. Besydes I havinge, as many thousands 'then had, an absolute opynyon of the Earle's fidelitie 'and allegeance to her Majestie, state, and countrie, 'could not be brought to ymagyne that hys Lordship 'had any evell thought to any of these, untyll, by 'some specyall intelligence, I had notyce that hee 'was very dyssyrous to accept of any condycions, to 'have friendshipp with some, whom before he termed 'hys enemyes. Which thinge I thought could hardlie 'proceede from hym, unleste there were greatter cause 'then was generally conceyvid, or I before could 'ymagyne. Thereupon I began to feare the event, 'and a lyttle to looke about me, whether there were 'matter in the letters that myght endanger mee; and 'having taken the sayde bundle of letters as aforesayd, I revewed the same, and styll fynding that I 'could not reade them, was much trobled how to 'understand the effect of them. In this tyme of 'delyberacion, the Countess sent for her caskett; 'which was delyvered to her kynswoman, and Gentleman-Usher, beinge both sent for them, to my wyffe, 'in a coache, about the 7 of Januarie, 1599. But 'the next day after, the Countesse of Essex came to 'my house herselfe, and demanded her letters mysling, 'which I purposelie concealed, both from the Countesse, and from my wyffe; for I was resolved to 'use meanes to understand the contents of them, before they were delyvered to the Countesse, or to any 'other. But when the Countesse perceyvid that I 'denyed her letters, then sayd she, I must tell my 'Lord of them, if it were my owne mother that 'had them; ffor he hath dyssyred to have a sight of 'them, and I tould hym, they were in your wyffe's 'keepynge; therefore, now they are gone, I must 'tell hym how the matter ys; otherwyse, I shall be 'condempned; although I know there ys noe bad matter in the letters, neither against her Majestie, nor 'State; but onlie, because my Lord hath alreadie 'dyssyred to have a syght of them; therefore, I pray 'make diligent search for them among your servants: 'And soe departed, not then very much dyspleased, 'as yt seemed to me. But the next day, both I and 'my wyffe, were dyverslie solycyted from the Countesse: and at the last, in some sortte, there was a 'thousand pounds offred for the letters mysslyng; which 'I feared to accept, or to be knowen of having any of 'the letters. For bie thys large offer I had cause more 'and more to suspect the Earle's doing; whereof, after 'some consyderation had in that behalfe, aboute the 'tenth of February then next following, I took four 'or syve of those letters owt of the bundle, and went 'with them to Mr. Peter Bales, ye Scryvener; who, 'perceyving that I could not reade them, endevored, 'by all menes, to make me understand the contents 'of them. But then, I was to devyce, in what manner I should remove all susspycyon, either how I came 'bie those letters, or els, to what purpose I mente 'to converte them. Therefore, to colour the same 'from Bales; I tould hym, That thys employment was 'done by the Counttesse of Essex; and bye that meanes, 'I kept from hym my intent and purpose; which was, 'that yf there hapned matter of state, or tytt matter to be dyscovered out of any of the letters, I 'would

(*) i. e. e'er long.

(63) Danyell's Letter to the Countess of Essex, MS. in the Vol. hereafter quoted.

bird of prey, who ſaw the fatal feathers which had dropped from his own wings, upon the arrow that ſhot him. In 1607, there being one thouſand pounds of the aforeſaid fine paid

'would have manyfeſted the ſame to her Majeſtie. 'But then I was to travell a little further, and to 'devyſe in what manner I ſhould underſtand the reſt 'of the letters, which were aboute twenty-ſix in 'number; and thoſe, I was unwilling that Bales 'ſhould be acquainted withall; for then hee myght 'have endangered mee, bie makyng the fyrſt dyſ-'covery, and ſo have reaped the fruytes of my 'travell, yf there had chanced any matter of State 'in the reſt of the letters. So that I willed Bales to 'ymytate the ſayd Earl's hand-wrytinge as neare as 'he could, both in the lynes, letters and ſuperſcryp-'tyon; which I did, to obſcure my ſecret determi-'nacion from hym: And hee willinglie performed all 'my dyſſyre, in wryting thoſe letters dyvers tymes, 'as I appoynted hym; eſpecyallie one letter. But 'lett me here remember the opynyon of ſome, that 'have condempned mee, for that I dyd not cauſe Bales, 'at the fyrſt, to wryte the Earle's letters playnlie, 'which they thynke had been better and redyar 'to teach mee to reade the letters I brought to hym, 'and that therefore thys my longe deſcryption of 'learnyng to reade the ſayd letters ſhould be idle and 'vayne; whych cannot be denyed, as ſome under-'ſtand yt to bee in the letters which I brought to 'Bales. But I would gladlie know how you can de-'vyſe to learne the reading of thoſe letters which 'I dyd not bringe to hym, for the cauſes before re-'membred: Therefore, for my parte, I could fynd 'noe better meanes than to have Bales ymytate the 'Earles hand-wrytynge, which brought me to thys 'perfectyon, that by takyng the beſt of Bales, imy-'tations, and uſing them as carectors to the reſt of the 'letters, I found theſe benefytts; fyrſt, bie peruſing 'Bales, in wrytinge the ſayd letters often over, I was 'reaſonable perfect in making the letters knowen to 'me. Then before he left mee, I could reade thoſe 'fyve letters ſoe perfect, that I did dyctate ſome 'letters as he wrote them. Thirdlie, being afterward 'at Ritchmond; I uſed the beſt of Bales, ymytations as 'carectors to the reſt of the letters; whereof I wrote 'four or five copyes, with ſtoppes (*), which I ſent to 'the Counteſſe. Fourthlie, and before that tyme, I 'found matter which ſerved my turne, to prove 'Bales, meanyng towards mee, in the tyme of his 'wryting thoſe letters; and therebie freed myſelf from 'the Cunſtable, bie uſing theſe words in one of 'the letters before remembred, viz. The Quene's 'commandment, &c. which wordes, for my remem-'brance, I wrote forth with my owne hand, and cauſed 'Bales to incert thoſe wordes into dyvers of hys 'copyes, becauſe I myght, at one tyme or other, 'take occatyon to prove Bales meanyng towards me; 'which I did, not for any doubte I made of the words 'to be matter of State, but to prove from tyme to 'tyme how Bales was diſpoſed towards me; for he 'gave me greate cauſe to ſuſpecte hym, in ſpeakyng 'one tyme to me very particularlie, ſaying, That if 'he had found matter of ſtate in the letters, hee would 'have ſent for a Cunſtable and areſted me. Then 'he aſked mee what I ment, to have him copy thoſe 'letters? I ſayd, That the Counteſſe of Eſſex willed 'mee. But why doe you cauſe mee to wryte one 'letter ſoe often, ſaid hee, and ſo lyke a hand you 'cannot reade? I anſwered, That I ment to geve 'ſome a gull; ffor I gulled hym, in that hee beleeved 'mee, tuching the Counteſſe commandment; which 'fyctyon I made, for feare of a Cunſtable; for at 'that tyme I had all the bundle of letters about 'mee. But when he tould me, that Mr. Wyſeman 'ſolycyted the Earle of Eſſex, to have a Clarke's 'place in the Courte for hym; as I take yt, to be 'Clarke to her Majeſtie, of her Highnes bills to be 'ſigned, yf I be not deceyved; for theſe cauſes, I 'had ſome reaſon to doubt his delinge; otherwiſe, 'I had uſed hys help in reading ſome part of the 'letters concealed. But fynding hys affectyon, and 'ſeeing his dyſpoſytion, I had more reaſon to ſeeke 'meanes to eſcape the Cunſtable, then to haſſard my 'eſtate, by engaging myſelfe into the danger of ſoe 'craftie a perſon; which might eaſelie have hapned 'dailie, yf he had found matter of ſtate in any of the 'letters. Nevertheleſs, yt ys fallen more heavelie 'upon mee, in another kynd, then I dreamed of; 'not onlie bie Bales meanes, but unfortunatly 'wrought by ſundrie devyces, beyond my expecta-'tion: I being more carefull, to preſerve the credyt 'and reputations of others, then to preſerve the 'eſtate of mee, my wyffe and chyldren, am taken 'in a ſnare, bie comytting my tonge to ſylence; and 'bie ſuffering one halfe of my determynation to be 'obſcured: much lyke the man that alleadged theſe 'words of the Pſalme, Non eſt Deus, but omytting 'the preceding words, Dixit inſipiens, in corde ſuo: 'As the Nun did, bie readinge Omnia probati, but 'never turned the leaffe.

'So that, henceforth, I never uſed Bales further, 'in thys buſyneſs; nor, ſythence that tyme, had I 'any dealing with him; untyll he, and one Peter 'Ferriman, aboute the laſt of March 1600, made 'meanes to borrow twentie pounds of mee for ſix 'monethes; which motyon, at the fyrſt, I enter-'tayned; but when I heard Ferriman's (64) bond was 'lyttle worth then I refuſed to deale further with 'them; but yf I had knowen, or ſuſpected myſelfe 'to be in eyther of theyre dangers, yt had been a 'ſmale matter for mee, at that tyme, to have lent 'them 20 pounds, wherebie I had eſcaped theyr con-'ſpyrycies; which I little eſteemed, becauſe I could 'not ymagyne, that theſe matters would, bie any 'meanes, have growen to ſoe high a poynte; con-'ſydering that neyther my intent, act, nor any part 'of my meanynge, could, bie any meanes, worke in 'the Earle any ſuch cauſe of dyſcontment, or any 'ſuch cauſe of offence to the lawes of this land, as 'is now conceaved and devulged, bie ſome to be 'agaynſt her Highnes lawes, as matter of ſtate, 'and the cheffe cauſe of the Earle's overthrowe; 'which I will labour to manyfeſt heareafter. But 'when Bales was denyed twentie poundes, hee pre-'ſentlie combined with Ferriman, and deviſed a 'Declaration; conteynyng, and amplyfying the man-'ner of my dealing with hym, about the ſayd letters, 'and delyvered the ſame to her Ladiſhip, about the '2d of Aprill; which came not to my knowledge, 'tyll about the Earle's arraignment: So that thys 'Declaration comyng then to the late Earle hys hands, 'was never publyſhed, but kept ſecrett, from the 'ſecond of Aprill 1600 till the eight of Febrarie 'followinge; at which tyme, the Earle, being at 'Eſſex-houſe the day of hys pretended action, before 'the Lords, and a greate multytude there aſſembled, 'pronounced theſe words (65); viz. That hys lyffe was 'ſought; that he ſhould have ben murthered in his 'bedd; that hee had ben perfydyouſlie delte with; 'that hys hand had ben counterfeyted, and letters 'wrytten in hys nume; and that therefore they were 'there aſſembled to defend their lyves; with moch other 'ſpeech to the lyke effect: Hereupon the Lord 'Cheffe Juſtyce ſayd unto the Earle, that yf hee 'had any ſuch matter of greyffe, or yf any ſuch 'matter were attempted, or purpoſed agaynſt hym, 'hee willed the ſayd Earl to declare yt; aſſuring hym 'that yt ſhould be trulie related to her Majeſtie, and 'that yt ſhould be indifferentlie heard; and juſtyce 'ſhould be done, whoſoever yt concerned. Thys 'offer of the Lord Cheyffe Juſtice, dyd not then 'agree with hys Lordſhip's purpoſes; for he ment 'to endevour another matter, as hath ben ſpread 'abroade; and knew the truth to bee otherwyſe, as 'hys Devynes have ſett forth, that hymſelfe verie 'honourablie confeſſed at hys laſt breath, in hys 'humbled mynd, which ſhall appeare more at large 'in another place. But to returne to my purpoſe, 'after I had made this end with Bales, about the '20th of Februarie 1599, I determined by way 'of petytion to have delyvered the ſayd bundle of 'letters to the Queene's Majeſtie, then being at Rytch-'mond; whither I repayred, and ſtayed there ſix 'days together for that purpoſe: But although I had 'greate dyſſyre to performe the ſame, and, for the 'cauſes afforeſayd, was before that tyme, retyred from 'the late Earl, yeat, being ſtyll eſteemed to be one 'of his followers, I was ſtayed from approchinge her 'Majeſties preſence; ſo that yt greeved mee greatlie, 'conſydering I had followed and ſerved in the Court 'ſoe many yeares, and alwayes mayntayned myſelfe 'in ſtate of a gentleman; and then, to be kept from preſentinge (*) Deſigned to intimate, that where he made them, he had re-ſerved ſome mat-ters of import-ance.

(64) This is the ſame P. Ferri-manwhoſeLetter is before quoted; and the ſame, to whom J. Davies in his Scourge of Folly, p. 200, directs an epi-gram; declaring, that, through love, this Peter keeps the Keys of his Heart's Heaven, and yet is locked in.

(65) See alſo a Declaration of the Treaſons of the late Earl of Eſſex and his Complices, &c. 4to, 1601, Sign. F. 2, &c.

paid into the Exchequer, King James granted, by his letters patent, to the relict of the ſaid Earl, then Counteſs of Clanrickard, the remaining two thouſand pounds, to be paid in ‘ preſentinge myſelfe to her Majeſtie, and altogether ‘ rejected, in delyvering the ſayd petytion and letters ‘ as I would; bie reaſon whereof I was dyſcoraged, ‘ and alſoe croſſed in performyng my dutie and deter- ‘ mynation in that behalfe; whereupon enſued, that ‘ through the ymportant requeſt, and pytyfull mone ‘ made bie the Counteſſe, and others at her requeſt, ‘ at the laſt I yealded to come and ſpeake with her ‘ honour in York-houſe, where the Earl of Eſſex ‘ was then comytted to the cuſtodie of the Lord- ‘ Keeper; and her Ladiſhip, at my comyng thether, ‘ uſed many urgent and vehement perſwatyons, viz. ‘ That ſhe lyttle thoughte I had any ſuch letters, as ‘ thoſe I ſent her copyes of, from the Court. For, ‘ ſaid ſhe, I proteſt I thought thoſe letters had been ‘ burnt longe ſynce; and now I perceyve you have ‘ them, and meane to delyver them to the Quene, ‘ to the undowing of my Lord and mee: If you will ‘ delyver mee my letters, I will procure my Lord to ‘ bee better to you than hee hath ben, and beſydes, ‘ you ſhall have full recompence for all your loſſes.’ After all this courtſhip, all theſe promiſes, as he pretends, and a great deal more, he was ſtruck with compaſſion; and prevailed on to part with the letters, for a ſum of money, agreed upon in the following manner. When he came from Richmond, he had a great deal of diſcourſe with the Counteſs, at York-houſe; who expreſſed abundance of remorſe at the obſtructions that had been made to the improvement of his fortune, and their neglect of allowing ſome handſcme proviſion with his wife, all which ſtopped his return to the Court; expecting the effect of theſe fair words, which, ſays he, ſeemed then as ſweet as honey, but in the end as bitter as gall. To go on in his own ſtile, ‘ The next day the Counteſs ſent a Knight, Sir ‘ Edward Dyer, to my houſe at Charing-Croſs; who ‘ told mee, that hee had not, as yeat, any warrant ‘ to deale with me; but ſayd, he hard of ſome matter ‘ betwene me and the Counteſſe of Eſſex; therefore ‘ dyſſyred I would come to his lodgings the next ‘ morning, which I dyd; and then he confeſſed, that ‘ the Counteſſe had entreated hym to take order with ‘ mee; and ſoe wyſhed that I ſhould ſett downe ‘ the cauſe of my greyffes, and the effect of my ‘ demand; to which I anſwered, that non knew better ‘ then hymſelf, what wronge, loſſe, and hynderance, ‘ I receyved bie followinge the ſaid Earl.’ So repeats his Lordſhip’s failing to prefer him to the Queen’s ſervice? recommending another to the parſonage of Runcorne; and the not having received any fortune with his wife: ‘ Then the Knight took pen and inke, ‘ ſaying, he would ſett downe a thouſand pounds for ‘ my recompence; and I tould hym, that three thou- ‘ ſand pounds would hardlie anſwere my loſſes. Then ‘ he offred mee ſeventeen hundred pounds; to which ‘ I anſwered, that I was worthie of a 1000 l. with a ‘ wyffe in marryage, and a 1000 l. more, in recom- ‘ pence of my ſervices, and other loſſes; and then he ‘ charged me with my promys, becauſe I had before ‘ referred myſelfe to his judgment, and therefore ſayd, ‘ that twentie pounds more ys all I can geve; which, ‘ by his perſwaſion, I yealded to accept; whereupon ‘ he willed me to write the cauſe of my demand, ‘ and ſubſcribe my name under this ſumme of 1720 ‘ pounds; which ſumme he had before written in ‘ figures upon a whole ſheet of paper; under which ‘ ſumme, I wrote theſe words; The ſaid ſumme of ‘ 1720 l. I dyſſyre to have, in conſyderation of my ‘ wyve’s marriage, and our ſervyces; and then ſub- ‘ ſcribed my name, John Danyell: Which he ac- ‘ cepted on the Counteſſe’s behalf; and the next ‘ day, being the third of March 1599; hee, and ‘ others, brought to my houſe at Charing-Croſſe, ‘ 1720 pounds. Thys money being receyvid, the ‘ letters myſſing, were called for; I went with that ‘ money to my cloſett, and brought down all the ‘ bundle of letters; and then, thoſe four or five ‘ letters whereof I had ent copyes from Rytchmond, ‘ as afforeſayd, were ſpecyallie dyſſyred; which ‘ copyes they had brought, to conferre together with ‘ the orygynalls; for which orygynalls I made ſearech, ‘ in the bundle of letters; but being ſtyll very un- ‘ readie in the hand-writing, I was longe in ſeekyng ‘ for them. Then one of them who was more per- ‘ fect in reading the Earle’s hand-wryting, tooke the ‘ bundle out of my hands, and found the orygynals ‘ preſentlie; and in examining, began to reade them ‘ openlie; but the other blamed hym, and bade hym ‘ reade to hymſelfe; which being donne, the petycyon ‘ to her Majeſtie, and my letter to the Counteſſe from ‘ Rytchmond, were brought forth, and in peruſing ‘ the ſayd petycyon, one ſhaked hys head, and ſayd, ‘ thys matter was neare broching: And ſoe they both ‘ dyſſyred, that the Counteſſe letter to my wyffe, ‘ the petycyon to her Majeſtie, and my ſaid letter to ‘ the Counteſſe, with all the copies of the ſaid let- ‘ ters, might be burned; all which was performed ‘ accordinglie. And after thys, I was demanded, yf ‘ I had made any acquynted with the ſayd letters: ‘ I tould them, I had the help of one Bales, to teache ‘ me to reade ſome of them. Then they entreated ‘ mee to ſwere upon a booke, that I had delyvered ‘ all the letters, and copyes, which came to my hands. ‘ I anſwered, that I had either delyvered them, or ‘ burned them, before their face: And thereupon ‘ they both departed, very well pleaſed: For within ‘ two days after, the Counteſſe ſent me word, ſhe ‘ was ſatyſfyed in every reſpect, and then wyſhed me ‘ as much good of her money, as ſhe had comfort ‘ in receyving her letters.’

In moſt other parts of his book, whence we have tranſcribed this moſt material circumſtance, he is inceſſantly upon his juſtification; and is for convincing us of his ſincerity and innocence throughout this tranſaction, by telling us that, ‘ Yff I had not holden ‘ myſelfe free from all danger of law, I would ‘ never have reſumed the inherytance of the par- ‘ ſonage of Mynſhull, in my own name, paying for ‘ the ſame 520 l. nor have bought the ſtate of the ‘ parſonage of Hackney; which coſt me above 700 l. ‘ with reparations, new buylding, and making the ‘ aſſurances with other charges. Beſydes, I delyvered ‘ out plate, to the value of 300 l. in guylte and ‘ ſylver; with many oxen, kyne, horſes and geldings; ‘ together with apparel; which I made, to attend ‘ in the court, and other goods; for which I had ‘ bonds, ſtatutes and judgments, with other aſſurances ‘ from ſeverall perſons, to the value of 1600 l. in ‘ good debt, all which parſonages, debtes, and the ‘ aſſurances for the ſame, I paſſed in my own ‘ name, after I receyved the ſayd ſumme of 1720 l. ‘ which may ſatisffie every reaſonable man, that I ‘ helde myſelfe free from all danger of the law; al- ‘ though the contrarie hath hapned agaynſt me.’ After the Counteſſe of Eſſex had thus finiſhed with Danyell, ſhe cauſed Bales to draw up a Declaration of his whole engagement in this affair; which he did in the beginning of April 1600, and it appears, that beſides his own name, there were thoſe alſo ſigned to it, of Peter Ferriman, and George Lylle as parties, ‘ or witneſſes to the matter of fact contained therein; which Danyell never heard of, though he had often been with the Counteſs at York-houſe, and at the Lady Walſingham’s, at Barn-Elms, ſince he received the money aforeſaid; till Bales himſelf told him of it, as they were going together to Weſtminſter, the day of the Earl’s arraignment; at which, as well as before, at Eſſex-houſe, his Lordſhip objected, out of that Declaration, the counterfeiting his hand, and other indirect practices uſed upon his letters. At the Earl’s Trial, as appears in a manuſcript account of it, Mr. Attorney took occaſion of entering into the matter of counterfeiting his Lordſhip’s letters, and declared it was performed by his Lordſhip’s direction, that others might be charged with it: But the Earl ſaid, he was ſo far from employing Danyell to procure ſuch copies, that he earneſtly deſired his puniſhment; yet the robbery of his Lady’s caſket, and extortion from her of ſo much money, was then overlooked; the letters being acknowledged in court, to have nothing of moment in them againſt the ſaid Earl (66). But in little more than a twelvemonth after the writing of the ſaid Declaration, both that, and the evidence of its author, were made uſe of, at the conviction of John Danyell in the Star-Chamber, for forgery and coſenage; and he was fined, pilloried, and impriſoned, as was before declared. He ſpent his time in the Fleet much in writing Apologies, Petitions, Letters, and Dedicain the ſame annual proportions as the other had been; to reimburſe her loſſes by the ſaid fraudulent extortioner. A true abſtract of that grant is here ſubjoined, for the better underſtanding of this affair [K]. After the aforeſaid cenſure of John Danyell, and what he has ſaid of Mr. Bales, little more occurs to us of this our famous Penman. Whether he ever hurt himſelf, by any ſuch improvident generoſity, as to be eaſily drawn into ſuretyſhip by his acquaintance, for any conſiderable ſums of money; or it is only a mere alluſion to his name, we are not certain; but we have met with it, uſed in a manner proverbially, in ſome humorous diſplay of characters publiſhed in the beginning of King James's reign, where ſome extravagant ſpendthrifts are deſcribed to have been reduced to ſuch a ſituation, as To need the friendſhip of Peter Bales; which may indeed ſignify no more, than that they were, or likely to be, arreſted for debt, and wanted ſome friends who would be their Bails (o). However that be, an oblique and invidious (o) His name is applied to ſuch like ſenſe, as we remember, in a ſcarce old tract, entitled, The Black Book, 4*to*, 1604.

(66) The Arraignment of Robert Earl of Eſſex and Henry Earl of Southampton, in the Great Hall of Pleas at Weſtminſter, her Majeſty then lying at Whitehall, fol. MS.

Dedications of them, to King James, Queen Anne, &c. All which may be ſeen in his MS. volume before us (67), from whence we have above recited every paſſage in which he mentions Mr. Bales. We find him further by this book, to have been in the Fleet at leaſt four years; where himſelf, his wife, and three or four children, were reduced to the extremity of having nothing to live upon, but the profits of certain artificial flowers; ſome of them froſted, ſome of needle work, and others called ſattin flowers; which ſhe invented and diſpoſed of for three of thoſe years together; as appears by the petition of the ſaid Jane his wife, to the King; wherein ſhe prays, that ſhe may have the ſole privilege of vending her ſaid inventions. There is a Tract at the end of this book, alſo of his writing, called Danyell's Dyſaſters; in the dedication whereof, to Sir T. Houlcrofte, he tells him, that he here preſents to his diſcreet patience, the firſt fruits of his travail, ſince his liberty. But if he could have borrowed that patience he celebrates in his patron, he would not have turmoiled his brains with ſuch unſatisfying repetitions of his caſe; from whence it were eaſy to fill two or three ſheets more, with the ebullitions of his corroding inquietude; and all to the ſame purpoſe already mentioned, though in different words; ſo true it is, that He who will not take Conſcience for his Conductor, ſhall have her for his Tormentor. But that no future reader of the extracts above, from this MS., may be perverted by the ſpecious pretences therein, of Danyell's procuring copies of the Earl's letters, only to find offences in them, for which the ſtate might condemn him juſtly, and not to ſell them, as well as the originals; we ſhall conclude, with Mr. Camden's account of the matter in theſe words: 'To this cauſe '(Eſſex's) alſo belongeth a cenſure given at this time 'in the Star-Chamber; and therefore is not to be 'paſſed over in ſilence. I ſaid before, that the Earl 'complained of his letters being counterfeited; hereof 'a diligent enquiry was made, and a notable impoſture 'diſcovered. The Counteſs, his wife, miſdoubting 'ſome miſchief to her huſband and herſelf in this 'troubleſome time, put certain love-letters, which 'ſhe had received from him, into a cabinet, and 'intruſted them in the keeping of a Dutch woman 'named Rihove; this Dutch woman hid them at her 'houſe: By chance, John Danyell her huſband (68), 'lighted upon them, read them, and obſerving that 'there was ſomewhat in them which might endanger 'the Earl, and incenſe the Queen, cauſed them to be 'tranſcribed by one that was expert in imitating hands 'very like the original: And when the fearful Counteſs 'was ready to lie-in, he told her, that he would preſently deliver them into the hands of the Earl's enemies, unleſs ſhe would forthwith give him 3000 'pounds. She, to avoid the danger, gave him preſently 1720 pounds (69), and yet for that great ſum, 'ſhe received not the original letters, but the copies 'from the impoſtor; who purpoſed to wipe the Earl's 'adverſaries alſo of a great ſumme of money for the 'originals. For this impoſture he was condemned to 'perpetual impriſonment, fined three thouſand pounds, 'whereof the Counteſs was to have 2000, and to 'ſtand with his ears nailed to the pillory, with this 'inſcription, a wicked Forger and Impoſtor (70).' All that we know further of this John Danyell, may be read in the next note.

(67) Which may be entitled: A Declaration of the Suffrings of John Danyell of Dereſburit, E'q; for his Practiſes with the Earl of Eſſex his Letters, 4*to*, dated from the Fleet, 1602, &c.

(68) There muſt be a miſtake here; for Danyell himſelf calls the daughter of Sir Gilly Merrick his wife, as we before obſerved.

(69) This ſum is erroneouſly printed in the edition before us, which ſhould be corrected as we have done here.

(70) Annals of Queen Elizabeth, fol. 1688, p. 630.

[K] For the better underſtanding of this affair.] The ſaid letters patent ſet forth: That King James, in the fifth year of his reign, made a grant to the aforeſaid Counteſs, now of Clanrickard; in which it appears, that it having been decreed on the 17th of June, in the 43d year of the late Queen's reign, by her counſel in the Star-Chamber at Weſtminſter, that John Daniell of Derſhurie in the county of Cheſter, Eſq; for divers great offences by him committed, in couſining, and indamaging of the ſaid Frances, then Counteſs of Eſſex, and now wife to Richard Earl of Clanrickard; and for divers other wrongs, and abuſes offered unto her, ſhould pay to the ſaid late Queen Elizabeth, her heirs, &c. the ſum of three thouſand pounds for a fine. And it is in the ſaid decree alſo expreſſed, that the meaning of the Lords of the Councell was, to be ſuitors to her Majeſty, that ſhe would allow the ſaid Counteſs two thouſand pounds for her damage, and loſs out of the ſaid fine; for the ſatisfaction whereof, an inquiſition was taken the 14th day of September in the 43d year of the reign aforeſaid, by Thomas Aſton, Sheriffe of Cheſter, of ſuch lands, and goods, whereof the ſaid John Daniell was then ſeized; and they were extended to the yearly value of 68 l. 18 s. 8 d. and the ſaid extent was duely returned. Afterwards the Queen, by her letters patent, under the great ſeal, dated 26th of January in the 44th year of her reign, demiſed, granted, and to farm let, unto the ſaid Counteſs, all the lands and hereditaments of the ſaid John Daniell, mentioned in that inquiſition; to have, and to hold, ſo long as they ſhould continue in poſſeſſion of the crown, for payment of that fine. In which ſaid letters patents there is reſerved the rent of 68 l. 18 s. 8 d. yearly to be paid into the Exchequer. And whereas, by the payment of that rent, and by the ſale of certain goods of the ſaid John Daniell, there has been paid towards the ſaid fine 1024 l. 1 s. 6 d. as by a certificate under the hand of Edward Wardour, Clerk of the Pells, appears (being 24 l. 1 s. 6 d. more than was intended to the crown by that decree). Therefore his ſaid Majeſty, inclining to accord with that intention, grants, by theſe preſents, to Richard Earl of Clanrickard, and the ſaid Lady Frances, now his wife, the remains of the ſaid ſum, or fine, of 3000 pounds as yet unpaid; and all his intereſt in the ſaid extent, and in the ſaid rent of 68 l. 18 s. 8 d. till they ſhall receive the remains of the ſaid fine. And that they may have, hold, and enjoy all the lands, meſſuages, and tenements expreſſed in the ſaid letters patent, and apply to their own uſe, and behoof, all the profits and benefits that may ariſe from the ſaid premiſes, till the fine be fully ſatisfied: And for the better keeping account how the ſame is paid, the ſaid Earl and Counteſs, ſhall, according to the times appointed, pay yearly, into the Exchequer, the ſaid ſum of 68 l. 18 s. 8 d. And the officers thereof, are thereupon hereby authoriſed and commanded forthwith to repay them the ſaid yearly rent. For the doing whereof, theſe letters patents, or the inrollments of them, ſhall be ſufficient warrant and diſcharge to the Treaſurer, Chancellor, &c. and all officers of the Exchequer, &c. Dat. Weſtminſter, the third day of November, in the fifth year of his reign of England, France, and Ireland; and of Scotland, the one and fortieth. Clapham.

Per Breve de Privat. Sigillo.

Irrot' in Theſaurar' Recept. Sccii Dm. Regis Jacobi, 28 Die Novembris 1607. An' Regni ſui Angliæ, ac Franc. et Hibnie, quinto, et Scotie 41*mo.*

Will. Skynner.

Irrot' per Edw. Wardour, Clericum Pellien' { 28 Die Decembr' Anno Quinto Regis Jacobi 1607.

Examinat' per me Thomam Martin, &c.

reflection,

reflection, that ſeems ſome few years after to have been publickly made on his circumſtances, repreſenting him obliged to remove from place to place to avoid his creditors, might favour the former conjecture. This reflection we have in an epigram, compoſed with prejudice perceivable enough, by one of his own profeſſion, as we obſerved before; who has therein traduced his abilities, through envy of the ſucceſs which they procured him; and has perhaps therefore as unjuſtly traduced his circumſtances: For writers, and eſpecially poets, the title of which they both claimed, would envy one another, as well as potters, blackſmiths, and even beggars; the brighteſt authors, as well as the dirtieſt artizans, being ſubject to that mean and beggarly paſſion towards one another, ſo long ſince as the days of Heſiod (p). The epigram aforeſaid, which we take to have been impoſed upon his character, in his ſeemingly decayed, or declining condition, was publiſhed, as we compute, in 1610, and though he therein appears to have been alive when it was written, it is poſſible he might not have been long dead when it was printed: But this is ſubmitted, by a tranſcript here given of it [L], to the judgment of our readers.

(p) In Op. Dies.

[L] By a tranſcript here given of it.] Our reaſon that the book wherein the ſaid epigram is printed, was publiſhed in the year 1610, is drawn from the 170th page of it, where there is an epigram addreſſed to Dr. Geo. Abbot Biſhop of London; he being in that See but that one year. But the epigram which we take to have been written againſt Maſter Bales, is as follows:

Of a Pen for a Running-Hand.

The Hand, and Golden Pen, Clophonian
Sets on his Sign; to ſhew, O proud, poor Soul,
Both where he wonnes, and how the ſame he wan,
From Writers fair, though he writ ever foul:
But by that Hand, that Pen ſo borne hath been,
From Place to Place, that for this laſt half Year,
It ſcarce a ſen'night at a place is ſeen,
That Hand ſo plies that Pen, though neer the neare:
For when men ſeek it elſe-where it is ſent;
Or there ſhut up, as for the Plague, for Rent:
Without which ſtay, it never ſtill could ſtand,
Becauſe the Pen is for a Running-Hand (71).

O.

(71) J. Davies his Scourge of Folly, 8*vo*, p. 104.

BALEY or BAILEY (WALTER), author of ſome treatiſes mentioned below [A], was ſon of Henry Baley of Warnwell in Dorſetſhire, and born at Portſham in that county. He was educated at Wincheſter-ſchool, and admitted perpetual Fellow of New College in Oxford, in the year 1550, after having ſerved two years of probation. Having taken the degrees of Batchelor and Maſter of Arts, he proceeded upon the Phyſic line, and was admitted to practiſe in that Faculty, in 1558, being at that time Proctor of the univerſity, and Prebendary of Dultingcote or Dulcot in the church of Wells, which preferment he reſigned in 1579. In 1561, he was appointed the Queen's Profeſſor of Phyſic in the Univerſity of Oxford. Two years after, he took the degree of Doctor in that Faculty, and at laſt was appointed Phyſician in Ordinary to her Majeſty. He was eſteemed to be very ſkilful in his profeſſion, and was much followed for his practice. He died March the 3d 1592, at 63 years of age, and was buried in the Inner Chapel of New College in Oxford. His poſterity, Mr. Wood tells us, ſubſiſted at Ducklington near Whitney in Oxfordſhire, and ſome of them had been Juſtices of the Peace for the ſaid county (a).

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 255.

[A] He wrote ſome Treatiſes.] I. A Diſcourſe of three Kinds of Pepper in common Uſe. This piece was printed in 1558, in 8*vo*, and dedicated to Sir John Horſey. II. A brief Treatiſe of the Preſervation of the Eye-ſight; printed in Queen Elizabeth's reign in 12*mo*, and at Oxford in 1616, and 1654 in 8*vo*. In the edition of 1616 there is added another Treatiſe of the Eye-ſight, collected from Fernelius and Riolanus; but by what hand, we are not told. They both paſs under Dr. Baley's name. III. Directions for Health, natural and artificial, with Medicines for all Diſeaſes of the Eye, 1626, 4*to*. IV. Explicatio Galeni de potu convaleſcentium et ſenum, et præcipue de noſtræ alæ et biriæ paratione, &c. i. e. 'An Explication of Galen 'concerning the drink of thoſe who are recovering 'from a fit of ſickneſs, and the aged; and particu-'larly concerning the preparation of Engliſh Ale and 'Beer, &c.' This piece was in Manuſcript, in 4*to*, in the library of Robert Earl of Ayleſbury (1). B.

(1) Wood, Ath. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 255.

* For the materials of this article we are indebted to the Rev. Dr. Balguy.

[BALGUY (JOHN)*, an eminent divine of the Church of England, in the preſent century, was born on the 12th of Auguſt, 1686, at Sheffield in Yorkſhire. His father, Thomas Balguy, was Maſter of the free grammar-ſchool in that place [A]; and from him he received the firſt rudiments of his grammatical education. After his father's death, he was put under the inſtruction of Mr. Daubuz, who ſucceeded to the Maſterſhip of the ſame ſchool, Sept. 23, 1696, for whom he always profeſſed a great reſpect (a). In 1702, he was admitted of St. John's college Cambridge, under the care of Dr.

(a) Mr. Daubuz was the author of a Commentary on the Revelations, which is held in good eſteem, and is particularly recommended by Dr. Newton (the preſent learned Biſhop of Briſtol) in his Diſſertations on the Prophecies, Vol. iii. p. 8. 1ſt edit.

[A] His father, Thomas Balguy, &c.] The grandfather of Mr. John Balguy, was Thomas Balguy, a Clergyman in Northamptonſhire, who lived at or near Oundle, and ſeems to have died between the years 1656 and 1659. Thomas Balguy, his ſon, was born in Middleſex, about the year 1643; and, in 1656, was put to ſchool at Oundle, where he remained till 1659; when he was removed to St. John's-college, Cambridge. In 1663 he was admitted to the degree of B. A.; and is believed to have taken afterwards that of M. A. At Lady-day, 1664, he became Maſter of the free-ſchool at Sheffield; where he ſeems to have continued for more than 30 years. He died in 1696, at which time his ſon John was in the 10th year of his age. By the mother's ſide, Mr. John Balguy deſcended from Dr. Weſtfield, Biſhop of Briſtol (1).

(1) A ſhort account of Biſhop Weſtfield may be ſeen in Wood's Athenæ Oxon. Vol. i. Faſti, p. 190.

Edmondſon, and of Dr. Lambert, afterwards Maſter of that college. He frequently lamented, in the ſucceeding part of his life, that he had waſted nearly two years of his reſidence there in reading romances [B]. But, at the end of that time, he had the good fortune to meet with Livy, went through him with great delight, and from thence forward applied himſelf to ſerious ſtudies. In 1705-6, he was admitted to the degree of B. A. and to that of M. A. in the year 1726. Soon after he had taken his Bachelor's degree, he quitted the Univerſity, and was engaged, for a while, in teaching the free ſchool at Sheffield. But whether he was ever choſen Maſter, or only employed during a vacancy, does not appear. On the 15th of July, 1708, he was taken into the family of Mr. Banks (b), as private tutor to his ſon, Joſeph Banks, Eſq; afterwards of Reresby in the county of Lincoln, and grandfather of the preſent Joſeph Banks, Eſq; ſo eminently diſtinguiſhed for his ſkill in Natural Hiſtory, and the expences, labours, and voyages, he has undergone to promote that part of ſcience. Mr. Balguy, in 1710, was admitted to Deacon's orders, by Dr. Sharp, Archbiſhop of York; and in 1711 he was ordained a Prieſt by the ſame eminent Prelate. By Mr. Banks's means, he was introduced to the acquaintance of Mr. Bright of Badſworth, in the county of York; and was by him recommended to his father (c), Sir Henry Liddel, grandfather to the preſent Lord Ravenſworth. In 1711, this gentleman, who lived at Ravenſworth Caſtle, in the county of Durham, took Mr. Balguy into his family; and beſtowed upon him the donative of Lameſly and Tanfield in that county (d). For the firſt four years after he had obtained this ſmall preferment, he did not intermit one week without writing a new ſermon; and all his ſermons were of his own compoſition. Being deſirous that ſo excellent an example ſhould be followed by his ſon, he deſtroyed almoſt his whole ſtock; and committed, at one time, two hundred and fifty to the flames; moſt of which deſerved to have been uſed in the very beſt congregations. In July, 1715, he married Sarah, daughter of Chriſtopher and Sarah Broomhead of Sheffield. She was born in 1686, and by her he had only a ſon, the preſent Dr. Thomas Balguy, Archdeacon of Winchester (e), who owes his Archdeaconry, and all his other preferments, to the favour and friendſhip of Biſhop Hoadly. After his marriage, he left Sir Henry Liddel's family, and lived at a houſe not far diſtant, called Cox-cloſe; where he enjoyed, for many years, the friendſhip of George Liddel, Eſq; member for Berwick upon Tweed (f), a younger ſon of Sir Henry, who uſually reſided at Ravenſworth Caſtle. The firſt occaſion of Mr. Balguy's appearance as an author, was afforded by the Bangorian controverſy. In 1718, he publiſhed, without his name, 'Silvius's Examination of certain Doctrines 'lately taught and defended by the Rev. Mr. Stebbing;' and, in the following year, 'Silvius's Letter to the Rev. Dr. Sherlock [C].' Both of theſe performances were written in vindication of Biſhop Hoadly. Mr. Stebbing having written againſt theſe pamphlets, Mr.

(b) Mr. Banks then lived at Scofton in Nottinghamſhire.

(c) Mr. Bright had taken that name inſtead of Liddel. He was grandfather of the preſent Marchioneſs of Rockingham.

(d) Sir Henry's own houſe was in the Chapelry of Lameſly.

(e) Born Sept. 27th, 1716.

(f) This gentleman paid him the compliment of leaving ten pounds a year to his ſon, for life.

[B] Waſted nearly two years, &c. in reading romances.] If Mr. Balguy had continued to read romances with the ſame avidity which he had done for the two firſt years of his reſidence at Cambridge, the conſequences might have been very fatal to his future improvement. But, as he had the good fortune to recover himſelf early, and to apply to a more regular and important courſe of ſtudies, perhaps his time was not ſo greatly waſted as he himſelf apprehended. A moderate peruſal of the beſt romances may be indulged in youth, as they have ſome tendency to invigorate the fancy. It is well known that Spenſer, Milton, and other Poets, ſtrengthened their imaginations by the reading of them; and it is poſſible that proſe writers may have hence acquired a greater livelineſs of compoſition. We ſhould remember, that the romances of the period we are ſpeaking of, though very unnatural, had, ſeveral of them, much invention; and that they abounded with high and heroic ſentiments of purity, generoſity, and honour. As to the common run of novels, which, of late years, have been poured in ſuch ſhoals upon the public, and which have infatuated ſo many young minds, eſpecially of the female ſex, they are unhappily calculated both to pervert the underſtanding and to corrupt the heart.

[C] Silvius's letter to Dr. Sherlock.] In the courſe of the controverſy, Dr. Sherlock was treated with ſome degree of perſonal ſeverity; ſo far, at leaſt, as was conſiſtent with good manners, which Mr. Balguy never tranſgreſſed. Notwithſtanding this, Dr. Sherlock, when he became a Biſhop, not only ſpoke of Mr. Balguy in the moſt handſome terms, but recommended him to Queen Caroline as worthy of farther promotion. A conduct ſo generous occaſioned, as it deſerved, a genteel letter from Mr. Balguy to the Biſhop, at the time when he was upon the point of being tranſlated from Bangor to Saliſbury. The letter is unfortunately loſt or miſlaid. But Dr. Sherlock's anſwer is preſerved; and we have here inſerted it, as it does great honour to the good-ſenſe, liberality, and candour of that eminent Prelate.

'SIR, Temple, Nov. 2d, 1734.

'I Am very much obliged to you for the favour of 'your's, and for your congratulation upon my re-'moval to Saliſbury. If the relation I ſtand in to you 'ſhould hereafter afford me any opportunity of being 'better known to you, it will be very acceptable and 'agreeable to me. If I have wiſhed you well, and 'that I have, you have been rightly informed; it 'was owing to your merit and great abilities, and 'the opinion I conceived of you from your late 'writings. When I ſay late writings, I have no 'intention to find fault with your former writings; 'leaſt of all with what may more immediately con-'cern myſelf; in regard to which I can truly ſay, that 'I never had a moment's reſentment againſt you in 'my life. We differ in opinion upon ſome points; 'but that is ſo far from leſſening the eſteem I have 'for your judgment, that there is no body I would 'more readily deſire to converſe with on theſe points 'than yourſelf. Surely I ſhould ſee, or you would 'ſee, ſomething that was obſcured by the warmth 'of the controverſy. Give me leave, Sir, to thank 'you for having ſo good an opinion of me as to give 'credit to the report made to you by ſome friend 'of yours. I eſteem it a mark of your goodneſs; 'for I find it hard for perſons unconcerned to think 'that there can be any good will between thoſe who 'have differed publickly in opinion. But I am per-'ſuaded, that oftentimes the imputation of want of 'charity in writers, is more owing to the malignity 'of thoſe who judge, than of thoſe who write. I

Mr. Balguy, in 1720, again appeared from the preſs, in the cauſe of the Biſhop, in a tract, entitled, 'Silvius's Defence of a Dialogue between a Papiſt and a Proteſtant, in 'anſwer to the Rev. Mr. Stebbing: to which are added ſeveral remarks and obſervations 'upon that author's manner of writing.' This alſo being anſwered by Mr. Stebbing, Mr. Balguy had prepared a farther defence: but Dr. Hoadly prevailed upon him to ſuppreſs it, on account of the public's having grown weary of the controverſy (g), and the unwillingneſs of the bookſellers to venture upon any new works relating to it, at their own riſque. For a different reaſon the Biſhop perſuaded him, though with difficulty, to abſtain from printing another piece which he had written, called, a Letter to Dr. Clarke; of whom, through his whole life, he was a great admirer [D]. In 1726, he publiſhed—'A Letter to a Deiſt, concerning the beauty and excellence of moral 'virtue; and the ſupport and improvement which it receives from the Chriſtian revela-'tion.' In this treatiſe, he has attacked, with the greateſt politeneſs, and with equal ſtrength of reaſon, ſome of the principles advanced by the noble and celebrated writer of the Characteriſtics, in his Enquiry concerning Virtue. On the 25th of January, 1727-8, Mr. Balguy was collated, by Biſhop Hoadly, to a prebend in the church of Saliſbury; among the advantages of which preferment was the right of preſenting to four livings, and of preſenting alternately to two others. The beſt of them did not fall in his life-time. But two ſmall livings were diſpoſed of by him; one to Mr. Robinſon (b), who married his wife's ſiſter; the other to his own ſon. In the year 1727, or 1728, he preached an aſſize ſermon at Newcaſtle upon Tyne, the ſubject of which was party ſpirit. It was printed by order of the Judges, and either inſcribed or dedicated to Dr. Talbot, Biſhop of Durham (i). 'The Foundation of moral Goodneſs, or a farther Enquiry into the 'Original of our Idea of Virtue,' was publiſhed by him in 1728. This performance, which is written in a very maſterly and candid manner, was in anſwer to Mr. Hutcheſon's Enquiry into the Original of our Ideas of Beauty and Virtue; and the deſign of it is to ſhew, that moral goodneſs doth not depend ſolely upon inſtincts and affections; but is grounded on the unalterable reaſon of things. Mr. Balguy acquired, about this time, the friendſhip of Dr. Talbot, Biſhop of Durham; for which he was chiefly indebted to Dr. Rundle, afterwards Biſhop of Derry: though ſomething, perhaps, might be due to his acquaintance with Dr. Benſon [E], Dr. Secker, and Dr. Butler. Through the aſſiſtance of his friends in the Chapter of Durham, ſupported by the good offices of Biſhop Talbot [F], he obtained, on the 12th of Auguſt 1729, the vicarage of North-Allerton, in Yorkſhire, at that time worth only two hundred and ſeventy pounds a year, on which preferment he continued to his death. This was, in ſome meaſure, his own fault: for he neglected all the uſual methods of recommending himſelf to his ſuperiors. He had many invitations from Dr. Blackburne, Archbiſhop of York, and Dr. Chandler, Biſhop of Durham; but he conſtantly refuſed to accept of them. In the ſame year (k), he publiſhed, 'The ſecond part of the Foundation of moral Goodneſs; illuſtrating and (g) It ſhould ſeem, too, that the Court, as well as the public, was grown weary of the controverſy.

(b) This was Chriſtopher Robinſon, M.A. author of ſome Diſcourſes in Defence of the Chriſtian Revelation.

(i) It was afterwards reprinted, together with five others, and again, at the end of his Collection of Sermons, publiſhed by himſelf, in an 8*vo* vol.

(k) 1729.

'enforcing

'heartily wiſh you health and happineſs, and I pray 'God to have you in his good keeping.

'I am, Sir,

'your very humble ſervant,

'Tho. Bangor.'

[D] Another piece which he had written, called, a Letter to Dr. Clarke; of whom, &c.] From two letters of Biſhop Hoadly to Mr. Balguy, it appears that both the Biſhop and Dr. Clarke were exceedingly fearful of any thing's being publiſhed which might be prejudicial to the Doctor's intereſt; ſo that he could not then (1720) have come to the reſolution which he afterwards formed, of declining farther preferment, rather than repeat his ſubſcription to the thirty-nine articles. The ſolicitude of Dr. Hoadly and Dr. Clarke to prevent Mr. Balguy's intended publication, was the more remarkable, as it did not relate to the Trinity, or to any obnoxious point in theology; but to the natural immortality of the ſoul, and ſuch philoſophical queſtions as might have been deemed of an innocent and indifferent nature.

[E] But he was acquainted alſo with Dr. Benſon, &c.] How great the regard was which this excellent Prelate had for Mr. Balguy, will be apparent from a letter he wrote to him upon receiving from him a preſent of his volume of ſermons.

'Berry-ſtreet, Weſtminſter, March 3, 1747-8.

'Dear Sir,

'I Received laſt night from Mr. Pemberton the 'valuable preſent you have ſo obligingly favoured 'me with, for which I think myſelf obliged to re-'turn you my earlieſt thanks. I may ſafely return 'thanks for whatever you write before I read it. I 'am ſure to be highly entertained, and it muſt be 'my own fault, if I am not improved too. I am 'able to eſtimate the pleaſure I muſt have in reading 'the diſcourſes now firſt printed, from what I had 'in reading the ſix which were printed before. 'Theſe, in proportion as they are more in number, 'muſt give me ſtill more pleaſure. With my thanks, 'my good wiſhes of all kinds wait upon you, and 'with much regard

'I am,

'your faithful obliged ſervant

'and affectionate brother,

'M. Gloceſter.'

[F] Supported by the good offices of Biſhop Talbot, &c.] To the letter of thanks, which was written by Mr. Balguy to Dr. Talbot on this occaſion, the good Biſhop, who was a diſtinguiſhed patron of eminent and worthy men, returned the following anſwer.

'Newſtead near Epſom, Dec. 1, 1729.

'I Received yours of the 25th of Nov. in which you 'make too great acknowledgments of the little 'ſervice I did you. I do aſſure you, you cannot 'enjoy greater ſatisfaction in your new cure, than I 'do in having been inſtrumental in promoting ſo 'worthy a perſon to that poſt. I pray God preſerve 'your health, and give ſucceſs to your labours 'for his glory, and the good of the ſouls committed 'to your care.

'I am,

'your very affectionate friend

'and brother,

'W. Dureſme.'

'enforcing the principles and reaſonings contained in the former: Being an anſwer to 'certain remarks communicated by a gentleman to the author.' The writer of theſe remarks was Lord Darcy. Mr. Balguy has inſerted, at length, every article of his Lordſhip's obſervations, and affixed to each of them a diſtinct reply. His next publi-
(l) 1730. cation (l) was, 'Divine Rectitude: or, A brief Enquiry concerning the moral Perfections 'of the Deity; particularly, in reſpect of Creation and Providence [G].' A queſtion then much agitated was, concerning the firſt ſpring of action in the Deity. This is aſſert-
(m) Vid. the article, Grove. ed by our author to be rectitude; while Mr. Grove (m) contended that it is wiſdom, and
(n) A diſſenting miniſter at Tunbridge Wells. Mr. Bayes (n) that it is benevolence. The difference between Mr. Grove and Mr. Balguy was chiefly verbal; and it is generally underſtood that the latter had the advantage in point of perſpicuity and propriety both of ſentiment and expreſſion. Mr. Balguy and Mr. Grove differed materially from Mr. Bayes, as they ſuppoſed that God might have ends in view, diſtinct from, and ſometimes interfering with, the happineſs of his creatures. How far they were right in their opinion, is not the buſineſs of this place to determine; but it muſt be acknowledged, that Mr. Bayes's ſcheme was more ſimple and intelligible. The Eſſay on Divine Rectitude was followed by 'A ſecond Letter to a 'Deiſt, concerning a late book, entitled, Chriſtianity as old as the Creation; more par-'ticularly that chapter which relates to Dr. Clarke.' To this ſucceeded, 'The Law of 'Truth, or the Obligations of Reaſon eſſential to all Religion, to which are prefixed 'ſome remarks ſupplemental to a late tract; entitled, Divine Rectitude.' All the treatiſes that have been mentioned (excepting the aſſize ſermon, and the pieces which were written in the Bangorian controverſy) were collected, after having gone through ſeveral ſeparate editions, by Mr. Balguy, into one volume, and publiſhed with a dedication to Biſhop Hoadly. This dedication hath been reprinted in the late edition of the works of that Prelate, together with two letters of the Biſhop relating to it, one to Mr. Balguy, and the other to Lady Sundon. The greateſt regard for our author is expreſſed by Dr. Hoadly in both theſe letters, and he acknowledges the pleaſure it gave him to receive the ſincere praiſes of a man whom he ſo highly eſteemed. 'I have prevented,' ſays he, 'multitudes of dedications to myſelf; and hitherto diſcouraged every one that hath 'offered itſelf; but there are ſome perſons, at leaſt one, from whom ſuch things cannot be 'diſagreeable. I cannot think it a blameable vanity, even to be proud of a public mark 'of eſteem from thoſe who deſerve the higheſt themſelves; and ſomething as different 'from being tickled with the common nauſeous panegyric, as any thing can be.' In the letter to Lady Sundon, the Biſhop obſerves, 'I remember in Don Quixote a ſaying, —"Though I know this man to be a coxcomb, yet how ſweet is flattery even from "him!" What muſt I ſay, when it comes from a man of great and uncommon ſenſe, who () Life of Biſhop Hoadly prefixed to the firſt vol. of his works, p. 39, 40. 'believes every word of it to be true ().' In 1741, appeared Mr. Balguy's Eſſay on Redemption [H]. This, and his volume of ſermons, including ſix which had been publiſhed before, were the laſt pieces committed by him to the preſs. A poſthumous volume was afterwards printed, which contained almoſt the whole of the ſermons he left behind him: Mr. Balguy may juſtly be reckoned among the divines and writers who rank with the great names of Clarke and of Hoadly. He was the friend of theſe illuſtrious men, and was aſſociated with them in maintaining the cauſe of rational religion and Chriſtian liberty. His tracts will be allowed to be maſterly in their kind, by thoſe who may not entirely agree with the philoſophical principles advanced in them; and his ſermons will long be held in eſteem, as ſome of the beſt in the Engliſh language. He was remarkable for his moderation to Diſſenters of every denomination; not excepting even Roman Catholics; though no man had a greater abhorrence of Popery. Among the Preſbyterians and Quakers he had a number of friends, whom he loved and valued; and with ſeveral of them he kept up a correſpondence of letters as well as viſits. Among other Diſſenters of note, he was acquainted with the late Lord Barrington, and Philips Glover, Eſq; of Lincolnſhire, author of an Enquiry concerning Virtue and Happineſs, publiſhed after his deceaſe, in 1751 (§). With the laſt gentleman, Mr. Balguy had a philoſophical

(§) Mr. Glover printed, when living, two pamphlets, one on Sincerity; the other, on the Diſtinction between Virtue and Religion.

[G] Divine rectitude, &c.] This tract was deſigned originally to explain the divine diſpenſations, on the ſubjects of creation, providence, redemption, and a future ſtate. The author meant to ſhew, that each of theſe might be better explained on the principle of rectitude, than on that of benevolence. The two firſt heads only were conſidered in the pamphlet now mentioned. The third we have in his Eſſay on Redemption. The fourth was never executed.

[H] In 1741, appeared Mr. Balguy's Eſſay on Redemption.] In this Eſſay, he explains the doctrine of atonement in a manner ſomething ſimilar to that which was afterwards adopted by Dr. John Taylor of Norwich. Biſhop Hoadly, though highly pleaſed with the work, did not think that Mr. Balguy had entirely ſucceeded in the poſitive part. 'I thank you, 'ſays that Prelate,' in a letter dated March 6, 1741-2, 'for the moſt ingenious little book you ſent 'me ſome time ago. You have done honour to 'Chriſtianity, by ridding it of ſome abſurd doctrines 'which have been long made almoſt eſſential to it: 'or at leaſt by making ſo ſtrong an effort to this end '—too ſtrong, in my opinion, for any to withſtand, 'or render ineffectual; however diſpleaſed they may 'be. The other part was exceedingly agreeable to 'me; but I cannot yet ſay, ſo convincing. I dare 'ſay you receive from many hands objections againſt 'both parts. I hope you will reconſider the poſitive 'part again and again, and any arguments you may 'have heard againſt it. Some, who are very glad 'of the demoliſhing part of it, and who think there 'is nothing in the other, but what every good man 'might wiſh to be the truth, are not yet perſuaded 'that what you have writ is the whole of that branch 'of the Goſpel-ſcheme which you handle; or that 'the evidence produced from the New Teſtament 'itſelf is ſufficient to eſtabliſh it.'

correſpondence. Having always had a weakly conſtitution, his want of health induced him, in the decline of life, to withdraw almoſt totally from company, excepting what he found at Harrogate; a place which he conſtantly frequented every ſeaſon, and where, at laſt, he died, on the 21ſt of September, 1748, in the 63d year of his age.] K.

BALIOL or BALLIOL (JOHN DE), [A] founder of Balliol-College in Oxford, was the ſon of Hugh de Balliol [B] of Bernard's-caſtle in the dioceſe of Durham (a). He was a perſon very eminent for power and riches, being poſſeſſed of thirty Knights fees [C], a conſiderable eſtate in thoſe times. But he received a great addition thereto, by his marriage with Dervorgille [D], one of the three daughters and coheireſſes of Alan of Galloway (a great Baron in Scotland) by Margaret the eldeſt ſiſter of John Scot, the laſt Earl of Cheſter, and one of the heirs to David, ſome time earl of Huntingdon (b). From the year 1248 to 1254 he was Sheriff of the county of Cumberland (c); and in 1248 was conſtituted Governor of the caſtle of Carliſle (d). Upon the marriage of Margaret daughter of King Henry III. to Alexander III. King of Scotland, the guardianſhip of them both, and of that kingdom, was committed to our Sir John de Balliol (e), and to another Lord (f); but, about three years after, they were ſo grievouſly accuſed of abuſing their truſt, that the king marched towards Scotland with an army, to chaſtiſe them. However, in conſideration of the many important ſervices performed, in the moſt difficult times, to K. John the King's father's, by Hugh our John Balliol's father; and eſpecially by a ſum of money, of which he had great plenty, he ſoon made his peace (g). In the year 1258, he had orders to attend the King at Cheſter, with horſe and arms, to oppoſe the incurſions of Lhewelyn Prince of Wales (h). And, two years after, in recompence of his ſervice to King Henry, as well in France as in England, he had a grant of two hundred marks; for diſcharging which, the King gave him the wardſhip of William de Waſſingle (i). In part of the years 1260, 1261, 1262, 1263, and 1264, he was ſheriff for the counties of Nottingham and Derby (k): and in 1261, was appointed keeper of the honour of Peverell (l). In 1263 he began the foundation and endowment of Balliol-college in Oxford, which was perfected afterwards by his widow (m) [E]. During

(a) Dugdale's Baronage, Vol. i. p. 523, 524.

(b) Ibid. p. 524. & p. 526. & 609.

(c) Rot. Pip. 32 Hen. III. Cumb.

(d) Pat. 32. Hen. III. m. 8.

(e) M. Weſtm. ad ann. 1252. p. 350.

(f) Robert de Roſs of Werke.

(g) M. Weſtm. ad ann. 1255. p. 362. et Mat. Paris Hiſt. Angl. Edit. 1640. p. 908, 909.

(h) Clauſ. 42 Hen. III. m. 11.

(i) Clauſ. 44. Hen. III. m. 5.

(k) Rot. Pip. Nott. & Derb.

(l) Pat. 46. Hen. III. m. 20.

(m) H. Savage's Ballio-fergus, as above p. 6.

[A] BALLIOL (JOHN DE). So his name is commonly written (1). But it is found otherwiſe in different authors: As, for inſtance, in M. Paris, de Bailliol (2), de Bailloil (3), de Baillol (4), and de Baliol (5). In Matthew of Weſtminſter, de Baliolo (6), de Bailol (7), and de Baillol (8). And in Henry de Knyghton, de Balliolo (9). Modern authors commonly write it Baliol.

[B] Was the ſon of Hugh de Balliol.] N—— de Balliol, Lord of the Manors or Seigneuries, of Baillol, Harcourt, Dampat, and Horne in France (10), came in with William the Conqueror.——His ſon Guy, as is ſuppoſed, was made Lord of the Foreſt of Teeſdale and Marwood by William Rufus, who gave him alſo the manors of Middleton and Gainsford in Northumberland (11).—— He was ſucceeded in theſe eſtates by his ſon Bernard de Baillol, who built that ſtrong caſtle on the banks of the river Teeſe, called from him Bernard-caſtle.———— His ſon was named Euſtace;——whoſe ſon Hugh de Baillol was father of John, who is the ſubject of this article. This is the pedigree of that noble family, as traced by Sir W. Dugdale (12). Dr. James Anderſon ſets it down thus (13), Guy—Guy—Hugh—Bernard—John. And Dr. Henry Savage, in a manner different from both, viz. Bernard Balliol—John—Edward—Bernard—John founder of Balliol college (14). Which is the trueſt, we cannot poſſibly determine, at ſo great a diſtance of time.

[C] He was a perſon very eminent for power and riches, being poſſeſſed of thirty Knight's fees.] That he was eminent for power and riches, we learn from Matt. Paris; who calls him —— magnæ virum potentiæ & auctoritatis (15), and —— Miles dives & potens (16). ———— And that he was poſſeſſed of thirty Knights fees appears from hence: becauſe in the twenty-ninth of King Henry III. he paid thirty pounds upon levying the aid for marying the King's eldeſt daughter, for the thirty Knights fees he held (17). And again, in the fortieth year of the ſaid King, he paid ſixty pounds for the ſame, upon levying the aid for making the King's eldeſt ſon a Knight (18). ———— To ſatisfy the reader's curioſity, we ſhall give a ſhort account of what a Knight's fee was. It was then ſo much inheritance in land as was ſufficient to maintain a Knight; and this was fifteen pounds a year in the time of King Henry III. (19): but by the Statute 1 Edw. II. c. i. a Knight's fee was twenty pounds a year. Sir Tho. Smith rates it at forty pounds per ann. (20) According to Sir Edw. Coke, a Knight's fee contained four hundred and eighty acres of land (21): but, according to others (22), ſix hundred and eighty, or eight hundred, acres. So that, allowing for the difference in the preſent value of money from what it was in the reign of King Henry III. a Knight's fee of twenty pounds per ann. then, would be now worth near 400 l. a year.

[D] Dervorgille] Her name is variouſly written, Dervorgille, Dervorgulle, Dervorguille, Dervorguilla, Devorgoyle, and Devorgulla (23). She was, in her own right, Counteſs of Huntingdon, Lady of Galloway, and alſo coheireſs to the Earldom of Cheſter. The two former titles, of Counteſs of Huntingdon, and Lady of Galloway, ſhe obtained, as being one of the three daughters and heirs of Alan Baron of Galloway, by his wife Margaret, eldeſt daughter of David Earl of Angus, Galloway, and Huntingdon, brother to William the Lion, King of Scotland (24). But it is a queſtion, whether this Earldom was ſuffered actually to devolve unto her, inaſmuch as ſhe is in no record whatſoever, ſtiled Counteſs or Lady of Huntingdon, nor her huſband John de Balliol Earl thereof, though they enjoyed the lands and caſtle of Fodringhay in Northamptonſhire thereunto belonging; only ſhe gave the arms of the Earl of Huntingdon in her ſeal (25). She was alſo, as I have ſaid, coheireſs to the Earldom of Cheſter; becauſe her Mother, Margaret, was the eldeſt ſiſter of John (ſurnamed Scot) Earl of Cheſter, who died without iſſue in the year 1244. But King Henry would not ſuffer ſo great an honour, as that County-Palatine was, to be divided among women: Therefore he took it into his own hands, and annexed it to the Crown for ever; giving the laſt Earl's ſiſter ſome lordſhips and eſtates by way of compenſation: And to the Lady Dervorgille, in particular, the manors of Luddingland and Torkeſey in Lincolnſhire, and Yarmouth in Norfolk (26). Her two ſiſters were, Helen, married to Robert de Quincy hereditary Conſtable of Scotland; and Chriſtiana wife of William de Fortibus Earl of Albemarle, who dying without iſſue, her eſtates in the counties of Northampton and Lincoln, fell to John de Balliol and his wife (27).

[E] In 1263 he began the foundation and endowment of Balliol-college, in Oxford, which was perfected afterwards by his widow.] I follow Dr. Savage (28), in placing this foundation under the year 1263. But Mr.

(1) See A. Wood, Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. Lib. ii p. 69, &c.

(2) Page 430.

(3) Page 639, 909.

(4) Page 907.

(5) Page 993.

(6) Edit. Francof. 1601, p. 350.

(7) Page 385.

(8) Page 387.

(9) Inter Decem Scriptores, edit. Lond. 1652, col. 2447.

(10) Hector. Boëthius, Hiſt. Scot.

(11) Royal Genealogies, by Ja. Anderſon, D. D. Lond. 1732, fol. p. 759.

(12) Ubi ſupra, p. 523, 524.

(13) Ubi ſupra.

(14) Ballio-fergus, or a Commentary upon the Foundation, Founders, and affairs of Balliol College, &c. Oxford, 1668, 4to. p. 6.

(15) Hiſt. Angl. edit. ut ſupra, ad ann. 1255. p. 908.

(16) Page 909.

(17) Rot. Pip. 29 Hen. III. Northumb.

(18) Ibid. 40 Hen. III.

(19) See M. Paris as above, p. 926.

(20) De Republica Anglorum, c. xvii.

(21) 2 Inſtit. p. 596.

(22) Camden's Britannia, in The Degrees of England, Vol. i. edit. 1722, p. 246.

(23) Savage, ubi ſupra, p. 4.

(24) Anderſon, ubi ſupra, p. 758.

(25) Savage, ubi ſupra, p. 3.

(26) Dugdale, ubi ſupra, p. 45, 46.

(27) Ibid. p. 524 See alſo Anderſon, p. 758.

(28) Ballio-fergus, ubi ſupra, p. 6.

During the conteſts and wars between King Henry III. and his Barons, he firmly adhered to the King; on which account his lands were ſeized and detained by the Barons, but reſtored again through one of his ſons interpoſition (n). In 1264, he attended the King at the battle of Northampton, wherein the Barons were defeated (o): but, the year following, he was taken priſoner, with many others, after the King's fatal overthrow at Lewes (p). However, it ſeems he ſoon after made his eſcape, and endeavoured to keep the northern parts of England in King Henry's obedience (q). Moreover, having obtained authority from Prince Edward, he joined with other of the northern Barons, and raiſed all the force he could to reſcue the King from his confinement (r). He died a little before Whitſuntide, in the year 1269 (s): leaving three ſons behind him, Hugh, and Alexander, who both died without iſſue: and John, afterwards choſen King of Scotland. See the next article.

(n) Clauſ. 47. Hen. III. m. 3.

(o) Guliel. Riſhanger Continuat. M. Pariſ. p. 993, &c. and Hen. de Knyghton ubi ſupra, col. 2447, 2448.

(p) M. Weſtm. ad ann. 1264. p. 387.

(q) Ibid. p. 390.

(r) Clauſ. 50. Hen. III in dorſo m. 9.

(s) Dugdale, ubi ſupra, p. 524.

Mr. A. Wood, without aſſigning any reaſons for it, brings it as low as the year 1267, or 1268: which undoubtedly was done on purpoſe to make it later than that of his college of Merton (29); for which he hath been ſeverely animadverted upon by Mr. W. Smith, in his Annals of University-college. —— All that our founder John de Balliol did, was to ſettle yearly exhibitions upon ſixteen ſcholars (30), till he ſhould provide them a fit houſe and other accommodations. His allowance to them was only eight pence a week each ad communem eorum menſam (31); now equal to ten or twelve ſhillings. At his death he recommended this pious deſign to his wife and executors. In purſuance of which, the Lady Dervorgille ſettled thoſe ſcholars in a tenement ſhe hired of the Univerſity, in Horſemongers-ſtreet (32), in St. Mary Magdalen's pariſh, now part of the upper end of the preſent quadrangle of the College (33), and preſcribed ſtatutes for their government in the year 1282 (34). Two years after, ſhe purchaſed another tenement near the former, called Mary's-Hall; and when ſhe had repaired it, the ſociety were here ſettled by her charter; confirmed by her ſon Sir John de Balliol, afterward King of Scots, and by Oliver, Biſhop of Lincoln (35). By which confirmation it appears, that this new foundation was ſtiled Domus Scholarium de Balliolo; and dedicated to the Holy Trinity, the glorious Virgin Mary, St. Catherine, and the whole court of Heaven (36). Her endowment of the ſame conſiſted in ſome houſes in Oxford; which, together with the ſite of the College, coſt her fourſcore marks (37); and lands in Stamfordham, and the Howgh, in the county of Northumberland; but moſt of theſe were afterwards loſt (38). However, by the ſubſequent benefactions of Sir Philip de Somervyle, Kt. who founded ſix ſcholarſhips; of Peter Blundell, &c. and eſpecially of John Warner, Biſhop of Rocheſter, who gave fourſcore pounds a year, for the maintenance of four ſcholars born in Scotland; the revenues of that College are now able to maintain twelve fellows, and fourteen ſcholars. M.

(29) Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. Lib. ii. p. 69. 85.

(30) Savage, ubi ſupra, p. 11.

(31) Chronica de Mailros, inter Rerum Anglicarum Scriptorum, Tom. i. Oxon. 1684, fol. p. 241.

(32) Now called Canditch.

(33) Savage, ubi ſupra, p. 8.

(34) Ibid. p. 15. &c.

(35) Ibid. p. 18. &c. 23, 24, 25.

(36) See p. 18. 23.

(37) Ibid. p. 34.

(38) Ibid. p. 23. 24. 27. See alſo A. Wood, Hiſt. & Antiq. as above, p. 69. 70.

BALIOL, BALLIOL, BOILLIOL, BOYLLOL, or BAILLOL (JOHN DE), King of Scotland, was deſcended from a moſt illuſtrious family, and poſſeſſed of very large eſtates in Scotland and France, as well as England, though he chiefly reſided here (a). The particulars of his hiſtory, ſo far as they can be with any certainty collected, either from the writings of hiſtorians or records, are of infinite conſequence to the right underſtanding of the Engliſh and Scottiſh hiſtories, during that period in which he flouriſhed; and for want of having a life of this Prince written with care, and from the authority of original authors, both Engliſh and Scottiſh writers have run into great confuſion, often abuſing each other for involuntary miſtakes, and charging thoſe things on a ſpirit of falſehood and partiality, which were, in reality, owing to miſapprehenſion or want of due intelligence (b). As the clearing up of theſe difficulties in our hiſtory, is the great point aimed at by compiling this life, and as it is indeed a point of far greater conſequence, than the aſſembling the ſcattered memoirs of a perſon ſo long deceaſed would otherwiſe be; it is requiſite for this purpoſe, that we ſhould introduce this article, by giving a diſtinct view both of the ſtate of England and Scotland, at the time to which it relates (c). The great point of policy purſued by King Edward the firſt, was attaining the abſolute ſovereignty of this whole iſland, which he began by the conqueſt of Wales, and had well nigh finiſhed by that of Scotland; which, indeed, he more than once conquered, as we ſhall have occaſion to ſhew in this article. But firſt we are to obſerve, how things ſtood in that kingdom before the extinction of the male line of the Royal family, which gave occaſion to that controverſy, by which John Balliol mounted the throne of Scotland (d). Alexander the third, King of Scots, a Prince equally renowned for his great and good qualities, married, when very young, Margaret, the daughter of Henry the third, King of England, and ſiſter to Edward the firſt, which alliance brought him to have a greater intercourſe with the court of England than moſt of his predeceſſors; and he was ſo happy, as to ſpend his whole life in the ſame intimacy and friendſhip with his father and brother-in-law, notwithſtanding the high dignities they all poſſeſſed, as if they had been private perſons; inſomuch, that he made ſeveral viſits with his Queen to the Engliſh court: and, on the other hand, both her brothers and her nephew Edward, while Prince of Wales, viſited the Queen of Scots in her own kingdom (e). In the midſt however, of all this friendſhip and affection, King Alexander was very careful to avoid doing any thing that might prejudice the rights of his crown, or fortify that claim which the Kings of England had ſet up, as Lords Paramount of the Kingdom of Scotland. Thus, for inſtance, when he went with his Queen to aſſiſt at the coronation of her brother King Edward, who ſucceeded his father King Henry III. in 1272, he took a very extraordinary precaution: for he previouſly obtained from that Monarch a ſolemn act, by which he declared, that the preſence of the King of Scots upon this occaſion, ſhould be no way prejudicial to him or to his kingdom (f). A. D. 1278, we find him again at Weſtminſter,

(a) Dugdale's Baronage, Vol. i. p. 524.

(b) See for the proof of this, almoſt all the Engliſh and Scots Hiſtorians; but particularly Speed and Tyrrel, among the former, and Abercromby among the latter.

(c) Abercromby's Martial Atchievements of the Scots Nation, Vol. i. p. 336.

(d) Fordun Schotichron. edit. T. Hearne, p. 953.

(e) Buchan. in Vit. Alex. III. Hector. Boëth. Scotorum Hiſt. lib. xiii. Leſleus de Rebus Geſtis Scotorum, p. 231.

(f) Appendix to Mr. Anderſon's Eſſay, No. 26.

minſter, where he was preſent in a parliament held by King Edward, in which he did homage to that Monarch by Robert de Bruce, Earl of Carrick, for his lands in England (g). This King Alexander having had long wars and great controverſies with the Monarchs of Norway, at length compromiſed them all, and by a treaty of marriage which is ſtill extant, gave his daughter Margaret, who was alſo niece to King Edward I. to Eric, King of that country. By the ſixteenth article of this treaty, which was concluded in 1281, it was ſtipulated, that the iſſue of this marriage, ſhould ſucceed to the kingdom of Scotland, in caſe the King died without heirs male, of whom he had then two hopeful Princes Alexander and David, even though the iſſue of that marriage ſhould be daughters only (b). This proviſion came very ſoon after to take place, the King loſing firſt his ſon David, and then Alexander Prince of Scotland, who had married the daughter of the Earl of Flanders, but died nevertheleſs without iſſue (i). In this melancholy ſituation of his affairs, King Alexander, to provide in the beſt manner poſſible for the ſucceſſion in his own family, and for the peace of his dominions, engaged the nobility of Scotland, by a ſolemn act, to promiſe allegiance to Margaret the daughter of Eric, King of Norway by Margaret his daughter, which act was dated A. D. 1284, in the thirty-fifth year of that Monarch's reign (k). But he, being at that time a widower, married, in hopes of having male iſſue, a French Lady, daughter to the Earl of Dreux, ſoon after which he moſt unhappily broke his neck by a fall from his horſe, on the 19th of March 1286. Upon his demiſe Buchanan tells us, that the States of Scotland met at Scoon in order to elect a new King (l), which, as we have ſeen, was not in their power to do; neither is it probable, that King Edward of England would have borne with ſuch an attempt as this, to the prejudice of their lawful Sovereign Queen Margaret, the grand daughter of his own ſiſter. The truth of the matter is, that on the 11th of April, A. D. 1286, the nobility of Scotland met at the place before-mentioned, in order to provide for the ſecurity of the government and the execution of the laws, which they did by chooſing ſix guardians or regents, accountable to their Queen when ſhe ſhould be at home and of full age (m). This, however, proved a ſlender ſecurity; for in a ſhort time after theſe guardians fell out among themſelves, and inſtead of preſerving the peace of the kingdom, created therein by theſe unſeaſonable diſputes a civil war, which laſted between two and three years, to the deſtruction of ſeveral of them, as well as to the endangering of their country (n). All this while it ſeems, little notice was taken of the young and abſent Queen Margaret. Her father Eric, King of Norway, at whoſe court ſhe ſtill continued, beheld the growing diſtractions of her ſubjects from afar; but being unable to remedy them by himſelf, had at length recourſe to a friendly mediation of Edward I. King of England, whom, by reaſon of his great power, his neighbourhood to Scotland, the long friendſhip entertained between the two nations, his influence over the guardians, and more particularly, by reaſon of his near relation to the Queen, he thought the fitteſt man in the world to ſee that quick juſtice ſhould be done her. In hopes of this, he commiſſioned his Plenipotentiaries at Bergen on the firſt day of April, A. D. 1289, to go over to the King of England, and in his preſence, to treat with the Scots about affairs relating to the honour and intereſt of himſelf and his daughter (o). Theſe Ambaſſadors were very kindly received by that great Monarch to whom they were ſent, and who had not as yet, at leaſt ſo far as appears from hiſtory, formed any deſigns to the prejudice of Scotland; but, on the contrary, was very aſſiduous in his endeavours to promote the intereſt of its inhabitants, as appears by his letter dated at Clarendon, November 6, 1289, directed to the Prelates, Nobility, and other principal perſons in the kingdom of Scotland, by which he very pathetically exhorts them to a peaceable, ſteady, and faithful obedience to their lawful Sovereign, Queen Margaret, and teſtifies his intention to ſend very ſpeedily ſome of his principal Nobility to enquire into the ſtate of things in their country (p). He did accordingly ſoon after ſend ſuch Commiſſioners, not barely to look into the affairs of Scotland, but upon an affair of far greater importance; for he had now formed a deſign of uniting the two kingdoms, by a marriage between his eldeſt ſon, Edward of Caernarvon, ſtiled afterwards, Prince of Wales, and the young Queen Margaret, which he was deſirous might be accompliſhed with the conſent of the States of Scotland (q). His ambaſſadors accordingly propoſed it in an aſſembly convened for that purpoſe, and ſet forth all the advantages that would attend this marriage with the utmoſt eloquence. There are very different accounts given, of the reception this propoſition met with from the States of that kingdom; for ſome ſay, that it was univerſally applauded; and others, that it was but very coldly entertained (r): The latter ſeems to be the more probable account of the two, becauſe it is certain, that though the point was carried and a treaty agreed on, by which the two kingdoms were to be united, yet the very articles themſelves ſhew, that the Scots obtained all they could aſk, which makes it plainly appear, that they were not over ready to come into this agreement. As they are certainly very curious in every reſpect, but chiefly as they appear to be the firſt plan that was ever drawn for ſuch a coalition, the reader therefore may very probably be inclined to ſee them [A]. That there was a great party formed againſt this meaſure is alſo certain; for Robert (g) Rymer's Fœdera, Tom. ii. p. 126.

(b) Leſleus de Rebus Geſtis Scotorum, p. 232. Rymer's Fœdera, Tom. ii. p. 1079.

(i) Joan. Major. de Geſtis Scotorum, lib. iv.

(k) Rymer's Fœd. Tom. ii. p. 266.

(l) Hiſtoria Scotiæ ad init. l. viii.

(m) Hector. Boeth. Scotorum Hiſtor. l. xiv.

(n) Buchan. Hiſt. Scot. l. viii.

(o) Hector. Boeth. Scotorum Hiſtor. l. xiv.

(p) Rymer's Fœdera, Tom. ii. p. 245.

(q) Fordun. Scotichron. p. 967.

(r) See the Biſhop of St. Andrew's Letter to King Edward, in which this point is fully cleared up, in Rymer's Fœd. Tom. ii. p. 1092.

[A] The Reader therefore may very probably be inclined to ſee them.] The Commiſſioners or Ambaſſadors mentioned in the text, were Anthony, Biſhop of Durham, and Ralph, Biſhop of Carliſle, John, Earl of

Robert Bruce, and ſeveral others, declined taking their ſeats there, though afterwards they came to the aſſembly on the report of the young Queen's death (s). It muſt be admitted notwithſtanding, that King Edward had a very ſtrong party in Scotland, at the head of which was the Biſhop of St. Andrews, whom the King had lately made his Chaplain, and our John Balliol, who had always adhered to the Engliſh intereſt, as indeed moſt of his family had done, and had thereby gained great advantages to themſelves (t) [B]. Some writers of Warren, and Henry, Earl of Lincoln, Sir William de Veſey, Knight, and Henry Newarke, Dean of York: And in the preamble to the articles it is expreſsly ſaid, that they, as procurators, or perſons impowered by their maſter, King Edward of England, negociated this treaty of marriage with the Guardians of the kingdom, and the reſt of the Biſhops, Abbots, and Clergy, as well as with the nobility, Earls, Barons, and the whole Community of Scotland (1); ſo that nothing was omitted that could render this union ſolemn and binding on all parties; and it fully appears, by the penning of the articles, that it was intended to give all manner of ſatisfaction to the Scots, in doing which, the King ran no ſort of hazard: for if there was iſſue of this marriage, all he granted came to his grand-children, and if there was none, he was left to the meaſures he had before concerted. The ſubſtance of theſe articles were as follows:

(s) Buchan. Hiſt. Scot. l. viii. ad init.

(t) Dugdale's Baronage, Vol. i. p. 523.

(1) Rymer. Fœd. Tom. ii. p. 482.

I. That the rights, laws, liberties, and cuſtoms of Scotland, ſhall for ever remain entire and unalterable, and the kingdom continue ſeparated, divided, and free in itſelf from the kingdom of England without any ſubjection, by it's true bounds and limits as it had been before; ſaving the right of the King of England, or of any other perſon whatever, which he or they might have either to the marches or elſewhere, which before this treaty belonged to them, or might juſtly belong to them in time to come.

Mr. Abercromby ſuppoſes, that this ſalvo was inſerted for certain dark and ſecret purpoſes, to which I can by no means agree, becauſe I think the words may be very fairly interpreted of the rights, which either he or ſome of his ſubjects might have to lands within the boundaries of the kingdom of Scotland, as aſſigned by this treaty (2).

(2) Martial Atchievements of the Scots Nation, Vol. i. p. 460.

II. That if Edward and Margaret ſhall die without iſſue of the body of Margaret, the kingdom ſhall revert entire, free, abſolute, and independent, to the next immediate heir.

III. That in caſe of the death of Prince Edward, without iſſue of the body of Margaret, her Majeſty's perſon ſhall be remitted in like manner free and independent to Scotland.

IV. That no perſons either eccleſiaſtick or laick, ſhall be compelled to go out of the kingdom, to aſk leave either to elect or preſent their elects, nor to do their homage, fealty, and ſervices, nor to proſecute law-ſuits, nor, in a word, to perform ought uſual performed in Scotland.

V. That the kingdom of Scotland ſhall have it's Chancellor, officers of State, courts of judicature, &c. as before, and that a new ſeal ſhall be made and kept by the Chancellor, but with the ordinary arms of Scotland, and the name of none but the Queen of Scotland be engraven upon it.

VI. That all the papers, records, privileges, and other documents of the royal dignity of the crown and kingdom of Scotland, ſhall be lodged in ſome ſecure place within the kingdom, at the ſight of the Nobility, whoſe ſeals ſhall be appended to them, and there kept till either the queen ſhall return to her own kingdom, or ſhall have heirs to ſucceed her.

VII. That parliaments when called to treat of matter concerning the State or inhabitants of Scotland, ſhall be held within the bounds of the kingdom.

VIII. That no duties, taxes, levies of men, &c. ſhall be exacted in Scotland, but ſuch as being uſual in former times ſhall conſiſt with the common intereſt and good of the nation.

IX. That the King of England ſhall oblige himſelf and his heirs, in a bond of one hundred thouſand pounds ſterling, payable to the Church of Rome, in aid of the Holy-Land, to make reſtitution of the kingdom, in the caſes aforeſaid, and that he ſhall conſent that the Pope reſtrain him and his heirs by excommunicating them, and interdicting their kingdom, both to the aforeſaid reſtriction, and payment of the ſaid ſum of money, if he or they do not ſtand to the premiſes. And,

X. Laſtly, that King Edward, at his own charges, ſhall procure the Pope to confirm theſe articles, within a year after the conſummation of the marriage; and that within the ſame time, the Bull of his Holineſs ſhall be delivered to the community of the kingdom of Scotland.

Theſe articles and conceſſions were ſealed by the Commiſſioners on Tueſday next before the feaſt of St. Margaret, that is, on the 18th of July, A. D. 1290: And the letters patent for confirmation of this agreement, which was word for word repeated in them, were ſealed with the King's ſeal at Northampton on the 28th of Auguſt following (3); and on the ſame day, the King appointed, by ſpecial commiſſion, the Biſhop of Durham to be Lieutenant to Queen Margaret, and his ſon Prince Edward in Scotland, for preſerving the peace and government of that kingdom, with the advice of the Guardians, Prelates, and great men, according to their own laws and cuſtoms (4); and the Guardians and Nobility of Scotland, with the Governors and Captains of the caſtles and fortreſſes, engaged themſelves by an inſtrument to deliver them up, when their Queen and her huſband ſhould come into that kingdom (5): So that every precaution poſſible was taken for the mutual ſatisfaction of both nations, in caſe this marriage had taken effect, which, as it is ſaid in the text, was defeated by the death of Queen Margaret in the autumn of the year 1291, in the iſland of Orkney, whither ſhe had been conducted by Sir Michael Scott, and Sir David Weems, as Commiſſioners from the States of Scotland to bring her home to her dominions.

(3) Rymer's Fœd. Tom. ii. p. 487. 489.

(4) Ibid. p. 487.

(5) Ibid. p. 488.

[B] And had thereby gained great advantages to themſelves.] It will be proper here to ſhew how this illuſtrious family of Balliol came to have ſuch large eſtates, and ſo great an intereſt, as at this time it plainly appears they had in the kingdom of England. The firſt then of this family whom we find mentioned in the Engliſh hiſtory, is, Guy de Balliol, to whom King William II. gave the manor of Biwell in Northumberland (6): His ſon Bernard de Balliol adhered ſteadily to King Stephen, and is ſuppoſed to have been the founder of Bernard caſtle upon the bank of Teiſe (7): His ſon Euſtace flouriſhed in the reign of King John (8), and his ſon Hugh de Balliol did great ſervice againſt the Scots in the ſame reign (9). In the reign of Henry the third we find ſeveral Balliols ſerving with great fidelity in the worſt of times, and always true to the royal family. It was owing to the various branches of this great family, that ſome confuſion appears in their genealogy: but it is very certain, that John Balliol, ſon to Hugh de Balliol, married Dervorguill, or, as ſhe is ſometimes called, Darvorgilla, daughter to Alan of Galway, in whoſe right he was ſeized of Galway or Galloway in Scotland, and of many large eſtates in England (10), ſhe being co-heireſs of John Scott, the laſt Earl of Cheſter. This John de Balliol, upon the marriage of Margaret, daughter of King Henry III. to Alexander the third King of Scotland, was conſtituted one of the Governors of that kingdom, in which office he is ſaid to have miſbehaved, which expoſed him to ſome trouble (11); but however, he recovered the King's favour, and did him great ſervice againſt the rebels, maintaining all the northern parts of the kingdom firm in his intereſt, by the aſſiſtance of the King of Scots (12). He died in the year 1269, but his wife ſurvived him; and from records it ſeems that he left three ſons. Hugh, the eldeſt, was at that time twenty-eight years of age, but he did not long ſurvive him, dying in the year 1272 (13): he was ſucceeded by his brother Alexander Balliol (14), who died in 1278, or thereabouts, and was ſucceeded by the third brother, John Balliol, who is the ſubject of this article, and who ſeems to have been under age at this time, ſince, upon the demiſe of his brother, the cuſtody of his lands was committed to Robert de Evre (15): but in the 10th year of the reign of Edward I. he appears to have had ſcutage of his tenants, being then abroad in the King's ſervice in an expedition into

(6) Teſta de Nevil, Northum. Monaſt. Anglic. Vol. i. p. 388, 11, 10.

(7) Dugdale's Baronage, Vol. i. p. 523.

(8) Clauſ. 17 Jac. m. 8. Matth. Pariſ. p. 276.

(9) Teſta de Nevil. Northumb.

(10) Math. Pariſ. p. 433, 11, 30. Clauſ. 22 Hen. III. m. 22. Pat. 22 H. III. m. 10.

(11) Matth. Pariſ. p. 407, 11, 10. Ibid. p. 909, 11, 10.

(12) H. Knyghton, p. 2447, 2448.

(13) Rot. Fin. 53 H. III. m. 12.

(14) Eſc. 56 H. III. m. 26.

(15) Rot. Fin. 7 E. m. 14.

writers ſay, that he had great promiſes made him for the ſervice he did the Engliſh court upon this occaſion, which is not at all improbable; and perhaps he might have in view either the ſole government, or a large ſhare in the regency, in caſe this marriage had taken effect: but this was ſoon rendered impracticable by the death of the young Queen Margaret, which happened in her paſſage from Norway, her native country, to her hereditary kingdom of Scotland. This opened a new ſcene of affairs: for the direct line of the royal family being in her extinct, a great diſpute aroſe about the right of ſucceſſion in the collateral branches (u). The two chief competitors were John Baliol and Robert Bruce, both claiming under their common anceſtor David, Earl of Huntington, both having fair pretences, but neither, as the law of that kingdom then ſtood, a clear or indiſputable right [C]. But beſides theſe, there ſtarted up no leſs than eight other pretenders, whether moved by their own ambition, or ſecretly incited thereto by the arts of King Edward, is a point, which, at this diſtance of time, cannot well be determined: but, however, this is very certain, that none of them could well be ſaid, to have ſo much as a colour of right (w) [D]. The Barons of Scotland aſſumed to themſelves the quality of Judges, and were afterwards declared to be the only legal and proper Judges of a point, in which, except the competitors, none were ſo nearly concerned as themſelves. But conſidering the great and extenſive intereſt of Baliol and Bruce, it was foreſeen, that theſe Judges would not eaſily come to a determination; and beſides, there very ſoon appeared good grounds to doubt, whether, if they did, the claimants would readily ſubmit to their deciſion (x). It was therefore agreed, from a mixture of policy, fear, and irreſolution, that the whole matter ſhould be left to the arbitration of King Edward, who, no doubt, very readily accepted a truſt, which he had been ſo long endeavouring, by all the arts a great politician could uſe, to have repoſed in his hands: nor was it long, before he diſcovered to the world, what uſe it was he intended to make of it (y). In this, however, as well as in every thing elſe, he proceeded with great caution and dexterity. The firſt ſtep taken, was the aſſembling of the States of Scotland at Norham, a town on the borders, at the requeſt of King Edward, to which he repaired in perſon, (u) Major, Leſlæus, Buchan. &c.

(w) Thom. Walſingh. Matth. Weſtm.

(x) Robert de Brunne's Chronicle, p. 249.

(y) Vide T. Walſingh. H. Knyghton, W. Hemingford, &c.

into Wales (16); ſo that it is probable, he might be born about the year 1260, or perhaps ſomewhat earlier.

(16) Rot. Scutag. Wall. 10 E. I. m. 3.

[C] Then ſtood, a clear and indiſputable right.] In the former note, we have given as clear an account as could be collected from our Records of the family of Baliol in England, which account agrees perfectly well with that, which in this note we are to give of the claim, ſet up by this John Baliol to the crown of Scotland, in default of the direct line of the royal family (17). In the firſt place, however, it will be requiſite to ſhew, when, how, and whence the collateral branches ſprung. In few words then, the fact ſtood thus: Henry, Prince of Scotland, ſon to King David the firſt, who died before his father, left three ſons, Malcolm, ſurnamed the Maiden; William, ſurnamed the Lion, from his great courage; and David, Earl of Huntington. King William had but one ſon, called Alexander the Second, and who was father of Alexander the Third, his only ſurviving iſſue, who married Margaret, daughter to King Henry III. of England, and ſiſter to Edward I.: by her he had two ſons, viz. Alexander, and David, who died without iſſue, and one daughter, named Margaret, married to Eric, King of Norway, by whom ſhe had one only daughter, named alſo Margaret, late Queen of Scotland, who dying without iſſue, the whole line of William the Lion failing, the right of the crown remained in one of the deſcendants of the ſaid David, Earl of Huntington; but to which of them it belonged was a difficulty ſomewhat hard to be decided. This David, Earl of Huntington, had three ſons, viz. Henry, Robert, and John: the two firſt died young: the laſt took the ſurname of Scot, and was Earl of Cheſter. He dying alſo without iſſue, his ſucceſſion fell to the heirs female of his father David, who left three daughters, the eldeſt of which was Margaret, who married Allan, Lord of Galloway, by whom ſhe had an only daughter, Dervorgilla, or, as ſome write it, Dergovilla, who married John Baliol, the founder of Baliol college in Oxford, and father to John Baliol of whom we are ſpeaking; and who, in his mother's right, claimed the kingdom of Scotland (18). The ſecond daughter of David Earl of Huntington was Iſabella, who married Robert Bruce, by whom ſhe had Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale, the other claimant (19). According to this account it is very clear, that Baliol repreſented the eldeſt daughter of David Earl of Huntington, and Robert Bruce, the ſecond daughter: but then Baliol was one degree more remote, as being the great-grandſon of the ſaid David Earl of Huntington, whereas Robert Bruce was only his grandſon, ſo that the one was of the elder line, the other, neareſt in degree; which, in few words, expreſſes clearly the point in debate between them.

(17) Johan. Fordun. Scotichron. p. 960.

(18) Rymer's Fœdera, tom. ii. p. 578.

(19) Buchan. Rer. Scotic. Hiſt. lib. viii.

[D] Could well be ſaid to have ſo much as a colour of right.] We will ſtate the claims of the reſt of the pretenders to the crown of Scotland, in the order in which their petitions lie in the great roll of proceedings before King Edward (20); which leads us to ſpeak, 1. Of Florence, Earl of Flanders, who ſet forth, that his great-grandmother was Ada, eldeſt ſiſter of William, King of Scotland, but then it is to be conſidered, that this Lady was ſiſter likewiſe to David Earl of Huntington; who, conſequently, had a prior right to the crown, and the claimants beforementioned derived their right from him. 2. Patrick Dombar, Earl of March, ſet forth a much ſhorter and clearer right, as being deſcended from Ilda, the daughter of King William; but then ſhe was a natural daughter, of which he takes no notice in his petition. 3. William de Veſcy claimed under Margery, another daughter; that is, alſo another natural daughter of King William. 4. William de Ros claimed under Iſabella, the eldeſt natural daughter of King William. 5. Robert de Pynkeney ſet forth that he was deſcended by the mother's ſide from Margery, the ſiſter of William King of Scotland. 6. Nicholas de Soules claimed under Margery, ſiſter to King Alexander III. 7. Patrick Gallythly conceived he had a claim from his father Henry Gallythly, who was a baſtard-ſon of King William's. 8. Roger de Mandeville was deſcended from a baſtard-daughter of the ſame King. 9. John Cumine had quite another title; for he claimed under King Donald, that is Donald Bane, or, Donald the White, an uſurper about two hundred years before; but he was willing to lay by his pretenſion in favour of John Baliol. He might alſo have added of Robert Bruce and John Haſtings; for to ſay the truth, none but theſe three had colourable pretenſions; nay, that of Haſtings was ſcarcely ſuch, when balanced with that of Bruce. Both were the immediate ſons of the lawful daughters of Earl David, the brother of Malcolm the Maiden, and of King William; but Ada, the mother of Haſtings, was the younger ſiſter, who muſt therefore yield to Iſabella the mother of Bruce; but then both Iſabel and Ada were younger than Margaret, who was the grandmother of John Baliol, ſo that, as we before obſerved, the queſtion was; who repreſented David, Earl of Huntington (21).

(20) Rymer's Fœdera, tom. ii. p. 542—600. It is from this Record our beſt hiſtorians ſpeak; and farther than they agree with this Record, neither Engliſh nor Scots Hiſtorians are to be regarded.

(21) See Brady, Tyrrel, and Abercromby.

and on the tenth of May, 1291, opened himſelf to that Aſſembly in a very extraordinary and unexpected manner, declaring, That he looked upon himſelf as the ſuperior and direct Lord of Scotland, and that he expected in the firſt place, that the States ſhould acknowledge him as ſuch (z). They expreſſed a very great ſurprize at ſo ſtrange a demand; but the anſwer they made was very ſenſible and judicious. They ſaid, That they were very unhappy in being at preſent without a head, and that this unhappineſs was increaſed, by the demanding of them an acknowledgment of a right, of which, till then, they had never heard; and that they had bound themſelves by an oath, to acknowledge no Prince or Superior, but the perſon who ſhould be declared heir to their late King Alexander III., and this under pain of excommunication (a). King Edward having received this anſwer, adjourned the Aſſembly to the next day, when the States met again and deſired farther time, that, in a matter of ſuch importance, they might have leiſure to conſult their countrymen. This could not decently be refuſed; and therefore the King very readily granted them a reſpite for three weeks; and this was the end of that Aſſembly, and of its proceeding (b) [E]. They met again about the appointed time, and on the ſecond of June following, the Biſhop of Bath and Wells, Chancellor of England, declared to them, that ſince nothing was offered in bar to the right his maſter claimed, the King took his ſovereignty to be acknowledged, and that he expected the competitors, the Guardians of the Kingdom, together with the Prelates and Barons, ſtiling themſelves the Community of Scotland, to recognize him as their Superior and direct Lord, which was accordingly done by ſuch as were preſent, and, amongſt the reſt, by Robert Bruce, as the record ſtill extant witneſſes, though the Scots Hiſtorians abſolutely deny it (c) [F]. John Baliol was not there, and very probably his abſence was premeditated, that he might have the example of others to plead in excuſe of his own behaviour:

(z) Rot. de ſuperioritate Regis in Scotiam 18 E. I., penes Cuſtod. Record. in Turre London. Rymer's Fœdera, tom. ii. p. 525. Prynne's Collections, tom. iii. p. 488, 489.

(a) Chron. Abingdon, Thom. Walſingham, p. 56.

(b) Rymer's Fœd. tom. ii. p. 543. Robert Brunne's Chron. p. 248, 249. Johan. Roſſi, Hiſt. Reg. Angl. p. 189.

(c) Hect. Boëth. Scot. Hiſt. p. 273. Buchan. Rer. Scotic. Hiſtor. lib. viii.

[E] And this was the end of that Aſſembly, and of its proceedings.] Whoever conſults that great record concerning this important tranſaction, which ſtill remains in being, will find that every thing was conducted therein with the greateſt ſhew of juſtice. Yet Mr. Tyrrel ſeems to have gone a little too far, in aſſerting this Aſſembly at Norham to have been a Parliament of Scotland, called by King Edward I., as ſupreme and direct Lord thereof (22), which, to ſpeak the truth, neither agrees with the record, with the matter of fact, or, indeed, with common ſenſe: not with the record, for therein it is expreſsly ſaid, that they aſſembled there at the requeſt of King Edward, to hear what he had to ſay to them, which, conſidering their ſubmitting to his arbitration, was very juſt and reaſonable; not reconcileable to fact, for if the King had called them in right of his ſuperiority and direct dominion over Scotland, they could not have pretended any ſurprize on his aſſuming that title; and, laſtly, this is not reconcileable to common ſenſe; ſince if he had ſummoned this Aſſembly, as Superior Lord of Scotland, he muſt have ſummoned them upon the oddeſt occaſion in the world, ſince all he pretended to on that occaſion, was to get this right of his acknowledged, as will more clearly appear by conſidering the ſteps that were taken. It was not the King himſelf, but the King's Juſtice, who opened his Majeſty's claim to the Aſſembly in French, who adjourned them to the eleventh of May, to give their anſwer to this claim, and met them for this purpoſe at the pariſh church of Norham, when, as the record tells us, they earneſtly preſſed the King to give them longer time to conſult with ſuch as were abſent, and to anſwer his demands concerning their recognition of his ſuperiority and direct dominion over the kingdom of Scotland, which he ſaid was his right: then upon further deliberation, he gave them time until the ſecond of June next coming, and on that day preciſely they were to anſwer his demands, and if they had any evidences, writings, or antiquities, to produce, which might exclude him from the right and exerciſe of his ſaid ſuperiority, or direct dominion, or overthrow his reaſons and arguments for it, they were then to exhibit and ſhew them; proteſting he was ready to allow them what the law permitted, and to do what was juſt; and that they might better underſtand his title, and make their objections againſt it if they pleaſed, the Biſhop of Durham was appointed to ſet it forth to all the Nobles and Prelates there preſent. It is true, the declaration he then made, and arguments he uſed, were wholly hiſtorical, and had been ſearched for, and taken out of the chronicles of Marianus Scotus, William of Malmſbury, Roger de Hoveden, Henry de Huntington, Ralph de Diceto, and the Chronicle of St. Albans, Matt. Paris, that lay then in ſeveral of the abbies of England, being to this effect: That the Scots had been conquered by ſeveral of our Saxon Kings, that many of their Kings had ſubmitted and ſworn fealty to them, done homage, and received the crown and kingdom from them, and that the Scots had alſo ſubmitted and been governed by ſuch Kings, as the Engliſh Saxon Kings had placed in that kingdom: That after the Conqueſt, the very ſame things had been done, ſubmitted to, and complied with, in the reigns of William I. and II., Henry I., Stephen, Henry II., Richard I., King John, and Henry III (23). Mr. Tyrrel's remarks on all this, appears equally juſt and impartial. 'This is the ſub-'ſtance of that declaration, which you may find more 'at large in the hiſtories of Matth. Weſtminſter, and 'Tho. Walſingham, and which the King cauſed to 'be ſet forth, to ſatisfy the Clergy and Nobility of 'Scotland. But to ſpeak the truth, though the mat-'ters of fact, which are therein cited, are rightly 'enough ſet down, yet there is no mention made of 'any homage or fealty done by the Scottiſh Kings. 'For the whole kingdom of Scotland, properly ſo call-'ed: which extended anciently no farther than the 'bridge of Sterling, which, in the time of King Ed-'gar, was the boundary between the Scottiſh and the 'Northumbrian kingdoms (24).' This clears up the whole matter, and very plainly ſhews, 1ſt, What right King Edward really had to homage from the King of Scots; and, ſecond, What, laying hold of this opportunity, he had a mind (under colour of this right) to exact from them for the future.

(22) General Hiſtory of England, Vol. iii. p. 62.

(23) This deduction of his rights from old Hiſtories and Abbey Chronicles, is to be found at large, inſerted in the Great Record of theſe tranſactions. Rymer's Fœdera, tom. ii. P. 559.

(24) General Hiſtory of England, Vol. iii. p. 63.

[F] Though the Scots hiſtorians abſolutely deny it.] It is a very natural thing, and one may almoſt pronounce it excuſable, for an hiſtorian to have ſome inclination to heighten the honour, and palliate the diſgraces of his country (25). But then this ſhould be done with judgment and addreſs, rather by reconciling than varying of facts, never at the expence of truth. Buchanan, whoſe pride made him zealous for the honour of the Scots, tells us, upon this occaſion, a very fine ſtory of Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale, for which however he gives us no authority, and, to ſay the truth, there was none to be had; becauſe the ſtory is founded on a falſe fact, or rather upon a multitude of falſe facts. But ſince we have accuſed him, let us hear what he ſays: 'There, that is, at Norham, 'Edward, by very fit inſtruments, tried by ſoft me-'thods to perſuade the Scots to ſubmit to him as he 'pretended their anceſtors had often done before. 'But when they all conſtantly refuſed, he practiſed 'upon the competitors for the crown whom he him-'ſelf had ſet up; and by large promiſes drew them to 'come into his propoſal, perſuading the reſt to tranſ-'fer the Aſſembly from Norham to Berwick, as to a 'more proper place. There ſelecting twenty-four 'Judges he ſhut them up in a church, with orders to 'decide this controverſy, forbidding any to reſort to 'them. As he found the thing go on very ſlowly, he 'went behaviour: but, however, he came the next day, and ſubmitted to make the ſame acknowledgment (d). This great point carried, pleaſed King Edward extremely; for he was no leſs ſatisfied with acquiring a Kingdom by art, than if he had obtained it by conqueſt, and he took care to publiſh this ſufficiently to the world, as a proof of his great policy, which undoubtedly it was [G]. The ſeveral claims to the crown came next to be conſidered; and as it was not at all King Edward's intereſt to come to a haſty deciſion, he conſented to a commiſſion, which was thus compoſed; Robert Bruce was to name forty Commiſſioners, John Baliol, and John Comin, Lord of Badenoch, were to name forty more between them, to whom King Edward, if he thought fit, might add twenty-four (e). Theſe Commiſſioners were to meet, and accordingly did meet, at Berwick, on the ſecond of Auguſt, 1292. But they fell out about the preliminary Queſtion; viz. by what law or rule they would conduct themſelves in the deciſion of this queſtion; and this making an adjournment neceſſary, the King gave them till the next day, the third of June, to be in the pariſh church of Norham, when he gave the ſame anſwer to the third queſtion. This was very ſtrong and full, without doubt; and yet it did not abſolutely ſatisfy King Edward, who inſiſted upon having letters patents in the French tongue from all the claimants, expreſſing their full ſatisfaction as to the right he claimed, of being ſuperior Lord of the kingdom of Scotland, promiſing to ſubmit to his deciſion of their title, and that he ſhould enjoy the kingdom, to whom King Edward adjudged it (27). We may add to all this, with reſpect to Robert Bruce, that in the very preamble of his petition, wherein he ſets forth his right to the ſucceſſion of the crown of Scotland, he gives King Edward the title of Superior and direct Lord (28). So that there can be nothing more contrary to truth, than what is aſſerted by Buchanan, and the only excuſe that can be made for him is, that he has followed Boëthius (29).

(25) See Abercromby's remarks on this ſubject.

(d) Rymer's Fœd. tom. ii. p. 549.

(e) Thom. Walſingham, Matth. Weſtm. &c.

' went however in to them himſelf, and by conferring with them he found, that though Baliol had the better right, yet Bruce had more friends. He therefore firſt applied to him, ſuppoſing, that as his right was but indifferent, he would the more readily come into his meaſures: he therefore promiſed him the kingdom of Scotland, if he would accept it from the King of England, and hold it of him as of his Superior. Bruce anſwered clearly, that his deſire of reigning was not ſo ſtrong, as that, to gratify it, he ſhould in any degree leſſen that liberty which the Scottiſh nation derived from their anceſtors (26).' Thus has Buchanan raiſed the credit of his country, weakened Bruce's title, and, to make him amends, beſtowed upon him a magnanimity to which he had no claim. To ſhew the falſehood of all this, to place ſo material a point of hiſtory in its true light, and to avoid as much as poſſible that dryneſs which naturally attends all criticiſm, we will proceed from the record, and reſume the proceedings of the Aſſembly on their next meeting, as they are there ſtated. On the ſecond of June, the Biſhops, and other eccleſiaſtic Prelates, together with the Earls, Barons, and other Nobles of the community of the ſaid kingdom of Scotland, met right over againſt Norham caſtle, where King Edward then was, in a green, on the other ſide of the river Tweed, as did alſo all the Princes and Noblemen that claimed the kingdom. Then the Biſhop of Bath and Wells was ſent to demand, in the King's name, what they had done ſince their laſt meeting, and whether they would ſhew, propound, or ſay any thing, that could, or ought to, exclude the King of England from the right and exerciſe of his ſuperiority, and direct dominion over the kingdom of Scotland, that they would produce and exhibit it, if they believed it expedient for them; proteſting in the name of the King of England, that he would favourably hear them, and allow what was juſt, and report what they ſaid to him and his council, that upon deliberation they might do what juſtice required: but ſince they had anſwered nothing, neither propounded nor exhibited any thing againſt it, therefore the Biſhop recapitulating what had been ſaid and urged for the King's title, and what had been done at theſe ſeveral meetings, in all which they had offered nothing conſiderable againſt it, declared to them, the Biſhops, Prelates, Earls, Barons, and others of the Community of Scotland, that the King would make uſe of his right of ſuperiority and direct dominion in Scotland, in deciding the controverſy between the ſeveral competitors for that kingdom. Then the Biſhop beginning with Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale, being one of the chiefeſt competitors for the kingdom of Scotland, he demanded of him in the preſence of all the eſtates of the kingdom laſt mentioned, whether, in claiming the ſaid right, he would anſwer and receive juſtice before the King of England, as Superior and direct Lord of the kingdom of Scotland, who openly and expreſsly, in the preſence of all there preſent, anſwered, That he did acknowledge the King of England Superior and direct Lord of the kingdom of Scotland, and that he would before and from him, as Superior and direct Lord of the kingdom of Scotland, anſwer and receive juſtice. Then all the other competitors there preſent, viz. Florence, Earl of Holland, the Lord John Haſtings, Patrick of Dunbar, Earl of March, William Veſcy, William de Roſs, Robert de Pinkeney, and Nicholas de Soules, had the ſame queſtion put to them, and made the ſame anſwer. John Baliol was then abſent; but upon his Proctor's requeſt, the meeting was continued until the (26) Rer. Scoticar. Hiſt. l. viii.

(27) Rymer's Fœdera, tom. ii. p. 579. N. Trivet. Annal. p. 273.

(28) Rymer's Fœder. tom. ii. p. 544, 545.

(29) Hector. Boëth. Scotor. Hiſt. p. 273.

[G] As a proof of his great policy, which undoubtedly it was.] There cannot be a ſtronger inſtance given of the folly and danger of an ambitious diſpoſition in a Prince of great abilities, than what is contained in the hiſtory of the conduct of this Monarch, who was ſo well pleaſed with the ſucceſs he had hitherto met with, in the proſecution of this ſcheme of his to annex a whole kingdom to his dominions, by the exerciſe of his wit rather than his ſword; that the very day after he had obtained the letters patent beforementioned, he took a much ſtronger ſtep, inſiſting, that as they had now granted him a right, they ſhould next give him the land. Yet ſtill he proceeded with a colour of juſtice, and took care that thoſe he practiſed upon ſhould do ſo too; for having inſinuated, that in order to make a King he muſt have a kingdom to give him, he prevailed upon the claimants of the crown to grant him under their hands and ſeals another charter, by which they conſent, that he ſhould have poſſeſſion given him of the kingdom, in truſt for the perſon to whom it ſhould be adjudged (30). When he had got this, he thought he had got all; and therefore, not only took upon him the title of Superior and direct Lord of Scotland, but endeavoured all he could to eſtabliſh a general opinion of his right in the minds of the Engliſh nation, by which he entailed long wars upon his poſterity, infuſed ſeeds of diſſenſion between the inhabitants of the two kingdoms, and thereby provided, as if he had done it on purpoſe, for the weakening the force of this iſland, and leſſening the power of both nations with reſpect to foreign Princes and States. Nay, ſo much was he poſſeſſed with the notion of the right given him by theſe charters, that he ſent authentic copies of them under his privy-ſeal to all the chief monaſteries in England, with orders, that they ſhould be entered in the Chronicles and Leidger-Books of their reſpective houſes, divers of which are ſtill extant in the Cottonian library, where they that doubt the truth of it may conſult them; and our authors have been ſo exact, as to give us a copy of the writs whereby the Abbots and Priors of thoſe religious houſes were enjoined to perform it (31). It bears date the 9th of July, in the 19th year of his reign, A. D. 1297, being about ſeven years after the grant of that charter, and ſeems to have been done about the time when the Pope began to queſtion the King's ſuperiority over Scotland: and that none may queſtion the truth of it, the very original of the charter of recognition is ſtill preſerved, with the ſeals of the competitors appendant to it, in the ſame library, that great repoſitory of rarities of this kind (32).

(30) Rymer's Fœdera, tom. ii. p. 573.

(31) Trivet. Chr.

(32) Tyrell's General Hiſtory of England, Vol. iii. p. 66.

four-fourteenth of October following: for after all they were not to judge in the laſt reſort, but barely to report their opinion, as to the rights of the two principal competitors, to King Edward, and this without prejudice to the other claimants. The truth of the matter ſeems to have been, that King Edward himſelf was not as yet perfect in the part he was to act: for when they met again, he had quite changed, or at leaſt new modelled, the preliminaries, to which the Commiſſioners, at their next meeting, which was on the fourteenth of October following, tamely agreed (f) [H]. All this being ſettled, the King ſent for Baliol and Bruce, demanding of them, if they had any farther reaſons to allege than thoſe which they had ſet forth, in the papers which they had delivered to the Commiſſioners, and they anſwering in the affirmative, thoſe farther allegations were with great formality heard, after which, King Edward took upon himſelf to put the main queſtion upon which the whole affair turned, and which he worded in the following manner, viz. 'Whether the more remote by one degree in ſucceſſion, coming from the 'eldeſt ſiſter, ought, according to the laws and cuſtoms of thoſe kingdoms, to exclude the 'nearer by a degree, coming from the ſecond ſiſter? or, Whether the nearer by one 'degree deſcending from the ſecond ſiſter, ought, by the laws and cuſtoms of thoſe 'kingdoms, to exclude the more remote by a degree, coming from the elder ſiſter?' to which, when preſſed, they unanimouſly anſwered, That he who deſcended from the elder ſiſter, though in the more remote degree, was to be preferred, which, as the reader will perceive, was a very explicit declaration in favour of Baliol (g). There is one circumſtance more in relation to this great proceſs, which deſerves to be remarked, becauſe it is particularly inſiſted upon by the Scotch hiſtorians, which is, that, to keep up a greater ſhew of juſtice and moderation, King Edward cauſed this caſe, under fictitious names, to be propoſed to the ableſt Lawyers abroad, who all, or at leaſt the greateſt part of them, declared in favour of Baliol, to which it is ſuggeſted they were drawn, by the method uſed in ſtating the caſe (b) [I]. This great point being fully determined, with reſpect to the preference due to Baliol againſt Bruce, the King, according to his promiſe, proceeded

(f) Brunne's Chronicle, p. 249. Walt. Hemingf. Hiſt. Edw. I. p. 36. J. Roſſi, Hiſt. Reg. Angl. p. 189, 190.

(g) Nic. Triveti Annal. p. 273.

(b) Hect. Boëth. Scotor. Hiſtor. lib. xiv. p. 293. Buchan. Rerum Scotic. Hiſt. lib. viii.

[H] The Commiſſioners tamely agreed.] The great length into which theſe proceedings were drawn by the art and contrivance of King Edward, joined to ſome other circumſtances, ſuch as that Baliol and Bruce (previous and notwithſtanding their claim to the kingdom of Scotland) were his ſubjects, and had very large eſtates in England, put all things abſolutely in his power; ſo that he was able to direct what he pleaſed, and to provide that whatever he directed ſhould be complied with readily, and without being afterwards called in queſtion (33). Things being thus circumſtanced, he demanded, firſt, by what laws and cuſtoms this queſtion was to be determined; next, if the laws and cuſtoms in the kingdoms of England and Scotland were different, how judgment was to be given, and whether the right to the kingdom of Scotland was to be adjudged, as if the queſtion was of earldoms, baronies, and other ſuch like tenures. The Commiſſioners were very clear and unanimous, that by the laws and cuſtoms of the two kingdoms, in caſe there were any ſuch, the queſtion was to be decided; that in caſe there were no ſuch laws and cuſtoms, then the King, by the advice of his peers and great men, might, and ought to, eſtabliſh a new law; and they farther ſaid, that the rule with regard to the kingdom, ought to be the ſame that took place in reſpect to the ſucceſſion to earldoms, baronies, and other indiviſible tenures. Theſe anſwers being given, the King heard Bruce and Baliol at large upon their reſpective claims, till ſuch time as they themſelves declared that they had not any thing farther to offer, and all this with a view, that no ſtep might be taken, which did not, in appearance, agree with, and none omitted, that it might be thought was required by the ſtricteſt and moſt exact regard to juſtice (34).

(33) Tyrell's General Hiſtory of England, Vol. iii. p. 67.

(34) See the Record before cited.

[I] By the method uſed in ſtating the caſe.] It is a little ſingular, that the Engliſh and Scots hiſtorians are ſo ſilent about this circumſtance, in a tranſaction which they have affected to examine with ſo much care. Hector Boëthius does indeed tell us the fact in few words, affirming, that the greateſt part of the foreign Lawyers gave their opinion in favour of Robert Bruce, in regard to his high birth, and his being the neareſt heir male (35). This I take to be a clear and full authority as to the thing; but Buchanan relates it very largely and circumſtantially; for he tells us, 'That the King being willing to ſhew that he 'did not act raſhly, in an affair ſo great and ſo 'weighty, reſolved to conſult thoſe men in France, 'who were eſteemed the moſt pious and wiſe, and 'to have the greateſt knowledge in the Law; and 'as theſe ſort of men are never of the ſame opinion, he did not doubt but that ſome of them 'would give ſuch an anſwer as would ſuit with his 'deſign. An Engliſhman therefore, who had the 'whole management of this affair in France, propoſed the queſtion to the French Civilians in this captious manner: "A certain King, who is neither "crowned nor anointed, but only placed in a certain "ſeat, and proclaimed King, and yet is not ſo independent as not to be under the protection of another "King, whoſe feudatory he acknowledges himſelf to "be, died without children: two relations deſcended "from Sempronius, the late King's great uncle, claim "the inheritance; namely, Titus, great-grandſon of "Sempronius's eldeſt daughter, and Sejus, grandſon "of the younger daughter, which of them two is "to be preferred to an inheritance which cannot be "divided?" The queſtion having been propoſed in 'this manner, moſt of the Civilians anſwered, that 'if there was any law or cuſtom concerning this in 'the kingdom which was claimed, it ought to be obſerved; if not, it was uſual to follow the cuſtom of 'that kingdom of which the other was a fief; that in 'determining queſtions relating to fiefs, the cuſtom 'did not aſcend, but deſcend, that is, that the cuſtom of the ſuperior ought to be a law to the inferior. It would be too long to relate all the opinions 'of the Civilians; but, to ſum up the whole in a word, 'almoſt all of them diſputing concerning the right, 'gave undetermined and contradictory anſwers, agreeing only in this, that they all allowed Edward a 'ſovereign power to determine the matter, being impoſed upon by the falſe light in which the queſtion 'had been put to them (36).' It is very evident from hence, that when men of great parts are conſcious to themſelves of deſigns that are not juſt, they take more care to preſerve appearances, and to keep up the forms of juſtice, than men of the greateſt integrity, who, as they deſire to hide nothing from the eye of the world that paſſes in their hearts, are leſs concerned about the circumſtances attending their actions. But beſides ſatisfying the world, or at leaſt, the Engliſh nation, as to the purity of his intentions, King Edward had viſibly another deſign, in applying as he did to the Lawyers of other nations, for by this means he at all events eſtabliſhed his right of deciding the queſtion, in virtue of his ſuperiority and direct dominion over Scotland; and upon this I muſt beg leave to hint an obſervation of my own, that he might firſt engage all the competitors for the crown to acknowledge his ſuperiority, by ſhewing them, that nothing but

(35) Scot. Hiſt. lib. xiv. p. 293.

(36) Rerum Scot. Hiſt. lib. viii.

proceeded to hear what could be ſaid in favour of the other claimants, among whom there was, by this time, a new one, viz. Eric King of Norway, who pretended, that as heir to his daughter Margaret, he ought to ſucceed to the crown of Scotland. But, however, neither his nor the reſt of the claimants titles were found to contain any thing that deſerved much conſideration; and it is very likely, that King Edward would then have proceeded to the laſt act in this great affair, if he had not been retarded by two new petitions from Bruce and Haſtings, ſetting forth, that they were deſcended from the daughters of David Earl of Huntington, as well as John Baliol, and therefore praying that each might enjoy his third part of the kingdom, which they alledged, ought to be equally divided among the coheireſſes, which is a dreadful blow to the Scots hiſtorians, who take ſo much pains to magnify the public ſpirit of Bruce (i). Now although the Engliſh writers concur with them alſo in this opinion, and condemn Bruce for preferring this new petition, yet at the bottom there was nothing foul or unjuſt in his behaviour, but, on the contrary, it was from the very beginning very uniform, and in this particular perfectly juſt. At preſent we will proceed in the very words of the record, and ſhew how this great controverſy was brought to an end. The King, willing to deliberate with his Council upon this new matter, demanded whether the kingdom of Scotland was partible among females, who all anſwered it was not. Upon which anſwer the King appointed Monday next after the feaſt of St. Martin, as the peremptory day, for all the competitors to hear their judgments in his Parliament at Berwick, intending in the mean time, farther to deliberate on, and examine theſe matters, with knowing men of both kingdoms, beſides the auditors and others of his Council, that ſo he might be fully informed, what in juſtice ought to be done (k). On the ſeventeenth of November, 1292, which was the Monday after the feaſt aforeſaid, the Nobles and Prelates of both kingdoms, the auditors, other great men, and a vaſt number of the people, being met in the hall of the caſtle of Berwick, with the Publick Notary, who ſigned the acts of the Court, all the other competitors claiming the kingdom, viz. Eric King of Norway, Florence Earl of Holland, William de Veſcy, Patrick Earl of Marche, William de Roſs, Robert de Pinkeny, Nicholas de Soules, and Patrick Galightly, though they had ſufficient notice and ſummons to be there, had withdrawn themſelves, becauſe they found they were excluded, by the better titles of the two laſt abovementioned competitors. Whereupon it was then adjudged, and judicially pronounced by the King, with the conſent of the Noblemen and Prelates of both kingdoms, that all theſe laſt competitors ſhould obtain nothing by their petitions: and becauſe John Cumin, and Roger de Mandeville, did not proſecute their petitions, they had the ſame judgment. But as to the laſt petition of Robert de Bruce, whereby he claimed the third part of the kingdom for his ſhare, as of a partible inheritance, becauſe it appeared by his firſt petition before the King, that he demanded the whole kingdom of Scotland, he therefore did by that acknowledge and grant that the kingdom was impartible, and one entire inheritance, which recognition and confeſſion he could not then deny; and for that it had been agreed and adjudged by the Prelates, Earls, Barons, Nobles, great men, and the whole Council of both kingdoms, that the kingdom ought to be poſſeſſed by one heir alone, becauſe of its own nature it was impartible, as other kingdoms; for theſe reaſons therefore it was adjudged, and judicially declared by the King, that he ſhould gain nothing by what was ſet forth in his petition. The ſame judgment was given againſt John Haſtings, for the ſame reaſons. As to the petition of John Baliol, it was found and agreed by all the Noblemen, Prelates, &c. of both nations, that the kingdom of Scotland was impartible, and ought to remain to one heir; and becauſe the King was judge of the right of his ſubjects, by the laws and cuſtoms of both the kingdoms, which was approved and affirmed by all the Noblemen and Prelates of both kingdoms, and by the ſame laws and cuſtoms in the caſe before them, it was agreed, and judicially declared in favour of John Baliol, That the more remote by deſcent in the firſt line, was to be preferred to a nearer in the ſecond line, in the ſucceſſion of an impartible inheritance; and ſince none of the competitors denied him to be heir of the firſt line, therefore he was to be preferred before all others, as next heir to the kingdom of Scotland, by hereditary ſucceſſion. Whereupon the King of England, as ſuperior and direct Lord of Scotland, adjudged, that The ſaid John Baliol ſhould recover and have ſeiſin of that kingdom, with all its appurtenances, according to the form of his petition, upon condition that he ſhall rightly and juſtly govern the people ſubject to him, that none might have occaſion to complain for want of juſtice, nor the King, as ſuperior Lord of that kingdom, upon the ſuit of the parties, be hindered to interpoſe his authority and direction (l): a right, which the King of England and his heirs always reſerved in ſuch caſes, when he would make uſe of it. In purſuance of this judgment, he granted his writ to the Guardians of the kingdom of Scotland, to put him in poſſeſſion thereof, as alſo to the Captains and Guardians of the ſeveral caſtles and fortreſſes in that country, for the

(i) Rymer's Fœd. tom. ii. p. 587.

(k) Thom. Walſingham. Rymer's Fœder. tom. ii. p. 588. Walt. Hemingford. Hiſt. Ed. I. p. 37. Hen. Knyghton de Event. Angl. col. 2469. Nic. Trivet. Annal. p. 275.

(l) Robert of Brunne's Chronicle, p. 250. Nic. Trivet. Annales, p. 275. Rymer's Fœdera, tom. ii. p. 598.

but owning this right in him, could enable him to do juſtice to any of them; though when the ſtep was once taken, he turned the argument againſt the competitor for whom he declared, by profeſſing, that his right to the ſuperiority over Scotland, and Baliol's title to the throne, were equally clear, and that if he preſumed to queſtion the former, it muſt neceſſarily deſtroy the latter.

ſame purpoſe. The next day, being the twentieth of November, 1292, John Baliol did homage to King Edward, at his caſtle of Norham, and then ſet out for Scotland, where, on St. Andrew's day, he was placed on the royal throne by John de St. Johnſtown, appointed to that office by King Edward, becauſe Duncan Earl of Fife was at that time under age. He did not remain long at home, or in poſſeſſion of that ſhadow of royalty, which with ſo much difficulty he had gained; for upon St. Stephen's day we find him again in England, and at Newcaſtle, where he did homage to King Edward for his kingdom, in the fulleſt and cleareſt terms that could be deviſed (m) [K]. He had now ſome hopes of being quiet, as having, at leaſt in his own judgment, performed all that the King of England could either deſire or expect. But he was very ſoon made ſenſible of his miſtake. For upon the complaint, of no higher perſon than a Burgeſs of Berwick, againſt him, the King thought fit to appoint Judges, by a ſpecial commiſſion, to hear and determine it. This appeared to King John a direct infringement of King Edward's promiſes; and therefore that he might be at a certainty, he preferred a petition to theſe Judges, ſetting forth, that the King of England, Superior Lord of Scotland, had promiſed to the Prelates and Nobility of that kingdom, that he would obſerve the laws and cuſtoms thereof, and that pleas of things done there, might not be drawn out of it; wherefore it was prayed, that he would obſerve this promiſe, and direct his Juſtices accordingly. To this petition, Roger Brabazon, Chief-Juſtice of England, anſwered, 'That if the King of England had made any ſuch temporary promiſes when there was 'no King in Scotland, he had performed them, and that by ſuch promiſes he would not 'now be reſtrained or bound.' King Edward went even farther than this: for in the preſence of the Prelates and Nobility of both kingdoms, he declared, 'That he 'meant, in virtue of his ſuperiority, to receive all complaints touching the kingdom of 'Scotland, and its inhabitants, and to uſe and exerciſe his ſuperiority and direct dominion, 'and to call the King of Scotland himſelf, if it was neceſſary, and the quality of the 'cauſe required it, to appear before him in his kingdom of England (n).' He even puſhed this matter to a much greater length; and not ſatisfied with releaſing himſelf from his promiſes, he inſiſted upon King John's releaſing them alſo, and to this purpoſe he cauſed a releaſe or acquittance to be drawn, ſetting forth all his grants and promiſes, and acknowledging, that they were all performed and fully determined, when he adjudged the kingdom to John Baliol, which releaſe, dated the ſecond day of January, 1293, in the twenty-firſt of King Edward, and in the firſt year of King John's reign, was ſealed with the King of Scotland's own ſeal, and with the ſeals of ſuch of the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons of his kingdom, as attended him in this Journey (o). But whether this act of theirs was performed willingly, or only becauſe ſuch as gave their aſſent to it durſt do no otherwiſe, is a point, as one of our beſt hiſtorians obſerves, very much to be doubted (p).

(m) Johan. Fordun. Scotichron. p. 967. Robert of Brunne's Chronicle, p. 250, 251. Nic. Trivet Annal. p. 273, 274. Rymer's Fœdera, tom. ii. p. 593.

(n) Rymer's Fœd. tom. ii. p. 597.

(o) Rymer's Fœd. tom. ii. p. 597—600.

(p) Tyrell's General Hiſtory of England, p. 75.

[K] In the fulleſt and cleareſt terms that could be deviſed.] It is very evident from what is ſaid in the text, that from the very moment John Baliol received the crown of Scotland from the hands of King Edward, it proved to him rather a burthen than an honour (37). In ſome things indeed, Edward acted as if he intended to treat him with kindneſs, but even in theſe there was ſuch a mixture of haughtineſs and ſelf-intereſt, as greatly diminiſhed, if it did not totally deſtroy, thoſe favours. As for example, on the 19th of November, 1292, King Edward cauſed the broad ſeal, which had been uſed in the time of the regency, to be brought before the great men of both nations, and there broken in pieces, becauſe the King's broad ſeal was now to be uſed in that country: but at the ſame time he directed the broken pieces of the ſeal to be laid up in his treaſury, as a perpetual monument unto poſterity of his right to the ſuperiority and direct dominion over the kingdom of Scotland (38). He was ſo fond of this title, and of having a King attend upon him, that he obliged King John to appear on St. Stephen's day at Newcaſtle, where he did homage to the King in theſe words: 'My Lord Edward, 'King of England, Superior Lord of the kingdom of 'Scotland: I John, King of Scotland, become your 'liege man for the whole kingdom of Scotland, with 'its appurtenances, which kingdom I claim and 'hold, and ought of right to hold, for me and my 'heirs Kings of Scotland, hereditary of you and your 'heirs, Kings of England, and ſhall bear faith to 'you and your heirs, Kings of England, of life and 'limb, and terene honour, againſt all men that may 'live and die (39).' It may not be amiſs to obſerve, that upon his doing this homage, King Edward's Chamberlain demanded a fee; but, as is very juſtly obſerved by Rapin (40), this very demand was a very ſtrong proof againſt his maſter's right, becauſe, though peremptorily made, the Chamberlain, whoſe name was Peter de Chaunecent, could not tell what it was to be, for which he had never been at a loſs, if there had been ſo much as a ſingle inſtance of any ſuch homage done before. King Edward, however, did not conſider it in this light; but in his next Parliament held at Weſtminſter ſettled the point, and declared, that Baliol ſhould give his Chamberlain twenty pounds for his homage-fee, being double to what was paid by an Earl on the like occaſion (41). To make Baliol ſome amends, in appearance at leaſt, he, by his charter, dated the 4th of January 1293, was graciouſly pleaſed to renounce for himſelf and his ſucceſſors, all other rights over the kingdom of Scotland, ſave that of homage, and to declare that they pretended not to the wardſhips, or right of giving in marriage the heirs or heireſſes of noble families in Scotland (42). He likewiſe ordered the records of that kingdom to be delivered to King John, and, by theſe ſmall gratifications, endeavoured to ſend him away ſatisfied from this interview at Newcaſtle, which, in all probability, might have taken effect, if he had behaved towards him for the future, with the ſame ſpirit of kindneſs and decency. But, as we have ſhewn in the text, King John was ſcarcely got home to Scotland, and begun to take upon him the exerciſe of the government, before he found himſelf treated with as little regard as any other feudatory, of what rank ſoever: which, at the ſame time, that it muſt in other reſpects have made him uneaſy, could not fail of leſſening his reputation and credit among his own ſubjects, of which they gave him immediate proof, by declining his court and preſence, and treating his deciſions, even in Parliament, with the utmoſt contempt. Things ſtanding thus, the Lords of his party failed not to inſinuate to him, that, as this was the effects of his dependance on the King of England, the only remedy of which theſe miſchiefs were capable, was his thinking of ſome way to throw it off. His liſtening to their council, inſtead of enabling him to do this, plunged him into a new ſeries of miſfortunes, which ended only with his life.

(37) See Abercromby, and the Scots hiſtorians in general.

(38) Rymer's Fœder. tom. ii. p. 591.

(39) Nic. Trivet. Annales, p. 273. Robert Brunne's Chronicle, p. 250, 251. Rymer's Fœdera, tom ii. p. 593.

(40) Hiſtoire d'Angleterre à la Haye 1724, 4to tom. iii. 50.

(41) Rot. Clauſ. 21 E. I. m. 8. d.

(42) Rot. Scot. 21 E. I. m. 5.

If this matter lay heavy on King John's mind, and he began to foreſee on what hard terms he was like to hold his new dignity, he was very ſoon confirmed in that ſenſe of things, by repeated inſtances of King Edward's reſolution, to draw all the affairs of Scotland that were of any importance, before himſelf in England. It was with this view, that ſummons after ſummons was ſent to King John, requiring him to appear and anſwer before the King of England in his Parliament, to complaints exhibited againſt him, for denying, or not doing, juſtice in Scotland; every one of which caſes, as it aggravated his uneaſineſs, ſo it put him under freſh difficulties with reſpect to his own ſubjects, who imputed all theſe unlucky accidents, to his having accepted the crown upon ſuch hard terms; whereas in truth, if Robert Bruce had ſucceeded, he could have held it upon no better (q). It is highly probable, that theſe repeated citations were intended by King Edward to eſtabliſh, beyond all controverſy, his title to the direct dominion over Scotland, and for this reaſon were carefully preſerved upon record [L]. There was, however, but one of the complaints againſt King John that was proſecuted with remarkable effect, and that perhaps with a deſign to eſtabliſh it as a precedent. This was the complaint of Macduff, who had been impriſoned by judgment given by the King of Scots in full Parliament, from which he appealed to King Edward, as the Superior Lord, and not without ſome colour of juſtice (r) [M]. The citation upon this appeal was delivered to the King of Scots at Sterling, on the ſecond of Auguſt 1293, requiring him to appear before (q) Johan. de Fordun. Scotichron. p. 970. Hector. Boëth. Scotor. Hiſt. lib. xiv. fol. 293. Buchan. Rerum Scot. lib. viii. p. 256.

(r) Prynne's Collections, Vol. iii. p. 531—551.

[L] And for this reaſon, were carefully preſerved upon record.] In this note it may contribute extremely to the perfect underſtanding of the ſubject of this article, which, without doubt, is one of the moſt curious and important in reference to Engliſh hiſtory, that will occur in this work, if we give a diſtinct account of theſe citations, and of the grounds upon which they were founded; ſince they will make two things abſolutely manifeſt, as to which all our hiſtorians have written very darkly and confuſedly; and yet they are the only two points upon which all the controverſies, between King Edward and King John, conſtantly turned (43). The firſt is, what thoſe rights of ſuperiority were, which King Edward claimed, and meant to exerciſe over the kingdom of Scotland? The next, what were thoſe hardſhips that King John thought ſo intolerable, as, rather to riſk his life and crown, his family and his kingdom, than ſit down tamely under them; though otherwiſe he was far from being a warm man, and farther ſtill, from having a high ſpirit? An account of theſe ſeveral citations, in the order in which they ſtand on our records, will put theſe matters out of all doubt.

(43) Theſe citations are frequently mentioned by Tyrrel and Abercromby in their hiſtories, but are ſet forth by neither.

The firſt citation is dated the 8th of March 1293, and it ſets forth, That Alexander III. late King of Scotland, ſtood indebted to John Maſon, a merchant of Gaſcony, in the ſum of two thouſand one hundred and ninety-ſeven pounds, eight ſhillings, which ſum, though often requeſted, John King of Scots had denied to pay; for which delay and refuſal of juſtice, the ſaid John Maſon found himſelf obliged to apply for remedy to the moſt gracious Prince Edward, King of England, and Superior Lord of Scotland; whereupon he commands King John to be and appear before him in his Parliament held at Weſtminſter, on the morrow of the Aſcenſion, there to anſwer this complaint, for delaying or denying juſtice (44).

(44) Rot. Scot. 21 E. I. m. 4.

The ſecond citation was dated the 25th of March in the ſame year, from Canterbury, at the ſuit of Macduff, for cauſes that will be ſet forth more largely in the ſucceeding note, but amounting in the whole, as in the former caſe, to a delay or denial of juſtice, for which King John is required to anſwer before King Edward, on the morrow of the Holy Trinity, whereever he ſhould then be in his kingdom of England; and the Sheriff of Northumberland is commanded to deliver the ſaid writ to King John in his proper perſon, which he accordingly did, and made a return thereof, upon which all the ſubſequent proceedings were founded, as will be ſhewn hereafter, when we come to ſpeak particularly of this ſuit (45).

(45) Ryley Placit. Parliam. fol. 154, 155. Rot. Scot. 21 E. I. m. 4.

The third citation was dated at Weſtminſter, the 15th of June in the ſame year; the occaſion this. While both the Kings were at Newcaſtle, King Edward had directed his letters to Walter de Huntercomb, his Governor of the iſland of Man, to give poſſeſſion thereof to King John, which was accordingly done. After this comes a Lady, whoſe name was Auſtrica, ſetting herſelf forth to be the couſin and heireſs of Magnus, formerly King of Man, and demands of King John to be put in poſſeſſion of the ſaid iſland, offering to make out her juſt claim thereto; to which, little or no regard being had by that Prince, ſhe appeals to King Edward, as the Superior and direct Lord of Scotland; who, for this delay and denial of juſtice, requires King John to appear before him within fourteen days next after the feaſt of St. Michael, whereever he ſhould then be in England. Theſe letters, as well as the former, are directed to the Sheriff of Northumberland, with this particular inſtruction, that he ſhould deliver them to the King in perſon, before ſufficient witneſſes, and ſhould likewiſe certify this ſervice to King Edward, on the day and at the place before mentioned, on the return of the writ (46).

(46) Rymer's Fœder. tom. ii. p. 608.

The fourth is dated the ſecond of September in the ſame year, and therein it is ſet forth, That David, late King of Scotland, had heretofore beſtowed on the Royal Abbey of Reading in England, a priory dependant on the Biſhop of St. Andrews. This priory was afterwards alienated by the Abbot of Reading, in favour of the Biſhop of St. Andrews. The ſucceſſor of that Abbot, being willing to recover the priory, ſet forth, that this alienation was contrary to the will of the major part of the Monks, in a petition to King John. The Biſhop of St. Andrews appeals from that King to the Pope, and this appeal the King received and admitted. The Abbot, upon this, appeals himſelf to King Edward, as Superior Lord of Scotland; who, upon this ſuggeſtion of denial and delay of juſtice, requires the ſaid King to appear before him, to anſwer the ſame within fifteen days next after the feaſt of St. Martin, whereever he ſhould then be in England (47).

(47) Rot. Scot. 21 E. I. m. 3.

The fifth citation is dated the 20th of April 1294, and recites, That the reverend Father Anthony, Lord Biſhop of Durham, had claimed before King John, his right of eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction over the towns of Berwick and Haddington, as belonging to his Biſhopric of Durham, but without effect; of which, having complained to King Edward, as the Superior Lord of Scotland, he, for this denial, and delay of juſtice, requires King John to appear before him, on the morrow of St. John the Baptiſt, whereever he might then be in England. The Sheriff of Northumberland had the ſame directions in reſpect to this as in regard to the third citation (48).

(48) Rot. Scot. 22 E. I. m. 3.

[M] Not without ſome juſtice.] This remark is made to ſhew the wiſdom of King Edward, who very prudently inforced his proceſs on that appeal, which, being beſt grounded, gave ſome degree of credit, even to that warmth and rigour with which it was purſued (49). The caſe then of Macduff (who, by a very groſs miſtake, our hiſtorians ſtyle Earl of Fife) was this. He was ſon of Malcolm, Earl of Fife, and by his grant, had a title to the lands of Bereys and Crey; but was turned out of the poſſeſſion, by William Biſhop of St. Andrews, as guardian of the county of Fife, during the vacancy of the throne of Scotland, upon which he applied himſelf to King Edward, who by his writ directed the Guardians of Scotland to do him juſtice (50). In conſequence of this, he was again put into poſſeſſion of the ſaid lands, and held them till after King John was in poſſeſſion of the crown

(49) See Abercromby, &c.

(50) Rymer's Fœder. tom. ii. p. 604.

fore the King of England in his Parliament, to be held after Michaelmas in the ſame year; where accordingly he was preſent; and being urged to anſwer the matter of that complaint, he replied, That he was a King, and that he could not anſwer without the advice of his ſubjects (s). He was told that this was altogether inſufficient, that he had done homage to the King of England for his crown, and was therefore bound to anſwer. He perſiſted, however, in adhering to his former declaration, adding, that it was a matter which concerned his kingdom, and therefore he would do nothing without the aſſent of his people. Upon this Macduff demanded judgment, which the Parliament was ready to give with reſpect to the contempt; and it was, That three of King John's principal caſtles ſhould be ſeized till he made ſatisfaction, upon which he ſubmitted, which being all King Edward wanted, was received, and he had farther time given him (t) [N]. There happened about this time ſome diſputes between the Kings of France and England, which afforded ſome hopes to Baliol, of being delivered from that uneaſy ſituation he had been in ever ſince he attained the kingdom. Some of our old hiſtorians ſay, that he quitted England privately, which ſo enraged King Edward, that he ſeized all his eſtates there; and they likewiſe add, that the reaſon he gave ſuch an anſwer, and avoided pleading directly to Macduff's complaint, was becauſe the Scots had already appointed twelve Commiſſioners, viz. four of the Clergy, four Earls, and four Barons, to whom he was to account for his actions after his return home (u). I cannot help thinking, however, that they are miſtaken in this, or rather, that they confound the times in which theſe events happened; ſince it is evident enough from our records, that King John did not break with King Edward either this year or the next; but, on the contrary, appeared again in the Engliſh Parliament, when the plea between him and Macduff was continued, and King John at the ſame time granted an aid out of his Engliſh eſtates, for the recovery of Gaſcony, which King Philip of France had ſeized into his own hands (w). It is however certain, that King John was privately taking the beſt methods he could, to put himſelf into a condition to throw off his dependance upon England. But he was ſo far from having thrown it off already, that when King Edward was determined to recover Gaſcony by force of arms, he not only directed his letters to King John, which were dated from Portſmouth, the twenty-ninth of June 1294, but alſo to the principal nobility of Scotland, requiring him to ſend men, and then to come in perſon, with military ſupplies to London, ſo as to be ready to paſs with him on the firſt of September into France, for the recovery of Gaſcony (x); and a little before this, he had required the King of Scots to lay an embargo on all the ſhipping of his ſubjects, for the ſame reaſon (y). How far he complied with any of theſe demands does not appear; but it is very certain, that at this time, and a little after, King John was treating with Philip the Fair, King of France, about an alliance againſt England, and this he did not only with the privity, but with the abſolute conſent of his ſubjects; and things being now far advanced, he granted full powers, by virtue of an inſtrument, dated at Sterling the fifth of July 1295, to his Ambaſſadors, William, Biſhop of St. Andrews; Matthew, Biſhop of Dunkel; Sir John Soules; and Sir Ingeram Umfraville, to negociate and conclude a treaty with the Crown of France, which was accordingly ſigned and ſealed, on the twenty-

(s) Ryley Placit. Parliam. f. 159.

(t) Rot. de Super. Scotiæ.

(u) Chron. Abingd. MS.

(w) Rot. de ſuperior. Scotiæ.

(x) Rot. Vaſcon. 22 E. I. m. 11. d.

(y) Rot. Vaſcon. 22 E. I. m. 13. d.

crown of Scotland, when in a parliament held at Scone, in the Octave of the Purification of our Lady, he was attached to anſwer for his entering into poſſeſſion of the ſaid lands, which were in the poſſeſſion of the late King Alexander III. at the time of his deceaſe, on account of the nonage of Coalbanus, Earl of Fife, who dying, left his ſon Duncan a minor; and he dying likewiſe ſeized of the ſame lands, left his ſon Duncan a minor and the King's ward. To this Macduff pleaded, that theſe lands were granted to him by his father Malcolm, Earl of Fife, which grant was confirmed by the late King Alexander III., whoſe charter he produced. Notwithſtanding this he was impriſoned, and judgment given againſt him, ſaving to him, however, his right of ſuit againſt Duncan the ſon of Duncan, when he ſhould come to full age (51). After he was diſcharged from this impriſonment, which it was ſurmiſed he underwent, for having addreſſed himſelf during the vacancy of the throne to King Edward; he applied again to that Prince, who thereupon directed his writ, or letter miſſive, as we have ſhewn in the former note; but King John not appearing, another writ was directed to the Sheriff, returnable fifteen days after Michaelmas, upon which he did attend, and not being allowed an Attorney, was obliged to plead in perſon, as is ſhewn above in the text (52).

(51) Rymer's Fœdera, tom. ii. p. 606.

(52) Ryley Placit. Parliam. p. 154, 155.

[N] Was received, and he had time given him.] The King of Scots was under very uneaſy circumſtances in this affair; for what he had done in the caſe of Macduff was in full Parliament, and very probably it was on this account he preſſed ſo ſtrongly his not anſwering, until he had conſulted his ſubjects. But this would not ſerve King Edward's turn, who clearly ſhewed him what he wanted, and what he was reſolved to have from him, which was a new acknowledgment of his ſuperiority; in default of which, he was to ſeize three of his beſt caſtles in Scotland. But before the pronouncing of the ſentence, he came before the King and his Council, and made ſupplication to the King with his own mouth, and delivered it unto him with his own hand in writing to this effect: 'Sir, I am your liege-man for the realm 'of Scotland, and pray you as to what I am come 'hither, and for which concerns the people of my 'kingdom as well as myſelf, that you will forbear 'while I ſpeak with them, that I may not be ſurprized for want of advice; for that thoſe that are 'with me will not, nor aught to adviſe me without 'others of the realm; and when I have advice from 'them, I will anſwer at your firſt Parliament after 'Eaſter, and will behave myſelf towards you as I 'ought to do (53).' The King adviſing hereupon, at the inſtance of the great men of his Council, and with the conſent of Macduff himſelf, granted his petition, and gave him a longer day, until his next Parliament after Eaſter, that ſhould be holden on the morrow of the Holy Trinity. He appeared accordingly in that Parliament, and the cauſe was again adjourned at his requeſt; but he ſtill continued to feel in his heart, the deep wound that had been given to his honour, by the uſage he had met with in the former Parliament at Weſtminſter, which, it ſeems, he could not either forget or forgive (54): beſides the time ſeemed favourable, and the quarrel which had lately broken out between the Kings of France and England, gave him a proſpect of ſhaking off that yoke which he could no longer bear.

(53) Rot. Scot.

(54) Walter Hemingford. Hiſt. Edw. I. p. 43.

third

third of October following (z) [O]. It was not long that a tranſaction of this nature could be concealed from a Prince of ſo great penetration as King Edward, and yet he diſſembled his diſcovery of it for ſeveral reaſons, and continued to treat King John as formerly, or rather with greater civility; but, in the mean time, he laboured two points with equal vigour and ſecrecy; the one was to ſettle the terms of a foreign alliance, that might enable him to oblige the French to do him juſtice; the other to engage the Court of France to conſent to a truce which he propoſed, till the former had taken effect, in both of which he fully ſucceeded (a). He then directed his letters to the King of Scots, demanding the caſtle and town of Berwick upon Tweed, the caſtle and town of Roxburgh, and the caſtle and town of Jedburgh, to be put into his hands, until ſuch time as the war with France was over, promiſing then to reſtore them. Theſe letters were dated at Weſtminſter, the ſixteenth of October 1295 (b); but they met with a very cool reception from King John, who thought himſelf by this time in a condition to defend his own cauſe; and therefore inſtead of appearing as formerly in the Engliſh Parliament, he ſent the Abbot of Aberbrothock to excuſe him, which King Edward ſeemingly took patiently enough; but in the mean time he was preparing to reduce him by force, reſolving while the truce beforementioned laſted, to employ that army which he had levied againſt the French, in conquering the Scots (c). King John gave him fair opportunity to do it, by taking a very extraordinary ſtep, which was baniſhing all Engliſhmen out of his dominions: for he now thought himſelf under no obligation to temporize longer with this Monarch, ſince he was ſure of the aſſiſtance of France, and had been abſolved from his oaths by the Pope (d). In the ſpring of the year 1296, King Edward began to move northwards, and coming to Newcaſtle, he cauſed a proclamation to be iſſued, requiring King John to appear there on the firſt of March, to which he neither paid obedience, nor ſent, as he had done before, any perſon to excuſe him (e). While King Edward was at Newcaſtle, the war began both by ſea and land; for the Engliſh fleet having orders to block up Berwick, the Scots, who were not then it ſeems totally deſtitute of a naval force, attacked that fleet with ſo much ſucceſs, that eighteen ſhips were ſunk, and the reſt diſperſed. About the ſame time, Sir Robert de Roſs, Captain of the caſtle of Werk, for the love of a Scots lady, baſely betrayed his truſt, and deſerted to King John. His brother William gave notice of this to King Edward, and deſired that a body of troops might be ſent him, with which he undertook to ſecure the caſtle. Accordingly, one thouſand men were detached for that ſervice, who, when they were come to a place called Preſtfen, were ſurprized by the traitor Sir Robert, and the Scots under his command, by whom they were totally cut off (f). King Edward, when he heard this, ſaid no more, than that he was glad that hoſtilities were begun by the Scots. Soon after this, the Earls of Montieth, Strathern, Athol, and Mar, with a body of five thouſand men, entered the county of Cumberland, and advanced as far as Carliſle, the ſuburbs of which city they burnt, but were not able to take the place. It was not long before King Edward ſeverely revenged theſe loſſes; for coming before Berwick on the twenty-ninth of March, and finding a ſtrong garriſon therein, capable and reſolved to make a long defence, he put in practice a ſtratagem extremely well contrived, and attended with all the ſucceſs he could deſire or expect. For pretending to raiſe the ſiege, and withdrawing his forces ſome diſtance from the town, he cauſed it to be reported, that King John with a numerous army was come to their relief, and was advanced within a mile of the place. The townſmen, and many of the officers, running out to meet theſe ſuppoſed ſuccours, (z) Rymer's Fœd. Tom. ii. p 680, 681. 695. Prynne's Collect. tom. iii. p. 602, 603. Du Tillet, Recueil des Roys de France, &c. P. ii. p. 195.

(a) Nic. Trivet. T. Walſingh. W. Hemingford, &c.

(b) Rot. Scotiæ 23 E. I. m. 2.

(c) Nic. Trivet. Annal. p. 287, 288. Fordun. Boëth. Buchan.

(d) Rapin Hiſtoire d'Angleterre, tom. iii. p. 56.

(e) Walt. Hemingford Hiſtor. Edw. I. Vol. i. p. 84.

(f) Nic. Trivet. Annal. p. 288.

[O] Signed and ſealed on the twenty-third of October following.] It is very remarkable, that we find the full powers granted by John Balliol to his Ambaſſadors, and the treaty or alliance concluded by them with the Crown of France, entered on the Engliſh records, and tranſcribed from thence by ſome of the old monkiſh hiſtorians, which plainly ſhews, that they were more careful in thoſe days as to penning their Chronicles, than has been commonly imagined. As this alliance was the ſource of thoſe wars, of which we are to give ſome account in this article, it will be requiſite to give the reader a ſhort ſketch of the principal points which were ſettled in that treaty, and which may be reduced to the following ſeven (55).

(55) Rymer's Fœder. tom. ii. p. 695, & ſeq. Prynne's Collect. tom. iii. p. 602, 603. Du Tillet, P. ii. p. 195.

I. That Edward, King John's ſon, ſhall marry the daughter of Charles of Valois, Earl of Anjou, the King of France's brother; that Prince Edward ſhall receive with the ſaid Lady, twenty-five thouſand livres de Tournois current money, and that ſhe ſhall be aſſigned a dowry of one thouſand five hundred pounds ſterling of yearly rent, of which, one thouſand pounds to be paid out of King John's lands of Balliol, Dampeir, Helicourt, and de Hornay, in France, and five hundred out of thoſe of Lanerk, Cadiou, Cunningham, Haddington, and the Caſtellany of Dundee in Scotland.

II. That King John and his ſucceſſors ſhall, with all their power, by ſea and land, be aſſiſting to King Philip, and his ſucceſſors, in the proſecution of the preſent war, againſt the King of England and his Allies, as well the King of Almaign as others.

III. That he ſhould, at his own charge, make war againſt the King of England, when he was employed in, or diverted by war in other places.

IV. That King John ſhall prevail with the Prelates, Earls, Barons, Noblemen, and the Communities of all the cities in Scotland, ſo far as of right they may, to teſtify their aſſent to this agreement, by tranſmitting their letters patents under their ſeals to France.

V. That in like manner, if the King of England ſhall invade Scotland, the King of France ſhall make war upon him in other parts by way of diverſion, and, if required, ſhall ſend auxiliary forces at his own charges, till they come thither.

VI. That if the King of England went out of his kingdom, or ſent many forces abroad, the Commiſſioners promiſed, that the King of Scotland ſhould enter England with his whole power as far as he could, making war in the field, beſieging towns, waſting the countries, and by all poſſible ways deſtroying England.

VII. That they ſhould not make peace on either ſide without the conſent of the other.

were

†

were ſurprized by part of the Engliſh army, who on that occaſion had Scots enſigns, the better to deceive them, and who purſuing them cloſely, entered the town with them, ſeized the gates, and let in all the reſt of the troops, by whom the whole Scots garriſon was totally cut off, to the number of ſeven thouſand (g), as their writers report, or of about ten thouſand (h), as the Engliſh hiſtorians agree. Upon receiving an account of two ſuch loſſes, as that of this important fortreſs, and the flower of his army that was in it, King John, who was not a very warm man, was ſo much provoked, that he drew up a ſolemn inſtrument, renouncing his homage and fealty to King Edward, and breathing, in the ſtrongeſt terms, defiance, which he ſent by one of the Friar Minors of Roxburgh, to the King, then at Berwick; who, according to his uſual cuſtom, in regard to every thing relating to the affairs of Scotland, cauſed it to be recorded, and as it is a very ſingular and extraordinary piece, we thought it might not be amiſs to inſert it in the notes (i) [P]. King John followed this declaration of his, with as great an army as he could raiſe; for at that time his ſubjects were much divided, the Bruces and their party, with the Earls of March and Angus, and others of the nobility, adhering to King Edward, and beſides this, part of his forces were then in Northumberland, ſo that it was a kind of infatuation in him, to place all as he did upon the event of a battle; in which he ſhewed as much raſhneſs now, as he had done weakneſs and timidity in his former conduct. King Edward having laid ſiege to Dunbar, and King John marching to its relief, the armies ſoon met, and came to a deciſive action near that place, ſome time in the month of April, in which the Scots were totally defeated, with the loſs, ſome ſay of ten, others of twenty thouſand men (k). But the former account is the more likely to be true, ſince only Sir Patrick Graham of the King's Council of perſons of diſtinction, fell there. We are indebted to one of our old hiſtorians for ſome particulars of this action, which are not mentioned in any of the reſt. He ſays, that King John's army conſiſted of fifteen hundred horſe and forty thouſand foot, that they had the advantage of ground, and that after their defeat, they fled to the foreſt of Selkirk (l). But ſeveral of the principal nobility took ſhelter in the caſtle of Dunbar, where, however, they found themſelves preſently beſieged by the Engliſh army, and either through the treachery of the Governor, or for want of proviſions, were obliged to ſurrender at diſcretion. The chief perſons taken there were, William Earl of Roſs, William Earl of Athol, Alexander Earl of Montieth, four Barons, thirty-one Knights, an hundred Eſquires, and about three hundred private men. The Scotch hiſtorians ſay, that King Edward treated the perſons of rank that fell into his hands here, with great ſeverity; but I find, that he only ſent them priſoners into England, and cauſed them to be kept in different caſtles, twelve or fifteen in a place. But all writers agree, that as to the private men, they were uſed with all poſſible tenderneſs, the King cauſing them to be ſet at liberty, on their taking an oath that they would not take up arms againſt him any more (m). Upon the loſs of the battle, and the taking the caſtle of Dunbar, King John and his army retired beyond the Frith of the Forth, and for any thing that appears, made no farther reſiſtance, which ſome of their own writers, not without great appearance of truth, attribute to the diviſions in their Councils, occaſioned by the Bruces, father and ſon, that is, ſon and grandſon to the competitor, adhering to King Edward; and as they had made many friends in King John's army, they doubtleſs did him a great deal of miſchief, both by giving him bad advice, and by betraying to the King of England, what better advice he received from other hands (n). King Edward, with his victorious army, marched on to Roxburgh, where the Steward of Scotland lay with a conſiderable

(g) Johan. Fordun. Scotichron. p. 972, 973. Hector. Boeth. Scotor. Hiſt. lib. xiv. fol. 291. Buchan. Rer. Scot. Hiſt. l. viii. p 258.

(h) Walt. Hemingford, p. 91. Chron. Cotton. Chron. S. Alban.

(i) Nic. Trivet. Annal. p. 290.

(k) H. Knyghton. Tho. Walſingh. Matth. Weſtm.

(l) Walt. Hemingford Hiſt. Edw. I. p 95.

(m) Rob. Brunne's Chron. Knyghton, Walſingham.

(n) Hector. Boëth. Scot. Hiſt. lib. xiv. Buchan. Scot. Hiſt. lib. viii.

[P] It might not be amiſs to inſert it in the notes.] We are told by Buchanan, that the perſon who brought this extraordinary piece, very narrowly eſcaped with his life (56); which, conſidering the ſtrangeneſs of the contents of it, is not at all wonderful. One of our ancient hiſtorians, who ſays nothing of the ill uſage of this man, informs us of many circumſtances that ſeem not to have been known to Buchanan, or indeed to any of the Scottiſh hiſtorians; ſuch as that the name of the perſon who brought it, was Adam Blunt, that he was Guardian or Warden of the Friers Minors at Roxburgh, that he brought with him three of his Monks, that he delivered it to the King, April 5, 1296; and that his Majeſty directly ordered it to be enrolled in Chancery, intending no doubt to juſtify thereby his own proceedings, and the deſign he had then formed of acquiring the poſſeſſion of, as well as the ſuperiority over, the kingdom of Scotland, by conquering and annexing it to his own kingdom of England, as appears by the whole of his conduct afterwards (57). At preſent, let us peruſe the letters of King John, thus then they ran, 'To the magnificent Prince 'Edward, by the grace of God, King of England; 'John, by the ſame grace, King of Scotland. 'Whereas you, and others of your kingdom, have 'purpoſely and knowingly, by your violent power, 'notoriouſly, and frequently, done grievous and intolerable injuries, contempts, grievances, and 'enormous damages againſt us, the liberties of our 'kingdom, and alſo againſt God and juſtice, citing 'us at your pleaſure, upon every ſlight occaſion, 'out of our kingdom, unduly vexing us, ſeizing our 'caſtles, lands, and poſſeſſions in our kingdom, 'unjuſtly, and for no fault of ours, taking the goods 'of our ſubjects, as well by ſea as by land, and carrying them into your kingdom, killing our merchants and other traders with you, and taking away 'our ſubjects and impriſoning them: for the reformation of which things, though we ſent our meſſengers unto you, yet they remain not only unredreſſed, but there is every day an addition of 'worſe: for now you are come with a great army 'upon our borders, to diſinherit us and the inhabitants of our kingdom, and proceeding forwards, 'have inhumanly committed many ſlaughters, burnings, and violent invaſions, as well by ſea as by 'land: We therefore not being able to ſuſtain the 'ſaid injuries, grievances, and damages any longer, 'nor to remain in your fealty or homage, extorted by 'your violent oppreſſion, do hereby return them to 'you, for ourſelf and all the inhabitants of our 'kingdom, as well for the lands we hold of you in 'your kingdom, as for your pretended government 'over us (58).'

(56) Rerum Scotic. Hiſt. lib. viii.

(57) Walt. de Hemingford, Hiſt. Edw. I. p. 92.

(58) Nic. Trivet. Annal. p. 290.

body of men, with whom he might certainly have defended the caſtle. But he choſe rather to make terms for himſelf and his adherents; and as the circumſtances of the times were favourable, and King Edward was deſirous of doing a great deal in a ſhort ſpace, he obtained as much as he could expect, which induced him not only to ſubmit, but to take an oath of fealty to that Monarch (o). King Edward then marched to Edinburgh, and had both city and caſtle ſurrendered to him. He proceeded thence to Sterling, which, though a place of ſome ſtrength, fell into his hands without any defence, the garriſon having deſerted it before he appeared in its neighbourhood (p). All this very clearly ſhews, how ill King John was ſerved, and how little reaſon he had to hope any thing from a diſpirited army, and a divided nation; which induced him to liſten to ſuch reaſons as were offered, to perſuade him, in ſuch wretched circumſtances, to think rather of preſerving his perſon, than of protecting a people, who wanted virtue and loyalty enough, to make him or themſelves free (q). It was certainly a bad choice he made; but then we ought to conſider, neceſſity compelled him to it. In ſhort, he determined to throw himſelf upon the mercy of King Edward; and having intimated this reſolution of his to that Prince, he ſent Anthony, Biſhop of Durham, to encourage him to perſiſt in that deſign, and to make him certain promiſes to keep him ſteady to it. This Biſhop was very well received by the unfortunate Prince to whom he was ſent, and by thoſe mean-ſpirited counſellors he had about him, with whom having agreed upon the terms of their ſubmiſſion, he brought the King of Scots along with him to King Edward, being then at a place called Stroutharrack, without any ſtate, only mounted upon a little nag, with a white rod in his hand (r). There being admitted into the King's preſence, he made his acknowledgment of his offence, and begged pardon by word of mouth, and went thence with the King to the caſtle of Brechin, where he not only made another ſolemn acknowledgment of the errors which he had committed, in breach of his oath and duty to King Edward, but likewiſe abſolutely ſurrendered himſelf, with the whole kingdom of Scotland, and his royal dignity, and in ſhort, whatever belonged to him, either in a public or private capacity, into the hands of Anthony, Biſhop of Durham, who received them in the place and in the name of King Edward (s). He likewiſe thought fit to ſeal and ſubſcribe a certain inſtrument in writing, expreſſing this to be his free will and act, in the preſence of ſome of his, and many of the Engliſh nobility; which as it is in itſelf one of the moſt extraordinary pieces that is any where extant, and as it very nearly concerns the ſubject of this article, we ſhall inſert in the notes (t) [Q]. As ſoon as the Great-Seal of Scotland had been affixed to this ſtrange charter, by which the (o) Walt. de Hemingford, Hiſt. Edw. I. p. 97.

(p) Major, Boëthius, Buchan.

(q) See Brady, Tyrrel, Abercromby.

(r) Rot. Scot. 24 E. I. p. 8. Hector. Boëth. Hiſt. Scot. lib. xiv.

(s) Rob. Brunne's Chron. p. 279. Hen. Knyghton. Chron. Walt. Hemingf. Hiſt. Edw. I. p. 99.

(t) Rymer's Fœd. tom. ii. p. 718.

[Q] We ſhall inſert in the notes.] There are ſeveral circumſtances in relation to this matter, which ſeem to be wanting in our hiſtories, in order to render it clearly and fully underſtood: and indeed, this is no wonder, becauſe in this chaſm lies the whole ſecret contrivance of King Edward to make himſelf maſter of this country. It appears clearly enough, both from the Scotch and Engliſh hiſtorians, that John Baliol was all along moſt ſcandalouſly betrayed; and it was his misfortune to meet with no one author ſo much concerned for his character, as to endeavour doing him common juſtice. With the Engliſh writers of Chronicles, he is a falſe, perjured traitor; with the Scotch authors, he is a weak, mean-ſpirited, and cowardly Prince (5). Perhaps, after all, the unfortunate John Baliol might be a very worthy, good man, and we may really preſume he was ſo, ſince the Pope, and many foreign Princes, notwithſtanding all the evils that befel him, never left ſtruggling for his liberty till they obtained it. In reſpect to this very tranſaction, a ſmall degree of attention will enable us to diſcern, that he was deceived and abuſed. For laying things together, the truth appears to be this: King Edward, in the management of the whole affair of getting the kingdom of Scotland into his hands, made uſe of Dr. Anthony Beak, Biſhop of Durham. He it was, who, in the aſſembly at Norham, undertook to eſtabliſh the King's right to the ſuperiority and direct dominion over Scotland: he was employed to bring King John, in the ſubmiſſive manner mentioned in the text, to King Edward, which he did on the ſeventh of July 1296, at which time, as we find it entered on record, he, by word of mouth, acknowledged himſelf heartily ſorry for the unlawful confederacies he had made with Philip, King of France, againſt the King of England. He alſo then renounced all ſuch confederacies and unlawful contracts, made in the name of himſelf, his ſon Edward, and the inhabitants of Scotland, againſt his due homage and fealty done to the King of England (60). This he performed in the preſence of the Biſhops of Durham and Hereford, and of other perſons of quality, whoſe names are mentioned in the record; and we may fairly preſume, that he thought this was all that would be expected from him: but being now a priſoner, together with his ſon, he was required to go much farther, nay, as far as it was poſſible for him to go, and before a Public Notary, to ſurrender his kingdom and royal dignity, which accordingly he did, and afterwards confirmed it by the following charter, which we promiſed to produce (61). It is found in many of our ancient hiſtorians. In ſome of them we have it in Latin, in others in French, but in Engliſh it ran thus:

'John, by the grace of God, King of Scotland, 'To all that ſhall hear or ſee theſe preſent letters, 'greeting: Whereas we, by evil and falſe council, 'and our own ſimplicity, have greatly offended and 'provoked our Lord Edward, by the grace of God, 'King of England, &c. to wit, for that being in his 'faith and homage, we have allied ourſelf to the King 'of France, who then was, and is now his enemy, of'fering a marriage between our ſon and the daughter 'of his brother, the Lord Charles, and aſſiſting him 'by war and other ways with all our power; and 'furthermore, by our evil counſel aforeſaid, we de'fied our Lord the King of England, and put ourſelf 'out of his faith and homage, and ſent our people 'into the kingdom of England, to burn, ſpoil, plun'der, kill, and commit other miſchiefs, fortifying 'the kingdom (of Scotland), that is, his fee (or ſeig'niory), againſt him, putting garriſons into the towns, 'caſtles, and other places; for which tranſgreſſions, 'our Lord the King of England, having entered Scot'land by force, conquered and took it, notwithſtand'ing all we could do againſt him, as of right he 'might, as Lord of the fee, ſeeing after we did 'homage to him, we rebelled againſt him: We be'ing therefore yet free, and in our own power, do 'hereby ſurrender unto him the land of Scotland, 'and the whole nation with all its homages. In 'witneſs whereof, we have cauſed to be made theſe 'our letters patents, dated at Brechin the tenth day 'of July, in the fourth year of our reign (62).'

I cannot help mentioning a very ſingular circumſtance upon this occaſion, that has not been taken notice

(59) See Holinſhed's Chronicle, Vol. i. p. 208. Abercromby's Martial Atchievements of the Scots Nation, Vol. i. p. 494. Prynne's Collections, tom. iii. p. 602, 603.

(60) Rot. Scot. 24 E. I. p. 8.

(61) Johan. Fordun. Scotichron. p. 976, 977. Major. de Geſt. Scotor. fol. 74. Leſl. de Rebus Geſt. Scotor. l. vi. Hect. Boëth. Hiſt. Scot. l. xiv. Buchan. Rer. Scot. Hiſt. lib. viii.

(62) Prynne's Collections, tom. iii. p. 647. Nic. Trivet. Ann. p. 292, 293.

the King of Scots quitted his dignity, it was immediately broken to pieces, as a thing no longer of any uſe or conſequence, King Edward being determined to take that kingdom into his own hands, and to govern it as he did the reſt of his dominions. In order to perfect this deſign, the King reſolved to march into the heart of Scotland, that he might ſee whether any of the people meant to diſpute his authority, or would pretend to adhere to a Prince who had quitted his dignity, and therewith all right to their allegiance. He moved on accordingly as far as Elgin in the ſhire of Murray, and finding every thing perfectly quiet, thought it needleſs to advance farther north (u). In his return he came to the abbey of Scone near Perth, from whence he thought fit to remove the famous ſtone, upon which the Kings of Scotland ſat when they were crowned, as a monument of his conqueſt, and a mark of his having totally ſubverted that monarchy. This ſtone he cauſed to be conveyed to the abbey of Weſtminſter, and directed it to be placed in a chair there, where it has ever ſince remained (w) [R]. He is charged by ſome of the hiſtorians of that kingdom, with having committed various acts of ſeverity in this progreſs, ſuch as burning their records, aboliſhing their old laws, altering the form of divine ſervice, and obliging ſuch amongſt them as were diſtinguiſhed for their learning, to remove out of their own country, in order to go and ſettle at Oxford; which facts, however, if they are not totally forged, may be very truly ſaid to have been much exaggerated (x). From the abbey of Scone the King returned to Berwick, in the beginning of the month of Auguſt, where he held a Parliament for the kingdom of Scotland, to which moſt of the Clergy, Nobility, and Freeholders repaired, and there did homage for their lands and poſſeſſions, and ſwore fealty to King Edward, as appears by four large rolls, ſtill preſerved amongſt our records in the Tower, and which are intitled, The Rolls, or the Oaths of Homage and Fealty made to Edward King of England, by every individual Freeholder of the Kingdom of Scotland (y). At the ſame time he appointed a new Treaſurer, a new Chancellor, and a new Chief-Juſtice for the realm of Scotland, into whoſe cuſtody he delivered a new Great-Seal, which he had cauſed to be made for that kingdom; and having thus taken away all marks of a ſeparate and independent ſtate, he cauſed King John and his ſon Edward Baliol, to be transferred (u) T. Walſingham, Knyghton, Hemingford. Fordun. Major. Leſl. Boëth. Buchan.

(w) T. Walſingham, Ypodig. Neuſtr.

(x) Fordun, Major. Boëth. Leſl. Buchan.

(y) Rymer's Fœd. tom. ii. p. 723.

notice of before, and it is this; that notwithſtanding all that has been ſaid upon this ſubject, by our ancient and modern hiſtorians, we find a very great variation in the copy of this inſtrument given us by Mr. Rymer. He firſt exhibits it in French, which, he ſays, was taken from the very original, ſealed with the great ſeal on white wax, hanging thereto by a parchment label (63). He gives us next a Latin tranſlation; but both are dated, not on the tenth, but on the ſecond of July, not at Brechin but at Kyncardyn. This is very ſtrange, and though it is hard to argue againſt records, yet undoubtedly, theſe facts are not reconcileable to the current of our hiſtory. For firſt, with reſpect to the date; King Edward held the feaſt of St. John the Baptiſt at Perth, from thence he went to Montroſe and the caſtle of Brechin in his way to Aberdeen, where we find him on the 15th of July, of Mr. Rymer's own ſhewing (64). It was after the feaſt of St. John the Baptiſt that the King began to treat with Baliol, and he gave him a fortnight's time to come in and make his ſubmiſſion. It is out of doubt, that the ceremony of appearing with a white wand in his hand, and renouncing his alliance with France, was different from, and prior to his reſignation, and yet, according to this date, the whole muſt have been tranſacted in leſs than a week (65). Next we ought to conſider, that the authors in which this charter is preſerved, wrote, ſome of them in, and all of them near, the time of Edward I., and that they agree in the date of the 10th of July, which makes the whole tranſaction of a piece, and ſuits exactly with the King's motions (66). But if, after all, the original is ſtill extant, and dated as we find it in Rymer, then it muſt be ſuppoſed, that the Biſhop of Durham, was left there to tranſact theſe matters in the King's name, and that all the hiſtorians who have mentioned theſe facts are moſt groſsly miſtaken (67).

(63) Fœd. tom. ii. p. 718.

(64) Ib. p. 719.

(65) Fordun, Scotichron. p. 976, 977. Walt. de Hemingford Hiſt. Edw. I. p. 93. Nicol. rivet. Annal. p. 292.

(66) R. Brunne's Chron. p. 279. Nic. Trivet. Annal. p. 292. H. Knyghton, de Event. Angl. col. 2481.

(67) All our hiſtorians agree, that Baliol was at the caſtle of Forfar, when the Biſhop went to treat with him, that he came from that caſtle to Montroſe, to make his ſubmiſſion, and was ſent by ſea from thence to England.

[R] Where it has ever ſince remained.] It is very manifeſt, that King Edward was now intent upon removing whatever might hinder his deſign of making himſelf abſolute maſter of Scotland; and as he was reſolved, that it ſhould be no longer a ſeparate monarchy, he was deſirous of taking out of the way and ſight of the Scots, whatever might put them in mind of their former condition, and thereby excite them to inſurrections and rebellions. In the caſtle of Edinburgh he found the crown and ſceptre, and the reſt of the regalia, which he carried away; and knowing the Scots were very ſuperſtitious, and had various Palladia, which they flattered themſelves would contribute to the preſervation of their government, he reſolved to take theſe with him alſo, in order to convince them, that Scotland was to be no more a diſtinct kingdom. Amongſt theſe were two croſſes kept in ſeveral monaſteries which were very famous, the one called the Black-rood of Scotland, the other the Croſs-Neytte, both which he transferred into England (68). But that which of all their antiquities they valued moſt, was the marble ſtone upon which their Kings ſat at the time they were crowned, and of which we find a ſhort deſcription in Walter of Hemingford (69). This, as is ſaid in the text, he cauſed to be removed to Weſtminſter, where, by the King's direction, it was fixed under the bottom of a large wooden chair for the uſe of the Prieſt who officiated at divine ſervice: but it has been ſince employed here, as formerly in Scotland, for the inauguration chair of our monarchs. Upon this ſtone there are engraved the following Latin verſes.

(68) Abercromby, Vol. i. p. 496.

(69) Hiſt. Ed. I. p. 37.

Ni fallat fatum, Scoti hunc quocunque locatum,
Invenient lapidem, regnare tenentur ibidem (70).

(70) Tho. Walſingham, Ypodigm Neuſtria, A. D. 1296.

In Engliſh thus:

If truth there be, in what old prophets ſay,
Where 'ere this ſtone is found, the Scots ſhall ſway.

It may not be amiſs to remark here, that there might be as much ſuperſtition in removing theſe ancient monuments by the Engliſh, as the Scots had ſhewn in preſerving them: for if the reader will conſult the old rhiming Chronicle of Robert of Brunne, publiſhed by Mr. Hearne, he will find that this whole expedition of King Edward's was in thoſe days thought to have been predicted by the famous Merlin, and that by aſſuming to himſelf the dominion of Scotland as well as Wales, King Edward was believed to have fulfilled his prophecy (71). Neither will it appear at all improbable, to ſuch as ſhall peruſe King Edward's letter to Pope Boniface, in ſupport of his title to the kingdom of Scotland, if we ſhould ſuggeſt, that he was not altogether ignorant himſelf of this prophecy, or unwilling that it ſhould be applied to him, ſince therein he goes as high as Brute, aſſerts him to have been ſole Monarch of Albion, and that he gave that part of the iſland called Scotland, to his ſon Albanact, whence he infers the conſtant dependance of that kingdom upon the imperial crown of England (72).

(71) Chron. p. 272.

(72) Rymer's Fœd. tom. ii. p. 863.

under under a ſtrong guard from Berwick to the Tower of London, to which they were committed priſoners; but were treated there with all imaginable decency and reſpect, and allowed as much liberty, as was conſiſtent with King Edward's deſign of keeping them in ſafe cuſtody (z). The King, likewiſe, thought proper, the better to prevent any new inſurrections or diſturbances in Scotland, to forbid any of the nobility, then priſoners in England, to paſs the river Trent upon pain of death. And thus in the ſpace of a few months, and with a very inconſiderable loſs, the King made a total conqueſt of that country, and thereby compleated, for the preſent, the great deſign he had in view (a). But how wiſe and prudent ſoever his meaſures might be in themſelves, and notwithſtanding that ſucceſs which ſeemed to attend them, yet it very ſoon appeared, that though the Scots had ſubmitted, they were not ſubdued, ſeveral inſurrections breaking out the year following, under different leaders, which prevented them from coming to any great head, though it ſhewed that there ſtill remained ſuch a ſpirit of diſcontent, as could not fail of rendering his government uneaſy (b). It is very remarkable, that notwithſtanding the ſolemn reſignation of John Baliol, his title to the crown of Scotland was ſtill owned by all that kingdom, as it likewiſe was by the Pope, the King of France, and other foreign Princes. But whether he kept any private correſpondence in Scotland or elſewhere, does not very clearly appear; though the Scots hiſtorians very poſitively affirm, that Sir William Wallace acted under his commiſſion, which may be ſo far true, that as he owned him for his Sovereign, he might be ſaid to act for him; and the ſame might be likewiſe ſaid of Robert Bruce the elder, who, when in arms at firſt againſt King Edward, expreſsly owned King John, and in his name concluded ſeveral truces, or temporary ceſſations of arms with King Edward's officers, who were employed againſt him. But though they thus acknowledged King John, when in truth they had no other King to acknowledge, yet this is far enough from being a direct evidence that King John acknowledged them, or authorized them to act by his commiſſion. To ſay the truth, the contrary of this is more than probable, from the manner in which King Edward treated him: for though the war continued againſt his ſubjects, yet King Edward does not ſeem to have been at all apprehenſive of King John, neither did he abridge him of any part of that liberty which he had granted him, though at the ſame time, he confiſcated the eſtates of many of the nobility in Scotland, for being, as he ſtiled it, in a rebellion againſt him. And indeed, conſidering the ſubmiſſions they had made, and the engagements they had entered into towards King Edward, it might very well be ſtyled ſo, though they themſelves ſtill maintained their independency; and when the French had conſented to a truce, and afterwards to a peace, no pains were ſpared to include the Scots therein (c). This treaty was a long time in negociating, under the ſpecial mediation of the Pope, who omitted no opportunity of interceding for John Baliol, or of endeavouring to diſpoſe King Edward to grant him his liberty, for which King John was likewiſe ſoliciting, and that by a more effectual method, which was making a ſolemn declaration, that he neither deſired to recover the kingdom of Scotland, nor to interfere in, or have any thing to do with, the affairs of that kingdom or nation any more (d) [S]. This it was, in all probability, that determined the King the next year to releaſe him, as he did, on the freſh inſtances made by the Biſhop of Vicenza, the Pope's

(z) Holinſhed's Chron. Vol. i. p. 208, ſays, he had liberty to go any where within twenty miles of London.

(a) R. Brunne, Walſingham, Hemingford, &c.

(b) Fordun, Boëth. Buchan.

(c) Thom. Walſingham, Walt. Hemingford, Robert Brunne's Chron. Abingd. Boëth. Leſl. Buchan.

(d) Appendix to the third Volume of Brady's Hiſtory, No. 37.

[S] Nothing to do with the affairs of that kingdom or nation any more.] Whoever conſiders the manner in which our ancient hiſtories were written, will very eaſily conceive, that there is little or nothing to be found in them, concerning the tranſactions of John Baliol, after he was brought over priſoner into England. Some indeed tell us, that he went to reſide at Oxford, and Rapin very gravely aſſures us, that he built a college there, and liberally endowed it (73). There is no wonder that he made this miſtake who was a ſtranger, and who deſerves to be commended, not only for his accuracy and diligence in writing the hiſtory of King Edwatd's war in Scotland, but alſo for his candour and impartiality in recording the diſputes between the two nations. But we may juſtly be ſurprized, that one of the beſt writers of the hiſtory of Scotland ſhould lead him into this miſtake, by affirming the very ſame thing (74); which ſhews how little credit is due to General Hiſtories in matters of this nature, and of how great uſe works of this kind are, in detecting ſuch errors and clearing up the truth. It has been obſerved in the text, that ſome writers have affirmed, King John was allowed the liberty of going abroad, which appears to be a matter of fact, though probably not without a keeper (75). We likewiſe find, that he ſtill kept up a cloſe correſpondence with Dr. Anthony Beak, Biſhop of Durham, and that he made uſe of him chiefly to negociate with King Edward, the terms upon which he was to obtain his liberty, all which we are able to prove, from a very extraordinary piece that remains ſtill upon record, which we find often cited by our Engliſh hiſtorians, but which, for any thing I know, has never yet appeared in Engliſh; and therefore I hope it will be very acceptable (as it is certainly one of the moſt curious papers relating to this article) if we produce it here.

(73) Hiſtoire d'Angleterre, tom. iii. p. 58.

(74) Leſlæus de Geſtis Scotor. lib. vi. p. 253.

(75) Hector Boëth. lib. xiv.

'In the name of God, Amen. In the year 1298, 'on the firſt of April, in the houſe of the reverend Fa- 'ther Anthony Biſhop of Durham, without London. 'The ſaid Biſhop diſcourſing of the ſtate and condi- 'tion of the kingdom of Scotland, and of the inha- 'bitants of the ſaid kingdom, before the noble Lord 'John Baliol, the ſaid John, of his own proper 'motion, in the preſence of me, the Notary, and the 'ſubſcribing witneſſes, amongſt other things, ſaid 'and delivered in the French tongue to this effect, 'that is to ſay, that while he the ſaid realm of Scot- 'land as King and Lord thereof, held and governed, 'he had found in the people of the ſaid kingdom, ſo 'much malice, fraud, treaſon, and deceit, that for 'their malignity, wickedneſs, treachery, and other 'deteſtable facts, and for that, as he had thoroughly 'underſtood, they had, while their Prince, contrived 'to poiſon him, it was his intention, never to go or 'enter into the ſaid kingdom of Scotland for the fu- 'ture, or with the ſaid kingdom, or its concerns, 'either by himſelf or others, to intermeddle, nor for 'the reaſons aforeſaid, and many others, to have any 'thing to do with the Scots. At the ſame time, the 'ſaid John deſired the ſaid Biſhop of Durham, that 'he would acquaint the Moſt Magnificent Prince, 'and his Lord, Edward, the Moſt Illuſtrious King 'of England, with his intention, will, and firm 'reſolution

Pope's Legate, then in France, to whom he was delivered at Whitſand, by Robert de Bourgherſh, Knt. Conſtable of Dover-caſtle, the King's proxy, upon Saturday before St. Mary Magdalene's day, or the twentieth of July, upon condition that the Pope might direct and order what he pleaſed as to his perſon, and the eſtate he had in England, as King Edward might have done, if he had been perſonally with him in England; ſaving to him and his heirs, Kings of England, the kingdom of Scotland, the people and inhabitants, with all the appurtenances to that kingdom. It was alſo there read, and rehearſed before his delivery, and in his own preſence, and in that of the Biſhop of Vicenza, that he had committed many inhuman treſpaſſes and treaſons againſt his ſovereign Prince King Edward, contrary to his homage and fealty, &c. and that the Pope ſhould not ordain or direct any thing in the kingdom of Scotland, concerning the people or inhabitants, or any thing appertaining to the ſame kingdom, on behalf of John Baliol, or his heirs, &c. And upon theſe terms the Biſhop, in the name of, and as the Pope's proxy, received him from the King's Commiſſioner, on the ſaid Saturday abovementioned, A. D. 1299, and 27 Edw. I. (e). But notwithſtanding this ſolemn act, by which, in the fulleſt and plaineſt manner in the world, he diveſted himſelf of his regal character, and relinquiſhed both his kingdom and the allegiance of his ſubjects; yet they continued to own him for their Sovereign, as appears by a very authentic act of the Lords Juſtices, or Guardians of the kingdom of Scotland, who were, William Biſhop of St. Andrews, Robert Bruce Earl of Carrick, and John Comyn the Younger, who by their letter to King Edward, dated from Torwood, November 13, 1299, owned themſelves ſubjects to King John, and deſire, in very ſubmiſſive terms, a ceſſation of hoſtilities (f), which, however, at that time, was not granted. Yet after all this, when King Edward, in a better temper, conſented to ſuch a ſuſpenſion of arms, and to hear what they had to offer, they propoſed the reſtoring of King John and his ſon, and offered to live under them as good ſubjects, which, becauſe of his reſignation, King Edward would not allow, but rejected theſe terms as unjuſt and unreaſonable (g). After all this the Pope interpoſed, and, by his letters admonitory, undertook to ſhew King Edward, that he had no right whatever to the kingdom of Scotland (h) [T]. This Bull had no effect upon the King, who was determined to maintain his title, and to continue the war againſt Scotland, which he did with various ſucceſs, till in the year 1303, he made an abſolute conqueſt of that kingdom, and in the ſucceeding year, he ſettled the affairs of it entirely, deſigning for the future, that the kingdom of Scotland ſhould be repreſented by Commiſſioners ſent to the Parliament of England (i). The next year the Scots took up arms again, under Robert Bruce Earl of Carrick; and then it was they threw off all regard to John Baliol, and placed the crown of their kingdom on the head of the nobleman

(e) Rymer's Fœd. tom. ii. p. 846. 849. Prynne's Collect. Vol. iii, fol. 779. Brady's Append. as before, No. 36.

(f) Rymer's Fœdera, tom. ii. p. 859.

(g) Vid. Hemingf. Nic. Trivet. H. Knyghton.

(h) Rymer's Fœdera, tom. ii. p. 844.

(i) Thom. Walſingham, Rob. Brunne, Walt. Hemingford, Nic. Trivet. H. Knyghton.

'reſolution in this reſpect, &c. This act was ſigned 'and ſealed by the Public Notary, in the preſence of 'the Biſhop of Durham aforeſaid, and of Ralph de 'Sandwich, Conſtable of the Tower of London, and 'others, who heard this diſcourſe (76).'

(76) Prynne's Collections, tom. iii. p. 665.

[T] That he had no right whatever to the kingdom of Scotland.] It is very extraordinary, that this Pope, Boniface VIII., ſhould be able to enter ſo clearly and ſo fully into this diſpute, and urge ſuch cogent reaſons againſt the pretenſions of King Edward to a ſuperiority over that kingdom, as in this monitory epiſtle we find he did; and therefore it may be reaſonably preſumed, that he was furniſhed with proper hints by ſome of the Prelates of Scotland, as the reader will readily judge, from the ſeveral heads upon which he inſiſts. In the firſt place he obſerves, that Henry, the King's father, at the time he was diſtreſſed by his rebels, applied himſelf for aſſiſtance to Alexander King of Scotland, his ſon-in-law; granted him letters patent, declaring, that he did not demand this as due to him of right, but as an act of grace and favour. He takes notice next, that when the ſame King Alexander aſſiſted at his the King of England's coronation, he demanded and obtained letters patents for the ſame purpoſe. He in the third place obſerves, that when King Alexander did homage to him for the lands of Tindale and Penrith, he publickly declared, that he did not either pay or owe him any homage as King of Scotland. His next remark is, that upon the death of the ſaid Alexander, the cuſtody of his grand-daughter and heireſs, Margaret, did not devolve to him, as it muſt have done had he been ſuperior and direct Lord of Scotland, but to ſuch as, by the nobility of that kingdom, were appointed to that office. He goes on to obſerve, that when the King applied to the Holy See for a diſpenſation, in order to the marriage of his eldeſt ſon Edward, to the ſaid Margaret, he ſet forth the conſent of the nobility of Scotland, that he had acknowledged it to be a free and independent kingdom, and had engaged it ſhould remain ſo, in caſe there was no iſſue of this marriage. To this he adds, that after the death of Margaret, when the diſpute about the ſucceſſion began, the nobility of that kingdom apprehending their going beyond their own frontiers at his requeſt, might prove detrimental to their right, he, by his own charter, ſecured them from that inconveniency: and from theſe premiſes he infers, that whatever had happened ſince was the effects of force and violence, and could not therefore confer any right whatever. To all theſe he ſubjoins an argument of another nature, that the Legates of the See of Rome to the Kings of England, could not enter Scotland in virtue of that commiſſion, but were obliged to have ſpecial letters to the Kings of Scotland, as to all other Princes. But after all, there is one thing exceſſively wild and extravagant in this Bull, which is, that at the ſame time the Pope inſiſts, that the crown of Scotland is not a fee of England, he inſiſts no leſs poſitively, that the kingdom depended upon the See of Rome. This writing is dated the twenty-ſeventh of June, in the year 1299 (77). To this epiſtle two ſolemn anſwers were given, the firſt by the nobility of England, in a great council aſſembled at Lincoln, dated the twelfth of February 1301 (78). In which they aſſert, not only the King's right to the ſuperiority and direct dominion over Scotland, but alſo the independency of his crown; and declare that they cannot allow any cauſe of this nature to be canvaſſed before, much leſs determined by, his Holineſs. The other is by the King himſelf, dated at Kemeſeye the ſame year, in which he enters into a long detail of his rights over the kingdom of Scotland, and abſolutely denies many of the facts inſiſted upon in the Pope's letter; concluding with an abſolute declaration, that he would maintain his title to, and poſſeſſion of, the kingdom of Scotland, as a right deſcended to him from his anceſtors, Kings of England, which, whatever that Pope thought of it, was tacitly acknowledged by his ſucceſſors (79).

(77) Rymer's Fœdera, tom. ii. p. 844.

(78) Walt. de Hemingford, Hiſt. Edw. I. p. 186. Rymer's Fœder. tom. ii. p. 873.

(79) Walt. Hemingford, Hiſt. Edw. I. p. 177. Rymer's Fœder. tom. ii. p. 863.

before mentioned (k). All this time John Baliol lived quietly as a private man, on his own eſtates, which were very conſiderable in France (l). His ſon Edward remained ſome years a priſoner, as ſome ſay; as others will have it, a hoſtage here: but at length he was ſent over to his father; nor does it appear, that either of them interfered at all with the affairs of Scotland, but contented themſelves with the enjoyment of what was left of their private fortunes. Some writers ſay, that John Baliol lived till he was blind, which, if true, muſt have been the effect of ſome diſeaſe, or of ſome accident, ſince it is certain that he died A. D. 1314, when he could not be above fifty-five at moſt (m). His ſon Edward Baliol afterwards ſet up a title to the kingdom of Scotland, invaded and recovered it, but held it not long, and dying afterwards without iſſue, the family failed (n) [U]. Thus, with much labour and difficulty, we have in a great meaſure cleared one of the moſt perplexed periods of our hiſtory, and ſet a multitude of material facts in a clear light, from the compariſon of our ancient hiſtorians, and correcting their relations by our records.

(k) Fordun. Major. Boëth. Leſl. Buchan.

(l) De Serres, Mezerai, Daniel, &c.

(m) Rymer's Fœdera, tom. III. p. 506. We have before ſhewn he was born about 1260.

(n) Walt. Hemingford. Hiſt. Edw. III. p. 505.

[U] And dying afterwards without iſſue, the family failed.] In order to render this article as compleat as poſſible, and to ſhew the end, as we have already explained the beginning of the conteſt, between the houſes of Baliol and Bruce, for the crown of Scotland, it will be requiſite to ſay ſomewhat of the fortunes of this Edward Baliol. At the time of his father's deceaſe, which was in the year 1314, he was in England, and King Edward II. wrote to the King of France, to deſire that he might have poſſeſſion given him of his father's eſtates in that country (80), which it ſeems was done, and he lived there quietly as a private perſon for many years, and without thinking, as far as from his ſtory we can learn, of renewing the pretenſions of his family to the crown of Scotland. But in the year 1331, an Engliſh ſervant of his having killed a Frenchman, and he taking pains to ſend this ſervant out of the reach of juſtice, he was himſelf impriſoned, and his eſtates ſeized, till on the Lord Beaumont's coming from England, he was, at his interceſſion, releaſed, and this Lord Beaumont it was, that adviſed him to come over to England, and ſet up his claim to the crown of Scotland (81). King Robert Bruce being dead, and David his ſon having ſucceeded him in the kingdom, he had married the ſiſter of Edward III. King of England, who for that reaſon would not aſſiſt Baliol openly and directly againſt his brother-in-law, though he ſuffered him to raiſe men privately in Yorkſhire, with which he invaded that kingdom in 1332, with ſuch ſucceſs, that he got himſelf declared King; but not long after was driven out again, when King Edward reſolved to aſſiſt him, having firſt quarrelled with the Scots for not delivering up Berwick. This war was carried on with ſuch ſucceſs, that Baliol was again fixed upon the throne, and King David was forced to fly to France. Baliol by his charter acknowledged himſelf homager to King Edward III. as his father had done to King Edward I. for that kingdom; and beſides this, in conſideration of his expence in reſtoring him, he gave and granted to King Edward of England, Berwick, Roxburgh, Jedburgh, Selkirk, Edinburgh, Haddington, and other towns, and the countries depending upon them (82), which ſo alienated the hearts of the Scots, that he never had any quiet in that kingdom afterwards: though, by the aſſiſtance of the Engliſh, he kept up the war for many years, till, at laſt, in the year 1356, being quite tired out with the oppoſition given him by that nation, he ſurrendered his title to king Edward of England, in conſideration of a penſion of two thouſand pounds a year, to be paid him quarterly (83), which he enjoyed to the year 1363, when he died at Doncaſter in Yorkſhire, without iſſue. Yet upon the death of King David Bruce, William Earl of Douglas is ſaid to have ſet up a title to the crown of Scotland, which he is alſo ſaid to have founded upon that of the Baliols: but this title of his is very obſcure, at leaſt as it is ſet forth by one who ought to have underſtood it (84). He ſays that Alan Lord of Galloway had two daughters, Dornagilla or Dervorgilla, who married John Baliol father to King John, and Mary, who married John Comyn, from whom William Earl of Douglas was deſcended. It is true indeed, though moſt of our hiſtorians ſay otherwiſe, that Alan Lord of Galloway had two daughters, viz. Chriſtina and Dervorgilla, ſo that this laſt was not the elder but the younger daughter: however ſhe was ſole heireſs to her father, her eldeſt ſiſter dying unmarried (85). By this means therefore no title could accrue to the Earl of Douglas: but however a title he had, and a title from the Baliols, which aroſe thus. John Comyn married Margery (86), daughter to John Baliol by Dervorgilla his wife, ſiſter to King John Baliol, by whom he had that John Comyn who was killed by Robert Bruce, who left a daughter Dornagilla, who was married to Archibald Douglas, father to William Earl of Douglas (87), who claimed the crown: but the States of Scotland declared Robert Stuart, ſon of Margery Bruce, daughter to King Robert Bruce, and ſiſter to King David, the lawful heir of the crown (88). To this William Earl of Douglas aſſented, and the new King Robert gave his eldeſt daughter Euphamia, to James Douglas the Earl's ſon, and thus this conteſt ended (89). C.

(80) Rymer's Fœder. tom. III. p. 506.

(81) Caxton's Chronicle, A.D. 1231.

(82) Tyrrel's Hiſtory of England, Vol. III. p. 381.

(83) Rot. Scotiæ 29 E. III. m 12. Rob. de Aveſbur. Hiſt. Ed. III. p. 229.

(84) Hume's Hiſtory of the Douglaſes, p. 84.

(85) This appears from John Baliol's petition ſetting forth his claim to the crown.

(86) Liber Cœnob. de Belmerinoch, penes dom. de Balmerinoch.

(87) Hiſtory of the Douglaſes, p. 54.

(88) Joan. Major. de Geſt. Scotor. lib. vi. p. 113, b.

(89) Buchan. Hiſt. Scot. p. 316.

(90) P. 189. 241.

(91) Ibid. p. 203.

[A large and moſt accurate account of that part of the Scottiſh Hiſtory which relates to John Baliol, confirming the principal facts in the preceding article, with the addition of ſome other circumſtances, may be found in Sir David Dalrymple's Annals of Scotland, lately publiſhed (90). It appears that Robert Bruce acknowledged Edward as Lord Paramount of Scotland, and that he was willing to aſk and receive judgment from him in that character, definitively, expreſsly, publicly, and openly; 'finaliter, expreſſè, publicè, et apertè,' as it is in the record. Baliol pronounced his aſſent, the next day, after an affected pauſe, and ſeeming recollection; 'congruâ deliberatione præhabitâ (91).' We ſhall tranſcribe part of what is related by Sir David Dalrymple, concerning the reſpective pleas and anſwers of Bruce and Baliol, as it may ſerve ſtill farther to ſhew the method of reaſoning in thoſe times with regard to the laws of ſucceſſion, and the imperfect ideas which were then formed upon that ſubject.

'Bruce pleaded, firſt, that Alexander II. deſpairing of heirs of his own body, had declared, that he held Bruce to be his right heir. It may be proved, by the teſtimony of perſons ſtill alive, that he declared this with the advice, and in the preſence of the good men of his kingdom. Alexander III. gave his familiars to underſtand, that, failing iſſue of his own body Bruce was his right heir. Moreover, the people of Scotland took an oath for maintaining the ſucceſſion of the neareſt in blood to Alexander III. who ought of right to inherit, failing Margaret the maiden of Norway and her iſſue.

'Balliol anſwered, That nothing could be concluded from the acknowledgment of Alexander II. for that he left heirs of his body. Balliol made no anſwer to what was ſaid of the ſentiments of Alexander III. and of the oath made by the Scottiſh nation to maintain the ſucceſſion of the next in blood.

'Bruce pleaded, ſecondly, that the right of reigning ought to be decided according to that natural law whereby kings reign, and not according to any law or uſage in force between ſubject and ſubject: That, by the law of nature, the neareſt collateral in blood has right to the crown. That the conſtitutions which prevail among vaſſals and ſubjects, bind not the lord, much leſs the ſovereign. That, although in private inheritances, which are diviſible, the eldeſt female heir has a certain prerogative; it is not ſo in a kingdom, which is indiviſible: There the neareſt heir of blood is preferable, whenever the ſucceſſion opens.

'Balliol anſwered, That the claimants were in the court of their Lord Paramount, and that he ought to give judgment in this caſe, as in the caſe of any 'other tenements depending on his crown; that is, 'by the common law and uſage of his kingdom, and 'no other. That, by the laws and uſages of Eng-'land, the eldeſt female heir is preferred in the ſuc-'ceſſion to all inheritance, indiviſible as well as 'diviſible.

'Bruce pleaded, thirdly, That the manner of ſuc-'ceſſion to the kingdom of Scotland in former times 'made for his claim; for that the brother, as being 'neareſt in degree, was wont to be preferred to the 'ſon of the deceaſed King. Thus, when Kenneth 'M'Alpine died, his brother Donald was preferred 'to his ſon Conſtantine; thus, when Conſtantine 'died, his brother Edh was preferred to his ſon Do-'nald; and thus the brother of Malcolm III. reign-'ed after him, to the excluſion of the ſon of Mal-'colm III.

'Balliol anſwered, That, if the brother was pre-'ferred to the ſon of the King, the example proved 'againſt Bruce; for that the ſon, not the brother, 'was the neareſt in degree. He admitted, that, af-'ter the death of Malcolm III. his brother uſurped 'the throne; but he contended, that the ſon of 'Malcolm complained to his liege Lord the King of 'England, who diſpoſeſſed the uſurper, and placed 'the ſon of Malcolm on the throne. That, after the 'death of that ſon, the brother of Malcolm III. 'again uſurped the throne, that the King of England 'again diſpoſſeſſed him, and placed Edgar, the ſe-'cond ſon of Malcolm, on the throne.

'Bruce pleaded, fourthly, That there are exam-'ples in other countries, particularly in Spain and 'Savoy, where the ſon of the ſecond daughter ex-'cluded the grandſon of the eldeſt daughter.

'Balliol anſwered, That examples from foreign 'countries are of no importance; for that, accord-'ing to the laws of England and Scotland, where 'Kings reign by ſucceſſion in the direct line, 'and Earls and Barons ſucceed in like manner, the 'iſſue of the younger ſiſter, although nearer in de-'gree, excludes not the iſſue of the elder ſiſter, al-'though more remote in degree; but the ſucceſſion 'continues in the direct line; that is, in modern 'language, primogeniture and the right of repre-'ſentation prevail.

'Bruce pleaded, fifthly, That a female ought not 'to reign; for that ſhe is incapable of governing. 'That at the death of Alexander III. Derverguill, 'the mother of Balliol, was alive; and, as ſhe could 'not reign, the kingdom devolved on him, Bruce, 'as the neareſt male of the blood royal.

'Balliol anſwered, That Bruce's argument was in-'conſiſtent with his claim: For that, if a female 'ought not to reign, Iſabella the mother of Bruce 'ought not, nor Bruce who muſt claim through her. 'Beſides, Bruce here denies what he himſelf had ac-'knowledged by his own actions. He was one of 'the Scottiſh nobles who ſwore fealty to a female, 'the maiden of Norway (92).'

(92) Ibid. p. 215. 218.

We ſhall add this valuable hiſtorian's concluſion of his account of Baliol: 'Thus ended the ſhort and diſaſtrous 'reign of John Balliol: An ill-fated Prince! cenſured 'for doing homage to Edward, never applauded for aſ-'ſerting the national independency. Yet, in his ori-'ginal offence, he had the example of Bruce; at his 'revolt, he ſaw the rival family combating under the 'banners of England. His attempt to ſhake off a 'foreign yoke ſpeaks him of a high ſpirit, impa-'tient of injuries. He erred in enterpriſing beyond 'his ſtrength: In the cauſe of liberty, it was a me-'ritorious error. He confided in the valour and 'unanimity of his ſubjects, and in the aſſiſtance of 'France. The efforts of his ſubjects were languid 'and diſcordant; and France beheld his ruin with 'the indifference of an unconcerned ſpectator (93).'] K.

(93) Ibid. p. 241.

BALL (JOHN), a Puritan Divine in the XVIIth century (a), was born, in the year 1585, of an obſcure family, at Caſſington or Cherſington, near Woodſtock in Oxfordſhire. He was educated in grammar learning at a private ſchool, under the Vicar of Yarnton, a mile diſtant from Caſſington; and was admitted a ſtudent of Brazen-noſe college in Oxford, in 1602. He continued there about five years, in the condition of a ſervitor, and under the diſcipline of a ſevere Tutor; and from thence he removed to St. Mary's Hall, and took the degree of Batchelor of Arts in 1608. Soon after, he was invited into Cheſhire, to be Tutor to the Lady Cholmondeley's children; and here he became acquainted with ſome rigid Puritans, who gained ſo far upon his affections, that he went over to their party. About this time, having got a ſum of money, he came up to London, and procured himſelf to be ordained by an Iriſh Biſhop, without Subſcription. Soon after, he removed into Staffordſhire, and became curate of Whitmore, a chapel of eaſe to Stoke. Here he lived in a mean condition, upon a ſalary of about twenty pounds a year, and the profits of a little ſchool. Mr. Baxter tells us (b), he deſerved as high eſteem and honour as the beſt Biſhop in England; yet looking after no higher things, but living comfortably and proſperouſly with theſe. He has, among the Puritan writers, the character of an excellent School-Divine, a painful preacher, and a learned and ingenious author; and, though he was not well affected to ceremonies and church diſcipline, yet he wrote againſt thoſe, who thought theſe matters a ſufficient ground for ſeparation. His works are mentioned in the remark [A]. He died the 20th of October 1640, aged about fifty-five, and was buried in the church of Whitmore.

(a) Wood, Athen. Oxonienſ. Vol. i. col. 636, 637.

(b) Rich. Baxter's Unſavoury Volume of Mr. John Crandon's anatomized. Lond. 1654, Sect. i. p. 6.

[A] His works.] I. A ſhort Treatiſe concerning all the principal grounds of the Chriſtian Religion, &c. Fourteen times printed before the year 1632, and tranſlated into the Turkiſh language by William Seaman, an Engliſh traveller. II. A Treatiſe of Faith, in two parts; the firſt ſhewing the Nature, the ſecond the Life of Faith. London, 1631, and 1637, 4to. There is a commendatory preface to it, written by Richard Sibbs. III. Friendly Trial of the Grounds tending to Separation, in a plain and modeſt Diſpute touching the Unlawfulneſs of ſtinted Liturgy and ſet Form of Common Prayer, Communion in mixed Aſſemblies, and the primitive Subject and firſt Receptacle of the Power of the Keys, &c. Cambridge, 1640, 4to. A rude and imperfect draught of this book was firſt made for the ſatisfaction of Mr. Richard Knightly, and afterwards, at the requeſt of ſeveral Miniſters and others, enlarged into this treatiſe. IV. An Anſwer to two Treatiſes of Mr. John Can, the firſt intitled, A neceſſity of Separation from the Church of England, proved by the Nonconformiſt's Principles; the other, A Stay againſt Straying; wherein, in Oppoſition to Mr. John Robinſon, he undertakes to prove the Unlawfulneſs of hearing the Miniſters of the Church of England. London, 1642, 4to. Publiſhed by Simeon Aſh. The epiſtle to the reader is ſubſcribed by Thomas Langley, William Rathband, Simeon Aſh, Francis Woodcock, and George Croft, Preſbyterians. After our author had finiſhed this laſt book, he undertook a large eccleſiaſtical treatiſe, in which he propoſed to lay open the nature of Schiſm, and to handle the principal controverſies relating to the eſſence and government of the viſible Church. He left fifty ſheets of this work finiſhed. 'Notwithſtanding all this (ſays Anthony 'Wood) yet, by what our author hath written in his 'anſwer to John Can, and in his Friendly Trial, ſome 'dividing ſpirits of his own party cenſured him, as 'in ſome degree declining from his former profeſſed 'inconformity, in deſerting the Nonconformiſt's cauſe 'and grounds, being too much inclined (eſpecially 'in the laſt of theſe two) to favour the times in cere-'monies and the ſervice book: Yet, if you will give 'credit

'credit to what these men deliver, they will tell you 'that he lived and died a strict forbearer, and constant 'opposer of all those pretended corruptions, which 'the Nonconformists had commonly in their public 'writings disallowed in the Church of England. So 'that they of his own persuasion would willingly have 'it believed, that, although he was in these his pieces 'against aggravating and multiplying conceived cor-'ruptions, and that these were not of so great weight, 'as to enforce the unlawfulness of our set forms, or 'warrant a separation from our churches and public 'worship in regard thereof, yet he acknowledged 'some things blame-worthy in the English Liturgy, 'which he designed to have evidenced (as these men 'tell us) in some public treatise, had he lived but a 'little longer. For all this he died abundantly satis-'fied in the justness of that cause, which he so well 'defended against Separation.' V. Trial of the new Church-way in New-England and Old, &c. London, 1644, 4to. VI. A Treatise of the Covenant of Grace. London, 1645, 4to. Published by his great admirer Simeon Ash. VII. Of the power of Godliness, both doctrinally and practically handled, &c. To which are annexed several treatises, as 1. Of the Affections. 2. Of the Spiritual Combat. 3. Of the Government of the Tongue. 4. Of Prayer, with an Exposition on the Lord's Prayer, &c. London, 1657, fol. Published by the aforesaid Simeon Ash. This Ash, it seems, had been of the university of Cambridge, Chaplain to the Lord Brook, and afterwards to the Earl of Manchester. In 1644, he became Minister of St. Michael Bassishaw, and afterwards of St. Austin's, in London, and died the 20th of August 1662. VIII. A Treatise of Divine Meditation. London, 1660, 12*mo.* published also by the said Ash (1). B.

(1) Wood, Athen. Oxoniens. Vol. i. col. 637, 638.

[Mr. Neal is mistaken, when he asserts, as he does in his account of Mr. Ball, that his last work was entitled, A Stay against Straying (2). It is evident, from No. IV. in the preceding note, that the Stay against Straying was a treatise of Can's, and that an answer to it was written by Mr. Ball.

(2) Neal's Hist. of the Puritans, Vol. ii. p. 358.

Mr. Simeon Ash was a presbyterian divine of some note in the time of the long parliament. Being possessed of a good estate, and inclined to entertainments and liberality, his house was much frequented, and he was generally beloved. He gave offence to the adherents of Cromwell, by endeavouring to counteract their designs, and by vehemently opposing the engagement. According to Dr. Calamy, he had a considerable hand in bringing in King Charles the second. Besides publishing Mr. Ball's works, Mr. Ash was the author of several occasional sermons (3).] K.

(3) Calamy's Abridgment, Vol. ii. p. 1, 2.

BALLENDEN or BELLENDEN (Sir JOHN), an elegant Scottish writer of the XVIth century. He was descended from an ancient and very honourable family in that kingdom, and his father, Mr. Thomas Ballenden of Auchinoul, was Director to the Chancery, A. D. 1540, and Clerk of Accounts in 1541 (a). It does not appear when our author was born, or where educated; but from his writings (frequently intermixed with words of Gallick derivation) I am inclined to believe in France (b). In his youth he served in the Court, and was in great favour with King James V. as himself informs us, which he might very probably owe to his fine vein in poetry, that Prince being a great admirer, as he was also a great proficient in that kind of learning (c). Having so good interest with his Prince, he attained extraordinary preferment in the church, being made Canon of Ross, and Archdeacon of Murray, to which last dignity perhaps he opened his passage, by taking the degree of Doctor of Divinity at the Sorbonne (d). He likewise obtained his father's employment of Clerk of Accounts, which was very considerable, in the minority of the King before mentioned; but was afterwards turned out by the struggle of factions, in the same reign (e). We have no direct authority, to prove that he had any share in the education of King James V.: but from some passages in his poems, and from his addressing many of them to that King, one would conceive he was in some measure particularly attached to his person, and from one of them more especially, that he had an interest beyond that of bare duty, in forming a right disposition, and giving wholesome instructions to that Prince (f) [A]. But the work which gave him highest reputation, and has transmitted the name of our author to posterity, is his translation of Hector Boëthius, or, as his countrymen call him, Hector Boeis's History, out of Latin into the Scottish tongue, which he performed at the command of his royal master admirably, but with a good deal of freedom, departing often from his author, but generally for the sake of truth, and sometimes also adding circumstances, which perhaps

(a) Mackenzie's Hist. of Scots Writers, Vol. ii. p. 595.

(b) See this more fully explained in note [C].

(c) See his Proëm to his Cosmography.

(d) Dempster, lib. ii. p. 107.

(e) See his Proëm to his Cosmography.

(f) See the account of his Works in note [C].

[A] Giving wholesome instructions to that Prince.] It is always requisite in writing the lives of men distinguished by their writings, to read them carefully, and not to take upon the credit of others, what may with more certainty be learned from themselves. I have taken some pains to procure, and have enjoyed a great deal of pleasure in reading, some of our author's works; and from them I clearly discern, that he was put about King James V. in his nonage, which is a circumstance worth regarding, since he was one of the best bred Princes of that age, and a great encourager of learning and learned men, which reflects much honour on those who had the care of his education, of whom, I conceive, our author to have been one, and to have merited his church preferments that way (1). His genius was truly poetick, and he usually wrote in the Lyrick way, in Stanzas much after the manner of Spencer, and chiefly too, like him, on allegorical subjects. It is a great misfortune to us, that his epistles to King James are not extant; for if they were, they would probably inform us, as to many points of which we are now totally ignorant. As it is, we know, that he was thrown out of his employment, and driven from court, by the mischievous effects of envious slanders (2); but receiving the King's command, to put the Latin history of Boëthius, into the common language of Scotland, this afforded him some hope; and that he might rise the sooner in the King's favour, he composed a Poem intituled VERTUE and VYCE, addressed to the Monarch of the SCOTS, JAMES V. This we find the title in MSS. but Dr. Mackenzie tells us very positively it is prefixed by way of Proëm to his Cosmography. So very possibly it may be, though the Poem has nothing in it, that has the least relation to that subject: but the Doctor is absolutely in the wrong, for supposing them to be mistaken who stiled it a dream, since certainly it is so (3). Our author very ingeniously feigns, that walking in a garden to amuse himself after the labour of translating, and musing on the disgrace he had suffered at Court, which to prevent any offence to the King, he suggests might be owing to the pernicious influence of his ill stars; oppressed by melancholy, and not able to solve these doubts to his satisfaction, his cares at length wearied him into a deep sleep, in which he beheld a very handsome young Prince on a throne, to whom two ladies, lovely in their persons, and splendid in their equipage, applied themselves, contending for his love. He makes DELIGHT speak first, and place all pleasure in the company of women: VIRTUE speaks next, and maintains, that she only bestows real and lasting pleasure, and leads men to the acquisition of immortality. Having thus set both before the King, he tells us, he awoke, that he might not be constrained to violate truth, in describing the King's choice.

(1) There are many curious collections of pieces of this age in the hands of gentlemen of this country, and in all of them some of our author's, which shews how much his writings were esteemed.

(2) Vertue and Vyce, Stanz. iv.

(3) Mackenzie's Lives and Characters of the most eminent Scots Writers, Vol. ii. p. 596.

might not be known to Hector Boece (g). However, his verſion, as he called it, was very well received both in Scotland and England, and ſoon became the ſtandard of that Hiſtory [B]. It does not appear either from his own writings or otherwiſe, how he came to loſe his office of Clerk of Accounts; but he certainly recovered it in the ſucceeding reign, was likewiſe made one of the Lords of Seſſion; and had credit then at court, perhaps from his zeal in reſpect to his religion, for he was a very warm and inflexible Romaniſt: and not being ſatisfied with perſiſting in his own ſentiments, he laboured aſſiduouſly, in conjunction with Dr. Laing, to hinder the progreſs of the Reformation (b). It may with great probability be conjectured, that the diſputes into which he plunged himſelf on this ſubject, made him ſo uneaſy, that he choſe to quit his native country, to go and reſide in a place, where that diſpoſition, inſtead of being an hindrance, would infallibly recommend him. This (as it is ſuppoſed) carried him to Rome, where, as Demſter tells us, he died, A. D. 1550 (i). He was unqueſtionably a man of great parts, and one of the fineſt Poets his country had to boaſt. It is true, the language is now ſo altered, that to attempt giving (as ſome have done) ſpecimens, would be ridiculous. It is ſufficient to ſay, that ſo many of his works remain, as fully prove this, inaſmuch as they are diſtinguiſhed by that noble enthuſiaſm which is the very ſoul of Poeſy (k) [C]. It is a great misfortune, that the Hiſtory of the learned men of this part of our iſland has not exerciſed the pen of ſome writer equal to the taſk, and who would have patience to enquire after, and peruſe the works of thoſe he celebrates, and thereby furniſh us with facts and dates, inſtead of publiſhing his own thoughts under the ſanction of their names.

(g) Nicolſon's Scotiſh Library, p. 10.

(b) Coan, de duplici Statu Religionis apud Scotos, lib. ii. p. 267.

(i) Lib. ii. p. 307.

(k) See the account of his Works in note [C].

[B] And ſoon became the ſtandard of that Hiſtory.] This great work of our author appeared in folio at Edinburgh, A. D. 1536, under this title (4), viz. The Hiſtory and Chronicles of Scotland, compilit and newly correctit and amendit be the reverend and noble Clerk Mr. Hector Boeis, Chanon of Aberdene, tranſlated lately be Mr. John Ballenden, Archdene of Murray, and Chanon of Roſſe, at command of James the fyfte, King of Scottis, imprintet in Edinburgh be Thomas Davidſon, dwelling fornens the Fryere-Wynde. This tranſlation, as has been obſerved in the text, was very far from being cloſe, our author taking to himſelf the liberty of augmenting and amending the hiſtory he publiſhed as he thought proper. He, likewiſe, diſtinguiſhed it into chapters as well as books, which was the only diſtinction employed by Boëthius; which plainly proves, that it was this tranſlation and not the original, that Richard Grafton made uſe of in penning his Chronicle, which Buchanan could ſcarcely avoid knowing, though he never miſſes any opportunity of falling upon Grafton, as if he had corrupted and falſified this author, in order to ſerve his own purpoſes and abuſe the people of Scotland (5): which however has been ſhewn to be, as in fact it is, a groundleſs charge (6). Our author's work was afterwards taken into the largeſt of our Britiſh hiſtories, of which the Biſhop of Carliſle (7) has given us the following account. 'R. Hollinſhed publiſhed it in 'Engliſh, but was not the tranſlator of it himſelf; 'his friend began the work and had gone a good 'way in it, but did not, it ſeems, live to finiſh it. In 'this there are ſeveral large interpolations and addi- 'tions out of Major, Leſley, and Buchanan, by Fr. 'Thinne, who is alſo the chief author of the whole 'ſtory after the death of King James the firſt, and 'the only penman of it from 1571 to 1586. To- 'wards the latter end, this learned Antiquary occa- 'ſionally intermixes catalogues of the Chancellors, 'Archbiſhops, and Writers of that kingdom.' We learn from the very induſtrious John Bale (8), that our author, whom he calls John Balantyne, not only tranſlated it, but continued it alſo down to 1536, that his countrymen might have their hiſtory as compleat, as it was in his power to give it in their own language; and the pains he took in this reſpect, appear to have been very well beſtowed, ſince almoſt all who have written after him upon this ſubject, have, in a manner, tranſcribed his labours. He tranſlated alſo Hector Boëthius's deſcription of Scotland; and beſides that, wrote a deſcription of his own, under the title of a Deſcription of Albany, which Bale had ſeen, and of which he gives us the beginning (9). In all probability he was moved to every one of theſe works, either by the command of King James (10), or with a view to recommend himſelf to that Prince's favour. As to the Epiſtles directed by him to that Monarch, which are now loſt, they were certainly publiſhed, ſince Bale had ſeen them likewiſe (11), and perhaps, they may be ſome time or other recovered; ſince it is certain, that many of his writings are in the hands of perſons of diſtinction in Scotland, who are careful preſervers of ſuch kind of curioſities.

(4) Holinſhed's Chron. Vol. I. p. 463.

(5) Rer. Scot. Hiſt. lib. viii. p. 258.

(6) Holinſhed's Chron. Vol. ii. p. 298.

(7) Scotiſh Library, p. 38.

(8) Scriptor. Britan. Cent. xiv. p. 65.

(9) I ſuſpect however, that there is ſome miſtake about theſe two books, which cannot be corrected without ſeeing thoſe pieces.

(10) See the notes [A] and [C].

(11) He gives us the beginning of one of them.

[C] By that noble enthuſiaſm which is the very ſoul of Poeſy.] He wrote, as both Demſter and Bale inform us, many other pieces which are now buried in oblivion, ſuch as Viſions, Miſcellanies, Proëms to his proſe works, and, as I conceive, an explanation of the Pythagorick Y. Dr. Mackenzie, indeed, is for correcting his principal author Demſter (12), and reading de vita Pythagoræ, or, of the life of Pythagoras, inſtead of de litera Pythagoræ, or, of Pythagoras's letter: but as it ſtands ſo likewiſe in Bale, and is to the full as good ſenſe this way as the other, I ſee no cauſe to make this alteration. In the large collection of Scottiſh poems made by Mr. Carmichael, there were ſome of our author's on various ſubjects; and Mr. Lawrence Dundaſs had alſo ſeveral, whether in MS. or printed I cannot ſay. The mode of that age was chiefly allegory and fable, after the manner of the Italians, whom all the Engliſh and Scottiſh writers followed, as the great ſtandards of elegance and politeneſs. This appears not only by our author's poems, but from thoſe of his contemporaries, ſuch as Dunbar, who wrote the Thiſtle and the Roſe, in honour of the marriage of James IV. with Margaret, daughter to King Henry VII. of England; and the Golden Target was written, if I miſtake not, by the ſame author. This laſt, beyond controverſy, is one of the fineſt poems in the Scottiſh language, a beautiful moral allegory, well conducted, and the verſe ſo far, as at this diſtance of time we can judge, numerous, and full of harmony. I the rather mention this, becauſe we find therein moſt ample commendations of Chaucer, Lydgate, and Gower, which ſhews that their works were exceedingly admired in Scotland. But the great Poet of this age and country, to whom very probably King James himſelf, and our author likewiſe ſtood indebted for their proficiency in verſe, was Sir David Lindſey of the Mount, Lord Lyon King at Arms, who we are ſure had the care of James V. in his nonage, and who in his writings boaſts of this Prince's early reſpect for the Muſes. He wrote, amongſt other excellent poems, one called the Teſtament and the Complaint of King James's PAPINGO, and in the preface to this performance, he gives a pleaſant account of all the Scots Poets to his own time, in the cloſe of which, he gives this encomium of our author, the brightneſs of the character ſtill ſhining, even through the ruſt and obſcurity of the language.

(12) Mackenzie's Scots Writers, Vol. ii. p. 797.

> But now of late, has ſtart up heaſtily,
> A cunning Clerk, which writeth craftily,
> A plant of Poets, called Ballantin,
> Whoſe ornat writs, my wit cannot defyne;
> Get he into the court authority,
> He will precel Quintin and Kenedy (13).

(13) Preface to the Complaint of the Papingo.

This poetical Eulogy of Ballenden brings me back to my ſubject, and enables me to ſay ſomewhat in excuſe for this digreſſion. We have already ſeen this article appear more than once in our literary hiſtories, but never ſo as to be read with any tolerable ſatisfaction, for want of ſhewing the ſtate of literature at that time in Scotland; ſo that all the particulars of his life were concealed, that could poſſibly intereſt an Engliſh reader in his favour. But now when it is obſerved, that after the marriage of Queen Margaret to King James IV. there was a conſtant intercourſe between the two courts, and more eſpecially between the wits of the two courts, who wrote then very nearly in the ſame language; the caſe alters, and Arch-deacon Ballenden does not appear ſo much a ſtranger. Beſides, Grafton and Harriſon, having already naturalized his book, and incorporated his hiſtory with that of England, there is the more reaſon for knowing ſomething about him. It is true, that with all our pains we can learn but very little of him. Still however, as it is a little more than others have diſcovered upon this ſubject, it is enough to prove, he has a right to a place here, and makes what is ſaid of him both pleaſant and uſeful. There are indeed, many that ſlight all memorials, of ſuch as lived in theſe times, as an eminent Poet of the laſt age could never be brought to reliſh Chaucer; but this is mere lazineſs, or want of taſte: lazineſs, if we will not take the pains of acquiring the language of our anceſtors, for the ſake of underſtanding what they have left us worth the reading; and want of true taſte, if while we account it laudable to be well acquainted with the writings of Petrarch and Ronſard, becauſe their fame is eſtabliſhed, we deſpiſe the application to our own old Claſſicks that have equal merit, though, from the negligence of their countrymen, their worth is leſs known. We do not often find points of this kind ſo freely treated, or truths of this nature, ſtarted with ſo little reſerve. The memoirs of men who have made ſome figure in the world, are tranſcribed by one author from another, with very little improvement; whereas, a due acquaintance with antiquity, and the ſubjects we have treated, will always afford a man of tolerable application, the means of making any article agreeable. C.

BALSHAM (HUGH DE), or de Bedeſale, or Beleſale, the tenth Biſhop of Ely, and founder of St. Peter's college, otherwiſe Peter-Houſe, in Cambridge (a), was in all probability born at Balſham in Cambridgeſhire (from whence he took his ſurname) towards the beginning of the XIIIth century [A]. He was at firſt a Monk, and afterwards Sub-prior of the Benedictine monaſtery at Ely (b). In 1247, November 13, he was choſen, by his convent, Biſhop of Ely, in the room of William de Kilkenny, deceaſed. But King Henry III. who had recommended his Chancellor Henry de Wengham (c), being extremely angry at the diſobedience of the Monks, refuſed to confirm the election; and, moreover, he felled the woods, ſpoiled the ponds, and otherwiſe waſted the manors and eſtates belonging to the Biſhoprick. He endeavoured at laſt to perſuade the Monks to proceed to a new election; alledging, that it was not fit, ſo ſtrong a place as Ely [B] ſhould be intruſted with a man, that had ſcarcely ever been out of his cloiſter, and who was utterly unacquainted with political affairs. Balſham, finding he was not likely to ſucceed at home, went to Rome, in order to be confirmed by the Pope (d); who, through the plenitude of his apoſtolical power, pretended to diſpoſe of all eccleſiaſtical preferments in Chriſtendom [C]. In the mean time, Boniface, (a) Hiſtoria Cantabrigienſis Academiæ A. J. Caio. Lond. 1574, 4*to*. p. 54. Fuller's Hiſt. of Cambridge, Lond. 1655, fol. p. 12.

(b) Ibid.

(c) Matt. Paris, Hiſt. Major. edit. 1640, p. 936.

(d) Fr. Godwin, de Præſulibus, edit. Lond. 1616, 4*to*. p. 314.

[A] Was born —— towards the beginning of the XIIIth century.] This I infer from the time when he laid the foundation of St. Peter's college, which was in 1257, and from his death, which happened in 1286, as will be ſhewn preſently. So that in all likelihood he was born about the year 1210 or 1215.—— And that it was very cuſtomary, in former times, for people to take their ſurnames from the place of their birth, is ſo very certain as not to need any proof.

[B] So ſtrong a place as Ely.] It is a place of very great natural ſtrength, as being an iſle, and all the country round covered with water in the winter-time. And therefore, ſeveral perſons revolting againſt King William I. in 1070, they retired to Ely, as a place of the greateſt ſafety, in eadem pro caſtro & loco tuto morantes, and there endured a long ſiege or blockade (1).

(1) Sim. Dunelmenſis apud X. Scriptores, Lond. 1652. col. 203. Chron. J. Bromton. ibid. col. 969.

[C] Pretended to diſpoſe of all eccleſiaſtical preferments.] The Pope taking an advantage of the frequent appeals made to him, upon any controverted elections, came by degrees to render himſelf maſter of moſt preferments; and to maintain, that he had an inconteſtable right to diſpoſe of them as he thought convenient. Accordingly, he uſurped the collation of almoſt all the church-preferments, not excepting the biſhopricks and archbiſhopricks, contrary to the rights of the King, the Chapter, and the Patrons. This encroachment grew at length to that height, that there was not a benefice, great or ſmall, in England, but what the Popes diſpoſed of, by the infallible means they had contrived to be maſters of all the collations. Sometimes, pretending not to like, or finding an objection againſt the perſon recommended to them for confirmation, they ſet him aſide and nominated another. One while, by the plenitude of the apoſtolick power, they reſerved to themſelves all the Benefices which ſhould become void by tranſlation. Another while, ſuch as ſhould be vacant by death, or any other way whatever. And finally, they beſtowed the biſhopricks, and other benefices, even before they were vacant, by way of Proviſion (2).

(2) See M. Paris in many places. Ryley's Placita Parliam. p. 376. and Rapin's Hiſt. of Engl. Vol. ii. fol. p. 476, 477.

[To prevent theſe incroachments and impoſitions of the Biſhops of Rome, there was made, in the thirty-fifth year of Edward the firſt's reign, the firſt ſtatute againſt papal proviſions, which, according to Sir Edward Coke, is the foundation of all the ſubſequent ſtatutes of præmunire. Afterwards, in the 25th, 27th, and 38th years of Edward III. more ſharp and penal laws were enacted againſt proviſors, which enact ſeverally, that the court of Rome ſhall preſent or collate to no biſhoprick or living in England; and that whoever diſturbs any patron in the preſentation to a living by virtue of a papal proviſion, ſuch proviſor ſhall pay fine and ranſom to the King at his will; and be impriſoned till he renounces ſuch proviſion: and the ſame puniſhment is inflicted on ſuch as cite the King or any of his ſubjects, to anſwer in the court of Rome. When the Holy See reſented theſe proceedings, and Pope Urban V. attempted to revive the vaſſalage and annual rent to which King John had ſubjected the kingdom, it was unanimouſly agreed by all the eſtates of the realm in parliament aſſembled, 40 Edw. III. that King John's donation was null and void, being without the concurrence of parliament, and contrary to his coronation oath: and all the temporal nobility and commons engaged, that if the Pope ſhould endeavour, by proceſs or otherwiſe, to maintain theſe uſurpations, they would reſiſt and withſtand him with all their power.

It was found neceſſary, in the reign of Richard the ſecond, to ſharpen and ſtrengthen theſe laws by freſh ſtatutes; and particularly by that which is uſually called the ſtatute of præmunire, and is generally referred to by all ſubſequent ſtatutes. It is the ſtatute 16 Ric. II. c. 5. which enacts, that whoever procures at Rome, or elſewhere, any tranſlations, proceſſes, excommunications, bulls, inſtruments, or other things which touch the King, againſt him, his crown, and realm, and all perſons aiding and aſſiſting therein, ſhall be put out of the King's protection, their lands and goods forfeited to the King's uſe, and they ſhall be attached by their bodies to anſwer to the King and his council; or proceſs of præmunire facias ſhall be made out againſt them, as in other caſes of proviſors *.] K.

* Blackſtone's Commentaries on the Laws of England, Vol. iv. p. 110. 112. 4*to*. firſt edit.

Archbiſhop of Canterbury, uſed his utmoſt intereſt at Rome to obſtruct Hugh de Balſham's confirmation, though he could alledge no one fault againſt him; and recommended Adam de Maris, a learned Minorite Frier, as a fit perſon to be promoted to the biſhoprick: but all his endeavours proved unſucceſsful. As to Wengham, having been recommended by the King without his own deſire and knowledge, he did not ſtir in the leaſt to get himſelf elected by the Monks; but rather, out of an uncommon exceſs of modeſty, declined the honour, alledging that the two others (Balſham and Maris) were more worthy of it, and more deſerving than himſelf. This matter remained in ſuſpence for above ten years, and was at length determined in favour of Hugh de Balſham. For Wengham being promoted to the biſhoprick of London, upon Fulk de Baſſet's deceaſe; the Pope confirmed Hugh de Balſham's election, on the 10th of March 1257, and he was conſecrated the 14th of October following. Being thus fixed in his See, he applied h imſelf to works of charity, and particularly, in the year 1257 (e), or 1259 according to ſome (f), put in execution what he had deſigned, if not begun, before; that is, he laid the foundation of St. Peter's college, the firſt college in the univerſity of Cambridge. He built it without Trumpington gate, near the church of St. Peter, (ſince demoliſhed) from whence it took its name; and on the place where ſtood Jeſus Hoſtel, or de pœnitentia Jeſu Chriſti, and St. John's hoſpital (g), which he purchaſed and united. At firſt, he only provided lodgings for the ſcholars, who were before obliged to hire chambers of the townſmen at an extravagant rate (h); and they, and the ſecular brethren of St. John the Baptiſt, lived together till the year 1280 [D]. Then the Monks making over to him their right to the hoſpital above mentioned, he endowed his college, on the 30th of March of the ſame year (i), with maintenance for one Maſter, fourteen Fellows, two Bible-clerks, and eight poor ſcholars, whoſe number might be increaſed or diminiſhed, according to the improvement or abatement of their revenues. And he appointed his ſucceſſors, the Biſhops of Ely, to be honorary Patrons and Viſitors of that college (k). The revenues of it have ſince been augmented by ſeveral benefactors [E]. The munificent founder had not the ſatisfaction to ſee all things finiſhed before his deceaſe (l). He died at Dodington June 16, 1286, and was buried in the cathedral church of Ely, before the high altar (m).

(e) T. Fuller's Hiſt. of the Univ. of Cambridge, p. 12.

(f) J. Caii Hiſt. Cantebrig. Acad. p. 54.

(g) T. Fuller, ubi ſupra, p. 26.

(h) Idem, p. 30.

(i) J. Caii Hiſt. ubi ſupra, p. 54. Hiſt. of the Univ. of Cambridge, by R. Parker, Lond. 1721, 8vo. p. 34.

(l) T. Fuller, ubi ſupra, p. 30.

(l) The Foundation of the Univerſity of Cambridge, &c. Lond. 1651, 4to. p. 3.

(m) Godwin, ubi ſupra, p. 315. J. Caius ſays, he died June 15, ubi ſupra, p. 54.

[D] They, and the ſecular brethren of St. John the Baptiſt, lived together till the year 1280.] I follow J. Caius in fixing the endowment of this college at the year 1280, though he ſeems to imply afterwards, that it was not done till 1282 (3). T. Fuller places it in the ſame year (4), and others ſay, the founder ſettled not the endowment till the year 1284 (5). Perhaps, the whole difference between them conſiſts in this, that there might be a ſpace of ſome few years between his beginning to endow, and his finally ſettling the endowment. He removed the ſecular brethren mentioned above, to his new college; having before ſeparated them from the regulars, whoſe monaſtery ſtood neer All-ſaints church, and tranſlated them to the place where he founded his college. St. Peter's church, which ſtood near it, falling down, the church of St. Mary's de Gratia, or of Grace, was built where it now ſtands, from whence the college came to be commonly ſtiled for an hundred years together, the college of St. Mary's of Grace (6).

(3) Ubi ſupra, p. 54.

(4) Hiſt. ubi ſupra, p. 30.

(5) The Foundation of the Univ. of Cambridge, with a Catalogue of the Founders, &c. Lond. 1651, 4to.

(6) Ibid.

[E] The revenues of it hath ſince been augmented by ſeveral benefactors.] The chief of them have been Simon de Montacute, Simon Langham, and John Fordham, Biſhops of Ely. Thomas de Caſtro, John Holbroke, Thomas Lane, John Warkworth, Thomas Denman, Henry Hornby, William Burgoyne, John Edmunds, Andrew Perne, Maſters of that houſe. And William Martin, Ralph Walpool, Biſhop of Norwich, —— Lownde, John Whitgift, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Robert Shorton, Edmund Hanſon, Robert Gilbert, —— Skelton, Mrs. Elizabeth Wolfe, Edward Lord North, Thomas Smith, Henry Wilſhaw, Lady Mary Ramſey, Robert Warden, Thomas Warren, Mrs. Margaret Dean, William Herne, Robert Slade, John Blith, &c. This college conſiſts of twenty-two fellows, thirty-four bible-clerks, and eight poor ſcholars. M.

[Hugh de Balſham, ſoon after his return from Rome, ſued, in the year 1258, the maſter of the Knights Templars, before Hugh Bigot, juſticiary of England, for his right of hoſtilage in the New Temple, of which the ſaid Maſter had diſſeiſed him, and denied him entrance. The biſhop laid his damage at two hundred pounds, and recovered his right, with coſts. During his epiſcopate, a diſpenſation was granted by the Pope to the monks of Ely, in conſideration of their cathedral church being ſituate on an eminence, and expoſed to cold and ſharp winds, to wear caps ſuited to their order. It was Hugh de Balſham who ſettled, in 1276, the diſtinction of juriſdiction between the Chancellor of the univerſity of Cambridge, and the Archdeacon of Ely. By his laſt will he left to his ſcholars many books in divinity and other ſciences; and 300 marks for erecting new buildings. Peterhouſe was the firſt endowed college in Cambridge. The univerſity, in grateful reſpect to the biſhop's memory, obliged themſelves by an inſtrument, in 1291, to celebrate annually a ſolemn commemoration of his obit (7).] K.

(7) Bentham's Hiſt. of the Church of Ely, p. 150, 151.

BAMBRIDGE or BAINBRIDGE (Christopher), Archbiſhop of York, and Cardinal-Prieſt of the Roman Church, was born at Hilton near Appleby in Weſtmorland, and educated at Queen's college in Oxford. Having taken holy orders, he became Rector of Aller in the dioceſe of Bath and Wells. He enjoyed three Prebends ſucceſſively in the cathedral church of Saliſbury; that of South-Grantham in 1485, that of Chardſtock the ſame year, and that of Horton in 1486. He was elected Provoſt of Queen's college in 1495, and about the ſame time created Doctor of Laws. On September the 28th, 1503, he was admitted Prebendary of Strenſhall in the cathedral church of York, void by the conſecration of Jeoffrey Blyth to the See of Litchfield and Coventry; and on the 21ſt of December following, he was inſtalled in the deanery of that church, in the room of the ſaid Blyth. In 1505 he was made Dean of Windſor, and the ſame year maſter of the Rolls, and one of the King's Privy Council. In 1507, he was advanced to the See of Durham, and received the temporalities the 17th of November. The next year he was tranſlated to the archbiſhoprick of York, and received the temporalities poralities the 12th of December (a). Pits assures us, that Bambridge had been very intimate with Morton Archbishop of Canterbury, and shared in that Prelate's sufferings during the usurpation of Richard III.: after whose death, his affairs took a more prosperous turn; for he was appointed Almoner to King Henry VII. and employed by that Prince on several embassies to the Emperor Maximilian, Charles VIII. King of France, and other potentates of Europe (b). But he distinguished himself chiefly by his embassy from King Henry VIII. to Pope Julius II. who created him a cardinal [A], with the title of St. Praxede, in March 1511 (c), and, eight days after, appointed him Legate of the ecclesiastical army, which had been sent into the Ferrarese, and were then besieging the fort of Bastia (d). In return for which marks of honour, our new Cardinal and Legate prevailed with the King his master, to take part with his Holiness against the King of France [B]. Nor was he less zealous in the service of that Pontiff during his life, than in honouring and defending his memory after his death (e). There are extant in Rymer's Fœdera, &c. (f) two letters; one from Cardinal Bambridge, during his residence at Rome, to King Henry VIII. [C], concerning the Pope's Bull giving him the title of Most Christian King; and another from the Cardinal de Sinigallia to the King [D], acquainting his Highness that he had delivered that instrument to Cardinal Bambridge. This Prelate died at Rome, the 14th of July 1514, being poisoned by one of his domestics, in revenge for some blows he had given him [E]; and was buried there in the English

(a) Wood, Athen. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 651, 652.

(b) Pits, de illustr. Angl. Scriptor. in Append. Centur. i. n. 48.

(c) Polyd. Vergil. Angl. Hist. edit. Lugd. Batav. 1651, l. xxvii. p. 4. and Aubery, Histoire Generale des Cardinaux. edit. Paris, 1645. t. iii. p. 164.

(d) Aubery, ib. p. 165.

(e) Id. ib p. 166.

(f) Vol. xiii. p. 376. 379.

[A] He was sent Embassador from King Henry VIII. to Pope Julius II. who created him a cardinal.] The occasion of this embassy, according to Mr. Aubery (1), was as follows. Henry VIII. King of England, being jealous of the honour, which the King of France, his neighbour, was acquiring in Italy, and the considerable advantages his most Christian Majesty every day gained over the Venetians, against whom a league of the most powerful princes of Europe had been lately formed at Cambray; dispatched the new Archbishop of York, Embassador to Rome, with express orders to favour as much as possible the party of the Venetians, and to endeavour, by all means, to reconcile them to the Pope: An employment (adds our author) truly worthy of so great a Prelate, and an embassy highly becoming an Archbishop, if Christian charity alone, and a desire of promoting the general peace of Europe, had been the motive of this illustrious mediat on, and not rather a secret passion in the English King to extinguish the war in Italy, in hopes of seeing it break out again in France. To effect which, our Embassador, who mingled his own interests with those of his Prince, and had his eye upon the red hat, carried on his negociations at first with so much artifice and disguise, that the real intentions of his master were not presently discovered. But the league against the Venetians being broken, and the Pope having picked a quarrel with the King of France, his Holiness, in order to gain over the King of England to his side, caressed his Embassador more than ever, and not only created him a Cardinal, but gave him likewise the precedency, which belonged of right to the Archbishop of Siponto, as being the eldest Prelate of the eight or nine, who were promoted in the same creation. An historian of our own (2) tells us, the Pope solicited King Henry VIII. by putting him in mind of the glory of his ancestors, and offering him the honour to be, Caput Fœderis Italici, head of the Italian league; whereupon our King sent Christopher Bambridge, Archbishop of York, to reside at Rome, and treat of these matters. In his epitaph (3), it is said, he was created a Cardinal for his emine t services done to the Holy See; but, if M. Aubery has set the affair in a true light, the red hat was rather the motive to, than the consequence of, his merit; rather the bribe, than the reward, of his services.

(1) Histoire Generale des Cardinaux. edit. Paris. 1645, t. iii. p. 264.

(2) Lord Herbert's Life and Reign of King Henry VIII. ap. Complete History of England, Vol. ii. p. 6.

(3) See below the remark [F].

[B] He prevailed with his master to take part with the Pope against the King of France.] The observation in the close of the last remark is farther confirmed by what Polydore Vergil tells us, that Cardinal Bambridge sent dispatches to the King, to acquaint him, that the Pope expected assistance from England; and as he was sensible of the great obligations he lay under to that Pontiff, for the honour of the Cardinalate conferred upon him, he was the more urgent with the King to undertake his Holiness's cause, and not to suffer a Pope, who had so strenuously asserted the liberties of Christendom, to fall a sacrifice to his enemies. The Cardinal's zeal upon this occasion influenced the King to lay the affair before his Council; in which, after long debates, it was resolved to undertake the war. Legatus interea Anglus Christophorus Cardinalis literis et nuntiis significabat Henrico Regi, Julium Pontificem auxilia ab Anglia expectare, et quo magis sciebat se Pontifici ob delatum sibi Cardinalatus honorem debere, hoc impensius obtestabatur, rogabatque regem, ut ejus salutis rationem haberet, ac neutiquam Pontificem, de reipublicæ Christianæ libertate optimè meritum, pateretur ab improbis hominibus oppressum iri — Christophori studium ita Henricum permovit, ut res ad Concilium delata sit. Multæ et variæ sententiæ in utramque partem dictæ sunt.——Ita bellum esse suscipiendum, decretum est (4).

(4) Polyd. Vergil. Angl. Hist. lib. xxvii. edit. Lugd. Bat. 1651, p. 6, 7.

[C] A Letter from Cardinal Bambridge to King Henry VIII.] In this letter there is mention of a certain brief of Julius II. committed to the keeping of the Cardinal de Sinigallia, in order to be delivered to King Henry, after he had vanquished the enemies of the Church. In all probability, this was a brief, by which Julius transferred to Henry, the title of Most Christian King. Cardinal Bambridge having demanded it of the Cardinal de Sinigallia, after the battle of Guinegaste, and the taking of Terouane, the latter answered, That he could not deliver it without an express order signed by the King's own hand. It appears by this letter, that there was some formality wanting in the Pope's brief, and that it was apprehended, there would be a difficulty in getting it confirmed by Leo X. who succeeded Julius. Cardinal Bambridge's letter is dated at Rome, Sept. 12, 1513 (5).

(5) Rymer's Fœdera, &c. Vol. xiii. p. 376.

[D] A Letter from the Cardinal de Sinigallia to the King.] It is dated at Rome, Oct. 11, 1513 (6). He therein gives the King the title of His most Christian Majesty; which is a confirmation of the conjecture in the last remark. To which may be added, that Lord Herbert, who had seen the original contract of the capitulation of Tournay, dated Sept. 23, 1513, expressly tells us (7), That the citizens therein gave King Henry the title of Roy très Chrêtien, that is, the Most Christian King.

(6) Ib. p. 379.

(7) Life and Reign of King Henry VIII. ubi supra, p. 17.

[E] He was poisoned by one of his domestics.] M. Aubery informs us (8), that the Cardinal, being one day in a violent passion, to which he was naturally subject, fell upon his Major-Domo, one Renaud of Modena, and beat him excessively; and that the enraged domestic revenged the beating with a dose of a poison, which he found means to administer to his master; for which being apprehended and imprisoned, he prevented the execution of public justice by hanging himself. That whimsical author Dr. Fuller says upon this occasion: Herein something may be pleaded for this Cardinal out of the Old, sure I am, more must be pleaded against him out of the New Testament, if the places be paralleled:

(8) Ubi supra, p. 166, 167.

Prov. xxix. 19.	1. Tim. iii. 3.
A servant will not be corrected by words, &c.	A Bishop must be no striker, &c.

But grant him greatly faulty, it were uncharitable in us to beat his memory with more stripes, who did then suffer so much for his own indiscretion (9).

(9) Fuller's Worthies of England. Westmorland, p. 136.

church

church of St. Thomas (g) [F]. Pits commends him (h) for his great learning, and tells us, he wrote many things in the Civil Law, and ſome accounts of his own embaſſies, nothing of which has come down to us. But a foreign author has given us a very different idea of this Cardinal's abilities [G]. The abovementioned writer (i) is miſtaken in giving him the name of Chriſtopher Urſwic [H].

(g) Aubery, ib. p. 166, 167.
(h) Ubi ſupra.
(i) Pits, ibid.

[F] He was buried in the Engliſh church of St. Thomas.] On his tomb was the following epitaph (10).

(10) Aubery, ib.

CHRISTOPHORO. ARCHIEPISCOPO. EBORACENSI. S. PRAXEDIS. PRESBYTERO. CARDINALI. ANGLIÆ. A. JULIO. II. PONTIFICE. MAXIMO. OB. EGREGIAM. OPERAM. S. R. ECCLESIÆ. PRÆSTITAM. DUM. SUI. REGNI. LEGATUS. ESSET. ASSUMPTO. QUAM. MOX. DOMI. ET. FORIS. CASTRIS. PONTIFICIIS. PRÆFECTUS. TUTATUS. EST.

In Engliſh.

In memory of Chriſtopher, Archbiſhop of York, and Cardinal Prieſt of St. Praxede; created by Pope Julius II., for the eminent ſervices done by him to the Holy Roman Church, during his embaſſy from his own nation, and afterwards defending the ſame, both at home and abroad, as Legate of the Papal army.

[G] A foreign author has given us a very different idea of the Cardinal's abilities.] This author is Paris de Graſſi, who relates (11), that Bambridge, before his advancement to the purple, being one day to return thanks to the Pope and the Sacred College, for the honour done to the King his maſter in ſending him the Golden Roſe, was forced to break off his ſpeech, and to quit the Conſiſtory in great confuſion. And the like diſgrace befel him when Cardinal, a few days after his promotion: For it being his lot to thank the Dean of the Sacred College, in the name of all the new Cardinals, he was again at a loſs, and, what was ſtill worſe, ſpoke directly contrary to the inſtructions given him by the Maſter of the Ceremonies; which were, to divide his ſpeech into four points, to magnify, under the firſt, the dignity of the Cardinalate; to leſſen, in the ſecond, the merit of himſelf and his aſſociates; in the third, to extol the goodneſs and condeſcenſion of the Pope; and to end with compliments of thanks, and offers of their moſt humble ſervice.

(11) In Vit. Jul. II. apud Aubery, ubi ſupra.

[H] Pits is miſtaken in giving him the name of Chriſtopher Urſwic.] Chriſtophorus Urſwiccus, ſays he (12), quem alii Bambriggum, alii Branbridge, cognominant, &c. But Anthony Wood aſſures us (13), that Chriſtopher Urſwic was the Cardinal's predeceſſor in the deanery of Windſor. B.

(12) De illuſtr. Angl. Script. in Append. Centur. i. n. 48.
(13) Ath. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 652.

BANCROFT (RICHARD), Archbiſhop of Canterbury in the reign of King James I., was ſon of John Bancroft, Gentleman, and Mary daughter of Mr. John Curwyn, brother of Dr. Hugh Curwyn, Archbiſhop of Dublin (a); and was born at Farnworth in Lancaſhire, in September 1544. After being ſeverely trained up in grammatical learning, he was entered a ſtudent of Chriſt-college in Cambridge, where, in 1566-7, he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts (b); and from thence he removed to Jeſus-college, where, in 1570, he commenced Maſter of Arts (c). Soon after, he was made Chaplain to Dr. Cox, Biſhop of Ely, who, in 1575, gave him the rectory of Teverſham in Cambridgeſhire (d). The year following, he was licenſed one of the univerſity Preachers (e); and, in 1580, was admitted Bachelor of Divinity (f). September the 14th, 1584, he was inſtituted to the rectory of St. Andrew, Holborn, at the preſentation of the executors of Henry Earl of Southampton (g). In 1585, he commenced Doctor in Divinity; and the ſame year, was made Treaſurer of St. Paul's cathedral in London (h). The year following, he became rector of Cottingham in Northamptonſhire, at the preſentation of Sir Chriſtopher Hatton, Lord-Chancellor, whoſe Chaplain he then was (i). February the 25th, 1589, he was made a Prebendary of St. Paul's (k); in 1592, advanced to the ſame dignity in the collegiate church of Weſtminſter (l); and, in 1594, promoted to a ſtall in the cathedral of Canterbury (m). Not long before, he had diſtinguiſhed his zeal for the Church of England by a learned and ſignificant Sermon, preached (*) againſt the Puritans at St. Paul's Croſs [A]. In 1597, Dr. Bancroft, being then Chaplain to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Whitgift, was (a) Wood, Faſti Oxon. Vol. i. col. 178.

(b) Newcourt, Repertorium, &c. Vol. i. p. 28.
(c) Le Neve's Lives and Characters, &c. of the Proteſtant Biſhops, &c. p. 71.
(d) Strype's Life of Archbiſhop Whitgift, p. 48.
(e) Regiſtr. Acad.
(f) Newcourt, ubi ſupra.
(g) Id. ib. p. 275.
(h) Ib. p. 107.
(i) Le Neve, ubi ſupra; p. 73.
(k) Newcourt, ib. p. 119.
(l) Ib. p. 927.
(m) Le Neve, ib. p. 74.
(*) Febr. 9, 1588-9.

[A] He preached a ſermon againſt the Puritans at St. Paul's croſs.] We will give the reader an extract of this diſcourſe, as it is made by one of our hiſtorians. The Sermon itſelf is prefixed to the Archbiſhop's Survey of the pretended Holy Diſcipline.——His text was: Dearly beloved, believe not every ſpirit; but try the ſpirits, whether they be of God; for many falſe prophets are gone out into the world: 1 John iv. 1. In proſecuting this text, he gave a ſtrong image of the Puritans, and painted them in glowing colours. He ſet forth their intemperate language againſt Biſhops, deſcribed their ambition, and ſuch other indirect motives, that puſhed them to mutiny and public diſturbance. Among other things, he charges the party with covetouſneſs; he laments that filthy lucre was frequently made the pretence of Reformation; and that the proſpect many perſons had of plundering Biſhoprics, ſeizing the endowments of cathedrals, and ſcrambling for the remainder of the church revenues, was the principal cauſe of nonconformity and ſchiſm in this Church. He adds, that had not clear evidence drove him to this cenſure, he ſhould have forborn the imputation. To explain himſelf farther upon this head, he divides the Nonconformiſts into Clergy and Laity, and conſiders their pretenſions apart. Their Clergy make a warm demand of all the livings ſettled upon the eſtabliſhed Church. Theſe eſtates, they pretend, ought to be conveyed to their Preſbyteries. And, for fear of being underfurniſhed, they put in a claim to the abbey-lands. To this purpoſe, in a petition to the parliament exhibited in the name of the Commonalty, they lay it down for a maxim in Divinity, that things once dedicated to religious uſes, are unalienable from their original intendment: When they are thus encloſed by vows and ſolemn conveyance, they ought never to be thrown open to the world. The Lay-Nonconformiſts were of a quite different ſentiment, and ran boldly to a ſcandalous extreme. For this he quotes a pamphlet, called, An Admonition to the People of England. Our preachers, ſay theſe Lay-Puritans, ought to live by the example of Chriſt and his Apoſtles. Now no one was more unprovided with conveniencies than their maſter: He had no place where to lay his head: Luke ix. And as for the Apoſtles, their predeceſſors, Silver and gold they had none: Acts iii. Now why ſhould theſe men, whoſe induſtry and merit are leſs, be better accommodated? Why ſhould thoſe, who are ſo much inferior to the Apoſtles in their qualifications, exceed them in figure and preferment? There is no coarſeneſs in eating or dreſs, which men of their profeſſion ought to repine at. Alas! their dignities and promotions do but hinder them in their buſineſs, and diſſerve their character. And, to turn theſe men's artillery upon themſelves, and ruin them by their own was advanced to the See of London, in the room of Dr. Richard Fletcher, and conſecrated at Lambeth the 8th of May (n). From this time he had, in effect, the archiepiſcopal power: For the Archbiſhop, being declined in years, and unfit for buſineſs, committed the ſole management of eccleſiaſtical affairs to Biſhop Bancroft (o). Soon after his being made Biſhop, he expended 1000 marks in the repair of his houſe in London (p). In the year 1600, he, with others, was ſent by Queen Elizabeth to Embden, to put an end to a difference between the Engliſh and Danes: But the embaſſy had no effect (q). This Prelate interpoſed in the diſputes between the Secular Prieſts and the Jeſuits, and furniſhed ſome of the former with materials to write againſt their adverſaries [B]. In the beginning of King James's reign, Biſhop Bancroft was preſent at the conference held at Hampton-Court [C], between the Biſhops and the Preſbyterian Miniſters (r). The ſame year, 1603, he was appointed one of the Commiſſioners for regulating the affairs

(n) Strype, ubi ſupra, p. 515.

(o) Fuller's Worthies of England, Lancaſhire, p. 112.

(p) Strype, ib. p. 518.

(q) Camden's Reign of Queen Elizabeth, apud Complete Hiſt. of Engl. Vol. ii. p. 625. 648.

(r) Fuller's Ch. Hiſtory, Cent. xvii. lib. ix. p. 7—21.

reaſoning, he borrows ſome of the principles of the German Anabaptiſts. And here he directs his diſcourſe to the poorer ſort of the audience in this manner: 'My brethren, ſays he, theſe gentlemen of the 'laity uſe you extremely ill. The children of God, 'you know, are heirs of the world: The earth is the 'Lord's, and the Saints are to inherit it. The wicked 'therefore do but uſurp the bleſſings of Providence, 'and hold their eſtates by a wrong title. You have 'an equal ſhare with thoſe of the beſt diſtinction in 'the kingdom of heaven: Why then will you ſuffer 'yourſelves to be thrown out of your property upon 'earth, and acquieſce under ſo unequal a diſtribution? 'In the Apoſtles times, the faithful had all things 'common. Then thoſe who had eſtates ſold them, 'and laid the purchaſe money at the Apoſtles feet, 'and every one had his ſhare in proportion to his ne'ceſſity. And ſince the Chriſtian religion is ſtill the 'ſame, why is the uſage ſo very different? But, alas! 'ſo it is; you are but little better than beaſts of 'burthen to the wealthier ſort. Your landlords make 'no ſcruple to rack your rents, to grind your faces, 'and exhauſt your bodies. And to what end is 'all this oppreſſion in liberty and livelihood: It is to 'maintain an unneceſſary equipage, to humour their 'pride, and feed their luxury: It is to ſupply their 'pockets for gaming, and furniſh their diverſions of 'hawking and hunting. And are theſe warrantable 'motives to keep the greateſt part of the world low 'and uneaſy? To make them wear out their lives in 'labour and poverty? Why don't you puſh for re'dreſs of theſe grievances, and revive the practice of 'the Apoſtles times? To attempt ſomething of this 'kind would be charity to your wealthy neighbours, 'no leſs than yourſelves. For theſe bulky eſtates of 'theirs do but pamper their pride, abate their zeal, 'and check their progreſs in virtue. Indeed, unleſs 'you make them primitive Chriſtians in their fortunes, 'they will never be ſo in their lives; unleſs you re'duce them to evangelical poverty, and reſcue them 'from their riches, they muſt be undone.' Dr. Bancroft here puts the queſtion to the wealthier part of the audience how they like this doctrine? And, if they are unwilling to have it practiſed upon themſelves, they ſhould take care not to urge it againſt the Clergy: Thus much for covetouſneſs. To make the text bear upon the Diſſenters in other reſpects, he ſhews on what a weak foundation they erected their diſcipline: That there were no traces of this ſcheme from the Apoſtles time down to Calvin: That the parity theſe men are ſo earneſt to bring into the Church, was made a mark of infamy in the Aërian heretics. Farther, he repreſented the great danger, which muſt inevitably follow, if private men ſhould conteſt the conſtitutions of the Church, and preſume to over-rule that which had been ſettled by ſo conſiderable an authority. And, as to their complaint of the rigour of forcing them upon ſubſcription of articles, he endeavours to juſtify this impoſition by the precedent of Geneva, and ſome other Reformed Churches in Germany. The Doctor proceeds to inſiſt upon the excellency and unexceptionableneſs of the Common-Prayer-Book; ſhews what commendation had been given it by foreign Divines; how it was approved by Bucer, Aleſius, and Fox, and by the Parliaments and Convocations of this realm; how Archbiſhop Cranmer had defended it againſt the Papiſts, and Biſhop Ridley againſt Knox, and others. And here he argues from the abſurdity of extemporary prayers, and how often ſuch unpremeditated devotions ſlide into indecency and irreverence. Next, he maintains the ſuperiority of Biſhops over Preſbyters, argues for the civil ſupremacy, and alarms the audience with the danger they had reaſon to apprehend from the practice and principles of the Diſciplinarians (1). This ſermon was managed with great learning and ſtrength of argument, and in all likelihood made an impreſſion. And of this the Act of Grace, at the breaking up of the parliament, ſeems ſomething of a proof. For thoſe, who did not come to church, hear divine ſervice, and conform to the eccleſiaſtical eſtabliſhment, were excepted from the benefit of this act (2).

(1) Collier's Eccleſiaſt. Hiſt. of Great Britain, Vol. ii. p. 609, 610.

(2) 31 Eliz. c. 16.

[B] He furniſhed ſome of the Secular Prieſts with materials to write againſt the Jeſuits.] The reader is to know, that there were great miſunderſtandings at that time between the Secular Prieſts of the Romiſh Clergy and the Jeſuits. And it is probable, the aſſiſtance Biſhop Bancroft lent the former, was, partly to keep up the diviſion, and partly to encourage the honeſter ſide. For, that the Seculars, notwithſtanding their difference in religion, were men of loyal principles, appears by a paper ſigned by ſeveral of them about that time, and by themſelves delivered into Bancroft's hands: A copy of it may be ſeen in the above-cited hiſtorian (3).

(3) Collier, ubi ſupra, p. 664, 665. Ex. Biblioth. R. Harley, Armig.

[C] He was preſent at the conference held at Hampton-Court.] The reader may ſee an account of this famous conference, which was held in the King's preſence, in a piece entitled; The Sum and Subſtance of the Conference held at Hampton-Court. By William Barlow, Doctor in Divinity, and Dean of Cheſter. Printed in 1604. We ſhall only take notice here of what particularly relates to the Biſhop of London's behaviour upon this occaſion. In the firſt day's conference, the King having deſired the Biſhops to ſatisfy him in three things, namely, about Confirmation, Abſolution, and Private Baptiſm, as practiſed in the Church of England; Biſhop Bancroft ſeconded Archbiſhop Whitgift in giving his Majeſty the ſatisfaction he required. With reſpect to Confirmation, he alledged, that it had not only the practice of the Primitive Church, and the teſtimony of the Fathers, in its defence, but that it was likewiſe an Apoſtolical inſtitution, and a part of the doctrines expreſsly mentioned in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, ch. vi. ver. 2. He added, that Calvin expounded that paſſage in this ſenſe; and earneſtly wiſhed the cuſtom might be revived in thoſe Churches, which had ſuppreſſed it. As to the point of Abſolution, the Archbiſhop having cleared the practice of the Church of England from all abuſe and ſuperſtition, and appealed for this to the Confeſſion and Abſolution in the beginning of the Communion-Book; the Biſhop of London, ſtepping forward, told the King, that in the Communion-Book there was another particular and perſonal form of abſolution, preſcribed in the Viſitation of the Sick; adding withal, that not only the Confeſſions of Augſburgh, Bohemia, and Saxony, retained it; but that Calvin approved ſuch a general Confeſſion and Abſolution as is uſed in the Church of England. The form being read, the King liked it extremely, and called it an Apoſtolical Ordinance. In regard to Private Baptiſm, the Archbiſhop having endeavoured to ſatisfy his Majeſty, that the adminiſtration of baptiſm by women and lay-perſons was not allowed by the Church of England; and the Biſhop of Worceſter having allowed that the words of the office were ambiguous, and might be conſtrued ſo as to permit ſuch a practice; the Biſhop of London, not ſatisfied with this diſcourſe, replied, that the learned and reverend compilers of the Common-Prayer had no intention to miſlead the people by perplexed and double meaning expreſſions, but really deſigned a permiſſion to private perſons for baptizing affairs of the Church, and for perusing and suppressing books, printed in England, or brought into the realm without public authority (s). A Convocation being summoned to meet March 20, 1603-4, and Archbishop Whitgift dying in the mean time, Bishop Bancroft was, by the King's writ, appointed President of that assembly (t). October 9th, 1604, he was nominated to succeed the Archbishop in that high dignity, to which he was elected by the Dean and Chapter Nov. 17, and confirmed in Lambeth chapel Dec. 10 (u). Sept. 5, 1605, he was sworn one of his Majesty's most honourable Privy Council (w). This year, in Michaelmas-term, Archbishop Bancroft exhibited certain articles, to the Lords of the Council, against the Judges [D]. In 1608 he was declared Chancellor

(s) Strype, ib. p. 577.

(t) Id. ib. p. 588.

(u) Registr. Bancroft.

(w) Ibid.

tizing in cases of necessity; and for this he appealed to their letters, some passages of which were read. He proceeded to prove, that this permission was agreeable to the practice of the Primitive Church: And to this purpose he urged the text in the second of the Acts, where three thousand are said to have been baptized in one day; alledging, that it was impossible, or at least improbable, that the Apostles could administer that sacrament to such numbers in so short a time; and that, in those early days of Christianity, there were no Bishops or Priests besides the Apostles. He likewise cited the authorities of Tertullian and St. Ambrose. And here he laid open the absurdity and impiety of supposing no necessity of baptism. In the second day's conference, the Bishop of London, perceiving that the design of the Presbyterians was entirely to overthrow the Ecclesiastical Constitution, humbly moved the King, First, that the ancient canon, Schismatici contra Episcopos non sunt audiendi, might be remembered: Secondly, that, if any of the Agents for the Nonconformists had subscribed the Communion-Book, and yet exhibited a remonstrance against it, they might be set aside, pursuant to an ancient Council, in which it is decreed, that no man shall plead against his own act and subscription. But the King interposing, ordered the Bishop to reply to the exceptions made by Dr. Reynolds, one of the Nonconformist Delegates. This gave the Bishop occasion to declare his opinion, First, with respect to Predestination: This proposition, If I shall be saved, I shall be saved, he called a desperate doctrine. He alledged, that it was a contradiction to orthodox belief; that in the points of Predestination, we should rather infer ascendendo than descendendo, that is, we should conclude our Election from the regularity of our lives, rather than rest our happiness upon any absolute irrespective decree; and that if God has ordained us to happiness, no habits or degrees of wickedness can make us miscarry. From hence the Bishop went on to acquaint his Majesty with the doctrine of the Church of England touching Predestination. Secondly, Reynolds having objected the inconvenience of reserving Confirmation to the Bishop alone, it being impracticable for the Diocesan to examine all who came to be confirmed; Bancroft replied, that it was the custom of the Bishops, in their visitations, to appoint either their Chaplains, or some other Ministers, to examine those who came to be confirmed; and that they seldom confirmed any, unless their qualifications were certified by their own Parsons or Curates. To the opinion, his answer was, that none of the Fathers ever admitted any to confirm, under the order of Bishops; and that even St. Jerome (though otherwise no friend to the episcopal superiority) confesses, the executing this function was solely lodged with the Bishops; though with this qualifying expression, ad honorem potius sacerdotii, quam ad legis necessitatem. However, this Father owns, the Bishops ought to have a power paramount to the rest of the Clergy; and that, without this prerogative, the unity and well-being of the Church could not subsist. In this conference, Reynolds having moved for several alterations in doctrine and discipline, Bishop Bancroft addressed the King kneeling, and humbly desired, that since it was a time for moving petitions, he might have leave to put up two or three. First, he requested, that care might be taken for a Praying Clergy: For notwithstanding there are many serviceable branches in the sacerdotal function, such as absolving penitents, praying for the people, pronouncing the blessing, and administering the sacraments, it is now (said he) come to that pass, that some men conceive the duty of a parish Priest is wholly confined to the Pulpit; where, God knows, they sometimes manage with a very slender share either of learning or discretion; that preaching has such an ascendant in their fancy, that the celebrating divine service is scandalously neglected; that some Ministers chose rather to walk in the churchyard till sermon time, than join in public prayer. He confessed, that for missionaries in unconverted countries, where a Church was planting, preaching was most necessary; but, where Christianity had been a long time settled, he thought pulpit-harangues were not the only business of a Pastor, and that this exercise ought not to be followed to the neglect of other parts of his office. This motion was highly approved by the King. The Bishop's second request was, that till men of learning and sufficiency might be procured for every congregation, godly Homilies might be read, and their number increased; and that those men, who had decried these instructions, would retract their censures, and endeavour to bring them into credit. The Bishop's reason for recommending the homilies was, because every Clergyman that could pronounce well had not a talent of composing. Both the King and the Agents thought this request very reasonable. The Lord Chancellor taking occasion here to argue against pluralities, and expressing his wishes, that some Clergymen might have single coats before others had doublets, adding that himself had managed in this manner in bestowing the benefices in the King's gift; the Bishop of London replied, I commend your honourable care that way; but a doublet is necessary in cold weather. The Bishop of London's last motion was, that pulpits might not be turned into batteries, and every malecontent allowed to play his spleen against his superiors from thence. The King received this complaint very graciously, and advised, in case of any misconduct in Church-officers, not to let fly personal reflections from the pulpit, but to appeal in the first place to the Ordinary, then to the Archbishop, from thence to the Lords of the Council; and if all these applications fell short of a remedy, then to bring the grievance before his Majesty himself. The King chalked out this method, upon the Bishop of London's suggesting, that in case he left himself open to receive all complaints at the first instance, neither his Majesty would be quiet, nor his under-officers regarded; for the criminal, when pressed with discipline, would immediately threaten the carrying his complaint before the King.——Thus much it was thought proper to set down of the conference at Hampton-Court, in which Bishop Bancroft bore so considerable a share.

[D] He exhibited articles to the Lords of the Council against the Judges.] They were entitled, Certain Articles of Abuses, which are desired to be reformed, in granting Prohibitions. To this remonstrance, in Easter-term following, all the Judges in England gave in their answers signed to the Council-Board; which unanimous resolution, Sir Edward Coke calls the Highest Authority in Law (4). Upon which Mr. Collier has the following remark: 'This case being a complaint of encroachment, and a contest for jurisdiction between the temporal and ecclesiastical Judges, by the principles of equity the controversy ought to be decided by neither side. That this learned Gentleman (Sir Edward Coke) was clearly of this opinon, when competition and conquest was not in his view, appears from his report of Dr. Bonham's case. Coke's Rep. lib. 8. fol. 117, &c. The Censors of the College of Physicians had imprisoned this Dr. Bonham for practising in London without their licence. Bonham brings an action of false imprisonment against the College. In reporting this, Coke cites the judgment of Warberton, Chief-Justice, and Daniel, another of the Justices, that the Censors of the College of Physicians could not be judges and parties, Quia aliquis non debet esse Judex in propria causa;

(4) Coke's Institut. Part ii. fol. 601.

Chancellor of the univerſity of Oxford [E], in the room of the Earl of Dorſet deceaſed (x). In 1610, this Archbiſhop offered to the Parliament a project for the better providing a maintenance for the clergy [F], but without ſucceſs. One of our hiſtorians (y) pretends, that Archbiſhop Bancroft ſet on foot the building a college near Chelſea [G], for the reception of ſtudents, who ſhould anſwer all Popiſh and other controverſial writings againſt the Church of England. This Prelate died Nov. 2, 1610, of (x) Wood, Hiſt. & Antiq Oxon. l. ii. p 433.

(y) A. Wilſon, in his Life and Reign of King James I., apud Complete Hiſt. of Engl. Vol. ii. p. 685.

'cauſa; and that no body can be Judge and Attorney for any party. Dyer 3. Ed. VI. fol. 65. 38 Ed. III. 15. 8 Hen. VI. 19, 20, 21. Ed. IV. 47, &c. This in the opinion of theſe reverend Judges is ſo fundamental a maxim of reaſon and common-law, that even an act of parliament ſhall be over-ruled by it. Thus for the purpoſe: If a ſtatute impowers any perſon to have cognizance of all manner of pleas, ariſing within his manor, notwithſtanding ſuch an act, he ſhall hold no plea of any matter where himſelf is a party: The reaſon aſſigned is, iniquum eſſe aliquem ſuæ rei eſſe Judicem. In the cloſe of the argument, Coke, then Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, where the cauſe was tried, declares the College no Judge in the preſent diſpute: And, in ſhort, judgment was given for the plaintiff. By this Report, it is plain the Judges reſolution upon Bancroft's Articles are ſo far from being the Higheſt Authority in Law, that they are no authority at all. What they deliver is in favour of their own juriſdiction and intereſt: And thus, by being deeply parties, they are by this Report diſabled from pronouncing in the cauſe (5).' The reader may ſee the articles exhibited by Bancroft, together with the anſwers given in by the Judges, tranſcribed at length from the Record, in the hiſtorian juſt cited (6).

(5) Collier, ubi ſupra, p. 688.

(6) Vol. i. p. 510 to 523.

[E] He was Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford.] In the time of his Chancellorſhip, a diſpute was determined between the Univerſity and New College. By a compoſition entered into between William of Wickham, founder of that college, and the Univerſity, it was agreed, that the fellows thereof ſhould be admitted to all degrees in the Univerſity, without aſking any grace of the congregation of maſters, or undergoing any examination for them in the public ſchools, provided they were examined in the college according to the form of the Univerſity, and had their graces given them in like manner by the government of the houſe. But in proceſs of time, the other ſtudents of the Univerſity envying this privilege, it began to be diſputed by the Regent-Maſters in 1607; and the affair was brought before the Chancellor, who adjudged the controverſy in favour of the college (7).

(7) Wood, Hiſt. & Antiq. Oxon. l. ii. p. 433.

[F] He offered to the parliament a project for the better providing a maintenance for the Clergy.] The heads of the ſcheme are as follows (8): I. That all Predial Tythes of Benefices with Cure may be paid in kind hereafter. II. That Perſonal Tythes may be urged upon Oath, being confeſſed to be due by Law. III. That as Oblations are due by Law to Parſons and Vicars that have Cure of Souls, they may accordingly be paid unto them as heretofore hath been accuſtomed; viz. at Marriages, Burials, and upon ſolemn Feaſt-days, as Chriſtmas-day, Eaſter-day, Whitſunday, Allhallows-day, and at the Times of receiving the Holy Communion, &c. IV. That all Abbey-Lands now exempted may pay Tythes in kind to the Parſons and Vicars, in whoſe Pariſhes they lie. V. That all lands altered within theſe ſixty years paſt from tillage may pay Tythes according to the value they formerly paid. VI. That all Parks and Warrens, made within theſe ſixty years laſt paſt, may pay Tythes, either according to their former value when they were in Tillage, or according to ſome reaſonable rate by the Acre. VII. That Parks diſparked within theſe ſixty years may pay Tythes in kind. VIII. That the Occupiers of Lands of ſuch pariſhes that have been within theſe ſixty years paſt utterly depopulated, and do now pay no Tythes at all, may hereafter pay all their Tythes in kind to the next poor Parſons adjoining. IX. That ſmall benefices near adjoining may be ſo united, as they may be holden by one man. X. That Parſons and Vicars may have right and freedom of Common with the reſt of the Pariſhioners. XI. That the ancient eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution in England for paying of Tythe-lambs, and Wool, may be renewed and eſtabliſhed. Lindewood de Decimis. § Quoniam. XII. That all penſions may hereafter be diſcharged, which are not paid to eccleſiaſtical Perſons. XIII. That Miniſters in cities and towns incorporate, and other great towns, may have their tythes according to the Rents of Houſes, after the rate of London. XIV. That the Landlords of ſuch houſes in every city incorporate, and great towns, may be chargeable with ſuch payments to their Miniſters, and not their Undertenants. XV. That Parſons and Vicars may have Tythe-wood duly paid to them, according to the Conſtitution of John Stratford, Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Lindewood, de verborum ſignificatione. XVI. That an order may be taken for the ſettling of Glebe-Lands, which are by ſtrong hand detained from divers Parſons and Vicars, by ſome Commiſſions for ſurvey upon oaths; and that it may be provided, that no Patron, or Lord of any Manor in any pariſh, may hereafter have the Glebe in farm. XVII. That in Chapels of Eaſe the Cure may be maintained hereafter by them that have eaſe thereby, without diminiſhing the Parſon's or Vicar's tythes. XVIII. That it may be lawful hereafter for any well-diſpoſed man or woman to give, purchaſe, or lay Tenements, Rents, Lands, or Annuities in fee, to the Glebe of the Church, notwithſtanding the Statute of Mortmain. XIX. That all Lay Patrons, when they preſent any Miniſter to an eccleſiaſtical Living, may take the like oath againſt Simony that Miniſters do; or elſe that they may forfeit their Patronage for ever to the King, when it ſhall be proved, that they have committed Simony upon any ſuch preſentation. XX. That it may be held Simony to ſell Advowſons as well as Preſentations; or that all Advowſons to be made hereafter may be utterly void. XXI. That the Tythes of Oade, Hops, Roots, Coals, and other Minerals, and likewiſe of Lime-kilns and Brick-kilns, may be truly paid to the Parſon or Vicar that hath Cure of Souls. XXII. That it may be lawful for ſpiritual perſons to purchaſe and take leaſes for Lives or Years, as other of his Majeſty's ſubjects may do, notwithſtanding any Statutes made to the contrary. XXIII. That all Lands, that have been either won from the Sea, or otherwiſe drained and recovered from ſurrounding, may be laid to ſome Pariſhes adjoining; and that the Owners or Occupiers, and all others that have any benefit of ſuch Lands, may pay their tythes in kind to the Parſons or Vicars of thoſe pariſhes, whereunto the ſaid Lands are laid. XXIV. That a Subſidy may be granted for the redeeming of Impropriations, and that the ſame redeemed may be of the Biſhop's patronage, in whoſe Dioceſe they lye. XXV. That if the laſt motion may not now be entertained, then there may be a free paſſage given to the Law yet in force (as it is ſuppoſed), that all Impropriations may be declared void, and become Preſentatives, which have no endowment for Vicars. XXVI. That where there are Vicaridges endowed, which do belong to Impropriations, but yet are no competent Living for a ſufficient Miniſter, Biſhops may have authority in their Dioceſes, where ſuch Vicaridges are, to allot ſome farther portions for their better maintenance out of the ſaid Impropriations. XXVII. That ſome Order may be ſet down for the repairing the Chancels of Churches impropriate, which are every where in wonderful decay. XXVIII. That Mortuaries may be reſtored. Here Bancroft's project ſeems to have ended, though the ſubject is continued upon a break with theſe initial letters,

(8) From the Paper-Office.

The L. S.

By this ſcheme (though the attempt failed of ſucceſs) the Archbiſhop's care for the intereſt of the Clergy, and his capacity in ſuggeſting meaſures are ſufficiently diſcovered.

[G] It is ſaid, he ſet on foot the building a college near Chelſea.] Let us hear what Wilſon ſays of this affair: 'It was he (the Archbiſhop) that firſt brought 'the King to begin a new college by Chelſea, where-'in the choice and ableſt ſcholars of the kingdom, 'and the moſt pregnant wits in matters of contro-'verſies were to be aſſociated under a Provoſt, with a 'fair of the ſtone, in his palace at Lambeth (z). By his will he ordered his body to be interred in the chancel of Lambeth church [H]; and, beſides other legacies, left all the books in his library to the Archbiſhops his ſucceſſors for ever [I]. Archbiſhop Bancroft was a rigid diſciplinarian, a learned controverſialiſt (aa), an excellent preacher, a great ſtateſman, and a vigilant governor of the Church; and filled the See of Canterbury with great reputation [K].

(z) Reg. Bancr.

(aa) See the remark [K].

' fair and ample allowance, not exceeding three thou-
' ſand pounds a year, whoſe deſign was to anſwer all
' Popiſh books, or others, that vented their malignant
' ſpirits againſt the Proteſtant religion, either the he' reſies of the Papiſts, or the errors of thoſe that ' ſtruck at Hierarchy; ſo that they ſhould be two-' edged fellows, that would make old cutting and
' ſlaſhing; and this he forwarded with all induſtry
' during his time; and there is yet a formal act of ' parliament in being for the eſtabliſhment of it. But ' after his death, the King wiſely conſidered, that no' thing begets more contention than oppoſition, and
' ſuch fuellers would be apt to inflame, rather than ' quench the heat that would ariſe from thoſe embers.
' For controverſies are often (or for the moſt part) the ' exuberancies of paſſion; and the Philoſopher ſaith,
' men are drunk with diſputes, and in that inordinate-
' neſs take the next thing that comes to hand to throw
' at one another's faces: So that the deſign fell to ' the ground with him; and there is only ſo much
' building ſtanding by the Thames ſide, as to ſhew,
' that what he intended to plant, he meant ſhould
' be well watered; and yet it withered in the bud (9).'
The Editor of the Complete Hiſtory of England tells us, Wilſon is miſtaken about the original of this intended college at Chelſea. He ſays, It was one Sutcliffe (*), Doctor in Divinity, that procured a patent from King James for erecting this College, to conſiſt of a Provoſt and twenty Fellows, to be choſen by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of London, and the Vice-Chancellors of the two univerſities for the time being; which college he intended to build and endow, and in part did, with his own money, and the free contributions of others. He was the firſt Provoſt himſelf, and died either after Archbiſhop Bancroft, or about the ſame time; for there were three Provoſts after him ſucceſſively, whereof the learned Dr. Featly was one. Now (adds he) how far Archbiſhop Bancroft might encourage Sutcliffe's deſign, I know not. But if it had been originally Bancroft's own, it is not probable King James would have diſcouraged it afterwards as he did; or that his next ſucceſſor but one, Archbiſhop Laud, would have utterly neglected a foundation laid by a Prelate, whoſe memory he held in the higheſt veneration, and whoſe maxims and character he made it his buſineſs to imitate (10).

(9) Life and Reign of King James I. apud Complete Hiſt. of England, Vol. ii. p. 685.

(*) He was Dean of Exeter.

(10) Ibid. Note.

[H] He ordered his body to be interred in the chancel of Lambeth church.] He likewiſe ordered, that his body ſhould not be opened, but be buried within forty or fifty hours after his deceaſe; that all needleſs expences ſhould be avoided; and that, upon ſome Sunday within a month after his death, the then Biſhop of London (Abbot), or the Biſhop of Chicheſter (Harſnet), or one of his Chaplains, ſhould be deſired to preach in Lambeth church, and to make ſuch mention of him, as might tend to God's glory (11). On a flat ſtone over his grave, is the following inſcription (12).

(11) In Cur. Prærog. Wingfield 96.

(12) Stowe's Survey, &c. p. 790.

Volente Deo,
Hic jacet Richardus Bancroft, S. Theologiæ
Profeſſor, Epiſcopus Londinenſis primo,
Deinde Cantuarienſis Archiepiſcopus, et
Regi Jacobo a ſecretioribus Conſiliis. Obiit
Secundo Novembris An. Dom. 1610. Ætatis ſuæ 67.
Volente Deo.

[I] He left his library to the Archbiſhops his ſucceſſors for ever.] He left it conditionally, that his ſucceſſor ſhould give ſecurity, that he would leave it entire and without embezzlement; but upon refuſal of ſuch ſecurity, he bequeathed it to Chelſea college, then building, on condition it ſhould be finiſhed in a certain term of years after his deceaſe; but if not, he gave it to the Univerſity of Cambridge (13). Whether his ſucceſſors, Abbot and Laud, gave the ſecurity demanded, appears not. However, the books continued at Lambeth till the approach of the troubleſome times, when (Chelſea college having failed, and the order of Biſhops being voted down) Mr. Selden ſuggeſted to the Univerſity of Cambridge their right to the ſaid books: And accordingly, by order of parliament, not only Bancroft's books, but thoſe likewiſe of his ſucceſſor Abbot, were delivered into the poſſeſſion of the univerſity, and by them kept till after the Reſtoration, when Archbiſhop Juxon demanded them back; and he dying in a ſhort time, his ſucceſſor Sheldon purſued the ſame demand ſo effectually, that to him they were reſtored (14).

(13) In Cur. Prærog. ib.

(14) Le Neve, Lives and Characters, &c. of the Proteſtant Biſhops, &c. p. 87.

[K] He filled the ſee of Canterbury with great reputation.] Camden gives Archbiſhop Bancroft the character of a perſon of ſingular courage and prudence, in all matters relating to the diſcipline and eſtabliſhment of the Church (15). Lord Clarendon, in his character of Archbiſhop Abbot (16), tells us, he was ' promoted to Canterbury, upon the never enough ' lamented death of Dr. Bancroft, that Metropolitan, ' who underſtood the Church excellently, and had ' almoſt reſcued it out of the hands of the Calvinian ' party, and very much ſubdued the unruly ſpirit of ' the Nonconformiſts, by and after the conference at ' Hampton-Court; countenanced men of the greateſt ' parts in learning, and diſpoſed the Clergy to a more ' ſolid courſe of ſtudy than they had been accuſtomed ' to; and, if he had lived, would quickly have ex-' tinguiſhed all that fire in England, which had been ' kindled at Geneva; or if he had been ſucceeded by ' Biſhop Andrews, Biſhop Overall, or any man, who ' underſtood, and loved the Church, that infection ' would eaſily have been kept out, which could not ' afterwards be ſo eaſily expelled.' Wilſon (17) does not ſpeak ſo favourably of him; he calls him a perſon ſevere enough, whoſe roughneſs gained little upon thoſe who deſerted the ceremonies. Dr. Fuller (18) treats him as a great Stateſman, and Grand Champion of Church diſcipline, and tells us, he met with much oppoſition. And ' No wonder (adds this author) if thoſe who were ' ſilenced by him in the Church, were loud againſt ' him in other places. David ſpeaketh of poiſon under ' men's lips. This Biſhop taſted plentifully thereof ' from the mouths of his enemies, till at laſt (as ' Mithridates) he was ſo habited to poiſons, they be-' came food unto him.' Hereupon Fuller tells us this ſtory: ' Once a Gentleman coming to viſit him, pre-' ſented him with a libel, which he found paſted ' on his door; who nothing moved thereat, Caſt it ' (ſaid he) to an hundred more, which lye here on a ' heap in my chamber.' His enemies accuſed him of covetouſneſs; but this aſperſion (the ſame author lets us know) was ' confuted by the eſtate which he left, ' ſmall in proportion to his great preferment.' He cancelled his firſt will, in which he had bequeathed much to the Church, which occaſioned the following invidious diſtich on him;

(15) Britannia, publiſhed by Biſhop Gibſon, Vol. i. col. 242.

(16) Hiſtory of the Rebellion, &c. Oxford 1721. Vol. i. P. i. p. 88.

(17) Life of King James, ubi ſupra.

(18) Ubi ſupra.

He who never repented of doing Ill,
Repented that once he made a good Will;

' whereas indeed (ſays the Doctor) ſuſpecting an im-' preſſion of popular violence on cathedrals, and fear-' ing an alienation of what was bequeathed unto them, ' he thought fit to cancel his own, to prevent others ' cancelling his teſtament.' This Prelate governed with great vigour, and preſſed a ſtrict conformity to the Rubric and Canons, without the leaſt allowance for latitude and different perſuaſion. This conduct was cenſured as too rigorous by thoſe who favoured the Nonconformiſts. The author of the Altar of Damaſcus reports, that three hundred preaching Miniſters were either ſilenced or deprived for refuſing to paſs this teſt. But this narrative ſwells the number to a romantic bulk; for by the rolls delivered in by Bancroft not long before his death, it is evident there were but forty-nine deprived upon any account whatever: Now this, in a kingdom of about nine thouſand pariſhes, was no very tragical number. However by animadverting upon ſome few of the principals, he ſtruck a terror into the reſt, and made their ſcruples give way. In ſhort, Bancroft's unrelenting ſtrictneſs gave a new face to religion. The ſervice of the Church was more ſolemnly performed; the faſts and feſtivals were better obſerved; the uſe of copes was revived; the ſurplice generally worn; and all things in a manner reſtored according to their firſt eſtabliſhment under Queen Elizabeth. Some, who had formerly ſubſcribed in a looſe reſerved ſenſe, were now called upon to ſign their conformity in more cloſe, unevaſive terms. For now the 36th canon obliged them to declare, that they did willingly and ex animo ſubſcribe the three articles, and all things contained in the ſame. So that now there was no room left for ſcruples and different perſuaſion (19). Whether our Archbiſhop did not carry the point of Church diſcipline too far, muſt be left to the reader's own judgment. B.

(19) See Collier, ubi ſupra, p. 687.

[An ingenious correſpondent, in ſome remarks upon the note [A], in the preceding article, obſerves, that 'the caſe of maintaining the Clergy by certain ſtated 'appointments is as plain as any thing can well be. 'The quantum, and the ſubject out of which this 'is to be levied, is of more difficulty. However, 'there is an argument in policy for allowing the 'Clergy a certain livelihood by public authority, 'which to me ſeems convincing; viz. That the 'power of the Clergy may be kept within bounds. 'A Clergy which ſubſiſts by the contributions of 'their followers has ever exceeded in power and 'authority; and what is remarkable, are commonly 'moſt opulently and equally provided.' We apprehend that what is here aſſerted, concerning the opulent proviſion which is made for ſuch Clergy as depend upon the voluntary ſupport of their hearers, requires many reſtrictions and exceptions, to bring it within the limits of hiſtorical truth.

With regard to the community among the primitive Chriſtians, the ſame correſpondent takes notice, that it was evidently from compact; and that no one was obliged to ſell his lands, or to pay the price to the Apoſtles, the οικονομοι of the ſociety. This appears from the words of St. Peter (Acts of the Apoſtles, ch. v. ver. 4.), Ουχι μενον, σοι εμενε, και πραθεν εν τη ση εξουσια υπηρχε. The crime of Ananias was, that he ſought to profit by the ſociety, and yet did not contribute according to the rules of the ſociety.

To the Gentleman already referred to, we are indebted for ſome ſtrictures on Archbiſhop Bancroft's plan for the better maintenance of the Clergy. Theſe ſtrictures we ſhall inſert, according to the order of the heads to which they relate. 'VII. This ſeems 'extraordinary. Tillage ground parked to pay 'tythes, and parks unparked to pay tythes. Either 'the one or the other may be reaſonable, but not 'both. VIII. This hurts the fundamental maxim 'in tythes, Decimæ debentur parocho. IX. He ſhould 'have ſpecified what is meant by ſmall benefices, 'what by near adjoining. X. Better to have all 'commons divided. The neglect of this has been 'the great hindrance of improvements in Britain. 'XIII. This is evidently unjuſt. Payment ought 'not to be made according to another rule than the 'value of the ſubject. XIX. Here it is provided 'that the oath ſhall be diſproved by other evidence: 'And it would ſeem that the King is free from 'making ſuch oath. XXI. Coals, lime-kilns, brick-'kilns. It would have been well if the Archbiſhop 'had here defined what was meant by tythes; 'whether the tenth part of the profits, or the tenth 'part of the coal, &c. wrought. The firſt may be 'reaſonable, in the ſame way that a taylor, who earns 'two ſhillings and ſixpence a day at London, ought 'to pay two-pence halfpenny a day to the Parſon or 'Vicar, in name of tythes. If the latter be meant, 'the tythe will often exceed the value or profit of 'the coal wrought.'

We apprehend, that, in the preſent enlightened and moderate age, there are few perſons who will applaud the arbitrary principles, the high eccleſiaſtical claims, and the perſecuting ſpirit of Archbiſhop Bancroft. Notwithſtanding the plauſible ſophiſtry of Mr. Collier, in the note [D], the concurrent opinion of all the Judges in England, even in a caſe where their own juriſdiction was concerned, or their own rights infringed, muſt be allowed to be a very great authority. It cannot be ſaid that ſuch an opinion hath no weight, without deeply affecting the civil judicature of the kingdom, and expoſing it to attacks which might be extremely hurtful to the adminiſtration of public juſtice.

As Dr. Bancroft was ſo violent in his treatment of the Puritans, it is not ſurpriſing that the Nonconformiſt writers have ſpoken of him with much ſeverity. Their characters of him, therefore, if they were produced, might be conſidered as the language of prejudiced men. But the Diſſenting writers are not the only ones who have condemned the Archbiſhop's conduct. Several of our general Hiſtorians have expreſſed their diſapprobation of it; and the ſame hath been done by divines of the Church of England. The learned author of the Confeſſional, in a paſſage formerly quoted, calls him the fiery Bancroft (20); and ſhews, in other places, how far he is from admiring our Prelate's temper (21). Neither doth Dr. Ferdinando Warner's character of him redound greatly to the Archbiſhop's honour. This writer ſays, that Bancroft filled the See of Canterbury 'with no extraordinary reputation about ſix 'years. He was naturally of a rough, uncourtly 'temper, which was heightened by his great autho-'rity in the high commiſſion.'—'He had extreme 'high notions of government in Church and State: 'and was ſtrongly ſuſpected of having cheriſhed the 'King's diſpoſition, to aſſume a power above the 'laws and conſtitution of his country. He was moſt 'certainly a greater friend to prerogative than to 'liberty; and what with the want of an hoſpitality 'that became a Biſhop, what with the roughneſs of 'his temper, and his high and arbitrary notions, he 'was but little regarded in his ſtation as head of 'the Church (22).' But the ſame writer alſo obſerves, that 'if we read of no extraordinary virtues 'in this Prelate, it is certain there are no vices laid 'to his charge, by thoſe who did not eſteem him, 'but cruelty and covetouſneſs; which, when they 'are examined narrowly into, appear not to deſerve 'thoſe opprobrious names in the ſtricteſt acceptation. 'In ſhort, there have been Archbiſhops who have 'been much worſe than Bancroft, who, by their 'good humour and generoſity, have been more 'eſteemed when living, and more lamented at their 'death (23).'

(20) Article Abbot, note [X].

(21) Confeſſional, p. 277, 279.

(22) Eccleſiaſt. Hiſt. of Engl. fol. 1759, Vol. ii. p. 496, 497.

(23) Warner, ubi ſupra.

Whatever may be thought of the Archbiſhop's general temper and character, his abilities appear to have been very conſiderable. In the extract that is given, in the note [A], from his famous ſermon againſt the Puritans, we may perceive a clearneſs, freedom, and manlineſs of ſtile, which ſhew him to have been a great maſter of compoſition.

There is extant, in the Advocates library at Edinburgh, an original letter from Dr. Bancroft to King James the Firſt, containing an expreſs Vindication of Pluralities. This letter has been printed by Sir David Dalrymple, in the firſt volume of his Memorials (24).] K.

(24) Memorials and Letters relating to James the Firſt, p. 18—23.

BANCROFT (JOHN), Biſhop of Oxford in the reign of King Charles I., and nephew of the preceding Dr Richard Bancroft, Archbiſhop of Canterbury (a), was born at Aſtell, or Eſtwell, a ſmall village between Whitney and Burford in Oxfordſhire, and admitted a ſtudent of Chriſt-Church in Oxford in 1592, being then about eighteen years of age. Having taken the degrees in Arts, and entered into holy orders, he became a preacher for ſome years in and near Oxford. In 1609, being newly admitted to proceed in Divinity, he was, through the intereſt and endeavours of his uncle, elected Head of Univerſity college, in which ſtation he continued above twenty years; during which time, he was at great pains and expence, in recovering and ſettling the ancient lands belonging to that foundation. In 1632, he was advanced to the See of Oxford, upon the tranſlation of Dr. Corbet to that of Norwich, and conſecrated about the 6th of of June. This Prelate died in 1640 [A], and was buried at Cuddeſden in Oxfordſhire, the 12th of February, leaving behind him, among the Puritans or Preſbyterians then prevailing, the character of a corrupt, unpreaching, Popiſh Prelate (b). This Biſhop Bancroft built a houſe or palace, for the reſidence of his ſucceſſors, at Cuddeſden aforeſaid [B]. (b) Wood, Ath. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 739, 740.

(a) For he was ſon of Chriſtopher Bancroft, eldeſt ſon of John Bancroft of Farnworth in Lancaſhire. See the preceding article.

[A] He died in 1640.] Anthony Wood aſcribes his death to the effects of fear. In 1640, ſays he (1), when the Long Parliament began, and proceeded with great vigour againſt the Biſhops, he was poſſeſſed ſo much with fear (having always been an enemy to the Puritans), that with little or no ſickneſs he ſurrendered up his laſt breath in his lodgings at Weſtminſter. (1) Athen. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 739.

[B] He built a palace at Cuddeſden, for the reſidence of the Biſhops of Oxford.] Our Antiquarian informs us (2), that, before Bancroft's time, the Biſhops of Oxford had no houſe left belonging to their ſee, either in city or country, but dwelt at their parſonage-houſes, which they held in commendam; though Dr. John Bridges, who had no commendam in his dioceſe, lived for the moſt part in hired houſes in the city. For though at the foundation of the biſhopric of Oxford, in the abbey of Oſney, Glouceſter college was appointed for the Biſhop's palace, yet, when that foundation was inſpected into by King Edward VI., that place was left out of the charter, as being then deſigned for another uſe. So that from thenceforward the Biſhops of Oxford had no ſettled houſe or palace, till Bancroft came to the ſee; who, at the inſtigation of Archbiſhop Laud, reſolved to build one. In the firſt place, therefore, in order to improve the ſlender revenues of the biſhopric, he ſuffered the leaſe of the impropriate parſonage of Cuddeſden aforeſaid, five miles diſtant from Oxford (which belonged to the Biſhop in right of his ſee) to run out, without any more renewing. In the mean time, the vicarage of his own donation, becoming vacant, he procured himſelf to be legally inſtituted and inducted thereunto; and afterwards, through the Archbiſhop's favour, obtained an annexation of it to the epiſcopal ſee, the deſign of the impropriation's falling in ſtill going on. Soon after, with the help of a large quantity of timber from the foreſt of Shotover, given him by the King, he began to build a fine palace, which, with a chapel in it, was completely finiſhed in 1634. The ſummer after, it was viſited out of curioſity by Archbiſhop Laud, who ſpeaks of it in his Diary thus: September the ſecond, An. 1635, I was in attendance with the King at Woodſtock, and went thence to Cudſden, to ſee the houſe, which Dr. John Bancroft, then Lord Biſhop of Oxford, had there built, to be a houſe for the Biſhops of that ſee for ever; he having built that houſe at my perſuaſion. But this houſe or palace (which coſt 3500 l.) proved almoſt as ſhort-lived as the founder. For, in the latter end of 1644, it was burnt down by Colonel William Legg, then Governor of the garriſon of Oxford, to prevent its being garriſoned by the Parliament forces. It lay in ruins till 1679, when Dr. John Fell, Biſhop of Oxford, at his own expence, and with the help of timber laid in for that purpoſe by Dr. William Paul, one of his predeceſſors, rebuilt it upon the old foundation, with a chapel in it, as at firſt. B. (2) Ibid. col. 740.

BANISTER (John) a Phyſician of good repute in the XVIth century, was born of honeſt and wealthy parents (a). He ſtudied for a time in the univerſity of Oxford; but without taking a degree in Arts, he entered upon the Phyſic line, and applied himſelf entirely to the ſtudy of that faculty, and to Chirurgery. In July 1573, he took the degree of Bachelor of Phyſic; and was admitted to practiſe (b). Being ſettled about that time at Nottingham, he lived there many years in great eſteem, and was very much followed by all ſorts of people, for his ſucceſsful practice in Phyſic and Chirurgery (c). He was author of ſeveral books [A]. The time of his death is unknown: But there was a long Memorial of him, in the church of St. Olave, Silver-ſtreet, London (*). (a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 243, edit. Lond. 1721. (b) Idem Faſti, Vol. i. col. 109. (c) Wood, Ath. ubi ſupra. His Hiſtorie of Man, &c. is dated from Nottingham. (*) Stowe's Survey of Lond. with Strype's Addit. Vol. i. book iii. p. 99.

There was another Phyſician, named Richard BANISTER, who wrote, 'A Treatiſe of one hundred and thirteen Diſeaſes of the Eyes and Eyelids;' commonly called Baniſter's Breviary of the Eyes. And, 'An Appendant part of a Treatiſe of one hundred 'and thirteen Diſeaſes of the Eyes and Eyelids, called Cerviſia Medicata, Purging Ale, with 'divers Aphoriſms and Principles [B].' From this book it appears (d), that the author was living in 1617 and 1619, and probably in 1622, when the ſecond edition was publiſhed. (d) Chap. ix. and vi.

[A] He was author of ſeveral books.] I. A needful, new, and neceſſary Treatiſe of Chirurgery, briefly comprehending the general and particular curation of Ulcers. Lond. 1575, 8*vo*. II. Certain Experiments of his own Invention, &c. III. The Hiſtorie of Man, ſucked from the Sappe of the moſt approved Anathomiſtes, &c. (1) in nine books. Lond. 1578. in a thin folio. IV. Compendious Chirurgery, gathered and tranſlated eſpecially out of Wecker, &c. Lond. 1585, 12*mo*. V. Antidotary Chirurgical, containing Variety of all ſorts of Medicines, &c. Lond. 1589, 8*vo*. Several years after his death, his works were collected into ſix books, and publiſhed in this order:

1. Of Tumours
2. Of Wounds } in general and particular.
3. Of Ulcers

4. Of Fractures and Luxations. 5. Of the Curation of Ulcers. 6. The Antidotary before-mentioned. Lond. 1633, 4*to*.

(1) It is a book of Anatomy, compiled chiefly from the Writings of Galen, Veſalius, Columbus, Fuchſius, Fernelius, &c.

[B] An appendant part of a Treatiſe of one hundred and thirteen diſeaſes of the eyes and eye-lids, &c.] When it was firſt publiſhed, cannot be found. But the ſecond edition was printed at London in 1622, 12*mo*. And the ſame year, 'The Treatiſe of the one hun-'dred and thirteen Diſeaſes, &c.' was reprinted. ——— In Chapter IV. of the 'Appendant part, '&c.' he ſays, 'In my Treatiſe of the Eyes I have 'named the beſt Oculiſts that have been in this land 'for fifty or ſixty years, who were no Graduates either 'in Cambridge or Oxon (2).' M. (2) Wood, Ath. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 243.

BANKES (Sir John), Lord Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, in the reign of King Charles I. He was deſcended from a good family ſeated at Keſwick in Cumberland, where he was born in A. D. 1589 (a). The firſt part of his education he received at a grammar-ſchool in his own county, whence, in 1604, he removed to Queen's-college in Oxford, being then about fifteen, and there for ſome time purſued his ſtudies. He left the univerſity without a degree (b), and taking chambers in Gray's-Inn, he applied himſelf to the Law, in which ſcience he quickly became eminent (c). His extraordinary diligence in his profeſſion, his grave appearance, and excellent reputation, recommended him (a) Fuller's Worthies, in Cumberland. (b) Wood's Faſt. Oxon. Vol ii. col. 26. (c) Lloyd's Memoirs of Sufferers for Charles I., p. 586.

him early to his Sovereign Charles I., by whom he was firſt made Attorney to the Prince (d). He was next year, 1630, Lent-Reader at Gray's-Inn, and in 1631, Treaſurer of that ſociety (e). In Auguſt 1634, he was knighted, and made Attorney-General, in the place of Mr. Noy deceaſed (f). He diſcharged this arduous employment, in thoſe perilous times, with great reputation, till in Hilary term 1640, he was made Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas (g), in the room of Sir Edward Littleton, made Lord-Keeper. In this high ſtation he acted alſo with univerſal approbation, remaining at London after the King was compelled to leave it, in order to diſcharge the duties of his office (b). But when he once underſtood that his continuance amongſt them was looked on by ſome, as owning the cauſe of the Parliamentarians, he retired to York (i). So juſt an idea the King had of this act of loyalty, that when he had thoughts of removing the Lord-Keeper, he at the ſame time was inclined to deliver the Great-Seal to the Lord Chief-Juſtice Bankes, whoſe integrity was generally confeſſed; but he was by ſome ſuſpected (though wrongfully as it afterwards appeared) in point of courage (k). He ſubſcribed the declaration made June 15, 1642, by the Lords and Gentlemen then with his Majeſty at York (l); and yet his conduct was ſo free from aſperſions, that even the Parliament in their propoſals to the King, in January 1643, deſired he might be continued in his office (m). Before this, viz. January 31, 1642, the univerſity of Oxford, to manifeſt their high reſpect for him, created him Doctor of Laws (n). His Majeſty alſo cauſed him to be ſworn of his Privy-Council, and always teſtified a great regard for his advice (o). In the ſummer circuit he loſt all his credit at Weſtminſter; for having declared from the bench at Saliſbury, that the actions of Eſſex, Mancheſter, and Waller, were treaſonable, the Commons voted him and the reſt of the Judges in that ſentiment traitors (p). In the mean time, Lady Bankes with her family being at Sir John's ſeat, Corffe-caſtle in the Iſle of Purbeck in Dorſetſhire, the friends of the Parliament, who had already reduced all the ſea coaſts but that place, reſolved to reduce it likewiſe. The courageous Lady Bankes, though ſhe had about her only her children, a few ſervants and tenants, and little hopes of relief, yet refuſed to ſurrender the fortreſs (q). Upon this Sir W. Earl, and Thomas Trenchard, Eſq; who commanded the Parliament forces, had recourſe to very rough meaſures. Thrice they attempted the place by ſurprize, and as often were repulſed with loſs, though the firſt time Lady Bankes had but five men in the place, and during the whole time her garriſon never exceeded forty. Then they interdicted her the markets, and at length formally beſieged the houſe with a very conſiderable force, a train of artillery, and a great quantity of ammunition. This forced the little town dependant on the caſtle to ſurrender, which inclined the beſiegers to think the buſineſs done: But Lady Bankes taking advantage of this remiſſneſs, procured a ſupply of proviſion and ammunition, which enabled her ſtill to hold out. At laſt the gallant Earl of Carnarvon, having with a conſiderable body of horſe and dragoons, cleared a great part of the Weſt, came into the neighbourhood of Purbeck, whereupon Sir W. Earl raiſed his ſiege, Auguſt 4, 1643, ſo precipitately, that he left his tents ſtanding, together with his ammunition and artillery, all which fell into the hands of Lady Bankes's houſhold (r). There is no queſtion but this action was very pleaſing to the King at Oxford, where Sir John continued in the diſcharge of his duty, as a Privy-Counſellor, till the laſt day of his life, viz. December 28, 1644 (s). But that he ever had any other preferment, much leſs was Chief-Juſtice of the King's-Bench, as ſome have affirmed, is certainly falſe [A]. He was interred with great ſolemnity in the cathedral of Chriſt-Church, and a monument erected to his memory, the (d) Lloyd, ubi ſupra.

(e) Wood, ubi ſupra.

(f) Lloyd, ubi ſupra.

(g) Clarendon's Hiſtory of the Rebellion, Vol. i. p. 210.

(b) Lloyd, ubi ſupra.

(i) Warwick's Memoirs, p. 211.

(k) Clarendon, Vol. i. p. 571.

(l) Id. ibid. p. 655.

(m) Clarendon, Vol. ii. p. 121.

(n) Wood, ubi ſupra.

(o) Clarendon, Vol. ii. p. 205.

(p) Heath's Chronicle of the Civil War, p. 54.

(q) Lloyd's Memoirs, p. 587.

(r) Clarendon, Vol. ii. p. 335.

(s) See note [B].

[A] As ſome have affirmed, is certainly falſe.] The author of this article in the General Dictionary ſays, 'In 1640, he, i. e. Sir John Bankes, was made 'Lord Chief-Juſtice of the King's-Bench, and ſoon 'after following his Majeſty, when he was obliged 'to leave Weſtminſter, he was choſen one of his 'Privy-Council at Oxford, and Lord Chief-Juſtice 'of the Common-Pleas.' Of all which facts not one is true. Sir John Bankes never was Chief-Juſtice of the King's-Bench. He did not follow the King to Oxford but to York, where he was of the Council, and he was Lord Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas before the King left London. It is true, all theſe errors are religiouſly copied by this Gentleman from Anthony Wood (1), who cites Dugdale as his authority (2); but ſtill they are errors, and palpable errors, which ſhews the danger of truſting to Wood entirely. Could any man living ſuppoſe, that Sir John Bankes being ſolemnly interred in the cathedral of Chriſt-church, and having a monument erected there to perpetuate his loyalty, no notice ſhould be taken of his chief dignity in the inſcription placed thereon? But then, as to Sir William Dugdale there is no fault to be found with him: His accounts of Sir John Bankes's preferments are very juſt and accurate, as appears by comparing them with the Regiſters at Gray's-Inn. In his Origines Juridiciales (3), he has given us a ſeries of the Judges of the court of Common-Pleas, and therein we find Sir John Bankes promoted to the dignity of Lord Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, 16 Car. I. xv Hill. and that he continued ſo till xv Mart. 20 Car. I. which is the laſt return in the Michaelmas term preceding his death. Again in the Chronica Series, A. D. 1640, cited by Wood, there is no miſtake; but the entry is Joh. Bankes Miles, conſtit. Capit. Juſtic. 29 Jan. in the column of Judges of the Common-Pleas. Farther ſtill, his arms with this inſcription, are in one of the windows in the hall at Grays-Inn (4). How Mr. Wood fell into this error of ſuppoſing him to have been Lord Chief-Juſtice of the King's-Bench, I am not, ſtrictly ſpeaking, bound to inquire: But as I have ſome reaſon to believe I can give a fair account of both, I preſume the reader will gladly hear what I have to offer. I conceive, Anthony Wood muſt have truſted ſomebody to make theſe collections relating to the Judges from Sir William Dugdale's book, becauſe they are all falſe, as well as that relating to Sir John Bankes. For example, it is there ſaid (5), Sir Robert Forſter, Knt. after the King's Reſtoration, was made Lord Chief-Juſtice of the King's-Bench, 31 May 1660; and Lord Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas in October following, and for this Dugdale is alſo cited. But he ſays (6), 31 May 1660, Sir Robert was reſtored to his place of Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, from which he had been expelled by the parliament, and on the 22 Octob. 1660, he

(1) Faſti Oxon. Vol. ii. c. 20.

(2) Chron. Ser. A. D. 1640.

(3) Second edit. p. 49.

(4) Dugdale's Origin Juridic. p. 333.

(5) Faſti Oxon. Vol. ii. c. 26.

(6) Chr. Ser. A. D. 1660.

the inſcription on which we have preſerved in the notes, becauſe, though more than once printed before, yet it had never, till the firſt edition of this work, appeared correctly, or with its dates, the moſt material parts of ſuch pieces [B]. He left behind him a numerous poſterity, both males and females (t). By his will, the Lord Chief-Juſtice Bankes gave various ſums to pious uſes, particularly thirty pounds per annum, to the town of Keſwick in Cumberland, for the ſupport of a manufacture of coarſe cottons, then lately ſet up in that town (u), and which had been loſt but for that ſupply.

(t) Lloyd's Memoirs, p. 587.

(u) Fuller's Worthies in Cumberland.

he was made Chief-Juſtice of the King's-Bench; ſo he never was Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, any more than Sir John Bankes of the King's-Bench. Theſe miſtakes are within ten lines of each other in the ſame column. Now that they have not been corrected, I imagine is owing, 1. To their want of knowledge in the hiſtory of the Law, who reviſed Wood's book; and 2. To the reſpect, paid to Dugdale's authority.

[B] The moſt material parts of ſuch pieces.] In Lloyd's Memoirs (7), we have a very imperfect copy of the following inſcription without its dates; and in the General Dictionary another, not altogether free from omiſſions (8). This is copied exactly from the monument, by a Gentleman curious in ſuch ſtudies as relate to Britiſh antiquities (9).

(7) Page 587.

(8) In the note to this article.

(9) MS. from J. F.

P. M. S.
Hoc Loco in Spem
Futuri Sæculi depoſitum jacet
JOHANNIS BANKES.
Qui Reginal' Collegii in hac Academia
Alumnus,
Eques Auratus ornatiſſimus,
Attornatus Generalis,
De Communi Banco Cap. Juſticiarius,
A ſecretioribus Conſiliis Regi CAROLO,
Peritiam, integritatem, fidem
Egregiè præſtitit.
Ex Æde Chriſti, in Ædes Chriſti
Tranſiit menſe Decembris die 28
Anno Domini 1644.
Ætatis ſuæ 55.

Non Nobis Domine, Non Nobis, Sed Nomini tuo fit gloria *.

On a ſmall ſtone underneath the Monument.

Hic Situs eſt
J. B.
1644.

In Engliſh thus:

Here lies interred in hopes of a future Reſurrection, the Remains of John Bankes; who was a Student in Queen's College in this Univerſity, a worthy Knight, Attorney-General, Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, and a Privy-Counſellor to King CHARLES, diſtinguiſhed by his Knowledge, Integrity, and Fidelity. He paſſed from Chriſt's Church to the Church (triumphant) of Chriſt, December 28, A. D. 1644. Of his age 55.

* All the epitaph he deſired was,

Not unto us, LORD, not unto us: but unto thy name be Glory. C.

[BAPTIST (JOHN), who was alſo ſurnamed MONNOYER, a painter of ſome note, who reſided many years in England, was born at Liſle in Flanders in 1635. He was brought up at Antwerp, where his buſineſs was hiſtory-painting; but finding that his genius more ſtrongly inclined him to the painting of flowers, he applied his talents in that way, and in that branch became one of the greateſt maſters (a). When Le Brun had undertaken to paint the palace of Verſailles, he employed Baptiſt to do the flower-part, wherein he diſplayed great excellence (b). The Duke of Montague being then Ambaſſador in France, and obſerving the merit of Baptiſt's performances, invited him over into England, and employed him, in conjunction with La Foſſe and Rouſſeau, to embelliſh Montague-houſe, which is now the Britiſh Muſeum; the repoſitory of many curioſities of art and nature, and the repoſitory alſo of many of the fineſt productions of Baptiſt (c) [A]. A celebrated performance of this Artiſt, is a looking-glaſs preſerved in Kenſington-palace, which he decorated with a garland of flowers for Queen Mary; and it is mentioned as a remarkable circumſtance, that her Majeſty ſat by him, during the greateſt part of the time that he was employed in painting it. He painted, for the Duke of Ormond, ſix pictures of Eaſt Indian birds, after nature, which were in that Nobleman's collection at Kilkenny in Ireland, and afterwards came into the poſſeſſion of Mr. Pilkington [B]. He died in England [C] in the year 1699, and was buried in (a) Pilkington's Dictionary of Painters, 4*to*. 1770. p. 36. Eſſay towards an Engliſh School of Painters, added to the Engliſh tranſlation of De Piles's Art of Painting, third edit. p. 356.

(b) Eſſay towards an Engliſh School, ut ſupra.

(c) Pilkington, ubi ſupra.

[A] The fineſt productions of Baptiſt.] Mr. Pilkington ſays, 'His pictures are not ſo exquiſitely 'finiſhed as thoſe of Van Huyſum, but his compoſition and colouring are in a bolder ſtyle. His 'flowers have generally a remarkable freedom and 'looſeneſs, as well in the diſpoſition, as in pencilling; together with a tone of colouring, that is 'lively, admirable, and nature itſelf. The diſpoſition of his objects is ſurpriſingly elegant and 'beautiful; and in that reſpect his compoſitions are 'eaſily known, and as eaſily diſtinguiſhed from the 'performances of others (1).'

(1) Dictionary of Painters, ut ſupra.

Mr. Horace Walpole ſays of Baptiſt, that 'he was 'one of the greateſt maſters that has appeared for 'painting flowers:' and alſo informs us, that when this artiſt went to Paris, in 1663, he 'was received 'into the Academy with applauſe; and though his 'ſubjects were not thought elevated enough to admit 'him to a Profeſſorſhip, he was, in conſideration of 'his merit, made a Counſellor; a ſilly diſtinction, as 'if a great painter in any branch, was not fitter to 'profeſs that branch, than give advice on any other. 'He was employed at Verſailles, Trianon, Marly, 'and Meudon; and painted in the Hotel de Breton-'villiers at Paris, and other houſes (2).'

(2) Anecdotes of Painting in England, Vol. iii. ſecond edit. p. 126.

[B] Came into the poſſeſſion of Mr. Pilkington.] That gentleman ſays of theſe pieces, that 'they are painted 'in water-colours, on vellum; and nothing can be 'more delicate, in the colouring, the pencilling, or 'the ſpirited expreſſion of every ſpecies.'

[C] He died in England.] Mr. Walpole ſays, he died in Pall-mall; and the ſame ingenious writer farther informs us, that 'Baptiſt paſſed and repaſſed 'ſeveral times between France and England; but 'having married his daughter to a French painter, 'who was ſuffered to alter and touch upon his 'pictures, Baptiſt was offended, and returned to 'France no more (3).'

(3) Anecdotes of Painting in England, ubi ſupra.

London. There is a print of Baptiſt, from a painting of Sir Godfrey Kneller, in Mr. Walpole's Anecdotes of Painting in England.

He had a ſon, named ANTHONY BAPTIST, who alſo painted flowers; and, in the ſtyle and manner of his father, had great merit.

There was alſo another painter known by the name of JOHN BAPTIST, whoſe ſurname was GASPARS, and who was commonly called LELY'S BAPTIST. He was born at Antwerp, and was a diſciple of Thomas Willeborts Boſchaert. During the civil war he came to England, and entered into the ſervice of General Lambert [D]; but after the reſtoration he was employed by Sir Peter Lely, to paint the attitudes and draperies of his portraits (d). He was engaged in the ſame buſineſs under Riley and Sir Godfrey Kneller. He drew well, was conſidered as an excellent judge of painting, and was eminent for his deſigns for tapeſtry. The portrait of King Charles II. in Painters hall, and another of the ſame Prince, with mathematical inſtruments, in the hall of St. Bartholomew's Hoſpital, were painted by this Baptiſt, who died in 1691, and was buried at St. James's (e).] T.

(d) Pilkington, ubi ſupra.

(e) Walpole's Anecdotes of Painting, Vol. iii. p. 25.

[D] He entered into the ſervice of General Lambert.] The author of the Eſſay towards an Engliſh School of Painters ſays, that General Lambert 'was a great 'encourager of painting, and a good performer in 'flowers, as is yet to be ſeen in the Duke of Leeds's 'houſe at Wimbleton.'——'His eldeſt ſon, John 'Lambert, Eſq; painted alſo faces for his diverſion 'very well, of whom many pictures are ſtill to be 'ſeen (4).'

(4) Eſſay, &c. p. 398. Vid. alſo Walpole's Anecdotes, Vol. ii. p. 179.

BARCLAY, BARCLEY, BARKLAY, or de BARKLAY (ALEXANDER), an elegant writer in the XVIth century. It is a point ſtrongly diſputed, whether he was Engliſh or Scotch by birth (a), nor is there any clear proof on either ſide [A]. The moſt probable opinion however ſeems to be, that he was born in Somerſetſhire, where there is both a village called Barcley, and an ancient family of the ſame name (b) [B]. But of whatever country he was, we know nothing of his family or fortune, before his coming to Oriel-college in Oxford, which might be about the year 1495, when Thomas Corniſh was Provoſt of that houſe (c). Having diſtinguiſhed himſelf there, by the quickneſs of his parts, and his great affection for learning, he went over into Holland, and travelled thence into Germany, Italy, and France, where he applied himſelf aſſiduouſly to the learning the languages ſpoken in thoſe countries, and to the ſtudy of the beſt authors in them, wherein he made a wonderful proficiency, as appeared after his return home, by many excellent tranſlations which he publiſhed (d). His patron was now become Biſhop of Tyne, and Suffragan under the Biſhop of Wells, who firſt made him his Chaplain, and afterwards appointed him one of the Prieſts of St. Mary, at Ottery in Devonſhire, a college founded by John Grandiſon, Biſhop of Exeter (e). After the death of this patron of his, he became a Monk of the order of St. Benedict, and afterwards, as ſome ſay, a Franciſcan (f). Theſe are circumſtances of his life commonly known; but that he was a Monk of Ely, is a point, as to which all our Biographers are ſilent, and yet it is more certain, than almoſt any thing they have told us about him (g) [C]. Upon the diſſolution of the monaſtery at Ely, which happened A. D. 1539, he was left to be provided for by his patrons, of which his works had gained him

(a) Bal. Script. Illuſtr. Major. Brit. Cent. ix. num. 66, p. 723. edit. Baſil. 1557.

(b) Wood's Ath. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 86.

(c) Hiſt. & Ant. Oxon. lib. ii. p. 105.

(d) Dempſt. Hiſt. Eccl. Gent. Scot. lib. ii. p. 106.

(e) Pits, Relation. Hiſtor. de Reb. Angl. num. 989. p. 745.

(f) Mackenzie's Lives and Characters of the moſt eminent Scots Writers, Vol. ii. p. 287.

(g) Thomas Hearne's MS. Collections, Vol. lxxx. p. 179.

[A] Any clear proof on either ſide.] This was the judgment of Bale, who was his contemporary. Some, ſays he, reckon him a Scot, while others believe him to have been born in England (1). Pits is poſitive that he was an Engliſhman, and ſays, that it is probable he was born in Devonſhire (2); but he is not ſo kind as to tell us why. On the other ſide, Dr. Mackenzie is as poſitive that he was a Scot; and in order to prove it, enters into the genealogical hiſtory of the ancient family of Berkley in Scotland, which, at the moſt, only tends to ſhew, that he might be of that country (3). From all therefore that has been ſaid, either by theſe writers or by Wood (4), there is nothing that can incline us to decide in favour of either opinion, or ſo much as abſolutely to determine, which has the greateſt appearance of truth; a queſtion however that ſhall be handled in the next note.

(1) Baleus de Script. p. 723.

(2) Relat. Hiſtor. de Reb. Anglic. p. 745.

(3) Lives and Characters of Scots Writers, Vol. ii. p. 287.

(4) Athen. Oxon. Vol. i. p. 86.

[B] An ancient family of the ſame name.] I muſt confeſs, it ſeems to me a little ſtrange, that in thoſe days, a Scot ſhould obtain ſo great reputation in England, eſpecially if it be conſidered from whence our author's roſe, viz. from his enriching and improving the Engliſh tongue. Had he written in Latin or on the ſciences, the thing had been probable enough; but in the light in which it now ſtands, I think it very far from being likely. In the next place, it is pretty extraordinary, that Barclay himſelf, in his ſeveral addreſſes to his patrons, ſhould never take notice of his being a ſtranger, which would have made their kindneſs to him the more remarkable; whereas the reader will quickly ſee, that in his addreſs to the young Gentlemen of England, he treats them as his countrymen (5). Farther ſtill, it makes ſtrongly againſt this opinion, that the Duke of Norfolk and the Earl of Kent were Barclay's principal patrons, who are known to have been the fierceſt enemies to the Scots. Theſe, I ſay, are probable reaſons why we ſhould not believe him of that country. On the other hand, his patrons and preferments both ſprung from the Weſt; which would ſeem to ſhew him of that part of the iſland, and inaſmuch as there is a village in the hundred of Frome in Somerſetſhire, of the name of Barcley, and not one, but ſeveral families of the ſame name in that neighbourhood, it ſeems to me pretty evident, that he was a native of this ſhire (6), at leaſt, I think this opinion more probable than either of the other two: For that a Scot ſhould have ſo general an acquaintance in the Weſt of England, eſpecially conſidering he was ſome years abroad, is not eaſy to be accounted for; and then, as to his preferments in Devonſhire; we know very well to whoſe favour he owed them, and therefore they conclude nothing as to his birth in that county, where, I think, it cannot be proved there ever was any conſiderable family of this name.

(5) It was very cuſtomary for the writers of that age to mention their countries, eſpecially if they wrote out of their own.

(6) Remarks on the Lives of eminent Men, by ſome reputed Engliſh, by others Scots, a MS. formerly communicated by Dr. Knipe of Chriſt-Church, p. 195.

[C] They have told us about him.] This appears from a ſmall folio of his publiſhing, which was long in the cuſtody of the famous Thomas Rawlinſon, Eſq; the title, prologue, and colophon of which, as they are great curioſities in their kind, deſerve the intelligent reader's notice. The title runs thus, Here begynneth a ryght frutefull treatyſe, intituled the Mirrour of good Manners, him many. He ſeems to have had, firſt, the vicarage of St. Matthew at Wokey, in Somerſetſhire, beſtowed upon him, on the death of Thomas Erington, and afterwards was removed from that ſmall living to a better, if indeed he received not both at the ſame time. However, certain it is, that on the ſeventh of February 1546, being then Doctor of Divinity, he was preſented to the vicarage of Much-Badew, or, as it is commonly called, Baddow-Magna, in the county of Eſſex and dioceſe of London, by Mr. John Paſcal, on the death of Mr. John Clowes (b); neither were theſe, as Wood imagines, his laſt preferments, for the Dean and Chapter of London, upon the reſignation of William Jennings, Rector of Allhallows, Lombard-ſtreet, on the thirtieth of April 1552, preſented him to the ſaid living (i), which he did not however enjoy above the ſpace of ſix weeks at moſt. He was admired in his life-time for his wit and eloquence, and for a particular fluency of writing, unattained by any author of that age. This recommended him to many noble patrons; though it does not appear that he was any great gainer by their favour, otherwiſe than in his reputation. He lived to a very advanced age, and died at Croydon in Surry, in the month of June 1552, and was interred in the church there (k). Bale has treated his memory with great indignity: he ſays, he remained a ſcandalous adulterer under colour of leading a ſingle life (l). Pits again aſſures us, that he employed all his ſtudy in favour of religion, and in reading and writing the lives of the Saints (m). There is probably a ſtrong tincture of partiality in both theſe characters: but that he was a polite writer, a great refiner of the Engliſh tongue, and left behind him many teſtimonies of his wit and learning [D], cannot be denied but what ought moſt to be lamented is, that we are able to ſay ſo very little of one, in his own time ſo famous, and whoſe works ought to have tranſmitted him to poſterity, with much greater honour.

(b) Willis's Hiſt. of Mitred Abbies, Vol. i. p. 276. Newcourt's Repertorium, Vol. ii. p. 25. Wood's Athen. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 86.

(i) Newcourt's Repertorium, Vol. ii. p. 254.

(k) Bal. ubi ſupra. Dempſter, ubi ſupra. Pits, ubi ſupra.

(l) His Words are, cælibatus ſuos fœdus Adulter perpetuò manſit.

(m) Pits, ubi ſupra.

Manners, conteyning the IV Vertues called Cardynall, compyled in Latyn by Domynike Mancyn; and tranſlate into Englyſhe at the deſyre of Sir Gyles Alyngton, Knyght, by Alexander Bercley, Prieſt and Monke of Ely. A wooden cut of a nobleman ſitting in a chair, and a Monk kneeling before him, preſenting him a book, and two ſtanding by, one ſeems to be a Lay-Brother, the other a ſervant beſide his Lord. Afterwards follows, The Prologue of Alexander Barclay, &c. to his ryght honorable Mayſter Gyles Alyngton, Knight, &c. In the end thus: Rede this lyttell treatyce, O juvent of Englande, as Myrrour of good Maners; ye chefely of London ſtande, and whan ye it redyng ſhall perfyte underſtande, gyve ye laude and thankes to Gyles Alyngton, Knight, at whoſe precept this treatyſe was begon. If this do you profyte that ſhall my mynde excyte of mo frutefull matters after this to wryte. Finis. Thus endeth the ryght frutefull matter of the foure Vertues Cardynall: Imprynted by Rychard Pynſon, Prynter unto the Kynge's noble Grace; with his gracious pryvylege, the which boke I have prynted at the inſtance and requeſt of the ryght noble, Richard, Yerle of Kent (7).

(7) Thomas Hearne's MS. Collections, Vol. lxx. p. 179.

[D] Many teſtimonies of his wit and learning.] His books were very numerous, inſomuch that we have no perfect catalogue of them any where, and what contributes much to this, is the tranſlating his Engliſh titles into Latin: To mention however a few. I. His Eclogues on the Miſeries of Courtiers (8). It appears that all the Writers who have mentioned theſe, did it without conſulting them, and have fallen into many errors about this performance. They were printed at London by Richard Pynſon, in quarto, without date under this title: 'Here begynneth the Egloges of A-'lexander Barclay, Preſt, whereof the firſt three con-'tayneth the Myſeryes of Courters and Courtes of all 'Princes in generall. The matter whereof was tran-'ſlated into Englyſhe, by the ſaid Alexander, in fourme 'of dialoges, out of a book in Latin, named Miſerie 'Curialium, compiled by Eneas Silvius, Poete and 'Oratour, which after was Pope of Rome and named 'Pius.' Thoſe on the Miſeries of Courtiers make three, the whole number of eclogues in this volume making five. The fourth eclogue is, 'Of the Beha-'viour of riche Men anenſt Poetes.' At the end of this there is an elegy, intituled, 'The diſcrypcion of 'the Towre of Vertue and Honour, into whiche the 'noble Hawarde (9) contended to entre by worthy 'acts of Chivalry.' The fifth is, 'Of the Citizen 'and Uplandiſhman.' In his poetical preface the author mentions ten eclogues: perhaps the other five were thoſe he tranſlated from Mantuan, of which hereafter. It may not however be amiſs, before we quit this part of his writings, to obſerve that the pages of his book are not marked, or his verſes numbered. II. A Treatiſe againſt Skelton: he was Poet Laureat, and a great enemy to Prieſts, which, we may preſume, turned our author's pen againſt him. The Life of St. George from Baptiſt Mantuan. The Life of St. Catherine. The Life of St. Margaret. The Life of St. Ethelreda (10). III. Five Eclogues from the Latin of Mantuan (11). IV. Of the French Pronunciation (12). V. The Bucolic of Codrus (13). VI. The Caſtle of Labour (14), tranſlated from the French into Engliſh. VII. A Treatiſe of Virtues written originally by D. Mancini, of which we have given an account in the preceding note. VIII. The Figure of our Mother Holy Church oppreſſed by the French King (15), printed at London in quarto by Richard Pynſon. IX. Navis Stultifera, or the Ship of Fools (16), the moſt celebrated of all our author's writings. It conſiſts partly of verſes of his own compoſition, and in part of tranſlations from the Latin, French, and Dutch. It is indeed a kind of verſion of a book written under the ſame title by Sebaſtian Brantius; but then it is tranſlated with great freedom and with conſiderable additions. It is adorned with a great variety of pictures, printed from wooden cuts. We may judge of the high eſteem this book was in, not only from its being often cited, but alſo from its various editions. It was firſt printed at London by Richard Pynſon in 1509 in ſmall folio, again in the ſame ſize in 1519, and in quarto in 1570. It was dedicated by our author to his patron, Dr. Thomas Corniſh, Biſhop of Tyne. X. The Hiſtory of the Jugurthine War, tranſlated from the Latin of Salluſt. This was printed in quarto in 1557, five years after the author's death, and at the end of the book there is this note. Thus endeth the famouſe Cronicle of the warre whyche the Romaynes had againſt Jugurth, Uſurper of the kyngedome of Numydie, whyche Cronicle is compyled in Latin by the renowned Romayne Saluſt; and tranſlated into Engliſh by Syr Alexander Barkeley Prieſte, at Commaundemente of the ryght hyghe and mighty Prince, Thomas Duke of Northfolke, and imprinted at London in Forſter-lane, by John Waley (17).

M & C.

(8) Bale, Pits.

(9) Henry Earl of Surry, one of the moſt accompliſhed Noblemen of his time, beheaded, Jan. 19, 1546-7.

(10) Dempſter, Bale, Pits.

(11) Bale, Pits.

(12) Bale, Pits.

(13) Dempſter, Bale, Pits.

(14) Dempſter, Bale, Pits, Wood.

(15) Mackenzie, Wood.

(16) Dempſter, Bale, Pits, Wood, Mackenzie.

(17) Hearne's Robert of Glouceſter's Chronicle, p. 705, 706.

[Though it is ſaid, in the preceding article, that Alexander Barclay had probably his birth in Somerſetſhire, yet ſome good reaſons are alleged, under the article Bulleyn, to prove that he was a Scotſman, born on the other ſide of the cold river Tweed (18). The prologue mentioned in the note [C], is verſe, though written in the manner of proſe (19).] K.

(18) Article Bulleyn, note [E].

(19) From a correſpondent.

[BARCLAY (William), a learned and eminent Civilian, was born in Aberdeenſhire, in 1541 (a), and deſcended from one of the beſt families in Scotland. He was in favour with the famous Mary, Queen of Scots; but, after that Princeſs was dethroned, dethroned, and detained in captivity in England, finding that he had no proſpect of making his fortune in the Court of her ſon James, he reſolved to retire into France, which he did about the year 1573. He was then more than thirty years of age: however, he went to Bourges, in order to proſecute the ſtudy of the Law. He there took his Doctor's degree in that faculty, and had applied himſelf ſo cloſely to his books, that he was qualified to teach the Civil Law (b). Edmund Hay, the Jeſuit, who was his countryman, and is ſaid to have been related to him, procured him a profeſſorſhip in that ſcience in the univerſity of Pontamouſſon, by his intereſt with the Duke of Lorrain, who had lately founded that ſeminary. And the Duke not only conferred upon Barclay the firſt profeſſorſhip, but alſo appointed him Counſellor of State, and Maſter of Requeſts. In 1581, Barclay married Anne de Malleville, a young lady of Lorrain, by whom he had his ſon John, who afterwards became a writer of conſiderable note, and the innocent occaſion of his father's conteſt with the Jeſuits. This youth having a promiſing genius, they endeavoured to prevail on him to enter into their ſociety. But Barclay oppoſing their ſcheme reſpecting his ſon, the Jeſuits reſented it ſo highly on their part, and did him ſo many ill offices with the Duke, that he was obliged to leave Lorrain (c). He then went to London, where King James I. is ſaid to have offered him a place in his Council, with a conſiderable penſion [A]; but he declined theſe offers, becauſe it was made a neceſſary condition of his accepting them, that he ſhould embrace the religion of the Church of England. In 1604, he returned into France, and accepted the Profeſſorſhip of the Civil Law, which was offered him by the univerſity of Angers (d). He taught there with reputation, and is ſaid to have been fond of making a ſplendid appearance in his character of Profeſſor [B]. But he did not hold this office long: for he is generally ſaid to have died the year after he was appointed to it; though ſome writers have aſſerted, that he enjoyed his Profeſſorſhip five years (e). He was buried in the church of the Franciſcans. He was the author of ſome books, which are mentioned below [C]. He appears, from his writings, to have been much prejudiced againſt the Proteſtants; and was a zealous advocate for paſſive obedience, and the divine right of Kings. He has urged many weak arguments in ſupport of the patriarchal ſcheme, which was afterwards ſo zealouſly defended by Filmer, and others (f). Mackenzie ſays, that Barclay was 'one of the learneſt 'Lawyers in his age; for by his works it appears, that he was not only well ſeen in 'the Civil and Canon Law, but likewiſe in the Greek and Latin languages, in Civil 'and Eccleſiaſtic Hiſtory, and in all the other parts of polite learning (g).'] T.

(a) Lives and Characters of the moſt eminent Writers of the Scots Nation, by George Mackenzie, M. D. Vol. iii. p. 468.

(b) Dictionaire Hiſtorique et Critique, par M. Bayle.

(c) Bayle, ubi ſupra.

(d) Bayle, ubi ſupra.

(e) Mackenzie obſerves, that 'the learned are 'not agreed about 'the year of our 'author's death; 'ſome placing it 'in the year '1605, others 'in 1609, others 'in 1611.'

(f) Vid. Mackenzie, p. 472, 473, 474.

(g) Mackenzie, p. 476.

[A] King James I. is ſaid to have offered him a place in his Council, with a conſiderable penſion.] Mackenzie ſays, that King James 'having invited 'all the learned men of his country that were abroad 'to England, deſigning to give them places in his 'own dominions, according to their merit, and 'thereby to endeavour to gain them over to the 'communion of the church of England; our author 'came over amongſt the reſt, and was highly careſſed 'by King James, who offered to ſettle a conſiderable 'penſion upon him, to make him Profeſſor of the 'Civil Law in ſome of the univerſities, and one of 'his Privy-Counſellors *, if he would declare himſelf 'of the communion of the church of England (1).'

* This is not very probable.

(1) Lives and characters of the moſt eminent Writers of the Scots nation, Vol. iii. p. 468.

[B] He is ſaid to have been fond of making a ſplendid appearance in his character of Profeſſor.] Mackenzie ſays, that 'he went every day to ſchool, attended by 'a ſervant, who went bare-headed before him, he 'himſelf having a rich robe lined with ermine, the 'train of which was ſupported by two ſervants, and 'his ſon upon his right hand; and there hung about 'his neck a great chain of gold, with a medal of 'gold, with his own picture (2).'

(2) Lives, &c. of Scots Writers, ubi ſupra, p. 469.

[C] He was the author of ſome books, &c.] Particularly the following: I. De Regno et Regali poteſtate adverſus Buchananum, Brutum, Boucherium, et reliquos Monarchomachos. This was publiſhed at Paris in the year 1600, and dedicated to Henry IV. II. De Poteſtate Papæ, an et quatenus in Reges et Principes ſeculares Jus et Imperium habeat, Francof. 1609. 1613. 1621. Hannoviæ, 1612, in 8*vo.* and Lond. in Engliſh, 1611, in 4*to.* Muſſiponti, 1610, 8*vo.* and Pariſiis, 1600, 4*to.* III. A Commentary upon the Title of the Pandects de Rebus creditis et de Jurejurando, Paris, 1605, 8*vo.* IV. Præmetia in vitam Agricolæ, Paris, 1599, 2 vols. 8*vo.*]

[BARCLAY (John), ſon of the ſubject of the preceding article, was born at Pontamouſſon, on the 28th of January, 1582. It has been already obſerved, that his promiſing genius cauſed the Jeſuits to be deſirous of having him entered into their ſociety: but this was prevented by his father, who carried him with him into England, at the beginning of the reign of King James the Firſt. He had already made a great progreſs in learning, and commenced author; for he had publiſhed A Commentary upon the Thebais of Statius in 1601. This was printed at Pontamouſſon, and dedicated to Charles III. Duke of Lorrain. He alſo printed a Latin poem upon the coronation of King James; and in 1603 publiſhed the firſt part of his Satiricon Euphormionis. He dedicated this to King James I. by whom it was well received. But when his father quitted England, he took John Barclay with him, being fearful leſt ſome means ſhould be uſed by King James to induce him to renounce the Romiſh religion (a). The ſon lived at Angers with his father till the death of the latter, and then went to Paris, where he married (b). He afterwards came to England, where he is ſaid to have had conſiderable employments under King James, and particularly to have been made Gentleman of the Bedchamber to him (c). In 1606, he became acquainted with Monſ. Peireſc, who was then at London [A]. About this time he publiſhed a ſhort account of the gunpowder-plot.

(a) Dictionaire Hiſtorique et Critique, par M. Bayle.

(b) Bayle, ubi ſupra.

(c) This is aſſerted in a ſhort account of him among the MSS. of the late Mr. Oldys, which is now before us. Vid. alſo Bayle, note [I].

[A] He became acquainted with Monſ. Peireſc.] When this learned Frenchman came to England, he met with a very gracious reception from King James: during his ſtay in this country he viſited the univerſity powder-plot. It was printed at Amſterdam and entitled, Series patefacti divinitus Parricidii in maximum Regem Regnumque Britanniæ cogitati et inſtructi. In 1610, he publiſhed at London, 'An Apology for the Euphormio; and in 1612 he publiſhed at Paris a book, which he entitled, Pietas; ſive Publicæ pro Regibus ac Principibus, et privatæ pro Gul. Barclaio parente Vindiciæ contra Bellarminum. Two years after he publiſhed at London his Icon Animarum. He quitted that city in the year 1616, and went to Paris, where he was preſented to Monſ. du Vair, the Keeper of the Seals, by his friend Peireſc (d). He went afterwards to Rome, whither he was invited by Pope Paul V. and there he publiſhed a controverſial work, entitled, Paræneſis ad Sectarios. He is ſaid to have received many civilities from Cardinal Bellarmin, though he had written againſt him. He died at Rome on the 12th of Auguſt, 1621, whilſt the Argenis, his moſt celebrated performance [B], was printing in France (e). His body appears to have been interred in the church of St. Onuphrius upon the Janiculum: but his ſon erected a marble monument, in honour of his memory, in St. Laurence's church on the way to Tivoli. However, our author's widow afterwards cauſed her huſband's buſto to be taken from thence. It is ſaid, that John Barclay's tomb was near the gate of the church-yard, oppoſite to which Cardinal Francis Barberini had erected another, for his preceptor Bernard William. Both tombs, we are told, were exactly alike. This reſemblance gave ſuch great offence to Barclay's widow, who is repreſented as a woman of a very haughty diſpoſition, that ſhe would have demoliſhed her huſband's tomb: but not being able to do that, ſhe would, at leaſt, have his marble buſto taken from it, and brought to her houſe. Her pride, it ſeems, could not endure, that her huſband, who was deſcended from a noble family, and ſtill more diſtinguiſhed for his wit and learning, ſhould be there paralleled with one whom ſhe conſidered as a mere pedagogue (f). Barclay had two ſons, and it has been aſſerted, that one of them had a good benefice conferred upon him at Rome, and was alſo made Chamberlain to the Pope.] T.

(d) Bayle, ubi ſupra.

(e) Bayle, ubi ſupra.

(f) Bayle, ubi ſupra.

ſity of Oxford; and alſo cultivated an acquaintance with Camden, Sir Robert Cotton, Sir Henry Savile, and other learned men. He afterwards went over into Holland (1).

(1) Gaſſendi Vita Peireſkii, p. 264.

[B] The Argenis, his moſt celebrated performance.] This work was printed at Paris, under the care of his friend Peireſc, who cauſed the effigies of the author to be placed before the book, with the following diſtich which he deſired Grotius to add to it:

Gente Caledonius, Gallus natalibus, hic eſt,
Romam Romano qui docet ore loqui.

Which may be thus tranſlated,

'This is he, who though by nation a Scot, and by birth a Frenchman, has taught even the Romans themſelves to ſpeak their own language to perfection (2).'

(2) General Dict. art. BARCLAY (JOHN).

The firſt edition of the Argenis was printed at Paris in 8*vo*, in 1621. It has ſince paſſed through many editions, and been tranſlated into ſeveral languages. The firſt Engliſh tranſlation was publiſhed in 4*to*, in 1628, by Sir Robert Le Grys, at the command of King Charles I. The poetical part was tranſlated by Thomas May, Eſq. The ſecond tranſlation was publiſhed by Kingſmill Long, Eſq; in 1636. Another tranſlation appeared in 1772, in four volumes, 12*mo*, under the following title: 'The Phœnix; or, the 'Hiſtory of Polyarchus and Argenis, tranſlated from 'the Latin, by a Lady.' In the preface to this it is obſerved, that 'the Editor has made uſe of both 'the former tranſlations occaſionally, and whenever 'a doubt aroſe, had recourſe to the original.'

(3) Vid. Bayle, n. [F] and [L]. It is obſerved in Mr. Oldys's papers, that, in his Euphormio, Barclay hath imitated the ſtyle of Petronius.

Barclay's Latin ſtyle, in his Argenis, has been much praiſed, and much cenſured (3). It is ſaid, that Cardinal Richlieu was extremely fond of reading this work, and that from thence he derived many of his political maxims. It is obſerved in the preface to the laſt Engliſh tranſlation, that 'Barclay's Argenis affords ſuch variety of entertainment, that 'every kind of reader may find in it ſomething ſuitable to his own taſte and diſpoſition: the ſtateſman, 'the philoſopher, the ſoldier, the lover, the citizen, 'the friend of mankind, each may gratify his favourite propenſity; while the reader, who comes 'for his amuſement only, will not go away diſappointed.' It is alſo remarked of this work in the ſame preface, that 'it is a romance, an allegory, 'and a ſyſtem of politics. In it the various forms 'of government are inveſtigated, the cauſes of faction 'detected, and the remedies pointed out for moſt of 'the evils that can ariſe in a ſtate.'

In this political allegory, 'by the kingdom of 'Sicily, France is deſcribed, during the time of 'the civil wars under Henry the Third, and until 'the fixing the crown upon the head of Henry the 'Fourth. By the country over-againſt Sicily, and 'frequently her competitor, England is ſignified. 'By the country, formerly united under one head, 'but now divided into ſeveral principalities, the 'author means Germany; i. e. Mergania. Several 'names are diſguiſed in the ſame manner, by tranſpoſing the letters.' As to the principal perſons deſigned, 'by Aquilius is meant the Emperor of 'Germany, Calvin is Uſinulca, and the Hugenots 'are called Hyperephanii. Under the perſon and 'character of Poliarchus, Barclay undoubtedly intended to deſcribe that real hero, Henry of Navarre, 'as he has preſerved the likeneſs even to his features 'and complexion. By his rivals are meant the 'leaders of the different factions; by Lycogenes and 'his friends, the Lorrain party, with the Duke of 'Guiſe at their head. Some features of Hyaniſbe's 'character are ſuppoſed to reſemble Queen Elizabeth 'of England; Radirobanes is the King of Spain, 'and his fruitleſs expedition againſt Mauritania is 'pointed at the ambitious deſigns of Philip the 'Second, and his invincible armada. Under Meleander, the character of Henry the Third of France 'ſeems intended; though the reſemblance is very 'flattering to him (4).'

(4) Pref. to the tranſlation of the Argenis, by a Lady.

BARCLAY (ROBERT) juſtly eſteemed the beſt writer among the Quakers, and one of the moſt conſiderable perſons of his time. He was deſcended from an ancient and honourable family in Scotland by his father's ſide, who was Colonel David Barclay of Mathers, a man univerſally eſteemed and beloved, and, by his mother Mrs. Catharine Gordon, daughter to Sir W. Gordon, from the noble houſe of Huntley; ſo that if his principles had not led him to ſlight the advantages of birth, few gentlemen could in that particular have gone beyond him (a). He was born at Edinburgh in the year 1648, and as he grew up, the troubles of his country, in which alſo his family had a ſhare, induced induced his father, Colonel Barclay, to ſend him, while a youth, to Paris, where his brother was at that time Principal of the Scots college, who taking advantage of the tender age of his nephew Robert, drew him over to the Romiſh religion (b). His father being informed of this, thought fit to ſend for him home; and accordingly he returned to Scotland in the year 1664, as accompliſhed, as at his age, which was ſcarcely ſixteen, the moſt ſanguine of his relations could expect. He had a competent knowledge of the ſciences, underſtood the French and Latin tongues perfectly, for the latter he wrote and ſpoke with wonderful facility and correctneſs, and afterwards attained Greek and Hebrew. The principal authors that have attempted to give the world the hiſtory of the people called Quakers, aſſure us, that our author's father had embraced their doctrine, before the return of his ſon from France (c): but againſt this we have the expreſs teſtimony of our author himſelf, who fixes the time of his father's joining himſelf to the Quakers, to the year 1666 (d), which we are told by others, was chiefly owing to the perſuaſions of one Mr. Swinton, a man of great credit among thoſe people, and who had for ſome time after the Reſtoration, been confined with Colonel David Barclay, in the caſtle of Edinburgh, where, by long and frequent converſations, he drew him over to his opinions [A]. It was not long before Robert Barclay likewiſe joined himſelf to the Quakers, not ſo much moved thereto,

(a) See his article in Collier's Dictionary, Vol. i.

(b) Hiſtoire des Trembleurs, p. 76.

(c) Sewell's Hiſt. of the Quakers, London, 1722, fol. p. 472. Croeſe's Hiſtory of the Quakers, p. 151.

(d) See his Teſtimony concerning his father, at the end of his Works.

[A] Frequent converſations he drew him over to his opinions.] It may not be amiſs to give ſome account here, of the firſt preaching of thoſe doctrines maintained by the people called Quakers in Scotland, and of the manner in which they were ſo wonderfully propagated in ſo ſhort a ſpace, as between their firſt appearance and their being embraced by Colonel David Barclay. George Fox, the elder, who is looked upon as the author and founder of this ſect, began to preach publickly about the time of our author Robert Barclay's birth, and was ſoon followed by great numbers who adhered to the opinions he taught them, in ſpite of the moſt violent perſecutions; to which, notwithſtanding the regularity of their lives, they ſtood expoſed, while the Preſbyterians eſpecially were at the helm, who were zealous from principle for church-power, which the Quakers little regarded (1). In 1657, George Fox went himſelf a kind of pilgrimage into the north, and being informed that the number of Friends (which is the name uſed by theſe people when ſpeaking of their ſect) was greatly increaſed in Scotland, he went thither to viſit them; which proved a means of enlarging their Church, eſpecially in the Northern parts of the kingdom about Aberdeen and Elgin; and ſoon drew a heavy perſecution upon them from the Clergy (2). But it was not here, that the gentleman, who converted Colonel Barclay, received theſe opinions. There is ſomething ſo ſingular in his hiſtory, that though we have not particulars enough to form an article, yet the circumſtances of his converſion may very well juſtify their appearing in a note. John Swinton of Swinton, Eſq; was of a very good family, and had as good education as almoſt any man in Scotland, which, joined to very ſtrong natural parts, rendered him a moſt accompliſhed perſon. He ſhewed himſelf very ill affected to King Charles II. when in Scotland, laboured to ſerve the Engliſh and heighten their intereſt, which, at laſt, rendered it neceſſary to ſend for a party of Cromwell's ſoldiers to carry him away priſoner into England; notwithſtanding which ingenious artifice, practiſed at his own houſe near the borders, the Scots parliament, held at Stirling in 1651, attainted him of high-treaſon (3) At this time the act affected him little, the King's affairs growing ſoon after deſperate; but as ſoon as the Reſtoration was brought about, Mr. Swinton was ſeized in London, and ſent down, as the Marquis of Argyle had been, to be tried in Scotland, or rather called to his former judgment (4). It was univerſally believed that his death was inevitable, as it was notorious that Oliver Cromwell had truſted him more than any body, and that almoſt every thing had been done in Scotland by his advice. Yet Mr. Swinton lived chearfully in the caſtle of Edinburgh where he was priſoner, and ſeemed much more concerned to ſpread the principles of Quakeriſm than to defend his own life. He had embraced theſe opinions in England, went into them ſincerely, and being a perſon of learning, very taking in his behaviour, and naturally eloquent, he not only defended his notions vigorouſly when attacked, but brought over many to his ſentiments while in confinement (5). He was at length brought before the parliament at Edinburgh, to which the Earl of Middleton was Commiſſioner in 1661, and there called upon to ſhew cauſe, why he ſhould not receive ſentence upon his former attainder. It is certain, that he might have avoided the force of that law by two pleas, either of which would have ſaved him: for, firſt, he might have denied that any ſuch act had paſſed, and the contrary could not have been proved, as the record of his attainder, with all that paſſed in that Parliament at Stirling, had been loſt. His ſecond plea might have been ſtill ſtronger in point of law: for all the proceedings in that Parliament having been reſcinded and annulled by the Parliament, before which he was now called in queſtion, they were no longer of any authority. So that the record of his attainder could not be found, or if found, could not be urged againſt him (6); and yet he took advantage of neither of theſe pleas: but anſwered, entirely conſonant to his religious principles, that he was at the time theſe crimes were imputed to him in the gall of bitterneſs and bond of iniquity, but that, God having ſince called him to the light, he ſaw and acknowledged his paſt errors, and did not refuſe to pay the forfeit of them, even though in their judgment this ſhould extend to his life. His ſpeech was, though modeſt, ſo majeſtic, and though expreſſive of the moſt perfect patience, ſo pathetic, that, notwithſtanding he had neither intereſt nor wealth to plead for him, yet the impreſſion made by his diſcourſe on that illuſtrious aſſembly was ſuch, that they recommended him to the King as a fit object for mercy, at the very time they were in an extreme degree ſevere, againſt ſome who were not at all more obnoxious than he (7). This ſtrange eſcape of Swinton's was aſcribed by thoſe of his own perſuaſion (very naturally) to the ſpecial interpoſition of Providence; by men of another turn, to the irreſiſtible force of true eloquence, and by the refined politicians, to the ſcheme of the King's Lord-Commiſſioner, the Earl of Middleton; who, knowing the Earl of Lauderdale had begged his eſtate, reſolved to ſave both that and his life, to ſpite a man he hated, as well as to raiſe his own character (8). Such was the perſon who is ſaid to have drawn to his principles the father of our author; and indeed it is probable, that he might have ſome hand therein, though about 1663 there were many perſons of good ſenſe and unſpotted integrity, who joined themſelves to the Quakers; and it was in 1666 that Colonel David Barclay declared himſelf, as his ſon informs us (9). He found himſelf very ſoon expoſed to perſecutions and ſufferings on the ſcore of his religion; for though there was no expreſs law againſt the Quakers, yet the Council found them within the conſtruction of an act againſt conventicles, and thence aſſumed a power of calling them to anſwer, impriſoning and fining them; and all, but chiefly the laſt, Colonel David Barclay, ſuffered more than once. Yet a Church hiſtorian, who is continually clamouring againſt the perſecution of the Preſbyterians by the Biſhops, ſeems to be diſpleaſed that the ſame rigour, or a greater, was not exerted againſt the Quakers; by which (he ſays) they grew as well as took root. He is particularly chagrined that the Laird of Swinton (as he calls him) was neglected; which is a proof that the Government was not very ſevere againſt them at this time (10). But after the battle of Pentland hills, when Scotland was in ſome confuſion,

(1) General Hiſt. of the Quakers, by Gerard Croeſe, London, 1696, 8*vo*. p. 29. 98, 99.

(2) Sewell's Hiſt. of the Quakers, p. 170, 171, 172.

(3) Burnet's Hiſt. of his own Times, Vol. i. p. 127. Croeſe's Hiſt. of the Quakers, p. 142.

(4) Burnet's Hiſt. of his own Times, Vol. i. p. 127.

(5) Croeſe's Hiſt. of the Quakers, p. 142.

(6) Burnet's Hiſt. of his own Times, p. 127.

(7) Croeſe's Hiſt. of the Quakers, p. 143. Burnet, ubi ſupra. Memoirs of Scotland, p. 97.

(8) Idem, ibid.

(9) See Rob. Barclay's Teſtimony concerning the death of his father, at the end of his Works.

(10) Woodrow's Hiſtory of the Church of Scotland, Vol. i. p. 226, 227.

thereto, either by the ſolicitations or example of his father, as by the dictates of his own mind; for though he was but eighteen years of age when he took this ſtep, yet he had conſidered it very attentively, and having a genius wonderfully ſolid, he appears to have made as clear a judgment, even at that early ſeaſon, of the cauſe in which he engaged, as at any time during his whole life (e). He ſoon diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his zeal in the cauſe of the Quakers, in which, from the beginning, he diſcovered that ſtrength and power of reaſoning, that perſpicuity and accuracy of language, for which his writings have been, and in all probability ever will be, admired. His firſt treatiſe in defence of the principles he profeſſed, appeared at Aberdeen in the year 1670; and, as occaſion required, he ſupported what he had delivered by his ſubſequent writings, which very ſoon ſhewed him much an over-match for his antagoniſt (f) [B]. In theſe diſcourſes of his, our author confuſion, Colonel Barclay was confined for ſome time, though no juſt reaſon was aſſigned for it; his principles binding him to be a good ſubject. On his humble petition, however, he was firſt ſuffered to return home, on giving ſecurity for his appearance, and ſoon after he was diſcharged entirely (11). He was a man, venerable in his appearance, juſt in all his actions, had ſhewed his courage in the wars in Germany, and his fortitude, in bearing with all the hard uſage he met with in Scotland with chearfulneſs as well as patience (12). The acquiſition of ſo conſiderable and ſo reſpected a perſon, was of no ſmall uſe to thoſe of his perſuaſion, as appeared plainly by the daily additions to their ſect in the neighbourhood of Aberdeen, more eſpecially after his ſon Robert began to appear, and to diſplay ſuch a ſtrength of reaſoning, and ſuch an extent of learning in ſupport of this cauſe, as placed the controverſy with the Quakers on a new foot, and ſhewed they were far enough from being frantic, half-witted enthuſiaſts, who had little or nothing to ſay for themſelves (13). In this manner, with great comfort to himſelf, Colonel Barclay ſpent the laſt twenty years of his life, being all along bleſſed with ſound health and a vigorous conſtitution. He died on the 12th of October 1686, in the ſeventy-ſeventh year of his age, at his own houſe, not far from Aberdeen; and though he gave expreſs directions (agreeably to his principles) that none but perſons of his own perſuaſion ſhould be invited to his funeral, yet the time being known, many gentlemen, and thoſe too of great diſtinction, attended him to the grave, out of regard to his humanity, beneficence, and public ſpirit, virtues which endeared him to the good men of all parties. His ſon (according to the cuſtom of thoſe of his ſect) has left us an ample teſtimony, in his works, to his father's dying as well as living in hopes of ſalvation through JESUS CHRIST.

(e) Sewell and Croeſe, ubi ſupra.

(f) See the Preface to our author's Works, printed at London, A. D. 1692.

(11) Idem, ibid. p. 313. But he calls him, by a miſtake, Col. Rob. Barclay.

(12) Croeſe's Hiſt. of the Quakers, p. 144.

(13) See the account of Robert Barclay's firſt Writings in note [B].

[B] Which very ſoon ſhewed him to be much an overmatch for his antagoniſt.] It very rarely happens that an author's firſt performance is written with as much correctneſs as vigour, which however may be affirmed of this book of Robert Barclay's, the title of which runs thus: Truth cleared of Calumnies, wherein a book intitled, A Dialogue between a Quaker and a ſtable Chriſtian (printed at Aberdeen, and upon good ground, judged to be writ by William Mitchel, a Preacher near by it, or at leaſt, that he had the chief hand in it) is examined, and the Diſ-ingenuity of the Author in his repreſenting the Quakers is diſcovered; here is alſo their Caſe truly ſtated, cleared, demonſtrated, and the Objections of their Oppoſers anſwered according to Truth, Scripture, and right Reaſon. The preface to this treatiſe is dated from our author's houſe at Ury, the 19th of the ſecond month 1670, and therein he gives us a very clear account of the controverſies that had been for ſome time carried on between the Clergy and the Quakers; in which he complains of great diſingenuity, and of their taking pains, firſt, to make themſelves maſters of the true principles and opinions of the Quakers, and afterwards ſtudying to miſrepreſent, that they might find it the more eaſy to anſwer them, which he affirms to be the caſe of the author in this work which he had choſen to refute; and therefore, the buſineſs of this book is to ſhew, that they had been extravagantly abuſed by their adverſaries, who ſometimes would have them paſs for people diſtracted, and at other times, for men poſſeſſed by the devil, and practiſing abominations, under pretence of being led to them by the Spirit, as denying the exiſtence of Chriſt, the reality of a Heaven and a Hell, the being of Angels, the reſurrection of the body, and the day of Judgment. He ſhews upon what ſlight pretences theſe notions were taken up, how conſiſtent all the doctrines of the Quakers were with the Goſpel in reſpect to theſe points, and how unjuſt the perſecution they had ſuſtained for maintaining what the Apoſtles maintained, the light of CHRIST JESUS ſhining in the mind of man (14).

(14) Barclay's Works, p. 1.

His ſecond treatiſe had this title, Some Things of weighty Concernment, propoſed in Meekneſs and Love by Way of Queries, to the ſerious Conſideration of the Inhabitants of Aberdeen, which alſo may be of Uſe to ſuch as are in the ſame Mind with them elſewhere in this Nation. This was added by way of appendix to the former treatiſe, and contains twenty queſtions, relating chiefly to the perſons who had taken ſo much pains to repreſent the Quakers in ridiculous lights; when, if that kind of language had been allowed among this ſort of people, they might themſelves have been rendered far more ridiculous. Theſe writings made Mr. W. Mitchell ſo uneaſy, and rendered it ſo apparent, that either he was in the wrong, or wanted abilities neceſſary to prove himſelf in the right; that he immediately had recourſe again to the preſs, in order to return an anſwer to Robert Barclay, which produced our author's third book upon this ſubject, in which he effectually ſilenced that angry and impatient writer (15).

(15) See an Account of this matter in the Preface before Barclay's Works, p. xi.

The title of this third treatiſe was, W. Mitchell unmaſked, or the ſtaggering Inſtability of the pretended ſtable Chriſtians diſcovered, his Omiſſions obſerved, and Weakneſs unveiled, in his late faint and feeble Animadverſions by way of Reply to a Book, intitled, Truth cleared of Calumnies; wherein the Integrity of the Quakers Doctrine is the ſecond time juſtified and cleared from the re-iterate Clamours, but cauſeleſs Calumnies of this caviling Catechiſt. The preface to this diſcourſe is likewiſe dated from Ury, the 24th of December 1671. In this treatiſe, our author diſcovers an amazing variety of learning, which ſhews how good uſe he made of his time at Paris, and how thorough a maſter he was of the Scriptures, Fathers, and Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and with how much ſkill and judgment he applied them; ſo that we need not wonder he was much too hard for a country Clergyman in that part of the world, who, very probably, had not the ſame advantages of education, and was evidently a man of much leſs temper. The author of the preface before our author's works, has given a very fair account of this performance, and therefore we will make uſe of his words: 'In this rejoinder, ſays he, the diſpute 'riſes high, and the conteſt ſeems ſharp and cloſe; 'but to every impartial reader, the advantage evi- 'dently runs upon our author's ſide, who appears ra- 'ther zealous than heated, and ſharper on his enemy's 'matter than perſon: for he rather pities his enemy 'than triumphs over his weakneſs and envy. Here, 'as in an exact draught, the reader has an account of 'the fabulous principles given under our names, and 'thoſe that we really profeſs; and the pleaſure even 'men pretending to religion take to render a poor, 'ſelf-denying people that which they are not; as if 'they feared we ſhould be in the right, or hold prin- 'ciples nearer to what they profeſs themſelves to be- 'lieve, than is convenient for their intereſt with the 'people to allow; leaſt that, together with the ſo- 'briety, their worſt enemies confeſs to be ſo conſpi- 'cuous among them, ſhould give them too great a 'credit with their hearers (16).'

(16) See the Preface before cited, p. xi.

chiefly

chiefly laboured to remove the prejudices againſt, and throw ſuch light on the real ſentiments of the people whom he eſpouſed, as might ſilence the calumnies thrown out againſt them, and which he was ſatisfied, were the true grounds of that hatred which was borne them. He ſucceeded ſo thoroughly therein, as to procure for them a fair hearing from the more ſenſible part of the nation, and very ſoon raiſed both their credit and his own ſo high, that they were much better treated by the Government than before that time they had been. But with all this coolneſs and moderation, which might tempt one to think, he rather attempted to frame a new ſyſtem of religion, than to ſupport that which had been preached by the Quakers, he was as obedient to the Spirit as any of his party; inſomuch, that he tells us himſelf, that feeling an impreſſion from God, to paſs through the ſtreets of Aberdeen in ſackcloth and aſhes, and to preach the neceſſity of faith and repentance to the inhabitants, he accordingly performed it; his mind ſuffering the greateſt agonies, till ſuch time as he had fulfilled this command (g). This demonſtrated his ſincerity and ſimplicity of heart; for without being thoroughly ſatisfied in his own conſcience, it is impoſſible to conceive, how ſo wiſe and good a man, as it is univerſally agreed he was, ſhould bring himſelf to do ſuch an action. To propagate the doctrines, as well as to maintain the credit he had gained for thoſe of his way of thinking, he, in 1675, publiſhed a regular and accurate diſcourſe, in order to explain and defend the ſyſtem of the people called Quakers, which as it appeared abſolutely a new kind of writing, and was ſo excellently compiled, to ſhew clearly the good ſenſe and great learning of its author, was univerſally well received [C]. He was very ſenſible, that ſuch as diſliked thoſe of his profeſſion, often took occaſion to confound them with, or at leaſt impute to them as Quakers, the opinions maintained by another ſort of people, who held indeed ſome of the tenets of the Quakers, but were, in other reſpects, of a very contrary ſpirit. To remove this ſcandal effectually, and to manifeſt the difference between thoſe of his perſuaſion, and this other ſect who were ſtyled RANTERS, he wrote a very curious and inſtructive work, in which he, with much ſolidity and perſpicuity, laid open the cauſes, and diſplays the conſequences of Superſtition on one hand, and Fanaticiſm on the other, clearing the Quakers from both [D]. Theſe endeavours of his, to vindicate and bring (g) Barclay's Works, p. 105, 106.

[C] Was univerſally well received.] The writings of our author had been hitherto only controverſial; but now he judged it expedient to publiſh ſomewhat ſyſtematical, that their opinions might appear with more regularity and connection than they had hitherto done, and that it might be ſeen they held nothing inconſiſtent with the Scriptures: The title of this book was, A Catechiſm and Confeſſion of Faith, approved of and agreed unto by the General Aſſembly of the Patriarchs, Prophets, and Apoſtles, Chriſt himſelf chief Speaker in and among them, which containeth a true and faithful Account of the Principles and Doctrines which are moſt ſurely believed by the Churches of Chriſt in Great Britain and Ireland, who are reproachfully called by the name of Quakers, yet are found in one Faith with the Primitive Church and Saints, as is moſt clearly demonſtrated by ſome plain Scripture Teſtimonies (without Conſequences or Commentaries) which are here collected and inſerted by way of Anſwer to a few weighty, yet eaſy and familiar, Queſtions, fitted as well for the wiſeſt and largeſt, as for the weakeſt and loweſt Capacities. To which is added, an Expoſtulation with an Appeal to all other Profeſſors, by R. B. a Servant of the Church of Chriſt. The author in his preface dated from Ury, the eleventh of the ſixth month (Auguſt) 1673, endeavours to prove, that Quakeriſm is the very perfection of the Reformed Religion, and that other Proteſtant Churches, ſo far as they differed from the Quakers were inconſiſtent with themſelves, and returned in part at leaſt, to thoſe ſuperſtitions for which they had held it neceſſary to ſeparate from the Church of Rome. According to him, the Scripture only ought to be regarded as the foundation of truth, and no doctrines ought to be received as Chriſtian, which cannot be proved by the expreſs words of ſcripture, which, he aſſerts, might be alledged in maintainance and ſupport of all things delivered by the Quakers, notwithſtanding the inſinuations of their enemies, that the Quakers vilified and denied the ſcriptures, in order to ſet up their own imaginations inſtead of them: 'To diſprove which, ſays he, addreſſing himſelf to the reader, this Catechiſm and Confeſſion of Faith is compiled and preſented to thy ſerious and impartial view; if thou loveſt the ſcripture indeed, and deſireſt to hold the plain doctrine there delivered, and not thoſe ſtrained and farfetched conſequences which men have invented, thou ſhalt eaſily obſerve the whole principles of the people called Quakers, plainly couched in ſcripture words without addition or commentary, eſpecially in thoſe things their adverſaries oppoſe them in, where the ſcripture plainly decideth the controverſy for them without niceties and ſchool diſtinctions, which have been the wiſdom by which the world has not known God, and the words which have been multiplied without knowledge, by which counſel hath been darkened. In anſwer to the queſtions, there is not one word, that I know of, placed, but the expreſs words of ſcripture: and if in ſome of the queſtions there be ſomewhat ſubſumed of what in my judgment is the plain and naked import of the words, it is not to impoſe my ſenſe upon the reader, but to make way for the next queſtion for the dependance of the matter's ſake. I ſhall leave it to the reaſon of any underſtanding and judicious man, who is not biaſſed by ſelfintereſt (that great enemy to true equity), and who, in the leaſt meaſure, is willing to give way to the light of Chriſt in his conſcience, if the ſcriptures do not pertinently and aptly anſwer to the queſtions. As I have, upon ſerious grounds, ſeparated from moſt of the confeſſions and catechiſms heretofore publiſhed, ſo, not without cauſe, I have now taken another method. They uſually place their confeſſion of faith before the catechiſm, I judge it ought to be otherwiſe; in regard, that which is eaſieſt, and is compoſed for children, or ſuch as are weak, in my judgment, ought to be placed firſt; it being moſt regular to begin with things that are eaſy and familiar, and lead on to things that are more hard and intricate. Beſides, that things be more largely opened in the catechiſm, and diverſe objections anſwered which are propoſed in the queſtions, the reader having paſſed through that firſt, will more perfectly underſtand the confeſſion, which conſiſteth mainly in poſitive aſſertions. Not long after I had received and believed the teſtimony I now bear, I had in my view both the poſſibility and facility of ſuch a work, and now, after a more large and perfect acquaintance with the holy ſcripture, I found acceſs to allow ſome time to ſet about it, and have alſo been helped to accompliſh the ſame (17).'

(17) See this in the Preface before mentioned.

[D] Diſplays the conſequences of Superſtition on one hand, and Fanaticiſm on the other, clearing the Quakers from both.] This learned and excellent treatiſe, which bring the Quakers into reputation with people of ſenſe, moderation, and learning, brought various diſputes upon his hands, and one particularly, with ſome conſiderable members of the univerſity of Aberdeen, an account of which was afterwards made public (b). But though it might be conceived, that ſo many undertakings within ſo narrow a compaſs of time, muſt have wholly taken him up, and left him not ſo much as a which contains as much ſound reaſoning as any book of its ſize in ours, or perhaps in any modern language, is called, The Anarchy of the Ranters, and other Libertines, the Hierarchy of the Romaniſts, and other pretended Churches equally refuſed and refuted, in a two-fold Apology for the Church and People of GOD, called in deriſion Quakers, wherein they are vindicated from thoſe, who accuſe them of diſorder and confuſion on the one hand, and from ſuch as calumniate them with tyranny and impoſition on the other; ſhewing, that as the true and pure principles of the goſpel are reſtored by their teſtimony, ſo is alſo the ancient apoſtolick order of the Church of Chriſt, re-eſtabliſhed among them, and ſettled upon its right baſis and foundation. 'He obſerves in his preface to this work, that the people to whom he had joined himſelf had been abuſed in a moſt barbarous manner, and charged with very different offences; ſome treating them as fooliſh, mad creatures, while others reputed them as deep, and ſubtile politicians. In many of the books written againſt them, they are ſtiled illiterate, ignorant fellows, yet in others, they are affirmed to be learned, cunning Jeſuits, and penſioners of the Pope, while the Papiſts themſelves abhorred and perſecuted them, as the worſt kind of Heretics. But, he ſays, that theſe people have laboured all they could to follow the example of the primitive Church in all things, and he obſerves, that the two following points did, in thoſe times, contribute much towards the edification of the Church. Viz.

(b) Sewell's Hiſt. of the Quakers. See alſo note [G].

I. The power and authority which the Apoſtles had given them by Chriſt, for gathering, building up, and governing of his Church, by virtue of which power and authority they alſo wrote the holy ſcriptures.

II. That privilege given to every Chriſtian under the goſpel, to be led and guided by the ſpirit of Chriſt, and to be taught thereof in all things.

But he farther remarks, that ſince that time the harmony of theſe two principles has been deſtroyed, and the authority and power which reſided in the Apoſtles, is annexed and entailed on an outward ordination, and ſucceſſion is made uſe of to cover all manner of abuſes, even the height of idolatry and ſuperſtition. For by virtue of this ſucceſſion, theſe men, claiming the like infallibility that was in the Apoſtles, will oblige others to agree to their concluſions, however different from, or contrary to, the truths of the goſpel, and in reſpect of the Clergy's arrogating to themſelves ſo great a power in this, and in declaring the ſenſe of the ſcripture, he profeſſes, that he thinks both Proteſtants and Papiſts have gone aſide from the right way. As to the ſecond point, which more immediately concerns his ſubject, he ſpeaks thus, 'On the other hand, ſome are 'ſo great pretenders to inward motions and revelations 'of the Spirit, that there are no extravagancies ſo wild 'which they will not cloak with it, and ſo much are 'they for every one's following their own mind, as 'can admit of no Chriſtian fellowſhip and community, 'nor of that good order and diſcipline, which the 'Church of Chriſt never was, nor can be, without. 'This gives an open door to all libertiniſm, and 'brings great reproach to the Chriſtian faith, and on 'this hand have foully fallen the German Anabaptiſts, ſo called, John of Leyeden, Knipperdoling, '&c. (In caſe theſe monſtrous things committed by 'them be ſuch as they are related.) And ſome more 'moderate of that kind have been found among the 'people in England, called Ranters, as it is true, 'the people called Quakers have been branded with 'both of theſe extremes. It is as true, it hath been, 'and is, their work to avoid them, and to be found 'in that even and good path of the primitive Church, 'where all were (no doubt) led, and actuated by the 'holy Spirit, and might all have propheſied one by 'one, and yet there was a ſubjection of the Prophets 'to the ſpirits of the Prophets. There was an au'thority ſome had in the Church, yet it was for 'edification, and not for deſtruction; there was an 'obedience in the Lord to ſuch as were ſet over, and 'a being taught by ſuch, and yet a knowing of the 'inward anointing, by which each individual was 'to be led into all truth. The work and teſtimony 'the Lord hath given us, is to reſtore this again, and 'to ſet both theſe in their right place, without 'cauſing them to deſtroy one another. To manifeſt 'how this is accompliſhed, and accompliſhing among 'us, is the buſineſs of this treatiſe, which, I hope, 'will give ſome ſatisfaction to men of ſober judg'ments and impartial and unprejudicate ſpirits, and 'may be made uſeful in the good hand of the Lord, 'to confirm and eſtabliſh friends againſt their preſent 'oppreſſors (18).'

(18) See his Preface to that Treatiſe in the Collection of his Works.

This treatiſe expoſed him to a great many inconveniences; for we find him obliged to write a Vindication of it in the beginning of the year 1679, when, it ſeems, that he was in priſon at Aberdeen; and indeed, at that time, the perſecution of the Quakers in Scotland was very warm, and therefore conſidering the figure he made, it is no wonder that he had a ſhare in it (19). But without queſtion, his ſufferings of this ſort did not give him near ſo much concern, as the diſputes in which he was involved, by the publication of this treatiſe, with his brethren; chiefly through the obſtinacy of one William Rogers, who wrote againſt him, and ſpread his objections privately, notwithſtanding the author had taken pains to ſatisfy him in a conference. The account which the author of the preface before his works gives of this matter, is worth reading: 'This diſcourſe, ſays he, touching 'the tender place both of thoſe that exerciſe a coër'cive authority over conſcience on the one hand, 'and of thoſe that, to avoid that extreme, run into 'an abſolute perſonal independency in point of order 'and government on the other hand, both ſorts 'were not a little diſguſted; but the latter more eſ'pecially, that thought themſelves chiefly concerned 'in the author's intention and labour; and indeed 'the riſe and ground of the diſcourſe, was the diſſa'tisfaction of ſome that profeſſed to be of the ſame 'ſociety, about the methods of proceeding as a 'Chriſtian community, for the honour of our holy 'profeſſion. Some miſtook him, others too deſign'edly inveighed againſt him; the animoſity roſe ſo 'high in ſome few leading perſons of that diſſent, 'as to queſtion his ſincerity to the profeſſion he made 'of religion in general, whiſpering him to be Po'piſhly affected, if not a Papiſt, and perhaps a gra'duated one too: and why? Firſt, becauſe he was 'bred in France at ſchool, under an uncle who was 'a Papiſt, if not a Prieſt. Secondly, becauſe he 'maintained Church authority, at as high a rate, at 'leaſt upon the ſame principles: but for the firſt, 'his father who was always a zealous Proteſtant, 'coming heartily to embrace the communion of the 'deſpiſed Quakers, and ſhewing himſelf an exem'plary member of their ſociety, commanded his 'ſon over, being yet a child, and only ſent thither 'for the advantage of a relation, and of learning 'French and Latin together, and that upon the 'preſſing importunity of his father's own brother, 'that was Preſident of the Scotch college, where the 'learning common at our ſchools, as well as at the 'univerſities, is daily taught (20).' After having ſet this matter in its proper light, he proceeds to refute the ſecond argument uſed by the objectors, in which he defends the author's uſe of Popiſh reaſoning in ſupport of his own cauſe, with the greateſt ſtrength and clearneſs, and as to Robert Barclay's own vindication before-mentioned, he tells us, that it was drawn from him to clear his former diſcourſe from the miſtakes and ſcruples of ſuch as did not underſtand it, or ſeemed however offended both with him and it, and that it is dedicated to the communion in general he was of; written with a ſerious and clear mind, and hearty love to thoſe that were his oppoſers.

(19) This appears from the date of this Treatiſe, which runs thus: Aberdeen Priſon, 6th of the firſt month 1679. We are in this note, in order to connect like things, obliged to treſpaſs a little upon time, otherwiſe this vindication muſt have been ſpoke of afterwards.

(20) Preface to Barclay's Works, p. xiv.

moment to ſpare; yet it is certain, that at this very time he was meditating his great work, which he entitled, An Apology for the true Chriſtian Divinity, as the ſame is held forth and preached, by the People called in Scorn Quakers; ſince the epiſtle prefixed thereto, and addreſſed to King Charles II., is dated the twenty-fifth of November 1675 (i). This was indeed a painful and laborious performance, and therefore our author took, with great prudence and ſagacity, ſuch precautions as he thought neceſſary, with reſpect to its publication. It was with this view, that the Theſes Theologicæ (k), which were the ground-work of this elaborate treatiſe, were ſent abroad ſome time before the book itſelf, in Latin, French, High and Low Dutch, and Engliſh, addreſſed to the Clergy of what ſort ſoever; and that his candour, impartiality, and ſincere love of truth, might be ſtill more manifeſt, he ſent them to the Doctors, Profeſſors, and Students in Divinity, both Popiſh and Proteſtant, in every country throughout Europe, deſiring they would ſeriouſly examine them, and ſend him their anſwers. As ſoon as the Apology was finiſhed, he ſent two copies of it, to each of the public Miniſters then at the famous Congreſs of Nimeguen, where it was received with all imaginable favour and reſpect, and the knowledge, charity, and diſintereſted probity of its author, juſtly applauded (l). In 1676 it was printed in Latin at Amſterdam; and two years after, he publiſhed an Engliſh tranſlation of it, which made it more generally known and read here, by which the end of it was effectually anſwered, ſince it was univerſally allowed to ſurpaſs every thing of its kind, and to ſet the principles of the Quakers in the faireſt light poſſible [E]. It was quickly

(i) See that Epiſtle in both the Latin and Engliſh editions of the Apology.

(k) See a further account of this in note [E].

(l) Sewell's Hiſt. of the Quakers, p. 257.

[E] To ſet the principles of the Quakers in the faireſt light poſſible.] The title of this famous book in the Engliſh edition of it runs thus: An Apology for the true Chriſtian Divinity, as the ſame is held forth and preached by the People called in Scorn Quakers, being a full Explanation and Vindication of their Principles and Doctrines, by many Arguments deduced from Scripture and right Reaſon, and the Teſtimonies of famous Authors, both Ancient and Modern, with a full Anſwer to the ſtrongeſt Objections uſually made againſt them: Preſented to the King. Written and publiſhed in Latin, for the Information of Strangers, by Robert Barclay, and now put into our own Language, for the Benefit of his Countrymen. The account given us, by the author of the preface to Barclay's works, of the nature of this work, and the reaſons upon which he publiſhed it, is ſo candid, and withal ſo clear and ſo conciſe, that I believe, it would be very hard to give a better (21); 'It was, ſays he, the moſt comprehenſive of all his pieces, publiſhed in Latin, Dutch, 'and Engliſh: it came out at the cloſe of a long 'and ſharp engagement between us of this kingdom, 'and a confederacy of adverſaries, of almoſt all perſuaſions: it was his happineſs both to live in a more 'retired corner, and to enjoy at that time a ſpace of 'quiet above his brethren, which, with the conſideration of their three or four years toil, and a ſenſe 'of ſervice in himſelf, put him upon undertaking 'and publiſhing this diſcourſe, as an eſſay towards 'the prevention of future controverſy: it firſt lays 'down our avowed principles of belief and practice, 'diſtinguiſhed from what our enemies are pleaſed to 'ſay in our names, who, by making us erroneous, 'give themſelves the eaſier taſks to confute us, and 'then triumph: after he has ſtated our principles, he 'has put the objections which he had collected out 'of our adverſaries books, or that he did apprehend 'might be made to theſe principles, and anſwers 'them; and laſtly, cites divers authors, both ancient 'and modern, eſpecially ſome of the primitive Ages, 'for further illuſtration and confirmation of our ſaid 'belief and practice.' The addreſs of this book is as important, curious, and extraordinary as any part of it; and has been juſtly admired both by our own countrymen and ſtrangers. It runs thus: Unto Charles II., King of Great Britain, and the dominions thereunto belonging. Robert Barclay, a ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt, called of God to the diſpenſation of the goſpel now again revealed, and after a long and dark night of apoſtacy, commanded to be preached to all nations, wiſheth health and ſalvation. After having opened his diſcourſe with a very becoming obſervation, that the lives of Kings are more obſerved than thoſe of other men, and what relates to them, or paſſes under their obſervation, more regarded, he goes on with great freedom, and yet with much decency in the following manner: 'But among all 'theſe tranſactions, which it hath pleaſed God to 'permit, for the glory of his power and the manifeſtation of his wiſdom and providence, no age 'furniſheth us with things ſo ſtrange and marvellous, 'whether with reſpect to matters civil or religious, 'as theſe that have fallen out within the compaſs of 'thy time, who, though thou be not yet arrived at 'the fiftieth year of thy age, haſt yet been a witneſs 'of ſtranger things than many ages before produced; 'ſo that, whether we reſpect theſe various troubles 'wherein thou foundeſt thyſelf engaged, while ſcarce 'got out of thy infancy; the many different afflictions wherewith men of thy circumſtances are 'often unacquainted, the ſtrange and unparalleled 'fortune that befel thy father, thy own narrow eſcape and baniſhment following thereupon, with the 'great improbability of thy ever returning (at leaſt, 'without very much pains and tedious combatings), 'or finally the incapacity thou wert under to accompliſh ſuch a deſign, conſidering the ſtrength of thoſe 'that had poſſeſſed themſelves of thy throne, and the 'terror they had inflicted upon foreign ſtates, or the 'contrivance and work of human policy; all theſe 'ſo ſufficiently declare, that it is the Lord's doing, 'which, as it is marvellous in our eyes, ſo it will 'juſtly be a matter of wonder and aſtoniſhment to 'generations to come, and may ſufficiently ſerve, if 'rightly obſerved, to confute and confound that 'atheiſm wherewith this age doth ſo much abound: 'As the vindication of the liberty of conſcience '(which thy father, by giving way to the importunate 'clamours of the Clergy, the anſwering and fulfilling of thoſe unrighteous wills has often proved hurtful and pernicious to Princes, ſought in ſome part 'to reſtrain) was a great occaſion of the troubles and 'revolutions, ſo the pretence of conſcience was that 'which carried it on and brought it to the pitch it 'came to; and though (no doubt) ſome that were engaged in that work deſigned good things, at leaſt in 'the beginning (albeit always wrong in the manner 'they took to accompliſh it; viz. by carnal weapons), 'yet ſo ſoon as they had taſted that ſweet of the poſſeſſions of them they had turned out, they quickly 'began to do thoſe things themſelves for which they 'had accuſed others; for their hands were found full 'of oppreſſion, and they hated the reproof of inſtruction, which is the way of life; and they evilly 'intreated the meſſengers of the Lord, and cauſed to 'beat and impriſon his prophets, and perſecuted his 'people, whom he had called and gathered out from 'among them, whom he had made to beat their 'ſwords into plowſhares, and their ſpears into pruning-hooks, and not to learn carnal war any more; 'but he raiſed them up and armed them with ſpiritual 'weapons, even with his own ſpirit and power, where-'by they teſtified in the ſtreets, and highways, and public markets, and ſynagogues, againſt the pride, vanity, 'luſts, and hypocriſy of that generation, who were 'righteous in their own eyes, though often cruelly intreated therefore; and they faithfully propheſied 'and foretold them of their judgment and downfal 'which came upon them, as by ſeveral writings and 'epiſtles delivered to Oliver and Richard Cromwell, 'the quickly tranſlated into High Dutch, Low Dutch, French, and Spaniſh (m). It might be naturally ſuppoſed, that a performance of this nature could not remain long unattacked; and accordingly we find it has been over and over anſwered, as well abroad as at home, which

(21) The ſame Preface, p. xxi.

(m) Sewell's and Croeſe's Hiſtories of the Quakers, and the preface before Barclay's Works, p. xxi.

'the Parliament, and other then powers, yet upon 'record doth appear.' Though it was evident enough from this language that the author did not intend by this addreſs to depart at all from his principles, yet he thought it requiſite to affirm this ſtill more expreſsly, and to ſhew his meaning in this addreſs more clearly, in the following paragraphs: 'As it is in-'conſiſtent with the truth I bear, ſo it is far from me to 'uſe this epiſtle as an engine to flatter thee, the uſual 'deſign of ſuch works; and therefore, I can neither 'dedicate it to thee, nor crave thy patronage, as if 'thereby I might have more confidence to preſent it 'to the world, or be more hopeful of its ſucceſs; to 'God alone I owe what I have, and that more im-'mediately in matters ſpiritual, and therefore to him 'alone, and to the ſervice of his truth, I dedicate 'whatever work he brings forth in me, to whom only 'the praiſe and honour appertain, whoſe truth needs 'not the patronage of worldly Princes, his arm and 'power being that alone by which it is propagated, 'eſtabliſhed, and confirmed: But I found it upon my 'ſpirit to take occaſion to preſent this book unto thee, 'that as thou haſt been often warned by ſeveral of 'that people who are inhabitants of England, ſo thou 'mayeſt not want a ſeaſonable advertiſement from a 'member of thy ancient kingdom of Scotland, and 'that thou mayeſt know (which I hope thou ſhalt 'have no reaſon to be troubled at) that God is raiſing 'up and increaſing that people in that nation; and 'the nations ſhall alſo hereby know, that the truth we 'poſſeſs is not a work of darkneſs, or propagated by 'ſtealth, and that we are not aſhamed of the goſpel 'of Chriſt, becauſe as we know it to be the power of 'God to ſalvation, and that we are no ways ſo incon-'ſiſtent with government, nor ſuch diſturbers of the 'peace, as our enemies, by traducing us, have ſought 'to make the world believe we are; for which to thee 'I dare appeal, as a witneſs of our peaceableneſs and 'Chriſtian patience. Generations to come ſhall not 'more admire that ſingular ſtep of Divine Providence, 'in reſtoring thee to thy throne without outward 'bloodſhed, than they ſhall admire the increaſe and 'progreſs of this truth without all outward help, and 'againſt ſo great oppoſition, which ſhall be none of 'the leaſt things rendering thy memory remarkable: 'God hath done great things for thee, he hath ſuf-'ficiently ſhewn thee, that it is by him Princes rule, 'and that he can pull down and ſet up at his pleaſure; 'he hath often warned thee by his ſervants, ſince he 'reſtored thee to thy royal dignity, that thy heart 'might not wax wanton againſt him, to forget his mer-'cies and providences towards thee, whereby he might 'permit thee to be ſoothed up and lulled aſleep in thy 'ſins by the flattering of court paraſites, who, by their 'fawning, are the ruin of many Princes.' But what follows in that dedication, is ſtill much ſtronger and more extraordinary, ſhewing clearly the ſpirit of the author, and how much truth there was in his aſſuring the King, that he did not write in order to flatter him: 'There is no King in the world, who can ſo experi-'mentally teſtify of God's Providence and goodneſs, 'neither is there any who rules ſo many free people, 'ſo many true Chriſtians, which thing renders thy 'government more honourable, thyſelf more conſide-'rable, than the acceſſion of many nations filled with 'ſlaviſh and ſuperſtitious ſouls. Thou haſt taſted of 'proſperity and adverſity, thou knoweſt what it is to 'be baniſhed thy native country, to be over-ruled, as 'well as to rule, and ſit upon the throne, and being 'oppreſſed, thou haſt reaſon to know, how hateful the 'oppreſſor is both to God and man: If after all 'thoſe warnings and advertiſements, thou doſt not 'turn unto the Lord with all thy heart, but forget him 'who remembered thee in thy diſtreſs, and give up thy-'ſelf to follow luſt and vanity, ſurely, great will be 'thy condemnation.' As to the book, it is entirely methodical, and contains a logical demonſtration of the propoſitions ſent abroad in his Theſes Theologicæ, and theſe, in few words, were as follow: I. Concerning the true foundation of knowledge. II. Concerning immediate revelation. III. Concerning the ſcriptures. IV. Concerning the condition of man in the fall. V. & VI. Concerning the univerſal redemption by Chriſt, and alſo the ſaving and ſpiritual Light, wherewith every man is enlightened. VII. Concerning juſtification. VIII. Concerning perfection. IX. Concerning perſeverance, and the poſſibility of falling from grace. X. Concerning the miniſtry. XI. Concerning worſhip. XII. Concerning baptiſm. XIII. Concerning the communion, or participation, of the body and blood of Chriſt. XIV. Concerning the power of the civil magiſtrates in matters purely religious and pertaining to the conſcience. XV. Concerning ſalutations and recreations, &c. He diſcourſes very largely and learnedly upon theſe heads, and yet with wonderful eaſe, and with the greateſt plainneſs imaginable; which may be eſteemed one great reaſon, why this book of his was ſo univerſally read and eſteemed by all ranks and degrees of people, and even by ſuch as oppoſed his doctrines with the greateſt zeal. His concluſion is remarkably pathetic, and he therein ſtates, with as much brevity and perſpicuity as is poſſible, the doctrines owned by, and thoſe imputed to Quakers, by their adverſaries; which, as it contains a great deal of matter in a very narrow compaſs, the reader will probably not be diſpleaſed to ſee. 'Thus, ſays he, be-'cauſe we have deſired people earneſtly to feel after 'God, near and in themſelves, telling them, that 'their notions of God, as he is beyond the clouds, 'will little avail them, if they do not feel him near: 'Hence they have ſought maliciouſly to infer, that 'we deny any God except that which is within us. 'Becauſe we tell people, that it is the light and the law 'within, and not the letter without, that can truly 'tell them their condition and lead them out of all 'evil: hence they ſay, we vilify the ſcriptures, and 'ſet up our own imaginations above them: becauſe 'we tell them, that it is not their talking or believing 'of Chriſt's outward life, ſufferings, death, and re-'ſurrection, no more than the Jews crying, the temple 'of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, that will ſerve 'their turn, or juſtify them in the ſight of God, but 'that they muſt know Chriſt in them, whom they 'have crucified, to be raiſed, and to juſtify them, and 'redeem them from their iniquities; hence, they ſay, 'we deny the life, death, and ſufferings of Chriſt, 'juſtification by his blood, and the remiſſion of ſins 'through him. Becauſe we tell them, while they 'are talking and determining about the reſurrection, 'that they have more need to know the juſt one 'whom they have ſlain, raiſed in themſelves, and to 'be ſure they are partakers in the firſt reſurrection, 'and that if this be, they will be the more capable to 'judge of the ſecond; hence, they ſay, that we deny 'the reſurrection of the body. Becauſe, when we hear 'them talk fooliſhly of heaven and hell, and the laſt 'judgment, we exhort them to come out of that helliſh 'condition they are in, and come down to the judg-'ment of Chriſt in their own hearts, and believe in 'the light and follow it, that ſo they may come to ſit 'in the heavenly places that are in Chriſt Jeſus: hence, 'they maliciouſly ſay, that we deny any heaven or hell 'but that which is within us, and that we deny any 'general judgment; which ſlanders, the Lord knows, 'are foully caſt on us, whom God hath raiſed for 'this end, and gathered us, that by us he might con-'found the wiſdom of the wiſe, and bring to nought 'the underſtanding of the prudent.' Theſe citations will afford the reader, a very clear notion of the general ſcope of this work, and of the ſpirit and ſtyle of this author, to which end they were abſolutely neceſſary, ſince his manner of thinking and writing, have in them ſomething ſo peculiar, that it is not poſſible to give the reader a juſt view of them any other way. It is ſaid by Mr. Voltaire, that Barclay's Addreſs and book had a proper effect upon King Charles II., and put a ſtop to that perſecution, to which the people called Quakers had been ſo much expoſed for many years (22): this, however, is very far from being well founded; for after this book was publiſhed, the Quakers were treated with as great or greater ſeverity than before; and, which comes ſtill cloſer to the point, both Colonel David Barclay, our author's father, and our author himſelf, had their ſhare in it, which plainly which has only contributed to make it more read and more esteemed, while very few of these answers have been hitherto much regarded, though many of them fell from the pens of men, who had before gained considerable reputation in the learned world [F]. Our author plainly proves this fact could not be true. Yet the King, perhaps, might be in some measure excused, for the heats of party in those times were so violent, that it was not in his power to hinder the law, under colour of which the Quakers were persecuted, from being put in execution. The suspicion he lay under of favouring Popery, put it out of his power to shew any indulgence to Dissenters of any denomination; and the enemies of the Quakers had so much address as to throw a suspicion of Popery even on them, though the writings of their most considerable men, and particularly those of Robert Barclay, are not only penned with as much warmth, but are to the full as conclusive against the doctrines of Popery, as any published by Protestants of what denomination soever (23). But though our author's apology had not this effect of stopping the persecution against the people in whose cause it was written; yet it answered a more important end, by shewing, that the pretences upon which they were persecuted were false and ill grounded; and that those, who, on one side, represented them as concealed Papists, and such, as, on the other hand, denied their being Christians, were equally in the wrong, and equally misled by their prejudices; and this sufficiently justifies what we have said in the text, of the great service our author's work did to those of his persuasion.

(22) Letters on the Engliſh Nation.

(23) See his Catechism, his Apology, his Vindication of his Apology, and other Tracts, as to the points controverted between Protestants and Papists.

[F] Gained considerable reputation in the learned world.] The author's design in writing this book, was not to shew his learning, though very great, or to magnify the cause he maintained, but to come at truth. It was with this view, he first sent abroad the Theses Theologicæ, containing the propositions which he intended to maintain, and a short explanation of their sense; and this he did, that he might obtain from such learned men as examined them, the objections to which they thought them liable. He next published the work itself in the Latin tongue, that it might again pass the examination of those who had read his first scheme, or draught of it; and after this, he translated it himself into English, for the general use of his countrymen. There could not certainly be a better or a fairer way found of bringing the sentiments he defended to the test of reason and scripture; and accordingly we find, that upon the first appearance of his propositions, they were examined by a person of great note amongst foreign Divines, one Nicholas Arnold, Professor in the university of Franequer (24), who had gained a great character by his polemical writings, and who undertook to deliver his sentiments of our author's work in a Theological Exercitation; and our author stated and answered all his objections in his book so fully, that nothing more was heard from him upon that subject. The next who appeared in this controversy was Mr. John Brown, a Presbyterian Divine in Scotland, of whose performance we shall speak more particularly in the next note. The third answer to the Apology fell from the pen of John George Bajerus of the Lutheran Church, Doctor in, and Professor of, Divinity at Jena (25). He wrote a large piece on the subject of the Beginning of the true and saving Knowledge of God, in which he very confidently attacks our author's Theses and Apology, intermixing some very harsh and injurious expressions, with what little he has in his book of argument: as for instance, he pretends that many of Barclay's expressions are improper, others absurd, and some unintelligible. But he was answered by Mr. George Keith, who was then our author's great friend; because at that time, Barclay's thoughts were so taken up with other concerns, that he had not leisure to write himself. This answer of Mr. Keith's was so full, and, with respect to the learned world, so satisfactory, that the Professor in Divinity never thought fit to reply to it (26). But it was not long before the Apology was attacked again by a Divine of the Augsburg Confession, one Christopher Holthusius (27), a famous Preacher at Francfort, whose work has received great commendations, and by some is represented as unanswerable, and a clear confutation of Barclay. But the book's being penned in the German language, is perhaps the best reason for its having remained so long without an answer, and if its merit were really so great as is pretended, one would think, that some or other of the German Divines would have put it into Latin, that, in this respect, it might have stood upon a level with the Apology, and the Answer be as universally read as the book itself. When our author's old friend and fellow-labourer George Keith, deserted the Quakers, he thought he could not do a greater service to the cause he had embraced, than by writing against the Apology, and accordingly he published an answer to it, under the title of The Quakers Standard examined. But besides these large works, which were written expressly against our author's Apology, there were others penned against particular parts of it. As for instance, Barclay, having in that work attacked, in his first, seventh, ninth, eleventh, fourteenth, and fifteenth Theses, the Lutherans, their sentiments were defended by one Mr. Reiser, a native of Augsburg, who being driven from that city for his religion, retired to Hamburgh, and there became Pastor of the church of St. James (28). The title of his book was, Anti-Barclaius, id est, Examen Apologiæ, quam non ita pridem Robertus Barclaius, Scoto-Britannus, pro Theologiâ vere Christiana edidit, institutum in gratiam Evangelicorum, a L. Anton. Reisero Augustano, nunc Pastore ad D. Jacobi Hamburgensis. That is, 'Barclay refuted, or an Examination 'of the Apology not long ago published by Robert 'Barclay, a Scotsman, for the true Christian Divinity, 'in defence of the Lutherans, &c.' We have a large account of this work in the Literary Journal of Leipsick, and a shorter in Baillet. This author is reputed a man of learning and ability; but however he gives his antagonist a good deal of hard language, charging him with many absurdities and various contradictions, yet, upon the whole, he freely acknowledges, that the Lutherans, in whose defence he writes, have some defects in their discipline, which the wisest and most pious men amongst them wish to see corrected. The Journalists of Leipsick, in speaking of this work, give a very high character of our author Barclay and his performance, and Baillet also acknowledges, that the Apology was looked upon as a most extraordinary book in its kind, and in which, the defence of the Quakers was carried as far as it was possible (29). The famous Mr. Thomas Bennet, who sought to raise his character, by attacking all who differed from the Church of England, published in 1705, a large work against the Quakers, which was very highly commended: the title of it ran thus, A Confutation of Quakerism, or a plain Proof of the Falsehood of what the principal Quaker Writers (especially Mr. R. Barclay in his Apology and other Works) do teach, concerning the Necessity of immediate Revelation in order to a Saving Christian Faith, the Being, Nature, and Operation of the pretended universal Light within, its Stirring with Men, moving them to Prayer, and calling them to the Ministry, Regeneration, Sanctification, Justification, Salvation, and Union of God, the Nature of a Church, the Rule of Faith, Water-Baptism, and the Lord's Supper; diverse Questions also concerning Perfection, Christ's Satisfaction, the Judge of Controversies, &c. are briefly stated and resolved. In this, as in all his other writings, Mr. Bennet discovers a great deal of heat and acrimony; but at the same time he confesses, that our Author's Apology is the exactest piece that ever was written in defence of Quakerism. His book was answered by several persons, and some of them treated him very roughly, as the reader will see in its proper place (30). The famous Mr. Trenchard (31), has likewise written with as much reason and good sense, and much greater decency, against our author, than any of his opponents, and he allows, that Christian Divinity, as stated in his Apology, is a most masterly, charitable, and reasonable system: but his exception lies against the first principle of our author's doctrine, which is immediate Revelation, and which this great man would willingly exchange for human reason, and this done, he says, he could have readily subscribed to a great part of his system. We shall see hereafter what our author said to a very great man, who, in his life-time, proposed the very same difficulty,

(24) See his Article in Bayle's Dictionary.

(25) G. Croese's Hist. of the Quakers, P. ii. p. 90.

(26) Histoire des Trembleurs, p. 156.

(27) History of the Quakers, P. ii. p. 91.

(28) Acta Eruditor. A. D. 1683. p. 553.

(29) Jugemens des Savans, tom. xii. edit. Amster. 1725. p. 249, 250.

(30) See his Article in this Dictionary.

(31) British Journal, No. XXX. and XXXI., and in the Collection of Cato's Letters.

†

Our author was not in the leaſt elevated by the ſurprizing ſucceſs of his writings, or the high veneration expreſſed for his abilities, even by the warmeſt of his adverſaries. On the contrary, he went on in his former method, and in the ſpace of two or three years following, publiſhed ſeveral other pieces, in ſupport of the doctrine delivered in that book, and thereby maintained the credit he had gained, and did incredible ſervice to thoſe of his perſuaſion all over Europe [G]. He travelled, likewiſe, with the famous Mr. William Penn, through the greateſt part of England, Holland, and Germany, was every where received with reſpect; and diſmiſſed with concern: for though his converſation as well as his manners were ſtrictly ſuitable to his doctrine, yet there was ſuch a ſpirit and livelineſs in his diſcourſe, and ſuch a ſerenity and chearfulneſs in his deportment, as rendered him extremely agreeable to all ſorts of people (n). It was indeed the peculiar felicity of Mr. Barclay, to gain ſo entire a conqueſt over envy, as to paſs through life (and which is ſo much the more wonderful, ſuch a life as his was) with almoſt univerſal applauſe, and without the leaſt imputation on his integrity. The great buſineſs of his life was doing good, promoting what he thought to be the knowledge of God, and conſequently the happineſs of man. He diſcovered the true principles of his life and conduct, in a large treatiſe of his upon the ſubject of Univerſal Love, in which he manifeſts ſuch high, and with all, ſuch rational ſentiments of humanity, as have juſtly recommended to univerſal applauſe, this noble deſcription of Chriſtian beneficence (o) [H]. His talents, however, were difficulty, and thereby engaged him to write largely upon this ſubject, which pieces of his it is very probable Mr. Trenchard never ſaw. The laſt antagoniſt of his that I ſhall mention, is the famous Mr. Thomas Chubb, who, in the year 1726, publiſhed a ſhort diſcourſe, occaſioned by the remarks of Mr. Trenchard before-mentioned, which was called An Examination of Mr. Barclay's Principles with regard to Man's natural Ability ſince the Fall, as laid down in his Book, entitled An Apology for the true Chriſtian Divinity, as the ſame is held forth, and preached by the People, called in Scorn, Quakers. Wherein is ſhewn, that the ſaid Principles are erroneous, and in which Human Nature is vindicated from the Burthen and Reproach he has loaded it with; in a Letter to a Friend, occaſioned by the great Commendation given to Mr. Barclay's Performance in the Britiſh Journal, No. XXXI. and now offered to the Conſideration of the People called Quakers. In the very beginning of this treatiſe the author declares roundly, that in his opinion, Mr. Barclay's book contained a confuſed, abſurd ſcheme of religion, in which God was conſidered as dealing with his creatures, not according to the moral fitneſs of things, but from arbitrary pleaſure. This induced one Mr. Bevan to write a treatiſe againſt his, which was entitled, Supernatural Influences neceſſary to Salvation, being a vindication of the fourth Propoſition of R. Barclay's Apology; to which Mr. Chubb replied, in a treatiſe entitled, Human Nature vindicated, as he likewiſe did to a letter written by Dr. Thomas Morgan of Briſtol, in ſupport of our author Barclay's opinion; and after this he wrote two other pieces againſt the ſame adverſaries, in which he purſues his argument againſt the Apology with his uſual vehemence (32). Thus we have given the reader a ſhort account of the anſwers to the Apology, in caſe he ſhould be inclined to examine this controverſy to the bottom. But at the ſame time we muſt put him in mind, that even the moſt bitter of his antagoniſts have conſtantly owned, that our author was a man of great candour and charity, one who loved truth ſincerely, and did not make uſe of his great learning and abilities, in order to impoſe, by the ſtrength of them, his own opinions on weaker minds.

(n) Hiſtoire des Trembleurs, p. 195.

(o) See the preface to R. Barclay's Works, p. 27.

(32) See Chubb's Tracts, 4to, 1730.

[G] Incredible ſervice to thoſe of his perſuaſion all over Europe.] In the text ſome notice was taken of a diſpute managed by our author againſt ſome ſtudents of Aberdeen. It made a great ſtir in the world, and the more becauſe both ſides claimed the victory, and therefore it was thought neceſſary to print a full account of it, which was accordingly done under the following title. A true and faithful Account of the moſt material Paſſages of a Diſpute, between ſome Students of Divinity (ſo called) of the Univerſity of Aberdeen, and the People called Quakers, held in Aberdeen in Scotland, in Alexander Harper his Cloſe (or Yard) before ſome hundred of Witneſſes, upon the fourteenth Day of the ſecond Month called April 1675, there being John Leſly, Alexander Sherriff, and Paul Gellie, Maſter of Arts, Opponents; and Defendants upon the Quakers Part, Robert Barclay, and George Keith, Præſes for moderating the Meeting choſen by them, Andrew Thompſon, Advocate, and by the Quakers, Alexander Skein, ſome Time a Magiſtrate of the City: Publiſhed for preventing Miſ-Reports by Alexander Skein, John Skein, Alexander Harper, Thomas Merſer, and John Cowie; to which is added, Robert Barclay's Offer to the Preachers of Aberdeen, renewed and reinforced. This was ſoon after followed by another piece in ſupport and defence of the Apology, or rather of the principles laid down in the Apology, which are likewiſe thoſe of the former diſpute, occaſioned by the ſtudents publiſhing a book, in which this whole controverſy was very unfairly ſtated. The title of this treatiſe, in which our author was, as the reader will ſee, aſſiſted by one of the Brethren, ran in the following terms; Quakeriſm confirmed, or a Vindication of the chief Doctrines and Principles of the People called Quakers, from the Arguments and Objections of the Students of Divinity (ſo called) of Aberdeen, in their Book entitled Quakeriſm canvaſſed; by Robert Barclay and George Keith. But beſides theſe formal challenges from the Students, our author and his friends were expoſed to ſome attempts of another ſort, ſuch as the large book written by Mr. John Brown againſt our author's Apology, in which he labours to prove, that the principles of Quakeriſm, inſtead of leading to Chriſtian perfection, were like to lead people into heatheniſm; and that, in ſhort, it was a ſyſtem raiſed out of private men's opinions, who had ſuch high conceits of their own notions, as to fancy them all ſuggeſted by the Holy Spirit. This book came out ſoon after our author's was publiſhed in Holland, in the Latin tongue, and Mr. Barclay quickly wrote a reply to it, which however he did not publiſh till ſome years afterwards; that is, he did not ſend it abroad till his firſt and great work, the Apology, came out, in Engliſh; that the generality of readers might have before them the whole controverſy in one language. This vindication was eſteemed by many (33), and particularly, by William Penn, to be equal in every reſpect to his Apology, and we do not find that either Brown, or any of his friends, offered any thing by way of rejoinder to this reply of our author's, who gave it the following title, viz. Robert Barclay's Apology for the true Chriſtian Divinity vindicated, from John Brown's Examination and pretended Confutation thereof, in his Book called, Quakeriſm the Path-way to Paganiſm: In which Vindication John Brown his many groſs Perverſions and Abuſes are diſcovered, and his furious and violent Railings and Revilings ſoberly rebuked by R. B. It was written, as we have obſerved, in 1677, but was not printed till 1679. Before our author's Vindication appeared, Brown's book was much magnified by his party in Scotland and Holland, which made the reply neceſſary.

(33) Preface to Barclay's Works, p. 31.

[H] This noble deſcription of Chriſtian beneficence.] This treatiſe, in which abundance of very weighty points are with great judgment and moderation handled, was penned by our author in the priſon of Aberdeen, in the beginning of the year 1677, and publiſhed ſoon after under the following title: Univerſal Love conſidered were not entirely confined to this kind of abſtracted writing. He was very capable of ſhining in another ſphere, and of treating ſuch affairs as the world eſteems of greateſt conſequence, with as much dignity, and as thorough a comprehenſion, as any man of his time, as appeared (when publiſhed) from his excellent letter to the public Miniſters at Nimeguen; and therefore we need not be ſurprized, that, notwithſtanding his profeſſion, this epiſtle was received with all the marks of eſteem and reſpect poſſible (p) [I]. His great modeſty, conſidered and eſtabliſhed upon its right Foundation, being a ſerious Enquiry how far Charity may, and ought to extend towards Perſons of different Judgments in Matters of Religion, and whoſe Principles among the ſeveral Sects of Chriſtians, do moſt naturally lead to that due Moderation required, writ in the Spirit of Love and Meekneſs for the removing of Stumbling-Blocks out of the Way of the Simple, by a Lover of the Souls of all Men, R. B. In this, as in all his other performances, our author was extremely methodical, taking the utmoſt care to handle thoroughly every part of his ſubject, and not to digreſs from it; ſo that whatever point is ſought for therein may be immediately found, and the reaſons on which he maintains it. This diſcourſe he divided into five ſections, the firſt containing an account of his own experience in this matter, and the reaſons which induced him to write upon this ſubject; in the ſecond, the nature of Chriſtian love and charity is demonſtrated, ſhewn to be conſiſtent with true zeal, and the means of diſtinguiſhing this from falſe zeal; in the third, we find the controverſy ſtated with reſpect to the different ſorts of Chriſtians, how it is to be fetched from the nature of their principles, and not from the practice of particular perſons; the fourth, contains an examination of the principles of ſeveral ſorts of theſe called Chriſtians, compared with this univerſal love and found defective; as 1. of Papiſts; 2. of Proteſtants in general; 3. of Socinians; and in the fifth, ſome principles of Chriſtianity are propoſed, as they are held by a great body of people, and ſome gathered churches in Great Britain and Ireland, which do very well agree with true univerſal love. Thus the reader may perceive, that the great end and deſign of this work was to recommend the perſuaſion he had embraced, as having in it a greater meaſure of Chriſtian charity that any other Church whatever. In the firſt ſection of this treatiſe, the author gives a large account of his own conduct in his youth, which, as it ſtrictly regards his perſonal hiſtory, cannot but be agreeable to the inquiſitive reader, and ſhall therefore find a place here in his own words (34):

(p) Sewell's Hiſt. of the Quakers, p. 569. Hiſtoire des Trembleurs, p. 195.

(34) Barclay's Works, p. 678.

'My firſt education from my infancy up, fell amongſt 'the ſtricteſt ſort of Calviniſts, thoſe of our country 'being acknowledged to be the ſevereſt of that ſect in 'the heat of zeal, ſurpaſſing not only Geneva (from 'whence they derive their pedigree), but all other the 'Reformed Churches abroad (ſo called); ſo that ſome 'of the French Proteſtants, being upbraided with the 'fruits of this zeal, as it appeared in Jo. Knox, Buchanan, and others, do (beſides what is peculiar to 'their principles of this kind) alledge the ſuper-abundance thereof to proceed a fervido Scotorum ingenio: i. e. from the violent complexion of our countrymen. I had ſcarce got out of my childhood 'when I was, by the permiſſion of Divine Providence, caſt among the company of Papiſts, and my 'tender years and immature capacity, not being able 'to withſtand and reſiſt the inſinuations that were 'uſed to proſelyte me to that way, I became quickly 'defiled with the pollutions thereof, and continued 'therein for a time, until it pleaſed God, through his 'rich love and mercy, to deliver me out of thoſe ſnares, 'and to give me a clear underſtanding of the evil of 'that way. In both theſe ſects the reader may eaſily believe, that I had abundant occaſion to receive impreſſions contrary to the principles of love herein 'treated of, ſeeing the ſtraitneſs of ſeveral of their 'doctrines, as well as their practice of perſecution, do 'abundantly declare, how oppoſite they are to univerſal love, as ſhall hereafter more at large be ſhewn. 'And albeit the time it pleaſed God to deliver me 'out of theſe ſnares, I was ſo young, that it may be 'preſumed, my obſervations could be but weak, and 'conſequently, my experience inconſiderable; yet 'foraſmuch as from my very childhood, I was very 'ambitious of knowledge, and by a certain felicity 'of underſtanding (I think I may ſay without vanity) 'ſucceſsful beyond many of my equals in age (though 'my obſervations at that time were but weak); yet 'ſince I have with more leiſure and circumſpection 'gathered thence ſo much experience, as I am confident will ſerve for a ſufficient foundation to any 'ſuperſtructure I ſhall build upon it in this treatiſe. 'The time that intervened betwixt my forſaking of 'the Church of Rome, and joining with whom I 'now ſtand engaged, I kept myſelf free from joining with any ſort of people, though I took liberty 'to hear ſeveral; and my converſe was moſt with 'thoſe that inveigh much againſt judging, and ſuch 'kind of ſeverity, ſeeming to complain greatly for 'want of this Chriſtian charity amongſt all ſects, 'which latitude may perhaps be eſteemed the other 'extream, oppoſite to the preciſeneſs of theſe other 'ſects, whereby I alſo received an opportunity to 'know what uſually is pretended on that ſide likewiſe, and thence can ſay ſomewhat experimentally 'on that part alſo.' There needs no more than to read this ſhort account of him from his own pen, to be abſolutely ſatisfied of the openneſs, ſimplicity, and frankneſs of his mind, which proſperity could not corrupt, or adverſity ſour; ſo true a ſenſe he had of his duty, and ſo little did he conſider what befel him while he was doing it.

[I] With all the marks of eſteem and reſpect poſſible.] The congreſs held at Nimeguen was to compoſe the long and perplexed liſt of diſputes, which for many years had diſturbed the peace of Europe, and had produced the fatal war of 1672, ſo prejudicial to the Dutch (35). This congreſs began in 1675, and the Plenipotentiaries appointed by King Charles II. were Sir William Temple and Sir Leoline Jenkins. All the Ambaſſadors preſent in this aſſembly were looked upon as the wiſeſt and moſt accompliſhed perſons in that age, and to them our author addreſſed his Epiſtle in theſe words: To the Ambaſſadors and Deputies of the Chriſtian Princes and States met at Nimeguen, to conſult the Peace of Chriſtendom, R. B. a Servant of Jeſus Chriſt, and hearty well-wiſher to the Chriſtian World, wiſhes increaſe of Grace and Peace, and the Spirit of ſound Judgment, with Hearts inclined and willing to receive and obey the Counſel of God. He proceeds to inform them, that being the ſummer before in Holland and Germany, it firſt came into his mind, from ſeeing the miſeries induced by war, to write to them as he now did; but that however he waited, as not willing to be haſty in a matter of ſuch importance; and now being at leiſure, and at his own home, he chearfully addreſſed himſelf to this great work, laying open to them the true cauſes of war, confuſion, and bloodſhed, the dreadful and barbarous conſequences attending it, and the only certain and indubitable means of attaining, by the purſuit of Chriſtian principles, true, laſting, and ſolid peace. After ſigning this letter, he dates it thus: 'This came 'upon me from the Lord to write unto you, at Ury in 'my native country of Scotland, the ſecond of the 'month called November, 1677:' After this we find the following account of the manner in which this letter was circulated, viz. 'Copies of the aforeſaid 'epiſtle in Latin, were upon the 23d and 24th days 'of the month called February, 1678, delivered at 'Nimeguen to the Ambaſſadors of the Emperor, of 'the Kings of Great Britain, Spain, and France, 'Sweden, and Denmark, of the Prince Elector Palatine, as alſo of the States-General, and of the Dukes 'of Lorrain, Holſtein, Lunenburg, Oſnabrug, Hanover, and the Pope's Nuncio, to wit, one to each 'Ambaſſador, and one to each of their Principals, 'together with ſo many copies of the book, whereof 'the author makes mention in the letter: The title 'whereof is, Robert Barclay his Apology, &c.' It is not at this diſtance of time poſſible to ſay what effect this epiſtle of our author's produced. But whatever it was, in regard to quickening the great work of peace, which was accompliſhed ſoon after, moſt certainly it took off thoſe prejudices, and wore away thoſe prepoſſeſſions, (35) See Sir Will. Temple's Letters, and the Life of Sir Leoline Jenkins.

modeſty, his extenſive learning, and, above all, his known ſincerity in matters of Philoſophy and Religion, made him acceptable to all, who were ſeriouſly inclined to the examination of thoſe important truths, which ought to influence the conduct of men in their paſſage through this life; and his zeal for theſe truths on the other hand, made him ever ready and willing to lend his aſſiſtance to ſuch, as doubted about thoſe things he thought clear and certain. There was a perſon of diſtinction in Holland, the Heer Adrian Paets, who had turned his conſiderations on ſuch ſubjects, and having received ſome wrong impreſſions as to the principles of the Quakers, wrote upon this head an epiſtle to Chriſtian Hartzoeker, which was not long after made public. With this worthy perſon, after his return from Spain, where he was reſident with a public character, from the States-General, our author had a long conference On the Poſſibility of an inward and immediate Revelation (q), which at parting he recommended to our author's recollection, which he underſtood to be an invitation to ſend him his farther thoughts upon that important point. He accordingly digeſted them into a large Latin letter, dated the twenty-fourth of November, 1676, which letter he tranſmitted to his friend Benjamin Furley at Rotterdam, who about a year after delivered it to the perſon for whom it was directed, and deſired, that if he was not entirely ſatisfied he would write an anſwer, which he promiſed, but did not perform. Some years after, the Heer Adrian Paets coming over to England, as one of the Commiſſioners for the Eaſt India Company, our author ſaw him at London, and diſcourſed with him again upon this head, repreſenting the matter to him, ſo that he readily yielded he had been miſtaken in his notion of the Quakers, for he found they could make a reaſonable plea for the foundation of their religion (r). Upon conſidering this matter attentively, and being urged thereto by his friends, our author thought fit to tranſlate this letter into Engliſh, and to make it public in the year 1686, which he accordingly did. It was the laſt, but not the leaſt, of the ſervices he rendered to thoſe of his perſuaſion, and has been eſteemed by ſuch as have read it with attention, as accurate and ſolid a piece as any that ever fell from his pen (s) [K]. He paſſed the remaining part of his life in quiet and peace, having a large family, which he governed with great dignity, wiſdom, and diſcretion, living always decently and honourably upon his own fortune, which was very conſiderable. He died at his own houſe at Ury, on the third of October, 1690, very near the forty-ſecond year of his age, of a ſickneſs which did not laſt long, and in which he teſtified the greateſt calmneſs and ſerenity of mind, grounded on a thorough confidence in God (t). Thoſe of his own perſuaſion gave, as they had juſt reaſon, the moſt ample teſtimonies concerning his life and manners, in terms full of warmth and of ſincerity, with ſome ſpecimens of which the reader will not be offended [L]. But it was not only from them that Robert Barclay received marks of pro-

(q) See R. Barclay's Preface to the Engliſh verſion of his Epiſtle.

(r) Sewell's Hiſt. of the Quakers, p. 536.

(s) See the Preface to his Works, p. 32.

(t) See the Teſtimony of P. Levingſtone prefixed to Barclay's Works.

poſſeſſions, which had been obtruded on them, with regard to the people called Quakers, as if they were a company of wild, ignorant, enthuſiaſtic creatures, governed by no certain principles, and aiming at no certain end: whereas this ſhewed them to be men of thought and ſolidity, addicted to no opinion ſo extravagant, as not to be comprehended in a general ſyſtem, or not equally calculated for promoting true piety and public peace.

[K] As accurate and ſolid a piece as ever fell from our author's pen.] This treatiſe, though not very long, has been regarded, however, as the very corner-ſtone of this ſyſtem of Divinity, and as ſuch we find it inſerted at large in Sewell's Hiſtory of the Quakers, with ſeveral other pieces relating thereto (36). In the Engliſh edition, publiſhed by our author, the title at large ran thus: 'The Poſſibility and Neceſſity of inward and immediate Revelation of the Spirit of God, towards the Foundation and Ground of true Faith, proved in a Letter written in Latin to a Perſon of Quality in Holland, and now alſo put into Engliſh by R. B.' His preface before this piece, though very conciſe, contains many cloſe and weighty obſervations altogether out of the common road, and which ſhew that its author had read and ſtudied what had been advanced on this ſubject by all parties; and the deciſion, as to the rule of faith ſet up by the Papiſts on one hand, and by the Proteſtants on the other, is very well worthy of notice. 'It is, ſays he, a queſtion now frequently toſſed, What is the ground and foundation of Faith? and when the matter is ſifted to the bottom, it reſolves in Tradition or Revelation: For thoſe who lay claim to the Scripture, and would not make it the foundation of their faith, do reſolve it but in a Tradition, when the motives of credibility are inquired into, ſince the ſubjective Revelation which they yield comes but in the laſt place, and is by themſelves termed medium incognitum aſſentiendi; and ſuch a Revelation thoſe of Rome will not refuſe to influence them to aſſent to the determination of the Church. So thoſe Proteſtants, who ſay the ſubjective operation of the Spirit influences them (though they know not how) to believe the Scripture, preſented, and conveyed to them by Tradition, as the dictates of God's Spirit, and ſo underſtand them as their Preachers interpret them; differ not much, or at leaſt, have not reaſon to differ from the Church of Rome, who ſay, the Spirit influences them to believe the Scriptures as propoſed by the Church, and according as her Doctors and Councils interpret them. And neither has any better foundation than Tradition, and to ſpeak the truth plainly, the faith of both reſolves in the veneration they have for their Doctors; but whereas the one affirms they do it by an entire ſubmiſſion, they think it decent to ſay, they judge them infallible, and certainly, it is moſt reaſonable, that ſuch as affirm the firſt, believe in the laſt. The other, becauſe they pretend they believe the Church, but continually have denied to her, infallibility, though generally they be as credulous as the other; and I find the Doctors of their Church as angry to be contradicted as the other. That is an ingredient goes to the compoſition of all Clergymen ſince it became a trade, and went to make a part of the outward policy of the world, from whence has flowed that monſter Perſecution. In ſhort, the matter is eaſily driven into this narrow compaſs: we believe either becauſe of an outward or inward teſtimony, that is, becauſe it is outwardly delivered, or inwardly revealed to us. For my part, I think the Papiſts do wiſely in pleading for infallibility, for certainly the true Church never was nor can be without it; and the Proteſtants do honeſtly in not claiming it, becauſe they are ſenſible they want it. I ſhould therefore deſire the one to prove that they are infallible; and adviſe the other to believe they may, and ſeek after it. But I am ſure neither the one is, nor the other cannot, without immediate divine revelation.'

(36) See that Hiſtory, p. 536.

[L] With ſome ſpecimens of which the reader will not be offended.] There were, I conceive, many good reaſons, profound eſteem and general approbation: he received the like while living, and his memory has, ſince his death, been treated with the ſame candour, by thoſe who differed from him in ſentiments, and even by ſuch as deſerted thoſe in which he lived and died; as the reader may ſee at the bottom of the page, though a few inſtances only are there mentioned, out of a multitude that might have been alledged to the ſame purpoſe (u) [M]. His (u) See Sewell's and Croeſe's Hiſtories of the Quakers, as before cited.

reaſons, eſpecially at this juncture, for prefixing teſtimonies of this nature, to the books of men of this profeſſion: for firſt, they ſhewed that ſuch men died, as well as lived in that communion, and truſted in their laſt moments to that faith they had preached while living. Next it ſhewed the union and conformity of the doctrines preached by the deceaſed to thoſe of that body of men, the heads of whom gave under their hands their approbations: and thirdly, it ſecured many remarkable paſſages of their lives from oblivion, and eſtabliſhed the truth of ſuch facts beyond all queſtion or altercation. In the preſent caſe, we find at the end of the large Preface to our author's works, a general atteſtation, dated at London, September 16, 1691, and ſigned by ſeven of the moſt eminent perſons of that perſuaſion. Of theſe the firſt is that of George Fox, the father of this ſect, who ſpeaks thus of him: 'He was, ſays he, a ſcholar, and a man 'of great parts, and underwent many calumnies, 'ſlanders, and reproaches, and ſufferings, for the name 'of Chriſt, but the Lord gave him power over them 'all. He travelled often up and down Scotland, 'and in England, and in Holland, and Germany, 'and did good ſervice for the Lord, and was a man 'of repute among men, and preached the ever-'laſting goſpel of Chriſt freely, turning people from 'darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto 'God.' The next teſtimony to the memory of Robert Barclay, is by his faithful friend William Penn, who gives a large account both of his life and writings, with which no man was better acquainted, and therefore, the greater regard ought to be had to what he delivers as to the character of the deceaſed, which take in his own words: 'We ſometimes travelled to-'gether, both in this kingdom and in Holland, and 'ſome parts of Germany, and were inward in diverſe 'ſervices from firſt to laſt, and the apprehenſion I had 'of him was this, he loved the truth and way of 'God, as revealed among us above all the world, and 'was not aſhamed of it before men, but bold and 'able in maintaining it, ſound in judgment, ſtrong in 'argument, chearful in travels and ſufferings, of a 'pleaſant diſpoſition, yet ſolid, plain, and exemplary 'in his converſation. He was a learned man and a 'good Chriſtian, an able Miniſter, a dutiful ſon, and 'a loving huſband, a tender and careful father, an 'eaſy maſter, and a good and kind neighbour and 'friend. Theſe eminent qualities in one that had em-'ployed them ſo ſerviceably, and that had not lived 'much above half the life of a man (having out-lived 'his father but few years, and died at leaſt thirty 'years ſhort of his age), aggravates the loſs of him, 'eſpecially in that nation where he lived.' To add but one more, Andrew Jaffray, who had lived with him in all the ſtrictneſs of private friendſhip, as well as a member in the ſame ſociety, and himſelf reputed as honeſt and upright a man as any in his country, ſpeaks of him in theſe terms: 'He was an exemplary 'huſband, parent, and maſter in his family; ſo that 'the beauty, good order, holineſs, gravity, and low-'lineſs of the truth ſhined therein, I can ſay to my 'refreſhment, and many others as in a quiet habita-'tion. He was a man of great meekneſs, ſweetneſs, 'and lowlineſs of ſpirit, and of ſuch a bearing con-'tented mind, that though a man of ſuch great parts 'and great authority over evil, in his ſervants, and 'others, yet kept in ſuch a dominion over any 'thing that would have diſordered his own ſpi-'rit, that I can truly ſay, I never ſaw him in any 'peeviſh, angry, brittle, or diſorderly temper, ſince 'ever I knew him, though I had as much intimacy, and 'frequency of concerns with him as moſt thereaway: 'he was ſo far from being lifted up or exalted, by the 'great gifts he had received from his Maker, both in 'truth, and as a man, that I can ſay I have often de-'ſired to grow in the plain, downright, humble, and 'lowly ſpirit, wherein he became as weak with the 'weakeſt, and poor with the pooreſt, and low with 'the loweſt, as well as he could be deep with thoſe 'that were deep, ſo that in a good meaſure he had 'learned to become all things, to all men, with a 'true and upright endeavour to gain ſome.' We may join to theſe the teſtimony of the Hiſtorian, William Sewell, an eminent Dutch Quaker, though of Engliſh extraction, the rather, ſince he did not write from hearſay, or with a view of raiſing the credit of one of the moſt eminent defenders of his religious ſentiments, but from his perſonal knowledge, and full perſuaſion from thence of the truth of what he writes. The character he gives him runs thus (37): 'A man of 'eminent gifts and great endowments, expert not 'only in the languages of the learned, but alſo well 'verſed in the writings of the ancient Fathers, and 'other eccleſiaſtical writers, and furniſhed with a great 'underſtanding, being not only of a ſound judgment, 'but alſo ſtrong in arguments, chearful in ſufferings: 'beſides, he was of a friendly and pleaſant, yet grave 'converſation, and eminently fitted for the compoſing 'of differences; and he really lived up to what he 'profeſſed, being of an unblameable deportment, 'truly pious, and well beloved of thoſe he converſed 'with.'

(37) Hiſtory of the Quakers, p. 627, 628.

[M] Out of a multitude that might have been alledged to the ſame purpoſe.] In that learned, candid, and copious Hiſtory of the Quakers, written in Latin by Gerard Croeſe (38), who was, however, far enough from agreeing with them in opinions, our author and his writings are very often mentioned, and always applauded. The author of the Hiſtory of the Quakers in French, who is ſuppoſed to be a very learned Jeſuit, gives our author a very high character, and ſpeaks of his book as written with the greateſt elegance, his language being, as he ſays, perfectly pure, and his manner of writing cloſe, preciſe, and carrying in it a ſtrong appearance of truth and reaſon (39). Mr. Jeremiah Jones, though a very warm writer, is diſpoſed to think very kindly of our author, and acknowledges him a man unqueſtionably of a good genius (40). Mr. Geo. Keith, who left the Quakers, and wrote againſt that very book of Barclay's which himſelf had ſo ſtrenuouſly defended, allows, nevertheleſs, that he ought to be placed amongſt ſuch erring Chriſtians, as cannot be denied to be in Chriſt (41). But the famous Mr. Norris of Bemerton goes much farther; for he tells us, that he cannot help thinking, the ſect of the Quakers to be far the moſt conſiderable of any that divide from the Church, in caſe the Quakeriſm that is generally held be the ſame with that which Mr. Barclay has delivered to the world, whom I take, ſays he, to be ſo great a man, that, I profeſs freely, I had rather engage againſt an hundred Bellarmins, Hardings, and Stapletons, than with one Barclay (42). Mr. Bennett, who is by many thought to have written as well againſt the Quakers as any (43), ſpeaks with great deference of our author's abilities, expreſſed in the defence of theſe people, and ſays, he employed them in dreſſing up their religion to the beſt advantage. The celebrated Mr. Voltaire (44), ſpeaking of the Apology, allows, that it is a work as well executed as the ſubject would poſſibly admit. And laſt of all Mr. Trenchard (45), whom we have before mentioned, aſſerts, with reſpect to the ſame book, that Mr. Barclay has defended his opinions with as much wit, happy turn, and maſtery of expreſſion, as is conſiſtent with the plainneſs and ſimplicity affected by thoſe of his ſect, and for the moſt part uſed in the Holy Writings. Thus it clearly appears from the concurring judgments of friends, of enemies, and of indifferent perſons, that our author was both a great and a good man; which is ſufficient to juſtify the pains taken in this article to preſerve his memory, and to repreſent him, as far as we are able, in the light which his learning and labours have ſo well deſerved. C.

(38) See the Engliſh Tranſlation, p. 150, 151. P. ii. p. 35. 90.

(39) Hiſtoire des Trembleurs, p. 151.

(40) New and Full Method of ſettling the Canonical Authority of the New Teſtament, Vol. ii. p. 489.

(41) Quakers Standard examined, p. 405.

(42) Second Treatiſe of the Light within, p. 32.

(43) See the note [F].

(44) Letters on the Engliſh nation, p. 22.

(45) Britiſh Journal, No. XXXI.

[In the year 1740, was publiſhed, at Aberdeen, a ſmall pamphlet, entitled, 'A Genealogical Account 'of the Barclays of Urie, formerly of Mathers; ex-'tracted from ancient Regiſters, and authentic Docu-'ments. Together with Memoirs of the Life of Co-'lonel David Barclay of Urie, and of his eldeſt Son, 'the late Robert Barclay of Urie. Collected for the 'Informa-

His character being given ſo fully in theſe paſſages, there is no need of expatiating farther on it here.

'Information and Uſe of their Poſterity.' This pamphlet, which, though anonymous, appears to have been written from the beſt information, traces the family from towards the beginning of the twelfth century, and mentions twenty-one perſons, who may ſucceſſively be conſidered as having been the heads of it, down to Robert Barclay of Urie, great-grandſon to the ſubject of the preſent article. From the account it is evident, that the Barclays are not only a very ancient, but a very honourable family; having been connected, by alliances and intermarriages, with the moſt noble and illuſtrious houſes in Scotland. Their original name, which was de Berkley, was changed into the manner in which it is now, and hath ever ſince been ſpelt, by Alexander Barclay, who lived in the fifteenth century. To this Alexander Barclay, who was reputed a ſcholar, and ſomething of a poet, are aſcribed the following verſes, made by a Laird of Mathers, and given as advice to his ſon and ſucceſſors:

'Giff thou deſire thy houſe lang ſtand,
'And thy ſucceſſors bruik thy land;
'Abive all things lief God in fear:
'Intromit nought with wrangous gear:
'Nor conqueſs nothing wrangouſly:
'With thy neighbour keep charity.
'See that thou paſs not thy eſtate:
'Obey duly thy Magiſtrate.
'Oppreſs not, but ſupport the puire:
'To help the common-weill take cuire.
'Uſe no deceit: mell not with treaſon:
'And to all men do right and reaſon.
'Both unto word and deed be true:
'All kind of wickedneſs eſchew.
'Slay no man, nor thereto conſent:
'Be nought cruel, but patient.
'Allya ay in ſome good place,
'With noble, honeſt, godly race:
'Hate huirdome, and all vices flee:
'Be humble, haunt guid companie.
'Help thy friend, and do nae wrang,
'And God ſhall cauſe thy houſe ſtand lang.'

David, the father of Colonel David Barclay of Urie, for want of attending to ſome part of this excellent advice of his anceſtor, was brought into ſuch difficulties, that he was obliged to ſell, firſt the eſtate of Mathers, and then the old eſtate of the family, after the former had been in their poſſeſſion nearly three hundred, and the latter upwards of five hundred, years.

Colonel David Barclay, who purchaſed the eſtate of Urie in 1648, entered, when young, a volunteer into the Swediſh army, under Guſtavus Adolphus King of Sweden. In this army he ſerved till he was made a Major. Upon the breaking out of the civil war in his own country, he was called home by his relations, and ſoon obtained a regiment of horſe. In his military operations, and in friendſhip, he was intimately connected with Major General Middleton. A falſe and malicious report has been ſpread, that Colonel David Barclay ſerved under Oliver Cromwell againſt the King: whereas he was deprived of his regiment, at Oliver's inſtance, for having been engaged in the deſign of the Duke of Hamilton to relieve his Majeſty, when a priſoner in the Iſle of Wight. From this time, the Colonel was never concerned in any military tranſactions. He was afterwards choſen a Member of Parliament, firſt for the county of Sutherland, and then twice for the ſhires of Angus and Mearns. While he was in this ſituation, he vigorouſly oppoſed, and voted againſt, Cromwell's being made King. Notwithſtanding Colonel Barclay's loyalty, and his having ſuffered in the cauſe of Charles the Firſt, he was, about the year 1663, at the inſtigation of ſome malicious perſons, committed cloſe priſoner, by order of the government, to the Caſtle of Edinburgh. This event, as his attachment to royalty was ſo well known, was very unintelligible, and occaſioned a general ſurpriſe. Whatever was the cauſe of his commitment, he owed his deliverance to the ſtrong interpoſition of his old and never failing friend, General, and then Earl of Middleton, his Majeſty's Commiſſioner to the Parliament; and he was ſet at liberty without any thing having been laid to his charge, or any reaſon given for his confinement. In the tract before us, a great, and, we doubt not, a juſt character is drawn of Colonel David Barclay.

Robert Barclay is ſaid, in the preceding article, to have been born at Edinburgh. But, according to the pamphlet juſt referred to, Collier and Penn, upon whoſe teſtimony this aſſertion is founded, wrote from miſinformation. Our Apologiſt, who was the eldeſt ſon of Colonel David Barclay, was born at Gordonſtoun, in the ſhire of Murray, December 23d, 1648. Gordonſtoun was the place to which the Colonel retired, and where he lived for ſeveral years, after he had quitted the army. We are aſſured, on the ſame authority, that Robert Barclay was not, when at Paris for education, drawn over, by his uncle, to the Romiſh religion. On the contrary, though he was promiſed by his uncle, that, if he would ſtay with him, he would purchaſe and give him a greater eſtate than his father's, he withſtood all his ſolicitations. When, in the year 1676, upon his return from a viſit to Holland and Germany, he heard, at London, that his father and other friends were impriſoned at Aberdeen, he preſented, with his own hand, an addreſs, in their behalf, to Charles the Second; a favourable reference to which the King cauſed his Secretary, the Duke of Lauderdale, to underwrite in theſe words:

'His Majeſty is graciouſly pleaſed to refer this 'paper to the Right Honourable the Lords of his
'Majeſty's Privy Council of Scotland.
Whitehall,
Aug. 7th, 1676. (Signed) 'LAUDERDALE.'

Upon this, Colonel Barclay and the reſt were ſet at liberty. However, the next year, Robert Barclay, his father, and a number of Quakers, were committed upon the old pretence of their religion. All the favour the two Barclays obtained was, to be put into a better priſon than their brethren. As Sharp, Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, was a great inſtrument in the perſecution of the Quakers, Robert Barclay, while under confinement, wrote an excellent letter to that Prelate, which, if it were not too long, and if ſimilar obſervations had not before occurred, we ſhould with pleaſure have inſerted. This was the laſt time of our Apologiſt's being impriſoned; and, by his intereſt at court, he was frequently uſeful in preventing, ſoftening, or removing the ſeverities exerciſed againſt his religious friends. He had a zealous patron in Elizabeth, Princeſs Palatine of the Rhine. This Lady, who had a high regard both for him and all the Quakers, carried on a frequent correſpondence with him, and many of her letters are ſtill preſerved in the Barclay family. Two of her letters to Robert Barclay, beſides one which ſhe ſent to her brother Prince Rupert, intreating him to uſe his intereſt for putting a ſtop to the perſecution of the Quakers, and one from Barclay to her, written with a ſingular ſpirit of piety and ſimplicity, are printed in the tract before mentioned. About the year 1679, Mr. Barclay obtained a Charter, under the Great Seal, from King Charles the Second, erecting his lands of Urie into a free Barony, with a civil and criminal juriſdiction to him and his heirs for ever. This Charter was afterwards ratified by Act of Parliament, by James the Seventh of Scotland, and ſecond of England, 'for the many faithful ſervices done by Co'lonel David Barclay, and his ſon, the ſaid Robert
'Barclay, to the King and his moſt royal progenitors
'in times paſt.' In 1680, Mr. Barclay being called to Edinburgh by ſome law buſineſs, or private concerns, it appears, by letters to him from the Duke of York and the Earl of Perth, that he had their recommendation and ſupport in the tranſacting of his affairs. In 1682, he was elected Governor of Eaſt Jerſey, by the proprietors of that province. And, to induce him to accept of the office, he was made a joint-proprietor, with a power of beſtowing five thouſand acres more, as he ſhould think fit. Upon account of his peculiar merit, the government was to be held for life, though no other Governor after him was to be continued longer than three years. He had, likewiſe, a power of appointing a Deputy Governor, which he accordingly did. He never went to Eaſt Jerſey himſelf; but his brother John ſettled there, and his brother David, a youth of great hopes, who had gone out with the ſame intention, died upon his voyage. As Robert Barclay, in 1683, was returning from London to Scotland with ſome friends, they were attacked, between Huntington and Stilton, by a party of robbers. One of the highwaymen pointing a piſtol to Mr. Barclay's breaſt, he took him by the arm, and calmly aſked him, How he came to be ſo rude, for he knew his buſineſs? Upon this, the fellow, trembling, dropt the piſtol out of his hand, in great ſurprize, upon the ground; and, while the reſt of the company were rifled, did not ſo much as ſearch, or demand any thing from Robert Barclay. In 1687, and in 1688, we find our Apologiſt again at London. His journeys, which were frequent, were uſually taken for the benefit, and at the earneſt requeſt of his friends the Quakers, who ſtood in need of his intereſt at Court, to ſcreen them from perſecution. Robert Barclay, like William Penn, appears to have had a conſiderable attachment to King James the Second. He was much concerned for that Prince's misfortunes, and held ſeveral diſcourſes with him upon the poſture of his affairs in 1688, and about the methods which might be proper to ſettle the impending differences. Suitable reſolutions were ſometimes taken; but, one way or other, they were prevented from being carried into execution. At their laſt parting, as Mr. Barclay was ſtanding alone with the King in a window, his Majeſty, looking out, ſaid, 'That 'the wind was now fair for the Prince of Orange's 'coming over:' upon which, Mr. Barclay took occaſion to obſerve, that 'it was hard no expedient 'could be found out to ſatisfy the people.' To this the King replied, that 'He would do any thing be-'coming a Gentleman, except to part with liberty 'of conſcience, which he never would, while he 'lived.'

A Scots Poet, writing of the two famous Barclays, William and John, hath concluded with theſe verſes upon Robert:

'But lo! a third appears, with ſerious air;
'His Prince's darling, and his country's care.
'See his religion, which ſo late before
'Was like a jumbled maſs of droſs and ore,
'Refin'd by him, and burniſh'd o'er with art,
'Awakes the ſpirits and attracts the heart.'

After Mr. Barclay's deceaſe, his widow received many letters of condolement, not only from friends of his own religious perſuaſion, but from other perſons of rank and character. He left ſeven children, all of whom were alive in October 1740, fifty years after their father's death. There were living, at the ſame time, between fifty and ſixty grandchildren and great-grandchildren; ſo that his deſcendants, taken together, then amounted to between ſixty and ſeventy (46).] K.

(46) See paſſim, the pamphlet before mentioned, which has been obligingly put into our hands by Mr. Reed of Staples Inn.

BARKHAM, or BARCHAM (JOHN), a very learned Divine and Antiquarian, in the end of the XVIth, and part of the XVIIth century, was born in the pariſh of St. Mary the More, in the city of Exeter, about the year 1572 (a). He was the ſecond ſon of Lawrence Barkham, of St. Leonard's, near that city [A]; by Joan his wife, daughter of Edward Bridgeman of Exeter, a near relation of John Bridgeman, Biſhop of Cheſter. In Michaelmas Term, 1587, he was entered a Sojourner of Exeter-college in Oxford; and on the twenty-fourth of Auguſt, the year following, admitted Scholar of Corpus-Chriſti-college in the ſame Univerſity (b). He took the degree of Bachelor of Arts, February 5, 1590-1 (c), and that of Maſter, December 12, 1594 (d). On the twenty-firſt of June, 1596, he was choſen Probationer-Fellow of Corpus Chriſti-college above mentioned; being then in orders (e): And July 7, 1603, took the degree of Bachelor in Divinity (f). Some time after, he became Chaplain to Ric. Bancroft, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and, after his death, to George Abbot, his ſucceſſor in that ſee (g). On the eleventh of June, 1608, he was collated to the rectory of Finchley in Middleſex (h); and on the thirty-firſt of October, 1610, to the prebend of Brownſwood, in the cathedral of St. Paul's (i): moreover, on the twenty-ninth of March, 1615, to the rectory of Packleſham (k); the twenty-ſeventh of May following to the rectory of Lachingdon (l); and, the fifth of December, 1616, to the rectory and deanry of Bocking, all in the county of Eſſex (m). But, in 1617, he reſigned Packleſham (n); as he had done Finchley, in 1615 (o). The fourteenth of March, 1615, he was created Doctor in Divinity (p). He had great ſkill and knowledge in moſt parts of uſeful learning; being an exact Hiſtorian, a good Herald, an able Divine, a curious Critic, maſter of ſeveral languages, an excellent Antiquarian, and well acquainted with coins and medals, of which he had the beſt collection of any Clergyman in his time. Theſe he gave to Dr. Laud, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who made a preſent of them to the Univerſity of Oxford; and they are to this day kept in the picture-gallery, over the public ſchools there (q). Dr. Barkham wrote ſeveral pieces [B], but never put his name to any. He died at Bocking, March 25, 1642, and was buried in the chancel of that church, without a monument.

(a) The Worthies of Devon, &c. by J. Prince, edit. Exeter, 1701, fol. p. 101.

(b) Wood, Ath. edit. 1721, Vol. ii. col. 19.

(c) Idem, Faſti, Vol. i. col. 139.

(d) Ibid. col. 148.

(e) Idem Athen. ubi ſupra.

(f) Idem. Faſti, col. 165.

(g) Idem. Ath. ubi ſupra.

(h) Newcourt's Repertorium Eccleſiaſtic. &c. Vol. i. p 605.

(i) Ibid. p. 123.

(k) Idem, Vol. i. p. 459.

(l) Ibid. p. 355.

(m) Ibid. p. 68, 69.

(n) Ibid. p. 459.

(o) Idem, Vol. i. p. 605.

(p) Wood, Faſti, Vol. i. col. 200.

(q) Idem. Athen. ubi ſupra.

[A] The ſecond ſon of Laurence Barkham, &c.] This Laurence was the ſon of William Barkham of Merefield in Dorſetſhire, where his anceſtors had reſided for above three generations (1). Laurence, above mentioned, was Steward of the city of Exeter in 1576 (2).

(1) Wood, Ath. edit. 1721, Vol. ii. col. 19.
(2) Prince, as above.

[B] Dr. Barkham wrote ſeveral pieces.] He was, in particular, very helpful to John Speed, in compoſing his Hiſtory of Great Britaine, &c. as that author thankfully acknowledges, in the following words (3): 'The like moſt acceptable helpes, both of bookes 'and collections (eſpecially in matters remoter from 'our own times), I continually received from that 'worthy Divine, Mr. John Barkham, a gentleman 'compoſed of learning, vertue, and curteſie, as being 'no leſſe ingenuouſly willing, then learnedly able, to 'advance and forward all vertuous endevours.' What part eſpecially of that hiſtory Dr. Barkham compoſed, was, I. The Life and Reign of King John; which ſheweth more reading and judgment than any life beſides in that book (4). II. He wrote, or at leaſt had a chief hand in compoſing, The Life and Reign of King Henry II., in the ſame hiſtory (5). III. He is likewiſe the author of The Diſplay of Heraldry, &c. firſt publiſhed at London in 1610, Fol. under the name of John Guillim; being the beſt in that kind for method that ever was printed before. The learned author having moſtly compoſed it in his younger years, thought it too light a ſubject for him (who was a grave Divine) to own. Therefore, being well acquainted with John Guillim, an Herald, he gave him the copy; who adding ſome trivial things publiſhed it, with the author's leave, under his own name; and it goeth to this day under the name of Guillim's Heraldry (6): IV. He publiſhed Mr. Ric. Crakanthorpe's book againſt the Archbiſhop of Spalato, intitled, Defenſio Eccleſiæ

(3) In the ſummary Concluſion of his Hiſtory, &c. the laſt page but one.

(4) Wood, Ath. ut ſupra. Which is the King of all the Reigns in that book for profound penning: as Fuller expreſſes it, ubi ſupra.
(5) See in the article BOULTON (EDMOND).
(6) Wood, Ath. Vol. ii. col. 19, & Vol. i. col. 459. Fuller ſays that Guillim 'was 'much beholden 'to this Doctor's 'emendations.' Ubi ſupra.

monument. He was a man of ſtrict life and converſation, charitable, modeſt, and reſerved in his behaviour and diſcourſe; but, above all, remarkable for thoſe good qualities which become a Clergyman (r). By his wife, Anne Rogers, of Sandwich in Kent, he had ſeveral children (s).

(r) Ibid. See alſo Prince, as above; and Fuller's Worthies, in Exeter, p. 276.

(s) Wood, ubi ſupra.

Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ contra M. Anton. de Dominis Archiep. Spalatenſis injurias. Lond. 1625, 4*to*, with a learned Preface of his own. V. He wrote 'A Book 'concerning Coins;' never publiſhed. He was a great maſter of that ſubject; being, as Fuller expreſſes it (7), 'A greater lover of coins than of money, rather curious in the ſtamps, than covetous for the metal 'thereof.' M.

(7) Worthies, ubi ſupra.

BARLOWE (WILLIAM), a learned Biſhop in the XVIth century, was at firſt a Monk in the Auguſtin-monaſtery of St. Oſith in Eſſex. There he was educated in learning, and at Oxford, where the religious of that Order had an abbey and a priory; and, arriving to a competent knowledge of Divinity, was made Doctor in that faculty (a). He was afterwards Prior of the Canons of his order at Biſham in Berkſhire, and by that title was ſent on an embaſſy to Scotland, in 1535 (b). At the diſſolution of the monaſteries, he readily reſigned his houſe (c) [A], and prevailed upon many Abbots and Priors to do the like (d). Having by this means ingratiated himſelf with the King, he was appointed Biſhop of St. Aſaph; and the temporalities being delivered to him on the ſecond of February, 1535 (e), he was conſecrated the twenty-ſecond of the ſame month (f). Thence he was tranſlated to St. Davids, in April 1536 (g), where he formed the project of removing the epiſcopal See to Caermardhyn, as being more in the midſt of the dioceſe, but without ſucceſs. In 1547 he was tranſlated to Bath and Wells [B]; but being a zealous profeſſor and preacher of the Proteſtant religion, he was, in 1553, upon Queen Mary's acceſſion to the throne, deprived of his Biſhoprick, on pretence of his being married (h). He was, likewiſe, committed to the Fleet, where he continued priſoner for ſome time: at length, finding means to eſcape, he retired, with many others, into Germany, and there lived in a poor condition, till Queen Elizabeth's happy inauguration (i). Returning then to his native country, he was not reſtored to his See (k), but advanced to the Biſhoprick of Chicheſter, in December 1559 (l); and, the next year, was made the firſt Prebendary of the firſt ſtall in the collegiate church of Weſtminſter, founded by Queen Elizabeth; which dignity he held five years with his Biſhoprick (m). This learned Biſhop wrote ſome things, of which we ſhall give an account in the note [C]. He died in Auguſt, 1568, and was buried in Chicheſter cathedral (n). What is moſt particularly remarkable concerning him, is, that by his wife Agatha Welleſbourne he had five daughters, who were all married to Biſhops, namely, 1, Anne, married firſt to Auſtin Bradbridge, and afterwards to Herbert Weſtphaling, Biſhop of Hereford. 2. Elizabeth, wife of William Day, Dean of Windſor, afterwards Biſhop of Wincheſter. 3. Margaret, wife of William Overton, Biſhop of Litchfield and Coventry. 4. Frances, married firſt to Matthew Parker, younger ſon of Matthew Parker, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and

(a) Bale, Script. Britan. Cent. IX. n. 41. and Wood, Athenæ, Vol. i. col. 156. edit. 1721.

(b) Wood, ibid. and col. 670.

(c) Acta Regia, &c. publiſhed by T. Rymer, Vol. xiv.

(d) Wood, ibid. col. 156.

(e) Pat. 27 Hen. VIII. p. 2.

(f) Godwin de Præſulibus, &c. Lond. 1616, p. 663.

(g) Ibid. p. 614.

(h) Wood, Ath. ubi ſupra.

(i) Ibid.

(k) Idem. col. 699.

(l) Godwin de Præſulibus, &c. p. 562. He was confirmed in that See, Dec. 20.

(m) Wood, ubi ſupra, col. 156.

(n) Idem, col. 157.

[A] At the diſſolution of the monaſteries, he readily reſigned his houſe.] A. Wood ſays (1), that 'About 'the time of the diſſolution of his Priory, he was 'elected to the epiſcopal ſee of St. Aſaph.' But he was certainly made Biſhop in 1535, and the reſignation of that houſe, as inſerted in Rymer's Acta Regia, &c. (2), bears date June 9, 1539. So that there muſt be a miſtake ſomewhere. Perhaps Barlowe reſigned, or quitted his priory in 1535, and another (a formal) reſignation of it was made in 1539: Or elſe, probably, that reſignation is miſplaced in the confuſed and ill-digeſted collection, publiſhed under T. Rymer's name.

(1) Athenæ, Vol. i. col. 156.

(2) Vol. xiv.

[B] He was tranſlated to Bath and Wells.] Of which he alienated moſt of the revenues. See Brief View of the State of the Church of England, &c. by Sir John Harrington, p. 106, &c.

[C] This learned Biſhop wrote ſome things, &c.] Namely, I. Chriſtian Homilies. II. Coſmography. III. He was one of thoſe Biſhops who compiled, The godly and pious Inſtitution of a Chriſtian Man, commonly called, The Biſhop's Book. Printed at London, 1537. IV. There is in Biſhop Burnet's Hiſtory of the Reformation (3), 'His Anſwers to certain 'Queries concerning the Abuſes of the Maſs.' V. In Edward the VIth's reign, he is ſaid to have tranſlated into Engliſh the Apocrypha, as far as the book of Wiſdom (4). We ſhould have obſerved above, That he was employed by King Henry VIII., particularly in the great cauſe between that King and the Pope about his divorce; and was greatly in favour with the Lady Anne Boleyn (5). M.

(3) Vol. ii. Collect. of Records, No. 25.

(4) A. Wood, ubi ſupra, col. 157. Bale, ubi ſupra.

(5) Strype's Annals of the Reformation, Vol. i. 2d edit. p. 552.

[According to Tanner, Biſhop Barlow was deſcended of the ancient family of the Barlows in Wales, and was born in the county of Eſſex. He was honoured, at Oxford, with the degree of Doctor in Divinity. Beſides the work ſpecified above, he wrote, A Dialogue deſcribing theſe Lutheran Factions, and many of their Abuſes (the ſecond edition of which was printed at London, 1553), and ſome pieces mentioned in the following letter to King Henry the Eighth, which ſhews that our author had not in him the ſpirit of a Martyr: 'Prayſe be to God, who of his infy-'nyte goodneſs and mercy ineſtymable hath brought 'me out of darkneſs into light, and from deadly 'ignorance unto the quick knowledge of the truth. 'From the whiche, through the fiend's inſtigation and 'falſe perſuaſion, I have greatly ſwerved. Inſomuch 'that I have made certayn bokes, and have ſoffred 'theym to be emprinted: As the Treatiſe of The 'Buryall of the Maſſe: A Dialogue betwene the Gen-'tilman and the Huſbandman: The climing up of Fryers 'and religious Perſons portred with Figures: A De-'ſcription of God's Word compared to the Light: Alſo 'a co-Dialogue without any title, inveying eſpecially 'againſt St. Thomas of Canterbury, which as yet 'was never prynted, nor publiſhed openly. In theſe 'tretiſes I perceive and acknowledge myſelf gre-'vouſly to have erred, namely againſt the bl. Sacra-'ment of the Altare; diſallowing the Maſſe, and 'denying Purgatory, with ſlanderous infamy of the 'Pope, and Mylord Cardinal, and outragious rayl-'ing againſt the Clergy, which I have forſaken and 'utterly renounced ——— aſkes pardon.

'WILLIAM BARLO.'

The preceding letter, which is in the Cotton Library, was written in 1533. It appears that Barlow, early in life, was a favourer of the Proteſtant religion, and went into Germany that he might have an opportunity of hearing Luther, Melancthon, Oecolampadius and others (6).] K.

(6) Tanner's Bibliotheca Br. Hib. p. 75, 76.

afterwards to Toby Matthew, Archbiſhop of York. 5. Antonia, wife of William Wickham, Biſhop of Wincheſter. He had alſo a ſon, of whom we ſhall give an account in the next article (o); and five more of whom nothing memorable is recorded (p).

(o) Wood, ubi ſupra, col. 157.

(p) MS. note of Mr. Strype.

BARLOWE (WILLIAM), ſon of the former, was born in Pembrokeſhire while his father was Biſhop of St. Davids (a). In 1560 he became a member of Baliol-college, and, four years after, took a degree in Arts; which being completed by determination, he left the Univerſity, and, travelling, became very well ſkilled in Navigation. About the year 1573, he entered into Orders, and was made Prebendary of Wincheſter, and Rector of Eaſton, near that city. On December the 14th, 1588, he was admitted Prebendary of Collwich, in the cathedral of Litchfield, which he quitted for the place of Treaſurer in the ſame church, and was inſtalled in it October 17, 1589 (*). Afterwards, he became Chaplain to Prince Henry, and at length Archdeacon of Saliſbury: to which laſt he was collated the 12th of March, 1614 (b). He is memorable for being the firſt that wrote on the nature and properties of the loadſtone, even twenty years before Doctor William Gilbert publiſhed his book on that ſubject: and was accounted ſuperior, or at leaſt equal to him, for his induſtry in ſearching, and happineſs in finding out, many uncommon magnetical ſecrets. He was the firſt that made the inclinatory inſtrument tranſparent, and to be uſed hanging, with a glaſs on both ſides, and a ring at the top; whereas Dr. Gilbert's hath it but of one ſide, and to be ſet on a foot. Moreover, he hanged it in compaſs-box, where, with two ounces weight, it was made fit for uſe at ſea. He was, likewiſe, the firſt that found out the difference between iron and ſteel, and their tempers, for magnetical uſes. He alſo firſt ſhewed the right way of touching magnetical needles (c): And was the firſt that invented the piecing and cementing of loadſtones. Finally, he was the firſt that ſhewed the reaſons, why a loadſtone being double-capped, muſt take up ſo great weight (d). On theſe ſubjects he wrote books, of which there is an account in note [A]. This ingenious perſon died the 25th of May, 1625, and was buried in the chancel of the church of Eaſton [B].

(a) Wood, Ath. Vol. i. col. 495.

(b) Wood, ibid.

(*) Br. Willis's Survey of the Cathedrals, Vol. i. p. 411. 430.

(c) See Magnetical Experiments, by W. Derham, A. M. in Philoſophic. Tranſact. n. 303, p. 2138, &c.

(d) Wood, ubi ſupra.

[A] On theſe ſubjects he wrote books, &c.] They are as follows, 'I. The Navigator's Supply; containing may things of principal importance belonging to Navigation, with the deſcription and uſe of divers inſtruments framed chiefly for that purpoſe, &c. Lond. 1597, 4*to*. Dedicated to Robert Earl of Eſſex. II. Magnetical Advertiſement; or divers pertinent obſervations and approved experiments concerning the nature and properties of the Loadſtone, &c. Lond. 1616, 4*to*.' Some animadverſions were made upon this book, by Mark Ridley, a Cantabrigian, M. D. ſome time Phyſician to the Engliſh Merchants in Ruſſia, afterwards chief Phyſician to the Czar, and one of the College of Phyſicians in London; whereupon Mr. Barlowe publiſhed, in vindication of himſelf, 'III. A brief diſcovery of the idle animadverſions of Mark Ridley, Doct. in Phyſic, upon a treatiſe, entitled, Magnetical Advertiſement. '——Lond. 1618, 4*to*. (1)'

(1) Wood, Ath. col. 495, Vol. i.

[B] Was buried in the chancel of the church of Eaſton.] And the following epitaph was, ſoon after, put over his grave: Depoſitum Gulielmi Barlowe, Archdiaconi Sariſburienſis, Prebendarii Eccleſiæ Cath. Winton, & Rectoris Eccleſiæ de Eaſton; qui cum ſedulam per annos 52 ædificationi corporis Chriſti navaſſet operam, ad meliorem Vitam migravit, Maii 25, Anno Domini 1625; i. e. 'Here lie the remains of William Barlowe, Archdeacon of Sarum, Prebendary of the Cathedral Church of Wincheſter, and Rector of Eaſton; who, having for two and fifty years, diligently applied himſelf to the edifying of the body of Chriſt, paſſed into a better life, May the 25th in the year of our Lord 1625 (2).' M.

(2) Wood, ibid.

BARLOW (THOMAS), a very learned Divine, and Biſhop, in the XVIIth century (of whom Mr. Bayle hath given an imperfect account), was born at Langhill, in the pariſh of Orton, in Weſtmoreland, in the year 1607; being the ſon of Mr. Richard Barlow, deſcended from the ancient family of Barlow-moore in Lancaſhire (a). He had his firſt education at the free-ſchool at Appleby, in his own country (b). From thence being removed, in the ſixteenth year of his age, to Queen's-college in Oxford, he took there the degrees in Arts (c), that of Maſter being completed the 27th of June, 1633 (d), and the ſame year was choſen Fellow of his college (e). In 1635 he was appointed Metaphyſic-Reader in the Univerſity; and his lectures being much approved of, were publiſhed in 1637 for the uſe of the ſcholars [A]. When the garriſon of Oxford ſurrendered to the Parliament in 1646, he ſided with the perſons then in power (f); and, by the intereſt of Colonel Thomas Kelſey, Deputy-Governor of that garriſon, preſerved his fellowſhip [B], (a) Wood, Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. l. ii. p. 122. and Athen. Oxon. Vol. ii. col. 876. edit. Lond. 1721.

(b) Ibid.

(c) Wood, ibid.

(d) Idem. Faſti, Vol. i. col. 257.

(e) Idem. Ath. ubi ſupra.

(f) Wood, Ath. ubi ſupra.

[A] His lectures——were publiſhed in 1637.] They were printed at Oxford in 4*to*. at the end of Scheibler's Metaphyſics, under the title of Exercitationes aliquot Metaphyſicæ de Deo; 'ſome metaphyſical Exercitations concerning God (1).' They were afterwards reprinted in 1658, &c. 4*to*. One of theſe Exercitations was tranſlated into Engliſh, by Sir Peter Pett, and inſerted in Biſhop Barlow's Genuine Remains (2). It is upon the famous queſtion, Whether it is better not to be at all, than to be miſerable? Durandus, an old Schoolman, maintained, That it was better to be, though in a miſerable condition, than to ceaſe to be; or, in other words, That it was better to be miſerable, than be annihilated. Dr. Barlow aſſerts the contrary. ——In the ſame book, there is an abſtract of another Exercitation (3) concerning the exiſtence of God; in which the author demonſtrates, That there is ſome knowledge of God attainable here by the light of nature.

(1) See Biſhop Barlow's Genuine Remains, p. 469, Lond. 1693, 8*vo*.

(2) Page 469.

(3) Page 521.

[B] By the intereſt of Col. T. Kelſey——he preſerved his fellowſhip.] Wood ſays (4), that he and others, kept their fellowſhips, by 'preſenting to Kelſey's wife certain gifts.' But it is more probable, that it was through Mr. Selden's and Dr. Owen's favour and intereſt, as we are told elſewhere (5). However, it appears from a book of his (which will be mentioned below) (6), that if he ſubmitted to the higher powers for his intereſt, he abhorred at the ſame time their practices.

(4) Athen. ubi ſupra.

(5) Walker's Sufferings of the Clergy, Part ii. p. 132.

(6) Pegaſus: or, the Flying Horſe from Oxford.

notwithſtanding the Parliamentary viſitation [C]. In 1652 he was elected Head-Keeper of the Bodleian Library; and, about the ſame time, was made Lecturer of Church-hill, near Burford, in Oxfordſhire (g). July the 23d, 1657, he took his degree of Bachelor in Divinity (h); and, in the latter end of the ſame year, was choſen Provoſt of his college (*), upon the death of the learned Dr. Langbaine (i). After the Reſtoration of King Charles II., he procured himſelf to be one of the Commiſſioners, appointed firſt by the Marquis of Hertford, Chancellor of the Univerſity, and afterwards by the King, for reſtoring the members which were wrongfully ejected in 1648 (k). The 2d of Auguſt, 1660, he was not only created Doctor in Divinity among the Royaliſts, but alſo choſen Margaret Profeſſor of Divinity, the firſt of September following (l), upon the ejection of Henry Wilkinſon, ſenior. He wrote, the ſame year, The Caſe of a Toleration in Matters of Religion, addreſſed to the famous Rob. Boyle, Eſq; [D]. In 1661, he was appointed Archdeacon of Oxford, in the room of Dr. Barten Holiday, deceaſed; but he was not inſtalled till June 13, 1664; for a conteſt aroſe between him and Dr. Tho. Lamplugh about that dignity, which, after having laſted ſome time, was at length decided in favour of Dr. Barlow, at the aſſizes held at Oxford, March 1, 1663 4 (*). Being a perſon eminent for his ſkill in the Civil and Canon Law, he was often applied to as a Caſuiſt, to reſolve caſes of conſcience, about marriage, and the like (m). And, upon ſuch an occaſion it was, that in 1671, he wrote Mr. Cottington's Caſe of Divorce (n), wherein is diſcuſſed the validity or nullity of his marriage, with a Lady whoſe former huſband was living: and alſo, ſome years after, another caſe of marriage, inſerted in his Genuine Remains (o). Upon the death of Dr. W. Fuller, Biſhop of Lincoln, which happened April 22, 1675, he obtained, the very ſame day, a grant of that Biſhoprick, at the recommendation of ſome of the nobility, and chiefly through the intereſt of the two Secretaries of State, Henry Coventry, Eſq; and Sir Joſeph Williamſon, both ſome time of his college, and the firſt formerly his pupil (p). The 27th of June following he was conſecrated at Ely-houſe-chapel (q). Archbiſhop Sheldon oppoſed his promotion (r), though the reaſons of it are not aſſigned. After his advancement to this See, Biſhop Barlow wrote ſeveral curious things. They were generally ſhort, and moſt of them by way of letter. The moſt conſiderable are theſe: In 1676, The Original of Sine Cures. Concerning Penſions paid out of Church-Livings. And a Survey of the Numbers of Papiſts within the Province of Canterbury [E]. In 1679, A Letter concerning the Canon Law, allowing (s) the whipping of Hereticks [F]. But what he moſt diſtinguiſhed himſelf by, was in writing againſt Popery; though herein he is charged by A. Wood with inconſiſtency. For that author tells us (t), that 'before the diſcovery of the Popiſh plot, Biſhop Barlow had 'been a ſeeming friend to the Papiſts; but, after that, he became a bitter enemy to 'them, and to the Duke of York.' However, it is certain he wrote ſeveral things againſt them with great ſtrength of argument, and a prodigious variety of learning. The chief of them were, 'Popery: or, the Principles and Poſitions approved by the Church of Rome, &c. 'are very dangerous to all [G].' And, 'A Diſcourſe concerning the Laws Eccleſiaſtical 'and Civil, made againſt Hereticks by Popes, Emperors, and Kings, Provincial and 'General

(g) Wood, ibid.
(h) Idem. Faſti, Vol. ii. col. 116.
(*) Queen's college.
(i) Idem. Ath. ubi ſupra.
(k) Ibid.
(l) Idem. Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. l. ii. p. 34.
(*) Wood, Ath. ubi ſupra.
(m) See Genuine Remains, p. 351.
(n) Printed among his Miſcellaneous and weighty Caſes of Conſcience, p. 1, &c. Lond. 1692, 8vo.
(o) Page 352.
(p) Wood, Ath. ubi ſupra.
(q) Ibid.
(r) Ibid.
(s) Cap. cum ſortius 1. Extrav. de Calumniatoribus.
(t) Athen. col. 877.

[C] Notwithſtanding the parliamentary viſitation.] He publiſhed then an anonymous pamphlet, dated Oxford, April 18, 1648; and intitled Pegaſus, or the Flying-Horſe from Oxford: Bringing the proceedings of the Viſitours and other Bedlamites there, by command of the Earle of Mongomery. Printed at Mongomery, heretofore called Oxford; in which he gives a very ludicrous account of that viſitation. Some paſſages in it (7) are as follows: 'Tueſday, April the eleventh, 'the long-legged piece of impertinency (which they 'miſ-call Chancellor) was to bee brought with ſtate 'into Oxon: To this end, thoſe few inconſiderable, 'and ill-faced Saints, hired all the hackneyes in towne '(which were baſely bad, yet good enough for them). 'Out they went, and met the Hoghen Moghen I told 'you of: what courtſhip paſſed between them at 'meeting, how hee ſwore at them, and they ſaid 'grace at him; how many zealous faces and ill-legs 'they made, and at what diſtance, I know not; a 'long time they were about it.——In the mean 'time, Tho. Smith of Magdalen college had an excel-'lent deſigne; he would ride in with them too, and 'that he might have ſuteable accommodation, would 'needs borrow an aſſe, nay an aſſe he would have, 'and ride in next before the Chancellor, and when 'they told him it was a mad trick, he told them noe; 'for he knew there would bee many aſſes beſides 'his:'—— &c.

(7) Pages 1 and 2.

[D] He wrote——the caſe of a toleration in matters of religion.] In which he firſt obſerves, that the toleration he means, is a toleration of ſeveral religions, or ſeveral opinions concerning religion; and that therefore Atheiſts come not under it. Next, that no opinion ought to be tolerated, which contains in it any thing deſtructive to the civil peace, and ſafety of the State. As for the reſt, he declares it difficult and dangerous for the civil magiſtrate to uſe temporal and compulſory puniſhments againſt Heretics and Sectaries (8). He expreſſes himſelf elſewhere to the ſame purpoſe,—— 'For my part, I ſhould not be 'willing, that any Heretic ſhould be puniſhed with 'death; unleſs he join with his hereſy, blaſphemy 'of God, or diſloyalty againſt the King, or ſome ſins 'againſt the law of nature, evidently puniſhable by 'the civil magiſtrate, for the preſervation of the pub-'lic peace, and ſafety of the commonwealth (9).'

(8) See his ſeveral miſcellaneous and weighty Caſes of Conſcience, where this is inſerted. Lond. 1692, 8vo.

(9) Genuine Remains, &c. Lond. 1693, 8vo. p. 242.

[This book, and theſe ſentiments, reflect, upon the whole, no ſmall honour on Dr. Barlow. Though he limited toleration too much, few men, and eſpecially few divines, would, in thoſe days, have gone ſo far in their conceſſions to tender conſciences as our author. The Preſbyterians themſelves, though upon the eve of being perſecuted, entertained, in general, no ſuch rational views of things.] K.

[E] A ſurvey of the numbers of Papiſts within the province of Canterbury.] By this ſurvey it appears, there were then computed in that province eleven thouſand eight hundred and ſeventy. This ſurvey was taken by the Biſhops in 1676, by King Charles II.'s direction (10).

(10) See Genuine Remains, p. 312.

[F] A letter concerning the Canon-law allowing the whipping of Heretics.] This was upon occaſion of a ſtory related in the book of Martyrs, namely, That Biſhop Bonner uſed to whip ſome of the Proteſtants (or Heretics, as he called them) in his gardens (11).

(11) Ibid. p. 189.

[G] Popery, or the principles and Poſitions, &c.] The whole title of the book runs thus, 'Popery, or 'the Principles and Poſitions approved by the Church

'General Councils, approved by the Church of Rome [H].' We ſhall give an account of the reſt of his writings againſt Popery, in the note [I]. He expreſſed his zeal againſt the Papiſts, not only by writing, but alſo by his other behaviour. For when, in 1678, after the diſcovery of the Popiſh Plot, a bill was brought into Parliament, requiring all Members of either Houſe, and all ſuch as might come into the King's Court, or preſence, to take a teſt againſt Popery; our Biſhop appeared for that bill in the Houſe of Lords, and ſpoke in favour of it (u). Notwithſtanding which we are told (w), that, after King James II.'s acceſſion to the throne, Biſhop Barlow took all opportunities to expreſs his affection, or ſubmiſſion, to him; for he ſent up an addreſs of thanks to him, for his firſt declaration for liberty of conſcience, ſigned by ſix hundred of his Clergy (x): He wrote Reaſons for reading that King's ſecond Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience (y); he cauſed it to be read in his dioceſe (z): nay, he was prevailed upon to aſſert and vindicate the regal power of diſpenſing with penal laws, in an elaborate tract, with numerous quotations from Canoniſts, Civilians, and Divines (a). And yet after the Revolution, he was one of thoſe Biſhops who readily voted that King James had abdicated his kingdoms: He took the oaths to his ſucceſſors; and no Biſhop was more ready than he, to fill the places of ſuch Clergymen as refuſed to take the oaths to King William and Queen Mary (b). So that from his whole conduct it appears, he was of a very timorous (*) and complying diſpoſition, and always ready to ſide with the ſtrongeſt. With regard to ſome of his notions; he was entirely addicted to the Ariſtotelian Philoſophy (c), and a declared enemy to the improvements made by the Royal Society, and to what he called in general the New Philoſophy [K]. He was likewiſe a rigid Calviniſt, and the ſchool Divinity was that which he moſt admired (d). His great attachment to Calvin's notions engaged him in a public oppoſition to ſome of Mr. Bull's works, which did not much redound to our author's honour [L]. He is, moreover, juſtly blamed for never appearing in his cathedral, nor viſiting his dioceſe in perſon, but reſiding conſtantly at his manor of Bugden [M]. But, notwithſtanding, he muſt be allowed to have had the follow-

(u) Biſhop Burnet's Hiſt. of his own Time, Vol. i. p. 435, 436.

(w) Wood, Ath. ubi ſupra.

(x) See Genuine Remains, p. 340, 341. Echard's Hiſt. of England, Vol. iii. p. 821.

(z) Kennet's Compl. Hiſt. Vol. iii. p. 512. Note (1).

(a) Ibid. p. 507. Note (a).

(y) Wood, Ath. col. 877.

(b) Ibid.

(*) What rendered him at this time moſt timorous, was, that there were ſeveral attempts to bring him under a proſecution; but for what, is not mentioned. See Compl. Hiſt. of Engl. Vol. iii. p. 507. 512. He lived to fear the Court which he had never loved.

(c) See Genuine Remains, p. 151—159.

(d) Ibid. and page 344. 424. 577, &c.

'of Rome (when really believed and practiſed) are 'very dangerous to all; and to Proteſtant Kings and 'Supreme Powers, more eſpecially pernicious; and 'inconſiſtent with that Loyalty, which (by the Law of 'Nature and Scripture) is indiſpenſably due to Su'preme Powers. In a Letter to a Perſon of Honour. 'London 1679, 4*to*, reprinted the ſame year in 8*vo*. 'It was tranſlated and publiſhed in Latin 1681, 8*vo*, 'by Rob. Grove, B. D. afterwards Biſhop of Chi'cheſter.' It is againſt the Pope's excommunicating and depoſing of Princes.

[H] A diſcourſe, &c.] The title of this, beſides what is ſet down of it above in the text, goes on thus ——'Shewing, (1.) What Proteſtant ſubjects 'may expect to ſuffer under a Popiſh Prince acting ac'cording to thoſe laws. (2.) That no oath, or pro'miſe, of ſuch a Prince can give them any juſt ſecu'rity, that he will not execute the laws upon them. 'Lond. 1682, 4*to*.' So that it was plainly levelled againſt the Duke of York. There is a large preface thereto, againſt perſecuting and deſtroying Heretics, and ſomething in favour of the Diſſenters. There is no name to it.

[I] We ſhall give an account of the reſt of his writings againſt Popery.] They are as follows: 'I. Confutation of the Infallibility of the Church of 'Rome; written in 1673 (12). II. A Letter to J. 'Evelyn, Eſq; concerning Invocation of Saints, and 'Adoration of the Croſs. London, 1679, 4*to*. III. 'The ſame year, he reprinted, in 8*vo*. The Gun'Powder-Treaſon; with a Diſcourſe of the Manner 'of its Diſcovery, &c. (Printed at firſt in 1606) and 'placed in the beginning of it, A Preface touching 'that horrid Conſpiracy, dated Feb. 1, 1678-9.' In this Preface, he takes notice of a Popiſh Lie in the Calendarium Catholicum, or Univerſal Almanack, 1662, namely, 'That the Gun-Powder Treaſon, 'was more than ſuſpected to be the contrivance of 'Cecil, the great Politician, to render Catholicks 'odious: —— That ſome Roman Catholicks 'were in that Plot; but there were but few detected, 'and they that were detected, were deſperadoes.' He alſo ſhews there, that it is the practice of the Church of Rome, to endeavour to deſtroy Hereticks all manner of ways. 'IV. Brutum Fulmen; or the 'Bull of P. Pius Sextus concerning the damnation, 'excommunication, and depoſition of Q. Elizabeth; 'as alſo the abſolution of her ſubjects from the oath 'of allegiance, with a peremptory injunction, upon 'pain of an anathema, never to obey any of her 'laws or commands, with ſome obſervations upon it. 'Lond. 1681, 4*to*. V. Whether the Pope be Anti'chriſt? And whether the Turk, or the Pope be the 'greater Antichriſt? Whether ſalvation may be had 'in the Church of Rome? That worſhipping the 'Hoſt is idolatry. Concerning the intention of the 'Prieſt, as neceſſary to the validity of the Sacrament. 'A letter about the Papiſts founding dominion in 'Grace. Several letters about the Council of Trent '(13). VI. A few plain reaſons why a Proteſtant of 'the Church of England ſhould not turn Roman Ca'tholic. Lond. 1688.' Dr. J. Battely, the Licenſer, not allowing ſeveral ſheets of this to paſs, they were omitted (14).

(12) Genuine Remains, p. 454, &c.

(13) All theſe under article V. are in his Genuine Remains.

(14) Wood, Ath. ubi ſupra.

[K] He was a declared enemy ——— to what he called in general the New Philoſophy.] This plainly appears from the following paſſages in one of his letters (15), 'I confeſs I am, and (a long time) have been 'not a little troubled, to ſee Proteſtants, nay Clergy'men and Biſhops, approve and propagate that which 'they miſ-call New Philoſophy; ſo that our Univer'ſities begin to be infected with it, little conſidering 'how it tends evidently to the advantage of Rome, 'and the ruine of our religion. For this new Philo'ſophy ——— hath been ſet on foot, and carried on 'by the arts of Rome, to breed diviſions among Pro'teſtants. ——— And all the Romiſh Schoolmen, 'Caſuiſts, and Controverſy-writers, have ſo mixed 'Ariſtotle's Philoſophy with their Divinity, that he 'who has not a comprehenſion of Ariſtotle's prin'ciples, will never be able rationally to defend or 'confute any controverted poſition in the Roman or 'Reformed Religion.'

(15) Genuine Remains, p. 157.

[This letter exhibits a good picture of the prejudice in favour of their youthful opinions, which ſometimes adheres to old men, and of their unwillingneſs to admit new modes of ſtudy, and new principles of philoſophy, however reaſonable and well founded.] K.

[L] His great attachment to Calvin's notions engaged him in a public oppoſition to Mr. Bull's Works.] Namely, to his Harmonia Apoſtolica, publiſhed in 1669, wherein he aſſerts the neceſſity of good works, conjoined with faith, for man's juſtification. This book Dr. Barlow attacked in his Divinity-Lectures, and treated the author very roughly, even ſo far as to give him opprobrious names. Mr. Bull being informed of it, came to Oxford, and offered to vindicate himſelf by a public diſputation: but the Profeſſor declined it; nay, he endeavoured to avoid owning the fact, till it was fully proved to his face (16).

(16) See Life of G. Bull, late Biſhop of St. David's, by Rob. Nelſon, Eſq; Sect. Lond. 1714. p. 102. 221.

[M] But reſiding conſtantly at his manor of Bugden.] He was often reflected on upon that account, and called the Biſhop of Bugden that never ſaw Lincoln. But as he following excellencies: He was a good Caſuiſt, a man of very extenſive learning, an univerſal lover and favourer of learned men, of what country or denomination ſoever, and a great maſter of the whole controverſy between the Proteſtants and Papiſts. He died at Bugden in Huntingdonſhire, October 8, 1691, in the eighty-fifth year of his age; and was buried the 11th of the ſaid month, on the north ſide of the chancel belonging to that church (e), near the body of Doctor R. Sanderſon, ſome time Biſhop of Lincoln, and, according to his own deſire, in the very grave of Dr. William Barlow, formerly Biſhop of the ſame See: to whoſe memory, as well as his own, is erected a monument, with an inſcription [N] which he compoſed himſelf, a few days before his death. He bequeathed to the Bodleian Library, all ſuch books of his own, as were not in that noble collection at the time of his death: and the remainder he gave to Queen's College in Oxford (f); whereupon the Society erected, in 1694, a noble pile of buildings, on the weſt ſide of their college, to receive them. All his manuſcripts, of his own compoſition, he left to his two domeſtic Chaplains, William Offley, and Henry Brougham, Prebendaries of Lincoln, with a particular deſire, that they would not make any of them public after his deceaſe (g). We ſhall give an account in the note [O] of the reſt of his works, not taken notice of above.

†

(e) Wood, Ath. Vol. ii. col. 879.

(f) Wood, ibid.

(g) Ibid.

he hath written ſomething upon that ſubject, it will be proper to hear what he had to ſay in his juſtification (17). 'I have writ (ſaith he) to My Lord 'Privy-Seal (Marquis of Halifax), the reaſons of my 'not going to Lincoln: 1. I have no houſe there. [It 'was beat down in the civil wars.] 2. Bugden is in 'the center of my dioceſe, and ſtands far more conveniently for all buſineſs. 3. Biſhop Sanderſon 'lived and died at Bugden, and Biſhop Lany lived 'there too, till he was tranſlated to Ely; nor were 'they ever accuſed or complained on for it. 4. That 'Lincoln might not think I was unkind, and neglected 'them; I ſent them 100 l. of which 50 l. to the 'church, and the other 50 l. to the city; and ſince 'that I gave the city 20 l. towards their expence in 'renewing their charter, which none of my predeceſſors have done.'

(17) Genuine Remains, p. 355.

[N] With an inſcription.] It is in Latin; but as it contains nothing remarkable in that language, we ſhall ſet down here only the Engliſh tranſlation of it. It is as follows: 'Here lie the remains of Thomas Barlow, D. D. Provoſt of Queen's College, Oxon, 'Head-keeper of the Bodleian Library, Archdeacon 'of Oxford, Lady Margaret Counteſs of Richmond's 'Divinity Profeſſor, and (though unworthy) Biſhop of 'Lincoln, in hope of a joyful reſurrection. He compoſed this epitaph when he was dying, and at his 'own charge rebuilt the monument of his Right Reverend predeceſſor William Barlow, which was almoſt demoliſhed by fanatical rage. He died the '8th day of October, 1691, in the 85th year of his 'age (18).'

(18) Wood, Athen. col. 879.

[O] We ſhall give an account of the reſt of his works, not taken notice of above.] They are as follows: 'I. Pietas in Patrem; or a few Tears, upon the lamented Death of his moſt dear and loving Father 'Richard Barlow, late of Langhill in Weſtmorland, 'who died 29 December, 1636; printed at Oxford, '1637, 4*to*. There are in it copies of verſes upon 'the ſame ſubject, from ſeveral gentlemen of Queen's 'College. II. A Letter to Mr. John Goodwin, concerning Univerſal Redemption, by J. Chriſt, 1651. 'III. For Toleration of the Jews, 1655. IV. Αυτοσχε διασματα; or Directions to a young Divine 'for his Study of Divinity, and Choice of Books. 'V. A Letter to Mr. John Tombes in defence of Anabaptiſm, inſerted in one of Tombes's Books. VI. 'A Tract to prove that true Grace doth not lie ſo 'much in the Degree, as in the Nature. This alſo is 'inſerted in a book, intitled, Sincerity and Hypocriſy, &c. written by William Sheppard, Eſquire. 'VII. The Rights of the Biſhops to judge in capital Caſes in Parliament cleared, &c. Lond. 1680; 'being an anſwer to two books; the firſt intitled, 'A Letter from a Gentleman to his Friend, ſhewing, that the Biſhops are not to be Judges in Parliament in Caſes capital, by Denzil Lord Holles, Lond. 1679, 4*to*. And the other, A Diſcourſe of the Peerage and Juriſdiction of the Lords Spiritual in Parliament, &c. Dr. Barlow did not ſet his name to this, and it was by ſome aſcribed to Tho. Turner of Gray's-Inn. 'VIII. A Letter (to his Clergy) for the putting in execution the Laws againſt Diſſenters, written in concurrence to that which was drawn up by the Juſtices of the Peace of the county of Bedford, at the quarter-ſeſſions held at Ampthill for the ſaid county, 'January 14, 1684 (19).' * IX. After his deceaſe, Sir Peter Pett publiſhed in 1692, 8*vo*. 'Several miſcellaneous and weighty caſes of conſcience, learnedly 'and judiciouſly reſolved by the Right Rev. Father 'in God, Dr. Tho. Barlow, late Lord Biſhop of Lincoln; viz. 1. Of Toleration of Proteſtant Diſſenters. '2. The King's power to pardon murder; written upon occaſion of Mr. St. John's (late Lord Viſcount 'St. John of Batterſey) being convicted for the death 'of Sir William Eaſtcourt, Bart. ——— 4. About 'ſetting up images in churches; compoſed, when he 'was cited in the Court of Arches, for permitting 'ſome pictures of the Apoſtles, put up in the pariſh 'church of Moulton in his dioceſe, without the conſent of the majority of the pariſhioners, to be defaced.' The ſame Sir Peter publiſhed alſo in 1693, Lond. 8*vo*. 'X. The Genuine Remains of that learned 'Prelate, Dr. Thomas Barlow, late Lord Biſhop of 'Lincoln. Containing divers Diſcourſes Theological, 'Philoſophical, Hiſtorical, &c. In letters to ſeveral 'perſons of honour and quality.' But theſe two volumes being put out without the knowledge or conſent of the Biſhop's two Chaplains above mentioned, to whom he had left all his own manuſcripts, with orders that they ſhould not be publiſhed, they ſeverely reflected upon the publiſher, for the unwarrantable liberty he had taken (20). M.

(19) Genuine Remains, p. 641.

* This Letter was not very conſiſtent with what he had formerly written on Toleration.

(20) Wood, Ath. col. 877, 878, 879.

[It is probable that Dr. Barlow's long eſtabliſhed ſentiments in favour of Toleration might lead him the more readily to comply with, and to defend, King James the Second's Declaration of Indulgence.

The writer of the Confeſſional ſpeaks with ſingular reſpect of our Prelate. He calls him not only a learned, but a worthy Biſhop; and, having had occaſion, a little before, to mention Laud, Bennet, and Sinclair, ſays, That he was worth three dozen of Lauds, Bennets, or Sinclairs (21).] § K.

(21) Confeſſional, p. 188, 3d edition.

§ Anthony Wood, in his own Life, ſometimes praiſes, and ſometimes abuſes Dr. Barlow. See Life of Anthony Wood, p. 131. 140. 152. 164. 167. 190. 199. 201. 206. 237.

BARNARD, or BERNARD (John), author of the undermentioned books [A], was the ſon of John Barnard, Gentleman; and was born at Caſtor, a market town in Lincolnſhire. He had his education in the grammar-ſchool of that place; from whence he

[A] Author of the following books.] I. Cenſura Clerior, againſt Scandalous Miniſters, not fit to be reſtored to the Churches Livings, in point of Prudence, Piety, and Fame, London, 1660; in three ſheets in quarto. His name is not prefixed to this piece. II. Theologo-Hiſtoricus; or the true Life of the moſt Reverend Divine and excellent Hiſtorian, Peter Heylyn, D. D. Sub-Dean of Weſtminſter, London, 1683, 8*vo*. This was publiſhed, as the author pretends, to correct the errors, ſupply the defects, and confute the calumnies of George Vernon, A. M. Rector of Bourton on the Water in Glouceſterſhire, who had publiſhed a life of

he was ſent to Cambridge, where he became a penſioner of Queen's-college. From thence journeying to Oxford, to obtain preferment from the Viſitors, appointed by act of Parliament, he there took the degree of Bachelor of Arts, the fifteenth of April, 1648 (a); and, the twenty-ninth of September following, was, by order of the ſaid Viſitors, made Fellow of Lincoln-college (b). The twentieth of February, 1650, he took the degree of Maſter of Arts (c). At length, having married the daughter of Dr. Peter Heylyn, then living at Abingdon, he became Rector of Waddington, near Lincoln; the perpetual advowſon of which he purchaſed, and held it for ſome time, together with the fine-cure of Gedney in the ſame county. After the Reſtoration, he conformed, and was made Prebendary of Aſgarby in the church of Lincoln (d). July the 6th, 1669, he took the degree of Bachelor in Divinity (e); and, the ſame year, was created Doctor in Divinity, being then in good repute for his learning and orthodox principles. He died at Newark, on a journey to the Spaw, the 17th of Auguſt, 1683; and was buried in his own church of Waddington (f).

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. Vol. ii. col. 736, 737, & Faſt. ib. col. 63.

(b) Id. Ath. ib.

(c) Id. Faſt. col. 94.

(d) Id. Ath. ib.

(e) Id. Faſt. col. 175.

(f) Id. Athen. ibid.

of Dr. Heylyn. III. An Anſwer to Mr. Baxter's falſe Accuſation of Dr. Heylyn; printed with the Theologo-Hiſtoricus. IV. A Catechiſm, for the uſe of his pariſh. He left behind him a manuſcript againſt Socinianiſm, never printed (1). B.

(1) Wood, Ath. Vol. ii. col. 737.

[BARNARD (Sir JOHN), an eminent Citizen and Alderman of London, during the preſent century, and many years one of its Repreſentatives in Parliament, was born at Reading, in Berkſhire, in 1685. His parents, who were of the people called Quakers, put him to a ſchool at Wandſworth in Surry, which was ſolely appropriated to the education of perſons of that profeſſion (a). From this ſchool, the maſter of which was of the ſame religious principles, young Barnard is ſaid (according to a late writer of his life) to have derived very little advantage in point of claſſical and polite literature. The great loſs, however, which he hence ſuſtained, his native good ſenſe, and love of knowledge, ſoon led him to ſupply, as far as poſſible, by carefully reading, in our own tongue, the beſt writers of Greece and Rome. By theſe means, though he could not be fully ſenſible of the elegance of the claſſic authors, which was, for the moſt part, loſt in the tranſlations of them, he became well acquainted with every remarkable ſect, character, and action in Profane Hiſtory. Such were the integrity and candour of his mind, when he was a boy, that his playmates uſed to chooſe him for their Chancellor, in the differences which they had with each other, and readily ſubmitted to his deciſions (b). When he arrived to the fifteenth year of his age, his father, who appears to have been ſettled in London, and had long been afflicted with bad health, determined to take him (c) into his compting-houſe; and, from obſerving his natural turn, aſſiduity, and talents, ſcrupled not to commit to his care the management of a great buſineſs in the wine trade. Mr. Barnard ſenior was not diſappointed in the early confidence which he placed in his ſon. At this time our young Gentleman took peculiar pleaſure in the ſtudy of figures, which he purſued with ſuch ſucceſs, that his judgment was afterwards highly valued in affairs which required profound ſkill in calculation, and his knowledge as an able financier became undiſputed. In the midſt of theſe purſuits and engagements, he did not neglect the ſubject of religion. Some ſcruples having ariſen in his mind with regard to the principles wherein he had been educated, he determined to apply himſelf to the devout ſtudy of the Book of Revelation, which he firmly believed to be the ſole repoſitory of divine truth. The reſult of his inquiries was, that he found himſelf called upon, by the dictates of his conſcience, to make the painful ſacrifice of openly renouncing the diſtinguiſhing tenets of his revered parents. For this purpoſe, he was introduced to Doctor Compton, then Biſhop of London; and, after ſeveral conferences with that Prelate, was baptiſed by him, in his chapel at Fulham, 1703. Mr. Barnard was under nineteen years of age when he quitted the Society of the Quakers; and from that time he continued, till his death, a member of the eſtabliſhed Church, an admirer of her Liturgy, and an ornament to her Communion (d). There was a peculiarity of character in the early part of his life, which deſerves to be noticed. When he was a youth himſelf, he never choſe to aſſociate with thoſe of his own age [A]. Being convinced that he could derive no improvement from an acquaintance with them, he ſought out companions among men di-

(a) Memoirs of the late Sir John Barnard, Knt. and Alderman of the city of London. A 4to pamphlet, publiſhed in 1776. Rivington.

(b) Ibid. p. 3, 4.

(c) He was his eldeſt ſon.

(d) Memoirs, ubi ſupra, p. 4, 5.

[A] He never choſe to aſſociate with thoſe of his own age.] The great advantages which muſt ariſe from young perſons keeping company with elderly men of wiſdom and experience, are ſo obvious to every reflecting mind, that it is needleſs to enlarge upon them. The good ſenſe, therefore, of Mr. Barnard, in ſeeking the acquaintance and friendſhip of ſuch men cannot be too much commended. Nevertheleſs, it may be queſtioned how far it is needful or proper for young people to have no intimacies with thoſe of their own age. All cloſe connection, and, as far as poſſible, all converſation, with light, trifling, and profligate youths ought, indeed, to be abſolutely avoided. But for young perſons never to aſſociate with ſuch as, like themſelves, are entering into active life, cannot, in general, be right. The mutual intercourſe of young men, who are of amiable diſpoſitions, and promiſing characters, and who have a deſire for improvement, cannot but be attended with conſiderable benefits. It will be the ſource of many refined ſatisfactions; will inſpire the mind with a ſpirit and vigour in the buſineſs of the world, which might otherwiſe not eaſily be obtained; and will give birth to the moſt delightful, durable, and uſeful friendſhips. However, Mr. Barnard was ſo happy an inſtance of the advantages proceeding from a contrary behaviour, that it ſcarcely becomes us to diſpute, in this place, the propriety of a ſimilar conduct.

ſtinguiſhed by their knowledge, learning, and religion; and ſuch men received, with open arms, a young perſon who diſcovered ſo much good ſenſe and diſcernment (e).

(e) Ibid. p. 5, 6.

Mr. Barnard, till the thirty-ſixth year of his age, was only known by the excellencies of his private character, and the eſteem in which he was held as a man of reading and ſtrong parts. But about this time, the following incident laid the foundation of his public fame. A bill greatly affecting the wine trade, had paſſed through the Houſe of Commons, and was depending in the Upper Houſe. The principal merchants, who would have been injured by the operation of the bill, united in preſenting a petition to the Lords, praying to be heard againſt it, by themſelves or counſel. Their requeſt being granted, Mr. Barnard, without his knowledge, was made choice of, as the fitteſt perſon to prove the grievance alledged, and to anſwer every objection to the petition. Through ſome unaccountable negligence, he was not acquainted with the buſineſs aſſigned him, till the afternoon before he was to be heard by the Peers. This ſingular diſadvantage, when it came to be known, made his ſpeech appear the more extraordinary. By the extent of his acquaintance with commerce, and the perſpicuity and force of his reaſoning, accompanied with a becoming modeſty, he contributed in ſo high a degree to carry the point aimed at, that all his friends conſidered themſelves as principally indebted to his talents for their ſucceſs (f). So ſignal an inſtance of Mr. Barnard's abilities drew the attention of the public towards him, and prepared the way for his appearing in a more honourable and important ſtation. The admiration he had acquired, made it wiſhed, that he might be employed in the ſervice of his fellow-citizens and countrymen at large. Accordingly, at an anniverſary meeting, in 1721, his friends propoſed, without his knowledge, that he ſhould be put up as a candidate to repreſent the city of London in Parliament at the next election, which was expected to happen in that year, though it did not take place till the year following. When Mr. Barnard was informed of the honour intended him, he urged his invincible diſlike to the ſoliciting and canvaſſing for votes. But this objection was over-ruled by the propoſers, who pledged themſelves to undertake that trouble: and ſo effectually did they perform their promiſe, that he was choſen Member, though the conteſt between the competitors was one of the warmeſt ever known in London. The Candidates were Child, Lockwood, Godfrey, Barnard, Parſons, and Heyſhaw; the four former of whom were elected. Seven thouſand ſix hundred and ſeventy-three Liverymen polled: a number, it is ſaid, which had never yet been equalled (g). All, who knew Mr. Barnard, conceived great expectations that he would acquit himſelf to the honour of his Conſtituents; nor were their expectations diſappointed. From his firſt taking his ſeat in the Houſe of Commons, he entered, with penetration, into the merits of each point under debate; defended, with intrepidity, what he apprehended to be our conſtitutional rights; withſtood every attempt to burden his country with needleſs ſubſidies; argued with remarkable perſpicuity and ſtrength; and crowned all with ſuch a cloſe attendance upon Parliament, that he never was abſent, by choice, from the time the Members met, till they were adjourned. It is difficult to ſay, whether out of the Houſe he was more popular, or within it more reſpectable, during the ſpace of nearly forty years (h) [B].

(f) Ibid. p. 4.

(g) Ibid. p. 7, 8.

(h) Ibid. p. 8.

As Mr. Barnard was ſo aſſiduous in diſcharging his duty to his Conſtituents, and took ſo conſtant a part in every important affair that occurred during a very intereſting period of the Britiſh Annals, were we to take particular notice of all the buſineſs wherein he was engaged, and of all the debates in which he ſpoke, we ſhould run too far into the general hiſtory of the time. The more diſtinguiſhed inſtances of his Parliamentary conduct will unavoidably be mentioned in the courſe of our narration; and the reſt ſhall be briefly ſpecified in the note [C]. Violent diſputes having ariſen in the city of London, about the choice of Sheriffs and Aldermen, it was thought neceſſary to aſcertain, more clearly

[B] During the ſpace of nearly forty years.] 'On 'ſeveral important ſubjects,' ſays the author of his life, 'he has been ſpeaking for full three hours to-'gether, with the applauſe of his audience, though 'a Wyndham, Walpole, Pulteney, Pitt, and Mur-'ray took part in the debate. Sir Robert Walpole 'paid him once a great compliment, and (which is 'not always the caſe) without the leaſt ſacrifice of 'truth. Riding out on the ſame day in two parties, 'they happened to come where only a narrow lane 'prevented their view of each other. Mr. Barnard 'talking with his company was overheard. And a 'Gentleman of the other party ſaid, Whoſe voice is 'that? Sir Robert replied, Do you not know? it is 'one I ſhall never forget: — I have often felt its 'power. Upon meeting at the end of the lane, Sir 'Robert Walpole, with that enchanting courteſy he 'poſſeſſed, ſaluting Mr. Barnard, told him what had 'paſſed (1).'

(1) Memoirs of the late Sir John Barnard, p. 8. Note.

[C] The reſt ſhall be briefly ſpecified in the note.] Mr. Barnard had not been many days in the Houſe of Commons, before he ſhewed that he did not intend to be an inactive Member: for he was one of the Minority who took part in the debate which aroſe upon a motion made by Mr. Treby, on the 26th of October, 1722, for an augmentation, of 4000 men, in the army. When Mr. Pulteney, on the 9th of February, 1725-6, moved, That a Committee might be appointed to ſtate the national debts, down to December 25th, 1725, diſtinguiſhing how much had been provided for, and how much remained unprovided for by Parliament; and Sir Robert Walpole objected, among other things, that ſuch an inquiry would alarm the monied men, and affect public credit, Mr. Barnard confirmed what Sir Robert had ſaid. On the 26th of April, 1727, he ſpoke againſt Sir William Young's motion, for granting 370,000 pounds out of the coal-duty towards the ſupply (2). On the 26th of January, 1731-2, he oppoſed the continuance of the land forces on the footing propoſed. Two days after, he ſupported Sir Thomas Lomb's petition relating to his ſilk-engine. On the 23d of the following month, in the debate concerning the Sugar-Colony Bill, though he objected to many clearly than they were then underſtood, the rights and modes of election for the future. Accordingly, in the year 1725, a bill was brought into Parliament to effect that important many things in the Bill, he agreed to its being committed. At the opening of the ſeſſion of Parliament, January 16th 1732-3, when Mr. Henry Bromley moved for an addreſs of thanks to his Majeſty for his gracious ſpeech from the throne, Sir John Barnard propoſed an amendment to the addreſs, and defended his amendment with much ſpirit. On the ſecond of February he joined with the Minority, in oppoſing the keeping up the army to the number of nearly 18000 men; and, on the 21ſt of the ſame month, he ſpoke three times upon the reſolutions relating to the Sugar-colony trade. On the 8th of March, he opened to the Houſe a petition from Rhode-Iſland and Providence againſt the Sugar-Colony Bill. But a queſtion ariſing, whether it conſiſted with the cuſtom of Parliament to receive petitions againſt bills for the laying on of any new duties, Sir John Barnard deſired to withdraw his motion. This, however, was oppoſed; and it was carried in form, that the petition ſhould not be brought up. On the 30th of April, 1733, he ſtrenuouſly ſupported, in two ſpeeches, the bill to prevent the infamous practice of Stock-jobbing (3). Sir John Barnard, on the 4th of February, 1733-4, preſented a petition to the Houſe, from the dealers in tea, for relief againſt the Exciſe Laws. This occaſioned a warm debate, in which he firſt opened, and then defended the petition with his uſual ability. But the weight of the Miniſtry being directed againſt it, the referring of it to a Committee was rejected by the majority of 233 to 155. In the grand debate which aroſe, on the 12th of the ſame month, upon Lord Morpeth's motion, 'For a Bill 'to prevent any Commiſſion Officer, not above the 'Rank of a Colonel of a Regiment, from being re-'moved, unleſs by a Court Martial, or by Addreſs 'of either Houſe of Parliament,' Sir John Barnard was a ſpeaker in favour of the motion. He entered, likewiſe, with zeal into the very important queſtion concerning the Duration of Parliaments. Accordingly, when Mr. William Bromley moved for the repeal of the Septennial Act (4), Sir John bore his part in the long and intereſting debate which followed; and added his voice, to that of many others, for the abolition of an act, which hath been conſidered as making a great innovation in the free conſtitution of this country. On the 28th of March, 1734, he oppoſed, in two ſpeeches, the taking into immediate conſideration, a meſſage from the King, to enable his Majeſty to augment his forces, if occaſion ſhould require it, between the diſſolution of the Parliament then ſubſiſting (but which was ſhortly to be diſſolved), and the election of another (5).

(2) Chandler's Hiſtory and Proceedings of the Houſe of Commons, Vol. vi. p. 291. 358. 395, 396.

At the opening of the new Parliament, on the 14th of January, 1734-5, Sir John Barnard united with the Minority, in oppoſing the motions of the Miniſtry (6) for granting 30,000 men for the ſea-ſervice, and nearly 26,000 men for the land-ſervice of the current year. He engaged, likewiſe, in the debate on the Mutiny Bill (7), in defence of a clauſe propoſed to be added to it, by Sir Walter Wagſtaff Bagot. In the ſeſſion which began Jan. 15, 1735-6, Sir John Barnard ſupported Mr. Pulteney's motion, made on the 28th of that month, for referring the eſtimate of the navy to a Select Committee. And, on the next day, he ſpoke in favour of an addreſs which had been moved for to his Majeſty, that he would be pleaſed to order a farther reduction of his forces. On the 2d of February, he joined with Mr. Sandys, in that Gentleman's motion for raiſing within the year the ſupplies neceſſary for the current ſervice. In the ſeſſion which opened on the firſt of February, 1736-7, Sir John Barnard, upon the queſtion of the number of land-forces to be employed, continued the oppoſition he had always made to a large ſtanding army (8). In the ſame ſeſſion of Parliament he ſpoke twice againſt the bill (occaſioned by Captain Porteous's affair), which was brought from the Houſe of Lords, to diſable Alexander Wilſon, Eſq; from holding any office or place of Magiſtracy, in the city of Edinburgh, or elſewhere in Great Britain; for impriſoning his perſon; and for aboliſhing the town-guard of that city, and taking away part of its gates (9). On the 3d of February, 1737-8, he oppoſed, as uſual, the annual motion for the ſtanding forces. Soon after (10), he ſupported the petition of the Weſt India merchants, concerning the Spaniſh depredations, and moved for an addreſs to his Majeſty, that he would give directions for laying before the Houſe the inſtructions relating to the negotiations with Spain. After a long debate, the motion was agreed to; but not till an amendment was carried, which was propoſed by Sir Robert Walpole. Sir John Barnard appeared, likewiſe, in a farther debate, concerning the merchants petition, and the reſolution that had paſſed relative to the Spaniſh encroachments (11). In the ſucceeding ſeſſion of Parliament, which met on the firſt of February, 1738-9, we find him taking part in the warm conteſts that aroſe upon the queſtions which followed the convention with Spain. He ſpoke in favour of an amendment, offered by Sir William Wyndham, to the Commons Addreſs of Thanks for his Majeſty's Speech; and defended Mr. Sandys's motion for Admiral Haddock's inſtructions being laid before the Houſe (12) (13). In the Seſſion, which opened on the 16th of November, 1739, Sir John Barnard diſtinguiſhed himſelf in the debates on the addreſs; on Mr. Pulteney's Bill for the encouragement of ſeamen; on Sir Charles Wager's Bill for regiſtering Sea-faring Perſons; and upon Mr. Pulteney's and Mr. Waller's motions, that the Inſtructions given to the Governors of the Britiſh Plantations, and to Mr. Keene, our Ambaſſador at Madrid, ſhould be laid before the Houſe (14). The ſeventh ſeſſion (15) of the eighth Parliament of Great Britain was remarkable for a variety of queſtions brought into agitation, and for the warmth with which they were conteſted. Sir John Barnard ſeems to have ſpoken upon almoſt every ſubject that occurred. As to mention diſtinctly the occaſion of each of his Speeches, would extend this note, already too tedious, to a ſtill more undue length, we ſhall content ourſelves with referring to the pages in which they may be found (16). The oppoſition having, at length, prevailed againſt the formidable power of Sir Robert Walpole, we do not meet with any diſplay of Sir John Barnard's oratorical abilities in the hiſtory of the firſt ſeſſion of the new Parliament, which opened December 1ſt, 1741. In this ſeſſion, he was returned one of the Secret Committee of twenty-one perſons, appointed by ballot to inquire into the conduct of the Earl of Orford. In the next ſeſſion (17), he ſupported the motion for the Addreſs of Thanks for his Majeſty's Speech from the Throne. But though he did this, in conſideration of the important and critical ſituation of public affairs, he freely expreſſed, at the ſame time, his diſapprobation of the new Miniſtry, for having departed from the principles they had profeſſed, and the conduct they had ſo ſtrongly recommended, when in oppoſition. He ſpoke, likewiſe (18), with perſevering integrity and zeal, in favour of Mr. Cornwall's motion for the Place Bill; which, however, was rejected by the very ſame Gentlemen, who had warmly contended for ſuch a bill in the preceding ſeſſion (19). Having thus traced Sir John Barnard's Parliamentary conduct, through the moſt active part of his life, we ſhall only add, that a few more particulars concerning him, may be found in Almon's Collection of Debates. We thence learn, that, on the 12th of February, 1744, he ſpoke at large, in favour of the Bill for taking away the Aldermen's Negative, which bill was at that time rejected; that, in 1745 (20), he took part in the debate on the progreſs of the Rebellion; that, in 1751 (21), he oppoſed Mr. Nugent's Bill for the General Naturalization of foreign Proteſtants; that, in the ſame year (22), he joined with the Minority in objecting to the Appointment of a Council of Regency; that, in 1753 (23), he was an opponent of the Act for naturalizing the Jews; and that, on the 7th of February, 1754, he moved for leave to bring in a Bill, to repeal that part of the Act to prevent Bribery and Corruption in the Elections of Members of Parliament, which required the electors to take the oaths therein mentioned, if demanded, before they were admitted to poll. The reaſon Sir John Barnard gave for his motion, was, that thoſe oaths,

(3) Chandler, ubi ſupra, Vol. vii. p. 111, 112. 143, 144. 215—217. 219. 253, 254. 257, 258. 268. 282, 283, 284. 309. 311, 312. 314, 315. 379. 385. 390.

(4) March 13, 1733-34.

(5) Chandler, ubi ſupra, Vol. viii. p. 45—47. 64—68, 69. 88. 117. 137. 180—183. 210. 215, 216. 241—243.

(6) Feb. 7th and 14th.

(7) Feb. 26th.

(8) Feb. 18th.

(9) Chandler, ubi ſupra, Vol. ix. p. 22. 28. 51, 52. 55. 87, 88. 121. 126. 130, 131. 133. 137. 239. 245. 506, 507. 521.

(10) March 3d.

(11) March 30th, 1738.

(12) Feb. 1ſt and 5th.

(13) Chandler, ubi ſupra, Vol. x. p. 10. 44, 45, 99. 108. 112. 117, 118. 151. 159. 257. 357. 362.

(14) Ibid. Vol. xi. p. 99. 127. 265. 328. 350. 373.

(15) It began Nov. 18. 1740, Gent. Mag. Vol. ii. p. 977.

(16) Ibid. Vol. xii. p. 22, 23. 33. 87. 168. 180. 188. 200. 202. 210. 214. 217. 237. 241. 260. 267, 268. 286. 291, 292, 293. 304, 305. 346. 357. 377. 388. 395.

(17) Nov. 10th, 1742.

(18) Dec. 3d 1742.

(19) Chandler, ubi ſupra, Vol. xiii. p. 217. Vol. xiv. p. 22. 33 55. 59.

(20) October, 28th.

(21) Feb. 28th.

(22) May 14th.

(23) May 7th.

tant purpoſe. But the citizens, apprehending that it invaded their juſt privileges, formed a ſtrong oppoſition to it; in which they were ſupported by three of their Repreſentatives, Child, Lockwood, and Barnard. Mr. Barnard objected to it, that, by its making an alteration in the city charter, it eſtabliſhed a bad precedent for the crown to violate corporation charters at their pleaſure; that it took away from a number of honeſt citizens, the right they had enjoyed, from time immemorial, of voting at wardmote elections; that it abridged the privileges of the Common-council; and that, by transferring too great a weight of authority and influence to the Court of Mayor and Aldermen, it ſubverted, in a conſiderable degree, the ancient conſtitution of the metropolis. The formal thanks of the citizens were preſented, by a deputation of four Aldermen and eight Commoners, to Mr. Barnard and his two colleagues, for their conduct in this affair. The bill, notwithſtanding all oppoſition, paſſed into a law; and it is the ſtatute by which all elections in the city are now regulated. However, the moſt obnoxious part of the act, which granted a negative power to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, was repealed in 1746 (i); and to this Sir John Barnard greatly contributed. On the 4th of January, 1728, Mr. Barnard was choſen Alderman of Dowgate Ward, upon the death of John Crawley, Eſq; who had enjoyed that office but a few months (k). On the 14th of April, 1729, he preſented a bill to the Houſe of Commons, for the better Regulation and Government of Seamen in the Merchants Service; which, having paſſed in that Houſe on the 6th of May, was ſent up to the Lords, and received the royal aſſent on the 14th of that month (l). About the ſame time, likewiſe, he took an active part in the inquiry which, in conſequence of the iniquitous and cruel conduct of Thomas Bambridge, Eſq; Warden of the Fleet, was appointed to be made into the ſtate of the gaols in this kingdom. When Bambridge and his agents were committed to Newgate, and the Attorney-General was ordered to proſecute them, Alderman Barnard was very aſſiduous, as a Magiſtrate, in procuring information concerning the ſeveral abuſes which had been practiſed in the Fleet, to the oppreſſion of the debtors; and he ſo pathetically repreſented the grievances under which they laboured, as to be greatly inſtrumental in obtaining the Act of Inſolvency, and the Act for the Relief of Debtors, with reſpect to the Impriſonment of their Perſons, which were aſſented to by the King, at the cloſe of the ſeſſion, on the 14th of May, 1729 (m). Another occaſion, which he had of diſplaying his Parliamentary abilities, was, when, on the 24th of February, 1729-30, the bill was read a ſecond time, 'To prevent any Perſons, his Majeſty's Subjects, or reſiding within this Kingdom, 'to advance any Sum of Money to any foreign Prince, State, or Potentate, without 'having obtained Licence from his Majeſty, under his Privy Seal, or ſome greater Au-'thority.' The bill had taken its riſe from a negotiation which had been ſet on foot, by the Emperor of Germany, to obtain a loan, in England, of 400,000 pounds. Mr. Barnard, who oppoſed the paſſing of the act, alledged, in the courſe of the debate, ſeveral important reaſons againſt it; which, however, were anſwered, in a maſterly manner, by Sir Philip Yorke. The oppoſition ſo far prevailed, that the bill was modified in a certain degree; and an explanation was given by the Miniſtry, that it was not his Majeſty's intention to prevent his ſubjects from lending money to the King of Portugal, or any other Prince in alliance with England; and that the only reaſon for not naming the Emperor in the bill was, that, by making it general, there could be no foundation for an open rupture between the Courts of London and Vienna (n). On the 28th of September, 1732, Mr. Barnard, having attended Francis Child, Eſq; then Lord Mayor, to Kenſington, with an addreſs of congratulation to King George the Second, received from his Majeſty the honour of Knighthood. Mr. Child, and Mr. Henry Hankey, were knighted at the ſame time (o). Towards the beginning of the following year, the famous Exciſe Scheme, which met with ſo vigorous an oppoſition, was propoſed by Sir Robert Walpole. As a particular account of this affair will more properly come under the article of that celebrated Stateſman, we ſhall take no other notice of it here than what may be neceſſary to complete the Hiſtory of Sir John Barnard. No one could exceed him, in the ability and zeal with which he oppoſed the deſign. He ſpoke ſeveral times againſt it, and condemned it both in a commercial and political light. He conſidered it as introductory to ſuch general and arbitrary laws of Exciſe as would be abſolutely inconſiſtent with the freedom of the conſtitution; and thought that the queſtion upon the ſcheme would be, 'Whether 'we ſhall endeavour to prevent frauds in the collecting of the public revenues, at the ex-'pence of the liberties of the people?' 'For my own part,' ſaid Sir John, 'I never 'was guilty of any fraud: I put it to any man, be he who he will, to accuſe me of ſo 'much as the appearance of a fraud in any trade I was ever concerned in: I am reſolved 'never to be guilty of any fraud. It is very true, that theſe frauds are a very great pre-'judice to all fair traders; and, therefore, I ſpeak againſt my own intereſt, when I ſpeak 'againſt any methods that may tend towards preventing of frauds. But I ſhall never 'put my private intereſt in balance with the intereſt or happineſs of the nation. I had

(i) Northouck's Hiſt. of London, p. 323. 356. Britiſh Plutarch, Vol. vi. p. 128.

(k) Memoirs, ubi ſupra, p. 9. Chronological Diary, annexed to the Hiſtorical Regiſter for 1727, p. 42. Ditto for 1728, p. 5.

(l) Hiſt. Regiſter for 1729, p. 178. 184. 197.

(m) Britiſh Plutarch, Vol. vi. p. 130. Hiſt. Regiſter for 1729, p. 196.

(n) Brit. Plut. ibid. p. 131, 132. Tindal's Continuation, Vol. xx. p. 62. 65, 8vo. edit. Chandler's Hiſt. &c. of the Houſe of Commons, Vol. vii. p. 65, 66.

(o) Memoirs, ubi ſupra, p. 9.

oaths, as appeared from experience, were of no ſignificancy for the purpoſes, they were intended to ſerve, and only opened a door for perjury. But, though the truth of this obſervation was acknowledged, the Houſe did not think proper to agree to the motion; and, after ſome debate, it was dropped (24).

(24) Almon's Debates, Vol. ii. p. 91. 103. 141. 362. 377. Vol. iv. p. 336, 337. 348. Vol. v. p. 72, 73. 125.

'rather

'rather beg my bread from door to door, and ſee my country flouriſh, than be the 'greateſt ſubject of the nation, and ſee the trade of my country decaying, and the peo-'ple enſlaved and oppreſſed (p).' On the 14th of March, 1732-3, in the grand Committee of the Houſe of Commons, 'To conſider of the moſt proper Methods for the bet-'ter Security and Improvement of the Duties and Revenues, already charged upon, and 'payable from Tobacco and Wines,' the Exciſe Scheme was propoſed. In the courſe of the long and violent debate, which took place on this occaſion, Sir John Barnard, among other arguments, alledged, That the ſcheme was ſuch as could not, even by malice itſelf, be repreſented to be worſe than it really was; that it was a pill, which, if the people of England were obliged to ſwallow, they would find as bitter a pill as ever was ſwallowed by them ſince they were a people; that the intended remedy for preventing frauds in the collection of the revenue was far more deſperate than the diſeaſe; that the conſtitution of our government, and the liberty of the ſubject, were never more nearly, or more immediately concerned in any queſtion; and that it was a dangerous encroachment upon the ancient birthright of Engliſhmen, the right of trial by jury (q). A great number of the citizens having come down to the lobby of the Houſe of Commons, and ſome of the crowd who had mixed with them having behaved tumultuouſly, Sir Robert Walpole took notice of the extraordinary concourſe of people who were collected together at the door, and declared his diſapprobation of the methods which had been uſed to bring them thither. In doing this, he ſo far loſt the uſual moderation of his temper, as to drop an expreſſion which gave the higheſt offence to the city of London, and was long remembered to his diſadvantage. 'Gentlemen, he obſerved, might ſay what they pleaſed of the mul-'titudes at the door, and in all the avenues leading to the houſe; they might call them a 'modeſt multitude if they would; they might give them what names they thought fit; 'it might be ſaid that they came as humble ſupplicants: But,' added Sir Robert, 'I 'know whom the Law calls STURDY BEGGARS; and thoſe who brought them hither 'could not be certain, but that they might have behaved in the ſame manner.' Sir John Barnard riſing up to anſwer this reflection, the Committee, for a while, were in ſome confuſion, in conſequence of the queſtion's being loudly called for. At length, however, order being reſtored, Sir John made the following reply: 'Sir, I know of no irregular 'or unfair methods that were uſed to call people from the city to your door. It is cer-'tain, that any ſet of Gentlemen or Merchants may lawfully deſire their friends, they 'may even write letters, and they may ſend thoſe letters to whom they pleaſe, to deſire 'the Merchants of figure and character to come down to the Court of Requeſts and to 'our Lobby, in order to ſolicit their friends and acquaintance againſt any ſcheme or pro-'ject, which they think may be prejudicial to them. This is the undoubted right of the 'ſubject, and what has been always practiſed upon all occaſions. The honourable Gen-'tleman talks of Sturdy Beggars; I do not know what ſort of people may be now at our 'door, becauſe I have not lately been out of the Houſe. But I believe they are the ſame 'ſort of people that were there when I came laſt into the Houſe; and then I can aſſure 'you, that I ſaw none but ſuch as deſerve the name of Sturdy Beggars as little as the 'honourable Gentleman himſelf, or any Gentleman whatever. It is well known that the 'city of London was ſufficiently appriſed of what we were this day to be about. Where 'they got their information I do not know; but I am very certain, that they had a right 'notion of the ſcheme which has been now opened to us: and they were ſo generally 'and zealouſly bent againſt it, that whatever methods may have been uſed to call them 'together, I am ſure it would have been impoſſible to have found any legal method to 'have prevented their coming hither (r).' When four reſolutions had been formed by the Committee, in purſuance of Sir Robert Walpole's motion, relating to the Exciſe-Scheme, and were reported to the Houſe on the 16th of March, Sir John Barnard took the lead, with his uſual ſpirit, in the freſh debate which aroſe upon the queſtion of agreeing to the firſt reſolution. And the ſame vigorous oppoſition was continued by him through the whole progreſs of the bill, till, as is well known, Sir Robert Walpole himſelf found it neceſſary to move, on the 11th of April, 1733, that the ſecond reading of it ſhould be deferred for two months (s).

On the 5th of March, 1734-5, a motion was made, by Sir John Barnard, for leave to bring in a bill, 'For reſtraining the Number of Houſes for playing of Interludes, and 'for the better regulating common Players of Interludes.' In ſupport of his motion, he repreſented the miſchief that was done to the metropolis by the effect which the play-houſes had in corrupting the youth, encouraging vice and debauchery, and prejudicing the ſpirit of induſtry and trade; and he urged, that theſe evils would be much increaſed, if, according to a project, which was then ſet on foot, another play-houſe ſhould be erected in the very heart of the city. He was ſeconded by Mr. Sandys, and was ſo ably ſuſtained by Mr. Pulteney, Sir Robert Walpole, Sir Joſeph Jekyll, Sir Thomas Saunderſon, and Mr. James Erſkine, that it was ordered, nemine contradicente, that a bill ſhould be brought in, purſuant to Sir John Barnard's motion. This was accordingly done: but the affair was afterwards dropped, on account of a clauſe, which was offered to be inſerted in the bill, for enlarging the power of the Lord Chamberlain, with regard to the licenſing of plays (t). At Midſummer, 1735, Sir John Barnard was choſen, together with his brother-in-law, Alderman Godſchall, to the office of Sheriff for the city of (p) Chandler's Hiſtory and Proceedings of the Houſe of Commons, Vol. vii. p. 307, 308.

(q) Ibid. p. 327, 335—339.

(r) Ibid. p. 351—353.

(s) Ibid. 353—358. 371. 373.

(t) Chandler, ubi ſupra, Vol. ix. p. 93, 94.

of London and county of Middleſex (u). When, on the ſecond of February, 1736-7, Mr. Pulteney moved, in the Houſe of Commons, for an addreſs to his Majeſty, that he would graciouſly be pleaſed to ſettle 100,000 pounds a year upon his Royal Highneſs Frederic Prince of Wales, Sir John was one of the Gentlemen who ſpoke in its favour (w).

(u) Gent. Mag. Vol. v. p. 331.

(w) Chandler, ubi ſupra, p. 277.

Hitherto our upright and excellent Magiſtrate and Senator had been ſingularly popular in his undertakings. But in the next great affair he was engaged in, though his purpoſes were as wiſe and upright as in any part of his former conduct, he met with a very different fate. On the 14th of March, 1736-7, he made a motion for enabling his Majeſty to raiſe money towards redeeming Old and New South-ſea annuities. This was done with a view of reducing the intereſt of theſe annuities from four to three per cent. and thereby to prepare a way for a like reduction of intereſt with regard to the other funds. In conſequence of the debates which aroſe on this occaſion, ſeveral reſolutions were formed by the Committee of the whole Houſe; and a bill was ordered in, for converting all the public funds, redeemable by law, into an intereſt or annuity, not exceeding 3 per cent. per annum. The matter, however, was ſo altered, modified, and refined upon, and rendered ſo unacceptable, by the artifices of thoſe in power, that, after long and violent debates, it came to nothing. The integrity of Sir John Barnard appeared in his moving, about the ſame time, that the Houſe would, as ſoon as the annual intereſt of all the national redeemable debt ſhould be reduced to 3 per cent. take off ſome of the heavy taxes, which oppreſs the poor and manufacturers: But this propoſition was rejected by a conſiderable majority (x). Notwithſtanding the undeniable uprightneſs of his intentions, he became, while his attempt to reduce the yearly dividends of the funds was depending, very obnoxious to the public. Inſtead of receiving the applauſe which he juſtly merited, he was inſulted with revilings, and expoſed to the reſentment of the populace. A young man, belonging to a public office, headed a mob, who endeavoured to break into Sir John Barnard's houſe. Though farther violence was prevented, the diſturbance continued for ſome hours. The leader of the rioters, conſcious that the aſſault might eaſily be proved upon him, conſulted his ſafety by flight into another country. After ſeveral months, Sir John Barnard was entreated to ſuffer the criminal to return without moleſtation; to which he generouſly anſwered, 'that he felt no reſent-'ment againſt the youth; that it was enough, if he was ſenſible of his fault; that no 'proſecution was ever intended; and that allowances ſhould be made for the effect 'which inflammatory ſpeeches have upon young minds, from thoſe whom it is their 'duty to reſpect and love.' The odium which was excited by the plan of our faithful Senator ſoon ſubſided. His character ſhone the brighter from the cloud which had been caſt upon it (y). And when, ſome years afterwards, Mr. Henry Pelham adopted, and carried into execution, the ſcheme which was now rejected, he was greatly aided and encouraged in the undertaking, by Sir John Barnard (z). Indeed, Sir John was ſo fully convinced of the wiſdom and utility of the deſign, that he publiſhed, though without his name, in February, 1749-50, a ſmall tract in defence of it, entitled, 'Conſidera-'tions on the Propoſal for reducing the Intereſt on the National Debt.' This piece is written with great perſpicuity and good ſenſe; and the arguments of it were by no means invalidated by an anſwer to it, called, 'Annotations on a late Pamphlet, entitled, Con-'ſiderations on the Propoſals for reducing the Intereſt on the National Debt (*).'

(x) Ibid. 370. 382. 416. 447. 452. 454. 478, 479. Uſe and Abuſe of Parliaments, Vol. ii. p. 556.

(y) Memoirs, ubi ſupra, p. 12, 13.

(z) From private information.

(*) Theſe pamphlets, and two others mentioned below, have been obligingly put into our hands by Mr. Reed of Staples Inn.

In 1737, he was raiſed to the dignity of chief Magiſtrate of the city of London; and no one ever diſcharged the office with greater reputation to himſelf, or advantage to the public. During his whole Mayoralty, he paid a paternal attention to the welfare of his fellow-citizens. Though he was enthuſiaſtically devoted to a country evening retirement, he would not ſleep a ſingle night in his houſe at Clapham, leſt any perſon ſhould be injured by his indulging himſelf even with a ſhort abſence from the metropolis. He gave ſuch ſtrict injunctions to remove the nuiſance of common beggars out of the City, and took ſuch care to have his injunctions obſerved, that ſcarcely a vagrant was to be ſeen within the walls. When young delinquents were brought before him, he was an advocate, in every inſtance wherein it could be done with propriety, for ſoftening the penalties they had incurred. If proſecutors were of a ſevere temper, he would labour to diſſuade them from ſending a petty offender, for the firſt treſpaſs, to a priſon, where ſurrounding proſtitutes, and wretches hardened in vice, might induce a total corruption of manners. There were not wanting, it is ſaid, ſeveral inſtances in which his prudence and ſeaſonable lenity became happily ſucceſsful in reſtoring deluded youths to regularity of conduct, and the order of ſociety. But where ſeverity was neceſſary, Sir John Barnard well knew how to exerciſe it with a becoming firmneſs. As the regard he bore to the Clergy was generally ſpoken of, an offender of that order thought that he ſhould hence be treated with greater gentleneſs. Accordingly, he appeared before the Lord Mayor in his canonical robes. But his Lordſhip ſtrongly repreſented to him that the ſanctity of the clerical profeſſion was a high aggravation of the fault; and, without paying the leaſt deference to his religious garb, puniſhed the reverend delinquent according to his crime (a). Among other methods which our active Magiſtrate took to promote virtuous manners, and the good government of the City, one was the iſſuing of a ſtrict order for the decent obſervance of the Lord's day. The edict was ſo diligently enforced, enforced, as effectually to awe the offenders againſt whom it was levelled. The Sunday was obſerved, throughout the City, with a decency which, it is apprehended, hath never ſince been equalled (b); and it muſt be acknowledged that Sir John Barnard, by his conduct in this reſpect, conſulted not only the honour of religion, but the political welfare and happineſs of the community [D].

(a) Memoirs, ubi ſupra, p. 9, 10.

(b) Ibid. p. 10, 11.

There was an excellent rule laid down by Sir John Barnard for himſelf in his Mayoralty, and which well deſerves to be imitated. He would not permit, if it could poſſibly be avoided, any perſons to be committed to the Compter, even for a ſingle night, without the accuſation's being heard. He thought that the confinement of a ſingle night might, if they were innocent, be very injurious to the parties put into cuſtody; it might hurt their morals, or otherwiſe be very diſtreſſing to themſelves or families. He ſat up, therefore, every evening till after eleven o'clock, to hear the caſes of thoſe who were laid hold of by the Conſtables. One night, when he was gone up ſtairs to bed, a woman was brought, who had been ſeized as a ſtreet-walker. Though the Lord Mayor was nearly undreſſed, he readily came down again. The woman alledged in her defence, that ſhe was a perſon of honeſty, who lived in a remote part of Wapping, and had been kept out late by neceſſary and unavoidable buſineſs. As ſhe ſaid that her neighbours would teſtify to her character, his Lordſhip waited patiently to paſt three in the morning, until ſome of them came for that purpoſe (c). During his Mayoralty, he had the misfortune of loſing his Lady, whoſe funeral proceſſion to Clapham was attended, through the City, by the children belonging to Chriſt's Hoſpital, of which he was many years Preſident (d).

(c) From the obliging information of Robert Dingley, Eſq;

(d) New and general Dictionary, Vol. xii. P. 39.

In 1745, the whole kingdom was indebted to the weight and influence of Sir John Barnard, in aſſiſting to prevent the public confuſion. The ſucceſſes of the rebels in Scotland, at that time, and their march into the heart of England, had ſpread ſuch a terror through the City, that public credit began to be ſhaken, and there was a run upon the Bank, the notes of which had ſunk to ten per cent. below their value. In this criſis, Sir John Barnard took the lead at the head of one thouſand and ſix hundred merchants and principal traders, who, at Garraway's Coffee-houſe, ſigned the following agreement:

'We, the underſigned merchants, and others, being ſenſible how neceſſary the preſervation of public credit is, at this time, do hereby declare, that we will not refuſe to receive Bank notes in payment of any ſum of money to be paid to us, and that we will uſe our utmoſt endeavours to make all our payments in the ſame manner.' This happy expedient removed the jealouſies which the enemies of the conſtitution, or the fears of the people, had excited, and reſtored public credit to its uſual vigour. Sir John Barnard having diſapproved of the method of raiſing the ſupplies for the ſervice of the year 1746, and having made ſome other propoſals for that purpoſe, a pamphlet was addreſſed to him, which blamed his conduct in this reſpect, and objected to the ſchemes he had offered *. To this he thought proper to reply, in a tract to which he prefixed his name, entitled, 'A Defence of ſeveral Propoſals for raiſing of three Millions for the Service of the Government, for the Year 1746; with a poſtſcript, containing ſome notions relating to public credit:' and whoever peruſes it, will be ſenſible how well ſkilled he was in matters of finance (e). Upon the death of Sir John Thompſon, in 1749, Sir John Barnard took upon him the office of Alderman of Bridge-ward without; and thus became in name, as before he might be deemed in reality, THE FATHER OF THE CITY (f). The ſenſe of the many advantages, which he had been active in procuring for the nation in general, and the metropolis in particular, induced the body of London Merchants to teſtify their veneration for him, by erecting his ſtatue, during his lifetime, in the Royal Exchange (g); an honour which had never before been conferred on any beneath a crowned head (h). Sir John Barnard's modeſty engaged him ſincerely to object to this ſignal mark of the gratitude and eſteem of his fellow-citizens. He thought that ſuch a teſtimony of regard ought not to be paid to any character, till its perſeverance in integrity had been ſealed by death; and he ſaid that he could not, conſiſtently with decorum and delicacy, appear in the Royal Exchange, when his ſtatue was there. Accordingly, he never afterwards uſed to go within ſide of it, but contented himſelf with tranſacting his buſineſs in the front of that building (i). In the year 1754, without his ſolicitations, and, indeed, contrary to his wiſhes, he was choſen, for the laſt time, to a ſeat in Parliament for the city of London; on which occaſion, he made the following ſpeech to his Electors: 'The honour you have done me in chooſing me ſix times one of your repreſentatives in Parliament, calls for my ſincere and hearty thanks; the rather, as I look upon the preſent election to be the laſt favour I can expect. I have not of late preſumed to offer my ſervice, knowing my inability to give that

* The title of it was, 'A Letter to Sir John Barnard, upon his Propoſals for raiſing three Millions of Money, for the Service of the Year 1746. From a Member of the Houſe of Commons.'

(e) Memoirs, ubi ſupra, p. 13.

(f) New and general Dictionary, ubi ſupra.

(g) It was erected on the 23d of May, 1747. Gent. Mag. Vol. xvii.

(h) Memoirs, ubi ſupra.

(i) From private information.

[D] Welfare and happineſs of the community.] The inſtitution of Sunday is admirable in a civil and political, as well as in a religious view. The obſervance of it furniſhes a neceſſary repoſe and relief to the laborious part of mankind, tends to ſoften their manners, and inſpires them with a regard to the moral duties of ſociety. Thoſe families, therefore, who ſo order their affairs as not to give their ſervants an opportunity of attending divine worſhip, conſult neither their own ſecurity, nor the intereſt of their domeſtics, nor the benefit of the public. Their conduct is as cenſurable, in the eſtimation of ſound wiſdom and philoſophy, as it is criminal in the eyes of true piety.

'attendance

'attendance in Parliament, which this honourable city has a right to require from its 'members. But the continuance of your polling for me, is a proof of your kindneſs in 'overlooking my failings, and of your affectionate regard for me. The impreſſion which 'this hath made upon my heart can never be effaced, of which I beg leave to aſſure 'you, and of my beſt endeavours to promote the good of this city in particular, and of 'the nation in general (k).'

(k) Gent. Mag. Vol. xxiv. p. 240.

Sir John Barnard finding, ſome few years afterwards, that the infirmities of age advanced faſt upon him, and having always diſliked the thought of retaining a truſt when the duties of it could no longer be fulfilled, thought proper to reſign his Alderman's gown. This reſolution, which took place in July 1758, was received with the ſincere concern of his brethren, and his fellow-citizens. The ſubſequent record of his worth, at the motion of John Paterſon, Eſq; was ordered to be entered upon their books, by the Court of Common-Council. 'Sir John Barnard, ſo juſtly and emphati-'cally ſtiled the Father of this City, having lately, to the great and laſting regret of 'this Court, thought proper to reſign the office of Alderman, it is unanimouſly reſolved, 'that the thanks of this Court be given him, for having ſo long and ſo faithfully devoted 'himſelf to the ſervice of his fellow-citizens; for the honour and influence which this 'city has, upon many occaſions, derived from the dignity of his character, and the 'wiſdom, ſteadineſs, and integrity of his conduct, both in Church and State; his 'noble ſtruggles for liberty; and his diſintereſted, invariable purſuits of the true 'glory and proſperity of his King and country, uninfluenced by power, unawed by 'clamour, and unbiaſſed by the prejudices of party (l).' An equally honourable reſolution was paſſed by the Court of Aldermen [E].

(l) Gent. Mag. Vol. xxviii. p. 337.

Sir John Barnard, after reſigning the office of Alderman, retired, in a great meaſure, from public buſineſs, and lived in a private manner, at his houſe at Clapham, for the remainder of his days. The perſons he commonly aſſociated with were his neighbours, moſt of them merchants, whom he uſed to meet at a weekly club. It was his cuſtom, likewiſe, to go, once a week, to the common bowling green. When he rode out on the Saturdays and Mondays, the principal gentlemen of Clapham attended him, and eſteemed themſelves highly honoured in being of his party (m). After ſome years of honourable retirement, he departed this life on the 29th of Auguſt, 1764, at Clapham in Surry, and was buried at Mortlake in the ſame county (n).

(m) From the information of Robert Dingley, Eſq;

(n) Memoirs, ubi ſupra, p. 21.

All who have written concerning Sir John Barnard, and all who were acquainted with him, have united in teſtifying to the univerſal excellence of his character. He was not only blameleſs, but eminently exemplary, as a ſon, a huſband, a father, a maſter, a benefactor, a merchant, a magiſtrate, and a ſenator. To the faithful and active diſcharge of the perſonal and ſocial duties, he added a moſt devout ſenſe of religion. The firſt hour, at leaſt, of every day was employed in prayer, and the ſtudy of the Scriptures. He attended public worſhip twice on a Sunday, and was conſtant in receiving the communion. He had ſuch a high reverence for the Bible, that he always expreſſed a great diſlike of any attacks which were made upon its ſacred original and authority (o). Some few farther particulars concerning him will be mentioned in the note [F].

(o) Ibid. p. 18, 20.

Sir John Barnard left one ſon, and two daughters. His ſon John Barnard, Eſq; of Berkeley Square, is known for his taſte in the polite arts, and for his admirable collection of pictures. Of Sir John Barnard's daughters, the eldeſt was married to Thomas Hankey, Eſq; afterwards Sir Thomas Hankey, Knt. and the youngeſt to the honourable Henry Temple, Eſq; eldeſt ſon of the late Lord Palmerſton, and father, by this Lady, to the preſent Lord (p).]

K.

(p) Almon's Peerage of Ireland, Vol. iii. p. 98.

[E] Was paſſed by the Court of Aldermen.] At the motion of Sir Robert Ladbroke, it was unanimouſly agreed and ordered, 'That the thanks of this Court 'be given to Sir John Barnard Knt. late one of the 'Aldermen, and father of this City, for his conſtant 'attendance, and ſalutary counſels in this Court; 'his wiſe, vigilant, and impartial adminiſtration of 'juſtice; his unwearied zeal for the honour, ſafety, 'and proſperity of his fellow-citizens; his inviolable 'attachment to the laws and liberties of his country; 'and for the noble example he has ſet of a long and 'uninterrupted courſe of virtue, in private as well as 'public life (25).'

(25) Gent. Mag. Vol. xxviii. p. 338.

[F] Will be mentioned in the note.] Sir John Barnard did not, in leaving the Quakers, lay aſide the ſimplicity of his manners. He was plain in his dreſs and addreſs; clear, unaffected, and conciſe in his language. Though modeſt in his deportment, he feared no man in the diſcharge of his duty. Once, when he had riſen in a debate, Sir Robert Walpole, then in the height of his power, was whiſpering to the Speaker, who leaned towards him, over the arm of his chair. Upon this Sir John Barnard cried out, 'Mr. Speaker, Mr. Speaker, I 'addreſs myſelf to you, and not to your chair. I 'will be heard. I call that Gentleman to order.' The Speaker turned about, diſmiſſed Sir Robert, aſked Sir John's pardon, and deſired him to proceed. Another time, when Sir Robert Walpole had taken a roll of paper from off the table, and was reading it, Sir John Barnard obliged him to lay it down, and attend to the buſineſs of the Houſe.

When, during Lord Granville's being Secretary of State, any applications were made by the Merchants to Adminiſtration, his Lordſhip was accuſtomed to aſk, 'What does Sir John Barnard ſay? what is his 'opinion?' That celebrated nobleman and Mr. Pulteney uſed frequently to viſit him at Clapham, to requeſt his advice with regard to any important affairs in which they were engaged. Lord Chatham, when Mr. Pitt, hath been known to ſtile him the great Commoner; and Lord Palmerſton requeſted his youngeſt daughter for his eldeſt ſon, as an honour done to his family.

It is ſaid, that Sir John Barnard was once preſſed, by King George the Second, to accept the poſt of Chancellor of the Exchequer, which he refuſed (26). This was in February 1745-6, when Earl Granville was again appointed Secretary of State; but was obliged to reſign the ſeals in a few days, on account of a powerful combination againſt him.]

(26) From the information of Robert Dingley, Eſq;

BARNES (JOSHUA), a learned divine, and Profeſſor of the Greek language at Cambridge, was born at London the 10th of January, 1654 (a). His father was a tradeſman of that city. Joſhua had his education in grammar learning at Chriſt's Hoſpital in London, where he diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his early knowledge of Greek, and by ſome Poems in Latin and Engliſh [A], written before he went to the Univerſity. December the 11th, 1671, he was admitted a Servitor in Emanuel-college in Cambridge (b). In 1675, he publiſhed, at London, a little piece, intitled, Gerania: or, A new Diſcovery of a little Sort of People called Pigmies (c). June the 7th, 1678, he was elected Fellow of Emanuel-college (d). The next year, 1679, he publiſhed at London, in octavo, his Poetical Paraphraſe on the Hiſtory of Eſther [B]. In 1686, he took the degree of Bachelor in Divinity (e), and, in 1688, publiſhed his Life of King Edward III. [C], dedicated

(a) See his Epitaph in Remark [H].

(b) Regiſter of Emanuel College.

(c) Catalogue of his Works, ſubjoined to the Prolegomena of his Anacreon, 1ſt edition.

(d) Regiſter of Emanuel College.

(e) Univerſity Regiſter.

[A] Poems in Latin and Engliſh.] I. Sacred Poems, in five books, viz. 1. Κοσμοποιΐα, or The Creation of the World. 2. The Fall of Adam and the Redemption by Chriſt. 3. An Hymn to the Holy Trinity. 4. A Paſtoral Eclogue upon the Reſtoration of King Charles II., and an Eſſay upon the Royal Exchange. 5. Panegyris, or the Muſes, &c. Theſe pieces are in Engliſh, with a Latin dedication, An. 1669. II. The Life of Oliver Cromwell, the Tyrant. An Engliſh Poem, 1670. III. Several Dramatic Pieces, viz. Xerxes, Pythias and Damon, Holofernes, &c. ſome in Engliſh and ſome in Latin; the former written entirely by himſelf, the latter in conjunction with others. Alſo ſome Tragedies of Seneca tranſlated into Engliſh. IV. Upon the Fire of London and the Plague, a Latin poem in heroic verſe. V. A Latin Elegy upon the beheading of St. John the Baptiſt (1).

(1) See the Catalogue of Mr. Barnes's Works, ſubjoined to the Prolegomena of his Anacreon, 1ſt edit.

[B] His Poetical Paraphraſe on the Hiſtory of Eſther.] The Title is; Αὐλικοκάτοπτρον, ſive Eſtheræ Hiſtoria, Poetica Paraphraſi, idque Græco carmine, cui verſio Latina opponitur, exornata; una cum Scholiis, ſeu Annotationibus Gr cis; in quibus (ad ſacri textus dilucidationem) præter alia non pauca, Gentium Orientalium Antiquitates, Moreſque reconditiores proferuntur. Additur Parodia Homerica de eadam hac Hiſtoria. Acceſſit Index rerum ac verborum copioſiſſimus; i. e. 'The Courtier's Looking-Glaſs; or, The 'Story of Eſther paraphraſed in Greek verſe, with a 'Latin tranſlation in the oppoſite page, and Greek 'Scholia or Notes; in which (to illuſtrate the ſacred 'Text) beſides many other particulars, the Antiquities 'and more remote cuſtoms of the Eaſtern nations are 'explained. To which is added, a parody in Homerics 'upon the ſame Story, and a copious Index of Things 'and Words.' It was printed, as the title-page informs us, at his own charge. The Imprimatur is dated July 3, 1676. It is dedicated to Dr. John Dolben, Biſhop of Rocheſter and Dean of Weſtminſter (2), who, as the dedication tells us, contributed largely to the expence of the impreſſion. In the preface he tells us, he had finiſhed this piece five years before; but, by advice of his friends, had deferred the publication of it, in order to poliſh it at his leiſure. He juſtifies, by the authority of Joſephus, his placing this hiſtory after the time of Nehemiah, contrary to the opinion of many conſiderable writers. He conſiders, who Ahaſuerus, mentioned in the Hiſtory of Eſther, was; and determines him to have been the famous Xerxes. He diſplays the moral uſes that may be made of his poem, and vindicates his introducing the names of the pagan deities and prophane alluſions into a ſacred ſubject. The preface is followed by ſeveral copies of verſes in Greek and Latin, addreſſed to the author, by Dr. James Duport and others. As a ſpecimen of Mr. Barnes's talent at Greek Poetry, we ſhall oblige the learned reader with the following beautiful deſcription of Eſther's perſon.

(2) Afterwards Archbiſhop of York.

Ἦγ' ὐδὲν ποθέουσα, τὸ δ' πάρος εἵλετο, μύθῃ
Μαρμαρυγὴν ἀφέηκεν ἀκιδδήλοιο προσώπου,
Μαρμαρυγὴν, ἣ πάντας ἐτέρψατο εἰσορόωντας·
Κυάνεαι λιπαρὴν κεφαλὴν κόσμησαν ἔθειραι,
Ἃς γλυκεροῖς δεσμοίσιν ἐδήσατο Κύπρις ἐρώτων.
Ὄμματα δ' ἀγράποντα πόθῳ πτερόεντας ὀϊστούς.
Ὀφρυσιν ἀμφ' ἑκατέρθεν ἐπωξύνοντο μελαίναις.
Καὶ ῥόδα μὲν κρίνοισι μεμιγμένα, λευκῷ ἐρυθρόν
Ὥπτι νέον λειμῶνα θέσαν· χροιὴ δὲ παρειων
Καλὸν ἐρευθιόωσα φάνη καλύκεσσιν ὁμοίη.
Χείλεα δ' αὖ σιγήσω, ὅπως μὴ Κύπριν ὀρίνω
(Εἰ πω Κύπρις ἔην γε) τὰ Χείλεα φέρτερα δείξας·
Πειθὼ δὲ στόμα καλὸν ἀεὶ κ᾽ ὀδόντας ἔναιε,
Τὰς μὲν λευκοτέρης χιόνος, τὸ δὲ νέκταρ ἐνίκα.
Μαζὼς οἰδαλέης διδυμοῖς σωροῖσιν ἐίσκω
Ἠδείης κασίης λευκῷ ἐριθείοισι γάλακτι,
Οἰστροφόρος δὲ πόθος χρυσέην ὑπεβάλλετο ζώνην.
Ἀμφὶ δ' ἑ πέπλον ἔχευεν ἑανὸν εἵματα τ' ἄλλα
Δῖ' Εὐσχημοσύνη, ποσσιν θ' ὑπέδησε πέδιλα.
Λειρὴν δ' ἔ τῳ ἔϊσκον, ὅτ' ὐδέποτ' ἄλλο πέφυκε
Τόσσησιν χαρίτεσσι βεβυσμένον, ἠδ' ἄν ἐρίζοι·
Πάντα μὲν ἦν κάλλιστα· Δέμας γλυκὺς ὅρμος ἐρώτων, Μᾶλλον δ' ἔνδον ἔλαμψε Νόος γ' ἀρετῇσι φαεινός (3).

(3) Αὐλικοκάτοπτρου. Edit. Lond. 1679. Κεφ. β. ver. 345.

The Homerical Parody, mentioned in the title, conſiſts of but fifty-ſix lines, and is an Epitome of the ſtory of Eſther in the very words of Homer. It begins, like the firſt book of the Iliad, thus:

Μῆνιν ἄειδε Θεὰ Ἀμαληχιάδεω Ἀμανῆος
Οὐλομένην, ἣ μυρί' Ἑβραίοις ἄλγε ἔθηκε,
Πρόσθεν δ' ἰφθίμους ψυχὰς Ἄϊδι προΐαψεν, &c.

The author tells us, he wrote it in leſs than an hour. It is entitled, Σουσιάδος Ῥαψωδία ἢ Παρῳδία Ὁμηρική. It is followed by a copy of Greek verſes, entitled, Εὐχαριστήριον εἴτ' ἦν τῶν τῆς ἐμῆς Ἐθῆρος φίλων κατάλογος καὶ Μνημόσυνη; i. e. 'A Thankſgiving; or, Catalogue 'and Memorial of the Friends of my Eſther.'

[C] His Life of King Edward III.] It is entitled, The Hiſtory of that moſt victorious Monarch Edward III., King of England and France, and Lord of Ireland, and firſt Founder of the moſt noble order of the Garter; being a full and exact account of the Life and Death of the ſaid King; together with that of his moſt renowned Son, Edward Prince of Wales and Acquitain, ſurnamed The Black Prince; faithfully and carefully collected from the beſt and moſt ancient Authors domeſtic and foreign, printed Books, Manuſcripts, and Records: By Joſhua Barnes, Bachelor of Divinity, and one of the Senior Fellows of Emanuel-College Cambridge. Cambridge, 1688. In folio. In the Preface he tells us, 'He had undertaken a work of ſo much difficulty, 'that nothing but a ſenſe of the honour and real ad- 'vantage thereof could have animated him to it. For 'the obſcurity of our hiſtories being ſo great, and the 'miſtakes and oppoſition of them one with another 'being ſo frequent, it muſt neceſſarily ſeem a labour 'not ſmall to endeavour to give a juſt account of the 'whole ſeries of all public actions for the continuance 'of fifty years and upwards, at ſuch a long diſtance of 'time, as more than three centuries.' However he obſerves, 'That his reſolution had been to ſhew ſo 'much diligence in the collecting, and ſo much in- 'tegrity in the compoſing, that if he could not obtain 'the knowledge of all the moſt momentous truths, 'yet he ſhould purpoſely decline all fabulous narra- 'tions, all groundleſs opinions, all popular errors, 'partiality, and prejudice, and ſeriouſly conform him- 'ſelf to thoſe rules and decencies, which belong to a 'faithful hiſtorian. That the ſubject matter of his 'diſcourſe is the honour of his country, the life and 'actions of one of the greateſt Kings, whom perhaps 'the world ever ſaw, the rights of the Engliſh crown, 'and how well our anceſtors were able to vindicate 'them.' He informs us alſo, 'That he does not con- 'fine himſelf wholly to the relation of King Edward's 'exploits, or to thoſe of his invincible ſon the Black 'Prince, and the reſt of his noble and victorious chil- 'dren; but that whatever name he found memorable 'of his ſubjects in either of his kingdoms, whether 'they were famed for arts of war or peace, he had 'endeavoured to pay them that juſt duty, which he 'thought they deſerved; becauſe it ſeemed to him 'altogether fit, that thoſe, who then ſtood with their 'ſovereign in his grand offices of war or government, 'ſhould by no means now be deprived of a partici- 'pation with him in his glorious memoirs; eſpecially 'ſince not a few are ſtill remaining derived from dedicated to King James II. In 1694 came out his edition of Euripides [D], dedicated to Charles Duke of Somerſet; and in 1695, he was choſen Greek Profeſſor of the univerſity of Cambridge. In the year 1700, Mr. Barnes married Mrs. Maſon [E], a widow lady of Hemingford near St. Ives in Huntingdonſhire, with a jointure of 200 l. per annum. In 1705, he publiſhed, at Cambridge, his edition of ANACREON [F], dedicated to the Duke of Marlborough; and, in 1710, his HOMER [G]; the Iliad dedicated to the Earl of Pembroke, and the Odyſſey to the Earl of Nottingham. Mr. Joſhua Barnes died the 3d of Auguſt 1712, in the 58th year of his age (f), and was buried at Hemingford, where is a monument erected to him by his widow [H]. Our author wrote

'thoſe

(f) See his Epitaph.

'thoſe famous anceſtors, whoſe minds may be more 'ſtrongly affected with due incentives of honour, 'when they ſhall underſtand by what methods their 'forefathers attained ſuch eſtates and titles, which 'they now as worthily enjoy.' Biſhop Nicolſon, in his Engliſh Hiſtorical Library (4), gives this character of our author's performance. 'Above all, Mr. Joſhua 'Barnes has diligently collected whatever was to be 'had (far and near) upon the ſeveral paſſages of this 'great King's reign. His quotations are many; and '(generally) his authors are as well choſen, as ſuch a 'multitude can be ſuppoſed to have been. His in'ferences are not always becoming a ſtateſman; and 'ſometimes his digreſſions are tedious. His deriving 'of the famous inſtitution of the Garter from the 'Phœnicians *, is extremely obliging to good Mr. 'Sammes †; but came too late, it ſeems, to Mr. Aſh'mole's knowledge, or otherwiſe would have bid fair 'for a choice poſt of honour in his elaborate book. 'In ſhort, this induſtrious author ſeems to have driven 'his work too faſt to the preſs, before he had pro'vided an Index, and ſome other accoutrements, which 'might have rendered it more ſerviceable to his 'readers.' In this hiſtory Mr. Barnes ſeems to affect imitating Thucydides, and other ancient hiſtorians, particularly in introducing his heroes making long and elaborate ſpeeches, which ſeem to be the reſult of his own imagination.

(4) P. 80. See his Engliſh, Scotch, and Iriſh Hiſtorical Libraries, &c. Lond. 1736. folio.

* P. 294, 295.

† Aylet Sammes, who, in his Britannia Antiqua Illuſtrata, folio. Lond. 1661. fetches the Original of the Britiſh Cuſtoms, Religion, and Laws, from the Phœnicians.

[D] His Euripides.] It is entitled, Euripidis quæ extant omnia, Tragœdiæ nempe XX., præter ultimam omnes completæ: Item Fragmenta aliarum pluſquam LX. Tragœdiarum et Epiſtolæ V., nunc primum et ipſæ adjectæ; i. e. 'All the works of Euripides, namely, 'Twenty Tragedies, all perfect but the laſt; alſo 'Fragments of above ſixty other Tragedies, and five 'epiſtles, now firſt added.' Mr. Barnes has corrected the text of Euripides, which was greatly corrupted in all the preceding editions, and particularly reſtored the metre, of which he has diſcourſed at large in his Preliminary Diſſertation, De Tragœdia veterum Græcorum. As to the Latin verſion, he has retained that of William Canter, and Æmylius Portus, which he has corrected in many places; eſteeming it preferable to the old verſion, which paſſes under the name of Dorotheus Camillus, or that of Melancthon. He has prefixed a Diſſertation on the Life and Writings of Euripides; in which, following the common opinion, he has placed that Poet's birth in the firſt year of the 75th Olympiad, though the Arundelian marble (5) places it in the fourth year of the 73d Olympiad. He has given us three Indexes; the firſt upon the Poet himſelf, the ſecond upon the Scholia, and the third upon the authors quoted in the Scholia, and the notes.

(5) See Baſil Kennet's Lives and Characters of the ancient Greek Poets, P. i. p. 107. edit. 1679.

[E] He married Mrs. Maſon.] The ſtory goes, that this lady, who was between forty and fifty, having for ſome time been a great admirer of Mr. Barnes, came to Cambridge, and deſired leave to ſettle an hundred pounds a year upon him after her death; which he politely refuſed, unleſs ſhe would condeſcend to make him happy in her perſon, which was none of the moſt engaging. The lady was too obliging to refuſe any thing to Joſhua, for whom, ſhe ſaid, the ſun ſtood ſtill; and ſoon after they were married.

[F] His Anacreon.] The title is, Anacreon Teius, Poeta Lyricus, ſumma cura et diligentia ad fidem etiam vet. MS. Vatican. emendatus, ac priſtino nitori numeriſque ſuis reſtitutus, dimidia fere parte auctus, aliquot nempe juſtis Poematiis et fragmentis plurimis ab undiquaque conquiſitis; i. e. 'Anacreon the Teian, a ly'ric Poet; corrected with the utmoſt care and dili'gence from an ancient manuſcript in the Vatican li'brary; reſtored to his priſtine beauty and metre; 'and enlarged almoſt half, namely, by ſome entire 'Poems, and ſeveral fragments collected from various 'authors.' There was a ſecond edition, after Mr. Barnes's death, printed at Cambridge, in 1721. It is dedicated to John, Duke of Marlborough. The dedication (dated from Hemingford near St. Ives in Huntingdonſhire, March 26, 1705) is followed by a Greek Anacreontic Ode upon the Duke's victory at Blenheim, with a Latin tranſlation in the ſame meaſure. Then follows the Life of Anacreon, in which he has endeavoured to vindicate that Poet from the charge of unnatural love, and to ſhew that his poems contain nothing indecent, or contrary to good manners, or improper to be put into the hands of youth; to which end he rejects ſome pieces in the Vatican manuſcript, which he will not allow to have been compoſed by Anacreon. In the Prolegomena he treats of the antiquity and invention of lyric poetry, and the peculiar character of Anacreon; alſo of the metre of that Poet. He anſwers likewiſe an objection urged againſt himſelf, as a Chriſtian Divine, for employing his time and pains on a ſubject of ſo light a nature; which he juſtifies from his having no benefice, or cure of ſouls, to engage his attention; and from his character as Profeſſor of the Greek tongue. To his edition of Anacreon he has ſubjoined the Epigrams of the Ancients and Moderns upon that Poet, and ſome Odes of his own compoſition, under the title of Anacreon Chriſtianus, with a Latin verſion of them in the ſame metre; alſo an Index to the whole.

[G] His Homer.] The title is; Homeri Ilias et Odyſſea, &c. Beſides a very correct text, the editor has given an exact Latin tranſlation, with the ancient Scholia, continued notes upon the text and Scholia, and many various readings; and has ſubjoined the Batrochomyomachia, the Hymns and Epigrams, the Fragments, and two Indexes. He informs us, he had written a treatiſe upon the age of Homer, his life, genealogy, &c. which he deſigned to have inſerted in this edition, but for a particular reaſon had deferred it to ſome other time. He has prefixed ſeveral pieces to the firſt volume, comprehending the Iliad; as, I. The Life of Homer, commonly aſcribed to Herodotus. II. Three ſmall pieces taken from Leo Allatius, De Patria Homeri. III. A paſſage from Suidas, and another from Pauſanias, relating to Homer. IV. Plutarch's account of the Life of this Poet. V. Certamen Homeri et Heſiodi. VI. A Diſſertation concerning Homer's Poetry, aſcribed by the Editor to Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus. VII. Porphyry's Quæſtiones Homericæ. VIII. The ſame author's De Nympharum Antro. IX. Dion Chryſoſtom's oration concerning Homer, with ſome notes thereon by Dr. John Davies, afterwards maſter of Queen's-college in Cambridge. There is an account of this edition of Homer in the Acta Eruditorum for January 1711 (6), in which we are told, that Mr. Barnes has given us a more correct and perfect edition of Homer than any which had appeared before, and that he has diſcovered in it great diligence, and ſkill in the Greek poetry. Nevertheleſs, we have there ſome objections againſt it, aſcribed to the learned Dr. Bentley. Particularly, Mr. Barnes is cenſured for retaining ſeveral of Schrevelius's abſurd interpolations in the ancient Greek Scholia; and exceptions are made to ſeveral points in the Prolegomena. When this edition was ready for the preſs, Mr. Barnes wrote a long copy of Engliſh verſes, now extant in the library of Emanuel-college; the deſign of which is to prove, that Solomon was the author of that divine work. It is imagined, he wrote theſe verſes, not ſo much from the perſuaſion of his own mind, as to amuſe his wife, and by that means engage her to ſupply him with money to defray the expences of the edition.

(6) P. 1. 54. 308.

[H] The inſcription on his monument.] It is as follows: H. S. E. Joſhua Barnes, S. T. B. Collegii Emmanuelis Socius, Linguæ Græcæ in Academia Cantabrigienſi Profeſſor Regius peritiſſimus. Plura Eruditionis et Induſtriæ Monumenta reliquit. Ob. Aug. 3.

wrote many other pieces, which were never publiſhed [I]. His character, both as a man and an author, ſhall be given in the remark [K]. B.

A. D. 1712. Ætat. 58. Maria Barnes conjugi dilectiſſimo M. P.

Βαρνήσιος δ' ἅπαντας
Νίκησε πολύτεχνος,
Λογογραφῶν φέριστος,
Ἄνθος τε τῶν Ἀοιδῶν·
Τῶν Ἱστόρων μέγιστος,
Καὶ Ῥητόρων ἄριστος,
Καὶ Μαντίων βαθύστος
Βριτανικῆς ἀρωγῆς.

The Greek Anacreontiques on the monument engliſhed.

'Kind Barnes, adorn'd by every Muſe,
'Each Greek in his own Art out-does:
'No Orator was ever greater;
'No Poet ever chanted ſweeter.
'H' excell'd in Grammar Myſtery,
'And the Black Prince of Hiſtory:
'And a Divine the moſt profound,
'That ever trod on Engliſh ground.'

Mr. Barnes read a ſmall Engliſh Bible, that he uſually carried about him, one hundred and twenty-one times over at leiſure hours. He was born January 10, 1654. All this is upon his monument.

[I] He wrote many pieces, which were never publiſhed.] There is ſubjoined to the firſt edition of his Anacreon at Cambridge, 1705; a Catalogue of Works, which Mr. Barnes had either publiſhed, or intended to publiſh; which catalogue is omitted in the ſecond edition of that Poet, printed after his death in 1721, though it is mentioned in the Contents and the Prolegomena. In this catalogue, beſides the books already mentioned, we find the following: I. The Warlike Lover, or the Generous Rival; an Engliſh Dramatic piece upon the war between the Engliſh and Dutch, and the death of the Earl of Sandwich, An. 1672. II. Ποσομφαπαὰχ, or Joſeph the Patriarch; a Greek Heroic poem in one book. The author deſigned twelve books, but finiſhed only one. III. Ὁμιολογία, or our Saviour's Sermon upon the Mount, the Decalogue, the Apoſtles Creed, the Lord's Prayer, the Magnificat, with other Hymns from the Old and New Teſtament, in Greek verſe. IV. Thuribulum, or the Hymns and Feſtivals in Greek verſe. V. Miſcellanies and Epigrams in Latin and Greek verſe. VI. Αγγλο Βιλγομαχία, or the Death of Edward Montague, Earl of Sandwich, in Greek, Latin, and Engliſh verſe. VII. Ἀλεκτρυομαχία, or a poem upon Cock-fighting, An. 1673. VIII. The Song of Songs, containing an hundred Hexaſtics in Engliſh Heroic verſe, An. 1674. IX. Σπιδηριάδος; a ludicrous Poem, in Greek Macaronic verſe, upon a Battle between a Spider and a Toad, An. 1673. X. Φλεϊάδος, or a Supplement to the old ludicrous Poem under that title, at Trinity-Houſe in Cambridge, upon a Battle between the Fleas and a Welſhman. XI. A Poetical Lexicon, Greek and Latin; to which is added a Lexicon of proper names, Fol. 1675. XII. A Treatiſe upon the Greek Accents, in anſwer to Henry Chriſtian Heninius and others, with a Diſcourſe upon the Points now in uſe. XIII. Humorous Poems upon the 9th book of the Iliad, and the ninth of the Odyſſey, in Engliſh; publiſhed in 1681. XIV. Franciados; an Heroic Poem, in Latin, upon the Black Prince. The whole was to conſiſt of twelve books, eight of which were finiſhed. XV. The Art of War, in four books, in Engliſh Proſe, 1676. XVI. Hengiſt, or The Engliſh Valour; an Heroic Poem in Engliſh, in ſeven books. XVII. Landgarth, or the Amazon Queen of Norway and Denmark; an Engliſh Dramatic Poem in Heroic verſe, deſigned in honour of the marriage between Prince George of Denmark and Princeſs Anne. XVIII. An Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory from the Beginning of the World to the Aſcenſion of our Saviour, in Latin: Fol. XIX. Miſcellaneous Poems in Engliſh. XX. Philoſophical and Divine Poems, in Latin, publiſhed at different times at Cambridge. XXI. Poems, and ſacred daily Meditations, continued for ſeveral years in Engliſh. XXII. A Diſſertation upon Pillars, Obeliſks, Pyramids, &c. in Latin, 1692. XXIII. A Diſcourſe upon the Sibyls, in three books, in Latin. XXIV. The Life of Pindar in four Lectures, and thirty-two Lectures upon his firſt Olympic Ode. XXV. The Life of Theocritus, and Lectures upon that Poet. XXVI. The Lives of David, Scanderbeg, and Tamerlane. Theſe Lives, he tells us, he never actually begun, but only made conſiderable collections for them. XXVII. The Life of Edward, the Black Prince. XXVIII. The Univerſity-Calendar, or Directions for young Students of all degrees, with relation to their Studies, and general Rules of Ethics, and a Form of Prayer, An. 1685. XXIX. Thirty-two Lectures upon the firſt Book of the Odyſſey. XXX. Above fifty Lectures upon Sophocles. XXXI. Lectures upon Bereſhith, with an Oration recommending the Study of the Hebrew Language. XXXII. Three Diſcourſes in Engliſh. 1. The Fortunate Iſland, or the Inauguration of Queen Gloriana. 2. The Advantage of England, or a ſure way to Victory. 3. The Cauſe of the Church of England defended and explained; publiſhed in 1703. XXXIII. Concio ad Clerum, for his Degree of Bachelor of Divinity, at St. Mary's in Cambridge, 1686. XXXIV. Occaſional Sermons, preached before the Lord-Mayor, &c. XXXV. An Oration, recommending the Study of the Greek language, ſpoken in the Public Schools at Cambridge before the Vice-Chancellor, March 28, 1705. XXXVI. A Greek Oration, addreſſed to the moſt reverend Father Neophytus, Archbiſhop of Philippopolis, ſpoken in the Regent-Houſe at Cambridge, September 13, 1701. XXXVII. A Prevaricator's Speech, ſpoken at the Commencement at Cambridge, 1680. XXXVIII. A Congratulatory Oration in Latin, ſpoken at St. Mary's, September 9, 1683, upon the Eſcape of King Charles II. and the Duke of York from the Conſpiracy. XXXIX. Sermons, Orations, Declamations, Problems, Tranſlations, Letters, and other Exerciſes, in Engliſh, Latin, and Greek. XL. A Satire in Engliſh Verſe upon the Poets and Critics. XLI. An Imitation of Plautus's Trinummi in Engliſh. XLII. Interpretations, Illuſtrations, Emendations, and Corrections of many Paſſages, which have been falſely tranſlated, with Explications upon various paſſages of Scripture, from Geneſis to Revelations. XLIII. Common-Places in Divinity, Philology, Poetry, and Criticiſm; and Emendations of various Greek and Latin Authors, with Fragments of many of the Poets.

[K] His character both as a man and an author.] He had a great deal of enthuſiaſm in his temper, which diſcovered itſelf in various circumſtances of his life. He conſtantly maintained, that ſpiritual ſins, ſuch as pride, defamation, &c. were more offenſive in the eyes of God, than thoſe which ariſe from a too great indulgence of the ſenſes. He believed, that charity ſeldom or never paſſes without its reward in this life. And this opinion prevailed ſo far with him, that he has given his only coat to a vagrant begging at the door; and he uſed to relate ſome extraordinary retributions conferred upon him by unknown perſons for his charities of this kind. He was remarkable rather for the quickneſs of his wit, and the happineſs of his memory, than for the ſolidity of his judgment; upon which ſomebody recommended this pun to be inſcribed upon his monument:

Joſhua Barnes,
Felicis Memoriæ, Judicium expectans.

He had a prodigious readineſs in writing and ſpeaking the Greek tongue; and he himſelf tells us (7), 'he 'found it much eaſier to him to write in that language, 'than in Latin or even Engliſh, ſince the ornaments 'of poetry are almoſt peculiar to the Greeks, and 'ſince he had for many years been extremely conver- 'ſant in Homer, the great father and ſource of the 'Greek Poetry: However, that his verſes were not 'mere Centos from that Poet, like Dr. Duport's, but 'formed, as far as he was able, upon his ſtyle and 'manner; ſince he had no deſire to be conſidered as 'a Rhapſodiſt of a Rhapſody *, but was ambitious of 'the title of a Poet.' Dr. Bentley, we are told, uſed to ſay of Joſhua Barnes, that he underſtood as much Greek as a Greek Cobler.

(7) In the Preface to his Ἀνακρέοντος.

* Ῥαψῳδιστὴς Ῥαψῳδίας.

[Joſhua Barnes's editions of the Greek writers have fallen, of late years, into great diſeſteem. In the Hippolytus of Euripides, publiſhed at Oxford, in 1756, our author's Euripides is very freely cenſured. Nor Nor hath his Homer met with a better reception from the ableſt critics. The learned Dr. Clarke, ſpeaking of one of his readings, ſays, Barneſius, intolerandâ Audaciâ atque Inſcitiâ, edidit de ſuo, &c. Dr. Bentley, being underſtood to be covertly reflected upon, in Barnes's preface to his Homer, wrote a letter upon the occaſion, to Dr. Davies, the beginning of which is as follows:

'Dear SIR,

'AFTER you left me this morning, I borrowed 'of Dr. Sike, Mr. Barnes's new edition of Ho-'mer, where I was told that I ſhould find myſelf 'abuſed.—I read over his dedications and prefaces, 'and there I find very opprobrious words againſt 'enemies in general, and one Homo inimicus in par-'ticular; which I cannot apply to myſelf, not being 'concerned in the accuſation. But if Mr. Barnes 'has, or does declare in company, that he means 'me, by thoſe expreſſions, I aſſure him I ſhall not 'put up ſuch an affront, and an injury too, ſince I 'was one of his firſt ſubſcribers, and an uſeful 'director to him, if he had followed good advice.— 'He ſtruts and ſwaggers like a Suffenus, and chal-'lenges that ſame enemy to come apertè, and ſhew 'him any fault.—If he mean me, I have but dipped 'yet into his notes, and yet I find every where juſt 'occaſion of cenſure.' The Doctor then points out ſome glaring miſtakes of Mr. Barnes; and is ſo angry at one of them, that it is, he ſays, 'A piece of igno-'rance for which he deſerves to be turned out of the 'chair, and for which and many others like it, 'ſi magis me irritaverit, I, as his principal elector 'and governor, may call him to account.' Dr. Bentley adds, at the cloſe of the letter, 'If it be 'true, that he gives out that he means me by thoſe 'villainous characters, I ſhall teach him better man-'ners towards his elector. For though I ſhall not 'honour him ſo much as to enter the liſts againſt 'him myſelf, yet in one week's time, I can ſend a 'hundred ſuch remarks as theſe, to his good friend 'Will. Baxter (whom I have known theſe twenty 'years), who, before the Parliament ſits, ſhall pay 'him home for his Anacreon. But if it be other-'wiſe, that he did not deſcribe me under thoſe 'general reproaches, a ſmall ſatisfaction ſhall con-'tent me, which I leave you to be judge of; for I 'would not, without the utmoſt provocation, hurt 'the ſale of his book, upon which he profeſſes to 'have laid out his whole fortunes (8).'

(8) Monthly Review, Vol. xiv. p. 201—204. Clarke's Homer, Vol. ii. p. 63. 3d edit. note. lib. xiv. ver. 101.

Mr. Barnes's publication of Homer involved him in conſiderable difficulties; and his circumſtances, in conſequence of it, appear to have been ſo greatly embarraſſed, that he wrote a ſupplicatory letter to Robert Harley, Earl of Oxford, ſtating his diſtreſſes, and requeſting that he might have a little prebend, or ſufficient anchor to lay hold on. This letter, which was written Oct. 16, 1711, and which Mr. Barnes ſurvived only ten months, without obtaining any preferment, is extant in the Britiſh Muſeum, from whence it has been tranſcribed by Mr. Towers (9).

(9) Britiſh Biography, Vol. vii. p. 414, 415.

The character which hath been given of Joſhua Barnes, with regard to his learning, is, that he had read a great many books, retained a great many words, and could write Greek in what is called the Anacreontic meaſure readily, but was very far from being a judicious or an able critic. If he had ſome enemies at firſt, his abuſe and vanity did not afterwards leſſen their number, though it is probable, more men laughed at, than either envied or hated him. They ſaid he was ονος προς λυραν, Aſinus ad Lyram; and perhaps it is not the worſt thing Barnes ever ſaid in reply, that they who ſaid this of him, had not underſtanding enough to be poets, or wanted the ὁ νως προς λυραν (10). By the way, the tranſlation of the Greek Anacreontics, from Barnes's epitaph, in the note [H], is burleſque; and ſo, indeed, are the original lines, though the author of them had no ſuch intention. The witticiſm recommended to be inſcribed on Joſhua Barnes's monument is not new. Menage uſed it in his ſatire upon Pierre Montmaur. The turn of the expreſſion ſuits the French and Engliſh languages as well as it does the Latin (11). If it is to be conſidered as a mere pun, it is a very happy one, and ſhews that even puns may ſometimes approach towards real wit.

(10) Monthly Review, ubi ſupra.

(11) From a valuable correſpondent.

If we are not miſtaken, Mr. Granger relates an anecdote concerning Mr. Barnes's having generouſly refuſed two thouſand a year, which was offered to be ſettled upon him. Not having happened to mark the place where this fact is recorded, we cannot now point it out to our readers.] K.

BARNWALL (ROBERT), was of a family which has yielded many conſiderable men in times paſt [A], but of which branch of it this Robert was, we cannot with certainty declare. It was originally French, from Little Bretagne, where, we are told (a), the ſurname is conſiderable to this day. This gentleman was born in the county of Dublin, and educated in the ſtudy of the Law at Gray's-Inn, London; where he became a writer while he was a youth. What progreſs or figure he made at the bar in his riper years, or when he died, we know not, nor ſhould we have known thus much, if the dedication to the book underneath mentioned, had not informed us of it [B].

(a) Iriſh Compend. p. 133.

[A] Yielded many conſiderable men.] As Barnwall, Lord Viſcount Kingſland; Barnwall, Lord Baron of Trimelſton; of which family John Barnwall, Lord Trimelſton was Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and made ſo (1), on the 16th of Auguſt, 1534; and before that was made Lord Treaſurer (2) of Ireland, on the 30th of September, 1524. There was alſo a Baronet's title in the family, and many gentlemen of conſiderable eſtates.

(1) Rot. Canc. 26 Hen. VIII.

(2) Ibid. 16 Hen. VIII.

[B] Dedication to a book he publiſhed.] It is intitled Syntomotaxia del ſecond Parte del Roy Henry le ſixt, per quel facilement cy troveront ſoubs apt Titles tout choſes conteinue en de dit liver. Printed, London 1601, fol. 1679, fol.—A table to the ſecond part of the year book of King Henry the ſixth, by which may be readily found under proper titles, all matters contained in the ſaid book.———This book, being more properly an index of matter, containing many caſes concerning Iriſh affairs, he dedicated to Sir Robert Gardiner, Lord Chief Juſtice of Ireland, and in his dedication obſerves, 'That among all the volumes 'of the law he had read, the ſecond part of Henry the 'ſixth, was the worthieſt to be heeded, and ſpecially 'regarded by all who ſhould intend the manner of 'proceeding of Law, within the realm of Ireland, 'which was the motive to writing ſuch an index, as 'may ſerve both as an abridgment and table to the 'ſaid volume.' D.

BARO, or BARON (PETER), a learned Divine in the XVIth century, was born at Eſtampes in France, and educated in the univerſity of Bourges, where he was admitted a Licentiate in the Law (a): But being of the Proteſtant religion, he was obliged to leave his native country, to avoid perſecution. Whereupon, withdrawing into England, he was kindly received, and charitably maintained by the Lord Treaſurer Burghley, who admitted him to eat at his own table (b). He afterwards ſettled at Cambridge, upon the invitation of Dr. Andrew Perne, Maſter of Peter-Houſe, by whom he

(a) Wood, Faſti Oxon. Vol. i. edit. 1721, col. 113. Annals of the Reformation, by J. Strype, Vol. iv. p. 231.

(b) Strype's Life of Archbiſhop Whitgift, edit. 1718, fol. p. 93.

he was entertained (c). In 1574 [A], at the recommendation of the Lord Burghley, Chancellor of that univerſity, he was choſen the Lady Margaret's Profeſſor there (d). But finding, after ſome years, that his income was not ſufficient for his maintenance, as he was a married man and had ſcarcely any thing elſe to depend upon but his ſalary; he prevailed upon Dr. Perne, to petition the Lord Burghley to make ſome addition to his livelihood (e). This Lord accordingly promiſed that he would take care of him: but not performing his promiſe ſoon, Dr. Baro wrote him, on the twenty-firſt of November, a modeſt and handſome letter, wherein he put him in mind of his mean condition, and deſired his aſſiſtance when any occaſion ſhould offer (f). For ſome years he quietly enjoyed his Profeſſorſhip: but, at length, either out of envy, or on account of ſome unfaſhionable opinions of his, a reſtleſs faction aroſe, which rendered his place ſo uneaſy to him, that he choſe to leave the univerſity. At that time, Abſolute Predeſtination, in the moſt rigid and Calviniſtical ſenſe, was ſtrenuouſly maintained, as the only orthodox and true principle, and as the eſtabliſhed doctrine of the Church of England. The chief promotors of it at Cambridge, were, Dr. Whitacre, Regius Profeſſor of Divinity; Dr. R. Some, Dr. Humphrey Tyndal, and in general the oldeſt members in the univerſity (g). On the contrary, Dr. Baro, with ſome of the younger ſtudents, had a more rational and moderate notion of that doctrine. The Doctor having mentioned it in ſome of his lectures, that occaſioned a conteſt between him and Mr. Lawrence Chadderton, in the year 1581, which came to ſuch a height, that Chadderton attempted to confute him publickly in one of his ſermons (h). Dr. Baro thinking himſelf injured, cauſed Mr. Chadderton to be ſummoned into the Conſiſtory, before the Vice-Chancellor and ſome others, when the latter utterly denied he had ever preached againſt the Doctor; and after ſome papers had paſſed between them upon thoſe points (i), the affair was dropped (k). The chief objections made by the rigid Calviniſts againſt Dr. Baro were theſe, 1. That in his lectures upon Jonah (l), he taught the Popiſh Doctrine of the co operation of faith and works in order to juſtification; which, though in terms a little changed, yet the doctrine was in effect one and the ſame. 2. That he endeavoured to perſuade mankind, that the doctrine of the Reformed Churches was not ſo widely different from that of Rome, but that by diſtinctions they might be reconciled, and therefore concluded that both profeſſions might be tolerated. 3. That in his lectures he taught, that the Heathen may be ſaved without the faith of the Goſpel; and other ſtrange matters, which were looked upon as damnable errors:——Moreover, that he brought the Popiſh ſchoolmen into credit, and diminiſhed the honour of the learned Proteſtant writers: ſince which time, the courſe of ſtudies in Divinity, and the manner of preaching, had been changed in the univerſity, by ſome, who left the ſtudy of ſound writers, as they ſtiled them, and applied themſelves to the reading of Popiſh, barbarous, and fantaſtical ſchoolmen, delighted with their curious queſtions and quiddities, whereby they drew all points of Chriſtian faith into doubt, being the highway not only to Popery but to Atheiſm (m). Some years after, a controverſy aroſe between Dr. Baro and Dr. Some about the indefectibility of faith; but this diſpute was ſoon compoſed (n). The next diſpute Baro was engaged in, was of much longer continuance, and in the end proved his ruin. For Dr. Whitacre having, in the beginning of November 1595, preached a ſermon before the univerſity, in defence of Abſolute Predeſtination, on purpoſe, as he ſaid (o), to ſtay the minds of the ſcholars, and to maintain what he called the doctrine of our Church, againſt innovations; he was not ſatisfied therewith, but endeavoured to have his weak arguments ſtrengthened with the irreſiſtible ones of authority and force. To bring that about, he and Dr. Tyndal were deputed by the heads of the univerſity, to Archbiſhop Whitgift. They loudly complained to him, that Pelagianiſm was getting ground in the univerſity, and that no better method could be uſed to ſtop the progreſs of it, than the confirmation of ſome propoſitions they had brought along with them (p). Theſe, according to their requeſt, were eſtabliſhed and approved on the 20th of November, by the Archbiſhop, the Biſhop of London, the Biſhop-elect of Bangor, and a very few other Divines (q), and came to be known by the title of the Lambeth-Articles [B]. The Archbiſhop recommended them to the univerſity, as the private judgment only of thoſe that had

(c) Wood, ubi ſupra.

(d) Strype, ubi ſupra, p. 94.

(e) Which was but 20*l.* a year. See Strype, ubi ſupra, p. 472.

(f) Strype, ibid. and Appendix of Records, p. 38.

(g) Strype's Life of Whitgift, as above, p. 435.

(h) Fuller's Hiſt. of the Univerſity of Cambridge, p. 145.

(i) Ibid. and Strype's Annals of the Reformation, Vol. iii. p. 47, 48.

(k) See Mr. Bayle's Dictionary, in the article BARON (PETER).

(l) Particularly on chap. iii. ver. 4.

(m) Wood, Faſti, Vol. i. col. 113, 114.

(n) Strype's Life of Whitgift, &c. p. 448, 449.

(o) Ibid. p. 460.

(p) Articulorum Lambethæ exhibitorum hiſtoria. Amſtelod. 1700. 12*mo*, p. 4.

(q) Ibid. and Fuller's Hiſt. of the Church, B. ix. p. 229.

[A] In 1574, ——— he was choſen the Lady Margaret's Profeſſor.] Mr. Strype, in his Annals of the Reformation (1), and Mr. T. Baker, in the liſt of the Lady Margaret's Profeſſors (2), place Dr. Baro's election under the year 1575. But by his letter to the Lord Burghley, mentioned a little below, it appears, that when he wrote it, in November 1580, he had been Profeſſor ſix whole years ——— jam totos ſex hoſce annos ——— (3).

(1) Vol. ii. p. 383.

(2) Placed before her Funeral Sermon, reprinted at London 1708, 8*vo*.

(3) See that Letter, in the Appendix to Archbiſhop Whitgift's Life, p. 38.

[B] The Lambeth-Articles.] They were as follows: I. God hath from eternity predeſtinated ſome perſons to life, and ſome he hath reprobated to death. II. The moving, or efficient cauſe of predeſtination to life, is not the foreſight of faith, or perſeverance, or good works, or of any other quality in the predeſtinated perſons; but the ſole will and good pleaſure of God. III. The number of the predeſtinate is before limited and certain, and can neither be increaſed nor leſſened. IV. Thoſe who are not predeſtinated to ſalvation, ſhall be neceſſarily damned for their ſins. V. A true, lively, and juſtifying faith, and the ſanctifying ſpirit of God, is not extinguiſhed, doth not fail, nor vaniſh away in the Elect, either totally, or finally. VI. A man who is truly one of the faithful, that is, endued with juſtifying faith, is certain, with full aſſurance of faith, of the remiſſion of his ſins, and of his everlaſting ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt. VII. Saving grace is not given, is not communicated, is not granted to all men, ſo as that they may be ſaved by it if they will. VIII. No one can come to Chriſt unleſs had made them, and not as laws and decrees, but as things neceſſary for the obſervation of peace; and deſired them to take care that nothing ſhould be publickly taught to the contrary (r). They were immediately communicated to Dr. Baro (s), againſt whom probably they were more immediately deſigned. But he, either diſregarding them, or being provoked thereby, preached a contrary doctrine, in a ſermon before the univerſity on the 12th of January following (t). In that diſcourſe, he ſtudied not to exaſperate any; and therefore did not ſo much deny, as moderate thoſe propoſitions; and ſtate, as he apprehended, the true ſenſe of them (u), and ſaid nothing in his ſermon concerning thoſe Articles [C]. However, his adverſaries judging of it otherwiſe, the Vice-Chancellor conſulted the ſame day with Dr. Clayton and Mr. Chadderton, what ſhould be done. The next day he wrote a letter to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, wherein he informed his Grace of the affair; and as he intended to call the Profeſſor to an account for his ſermon, and for breaking the peace of the univerſity, but knew not what courſe to take, nor upon what ſtatute to proceed, he deſired his aid and advice; unleſs they were pleaſed to call him before the High Commiſſion (w). The Archbiſhop returned for anſwer, on the 16th, that they ſhould call Baro before them, and require a copy of his ſermon; or, at leaſt, cauſe him to ſet down the principal heads thereof: and to demand of him what ſhould move him to continue that courſe, notwithſtanding order taken, and ſo many advertiſements to the contrary; but not to proceed to any determination againſt him, till they had advertiſed him of his anſwer, and the particular points of his ſermon (x). In the mean time, Dr. Baro finding what great offence was taken at his ſermon, wrote, on the 14th of January, to the Archbiſhop to this effect (y). 'That when his Lordſhip 'lately ſpake with him about the nine Articles [D], he ſpake freely that which he thought 'good, and what then occurred to him. But becauſe many things came not ſo ſoon, 'into his mind, which might be ſaid for a favourable expoſition of them, he thought it 'would not be unacceptable, if he wrote ſomething more ample and particularly con-'cerning each.'——Then he adds, 'That he ſpake in his ſermon according to thoſe old 'and orthodox Articles*, and did not ſo much as touch the New†.' And for a witneſs of it, ſent his Grace an expoſition of theſe laſt nine Articles (z). However, according to the Archbiſhop's directions, Baro was cited before Dr. Goad the Vice-Chancellor in the Conſiſtory; and appeared there the 17th, 21ſt, and 29th of January,

(r) Strype, ubi ſupra, p. 462.

(s) Ibid. p. 467.

(t) His Text was James i. 27.

(u) Ibid. p. 466.

Jan. 12.

Jan. 13.

(w) Ibid. p. 468.

(x) Ibid. p. 469.

(y) Ibid. p. 466. He ſays, p. 468, that Baro went to London to the Archbiſhop. But that does not appear.

* The XXXIX Articles.

† The Lambeth Articles.

(z) Ibid. p. 466, 467. and Appendix, p. 201.

leſs it is given him, and unleſs the Father draws him; but all men are not drawn by the Father that they may come to the Son. IX. It is not in every one's will or power to be ſaved (4). When Queen Elizabeth heard of theſe articles, and the manner in which they were framed, ſhe was exceſſively angry. It was a maxim with her, not to have ſo tender a point, and ſo dangerous to weak, ignorant minds, diſputed, and brought in queſtion. Beſides, ſhe thought ſuch an aſſembly, and their framing articles or canons without her ſpecial licence, derogatory to her Royal dignity. She therefore immediately ſends for Whitgift, and accoſts him thus, 'My Lord, I am informed you are heaping 'up riches, and now I ſhall want no money.' The Archbiſhop replied, 'That he had but little, how-'ever, it was at her Majeſty's ſervice.' Nay, ſays the Queen, 'It is mine already, for you are fallen 'into a Premunire, by calling a Council without my 'conſent (5).' Whitgift, in his own excuſe, ſaid, that thoſe articles were not deſigned for a ſtanding rule to direct the Church, but only for the appeaſing of ſome unhappy differences in the univerſity of Cambridge. Whereby the Queen, being ſomewhat appeaſed, proceeded to no extremities, but only commanded thoſe articles to be ſpeedily recalled and ſuppreſſed; which was performed with ſuch care and diligence, that a copy of them was not to be found for a long time after (6). The Lord Burghley alſo diſliked them: For when Dr. Whitacre preſented them to him, he reaſoned with him upon thoſe points; and drew by a ſimilitude, a reaſon from an earthly Prince. Inferring thereby, that they charged God with cruelty, and might cauſe men to be deſperate in their wickedneſs. ——— As the Queen was angry with the framers and contrivers of thoſe articles, ſo was ſhe alſo diſpleaſed with Dr. Baro, for diſputing upon ſuch abſtruſe points. For, in a diſcourſe ſhe had of thoſe matters with the Archbiſhop, ſhe wondered Baro ſhould meddle in that controverſy, he being an alien, and ſo ought to have carried himſelf quietly and peaceably, in a country where he was ſo humanely harboured, and infranchiſed both himſelf and his family. The Archbiſhop informed Dr. Baro of this, who wrote a letter to his Grace, on the 13th of December, wherein he expreſſed the utmoſt affection and loyalty for her Majeſty (7); and declared it as his opinion, 'That God is 'not the author of ſin, nor would that it ſhould be com-'mitted; when he openly forbids it, and reproves men 'for nothing, but becauſe of ſin, which he hateth. 'And, that the faithful, or the Elect, ought not to be 'ſecure of their ſalvation (8).'

(4) Articuli Lambethani, printed at the end of Dr. Ellis's Articulorum 39 Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ Defenſio, 12mo. Fuller's Hiſt. of the Church, B. ix. p. 230.

(5) Fuller, ibid. p. 232. and Articulorum Lambethanorum Hiſt. ubi ſupra, p. 7, 8.

(6) Heylin's Quinquarticular Hiſt. c. x. § 3.

(7) Strype's Life of Whitgift, p. 464, 465.

(8) Ibid.

[C] And ſaid nothing in his ſermon concerning thoſe Articles.] In that ſermon he aſſerted particularly theſe three things; I. That God created all men according to his own likeneſs in Adam, and ſo conſequently to eternal life; from which he chaſed no man, unleſs becauſe of ſin. As Damaſus taught, lib. 2. de Fide orthodox. II. That Chriſt died ſufficiently for all; againſt Joh. Piſcator, a German Divine, who denied it: Whoſe opinion, he ſhewed, was contrary to the confeſſion of the Church of England, and the XXXIX articles; and for proof thereof repeated the XXXIſt article. III. That the promiſes of God made to us, as they are generally propounded to us, were to be generally underſtood, as is ſet down in the XVIIth article. But theſe three points were diſagreeable to ſome unreaſonable men, who endeavoured to perſuade the world, that God did on purpoſe create the greateſt part of men to deſtruction, that by the perdition of them he might get glory to himſelf: and that Chriſt did not die for all; not, for that many refuſed to accept his benefits, but becauſe he would not that his death ſhould profit them. And, moreover, becauſe they were not created to ſalvation, as others, but to deſtruction. And, for the ſame cauſe, they would not have the promiſes to be general, but reſtrained them to thoſe perſons alone, who, they ſaid, were created by God to be ſaved (9).

[D] When his Lordſhip ſpake to him about the nine Articles.] It ſeems evident, from Mr. Strype's account of this whole matter (10), That when Dr. Baro heard of the confirmation of the nine articles, [and not after the preaching of his ſermon as that author aſſerts (11)] he waited upon the Archbiſhop, about the beginning of December; who ſhewed him thoſe articles, and demanded his opinion of every one of them ſeverally, and at two ſeveral times. The laſt time, he ſeemed to make ſome ſmall objections againſt one or two of them only; yet confeſſed that they were all true. Upon this, the Archbiſhop admoniſhed him not to diſpute any more on thoſe points, which he faithfully promiſed to obſerve (12).

(9) Strype's Life of Whitgift, p. 466.

(10) Ibid. p. 466—469.

(11) Ibid. p. 468.

(12) Ibid. p. 468, 469.

nuary (a), when ſeveral articles were exhibited againſt him [E]. At his laſt appearance, the concluſion againſt him was; 'That whereas Baro had promiſed the Vice-Chancellor, 'upon his demand, a copy of his ſermon, but his Lawyers adviſed him not to deliver 'the ſame; the Vice-Chancellor did now, by virtue of his authority, peremptorily com-'mand him to deliver him the whole and entire ſermon, as to the ſubſtance of it, in 'writing. Which Baro promiſed he would do the next day, and did it accordingly . 'And, laſtly, he did peremptorily, and by virtue of his authority, command Baro, that 'he ſhould wholly abſtain from thoſe controverſies and articles, and leave them alto-'gether untouched, as well in his lectures, ſermons, and determinations, as in his diſpu-'tations and other his exerciſes (b).' The Vice-Chancellor, who had proceeded thus far without the knowledge of the Lord Burghley, their Chancellor, thought fit to acquaint him, January 29, with their proceedings, and to deſire his wiſe and honourable advice (c). And, on the other hand, Dr. Baro being informed of his enemies invidious aſperſions of him to that Lord; took care to repreſent his own caſe to him in a true light: Aſſuring him, that he had only defended the truth of the Goſpel againſt Piſcator; whoſe book he ſaw was in the hands of many of the younger ſtudents; and begged of him, not to reſolve any thing concerning him, till he had diligently enquired into the truth of what he had written. The diſcountenance hereupon given to this affair by the Chancellor [F], ſtopped all further proceeding againſt Dr. Baro (d). He continued in the univerſity the February and March following (e), but with much oppoſition and trouble, eſpecially from Dr. Goad, and Mr. Chadderton [G]. But Archbiſhop Whitgift (though he had weakly yielded in many reſpects to the ſolicitations of his enemies) being fully ſatisfied at laſt of his learning and integrity, protected him againſt all attempts that could hurt either his learning or reputation. Only he charged him, to forbear ſuch arguments as would provoke contentious diſputations, that ſo peace might be preſerved in the univerſity, and by that means religion and learning flouriſh there (f). The Doctor, notwithſtanding his troubles, had many friends and adherents in the univerſity, as Mr. Overal, Dr. Clayton, Mr. Harſnet, and Dr. Andrews; and his diſciples were ſo far from being ſuppreſſed or ſilenced by the Lambeth Articles, that they were become more united (g): So that, had he ſtood again for his Profeſſorſhip, when it became vacant on the 25th of March 1596 (h), he would undoubtedly have been choſen in again. But he had met with ſo much vexation, and ſuch ill uſage, from the Elect, that for the ſake of peace, he choſe to retire to London, and fixed his abode in Crouched-Friers (i). There he died about three or four years after, and was decently buried in the pariſh church of St. Olave Hart-ſtreet, his pall being ſupported by ſix Doctors of Divinity, and his corpſe attended by the moſt eminent Miniſters in the city, according to an order of Dr. Bancroft, then Biſhop of London (k). Dr. Baro left ſeveral children, who ſettled in and about Boſton in Lincolnſhire (l). His eldeſt ſon, Samuel Baro, was a Phyſician, and lived and died at Lynn Regis in Norfolk (m), and in all like-

(a) Ibid. p. 470, 471.

 See Ibid. p. 475.

(b) Ibid. p. 471.

(c) Ibid. p. 471, 472.

Feb. 9.

(d) Ibid. p. 473.

(e) Ibid. p. 474.

(f) Ibid. p. 476.

(g) Dr. Heylin's Quinquarticular Hiſtory, B. iii. c. xxi. § 9.

(h) Ibid. § 4. Fuller's Hiſt. of Cambridge, p. 125, 126.

(i) Wood, Faſti, Vol. i. col. 114.

(k) Ibid. and Heylin, ubi ſupra.

(l) Wood, ibid.

(m) Strype's An. Vol. iv. p. 231.

[E] Several articles were exhibited againſt him.] He was charged with having aſſerted, I. That God, by an abſolute will, created all, and every man, to eternal life: Becauſe, he created all according to his own image; and therefore for happineſs; conſequently, he deprives no one of ſalvation, but for his ſin. II. That there is a two-fold will in God, an antecedent and conſequent will. By his antecedent will God hath rejected no body, otherwiſe he would have condemned his own work. To explain this, he alledged the inſtance of a King, a father, and a huſbandman: A King makes laws for the good of his ſubjects; a father does not beget a ſon to have him hanged, or to diſinherit him; a huſbandman does not plant a tree to root it up again. III. That Chriſt died for all men, and for every one in particular; that all, and every man, might know they have a remedy in Chriſt; according to what is ſaid, That Chriſt came to ſave that which was loſt (13). Now all, and every man were loſt in Adam: Therefore, &c. For the remedy is as extenſive as the diſeaſe; and God is no reſpecter of perſons (14). IV. That God's promiſes to life are univerſal; and belong to Cain as well as to Abel, to Eſau as well as Jacob, to Judas as well as to Peter. And that Cain was no more rejected of God than Abel, before he had excluded himſelf: That men exclude themſelves from Heaven, and God does not exclude them; according to what is ſaid, O Iſrael, thou haſt deſtroyed thyſelf (15).——Theſe were ſubſcribed by Jo. Allenſon, Will. Nelſon, Obadiah Aſhton, James Crowther, John Hooke, George Downham.—— Dr. Baro alledged in his own defence, that he had not preached doctrines contrary to the nine articles. And with regard to the grace of God ſufficient to eternal life being offered to all; he ſaid, that grace was indeed offered to all, but in a different meaſure: For to ſome was given greater grace, to others leſs; to ſome more talents, to others leſs (16).

(13) Matth. xviii. 11.

(14) Acts x. 34.

(15) Hoſea xiii. 9.

(16) Strype, ubi ſupra, p. 470, 471.

[F] The diſcountenance given to this affair by the Chancellor.] He told them in his letter among other things, that they ſifted Dr. Baro with interrogatories, as if he were a thief;——and that their proceedings againſt him ſeemed to be done 'of ſtomach,' out of paſſion and prejudice (17). However, his enemies not diſcouraged thereby, wrote another letter to the Chancellor, on the 8th of March, wherein they informed him——'That Dr. Baroe (18) had not 'only in the ſermon, but alſo for the ſpace of fourteen 'or fifteen years taught in his lectures, preached in his 'ſermons, determined in the ſchools, and printed in 'ſeveral books, divers points of doctrine not only con-'trary to himſelf, but alſo contrary to that which had 'been taught and received ever ſince her Majeſty's 'reign, and agreeable to the errors of Popery (19).'

(17) See Strype ubi ſupra, p. 473.

(18) So his name is written in this letter. In other places it is ſometimes written Barow.

(19) Collier's Eccleſiaſt. Hiſt. Lond. 1714, Vol. ii. p. 647.

[G] With much oppoſition and trouble, eſpecially from Dr. Goad, and Mr. Chadderton.] Dr. Goad had been his private enemy a long while. For about ten or eleven years before, in a clandeſtine ſynod at London, held probably by Cartwright and his adherents, ſome things had been decreed againſt him unheard. Of which being informed, he takes a journey to London, complains to Dr. Goad who had been in that aſſembly, and deſires him at leaſt to ſhow him, what they had decreed concerning, or againſt him. But he could not obtain a ſight of it, till Dr. Bancroft ſhewed it him a few years after. And from that time, they hated him; and having always privately watched him, they at laſt took occaſion from that ſermon of his, to endeavour to caſt him out of the univerſity with ſhame (20).

(20) Strype, ibid. p. 476.

lihood

lihood was the ſame that was choſen Fellow of Peter-Houſe, in 1584 (n). We ſhall give an account of Dr. Baro's works, in the note [H].

(n) Strype's Life of Whitgift, P. 94.

[H] We ſhall give an account of Dr. Baro's works.] They are, I. In Jonam Prophetam Prælectiones XXXIX. II. Conciones tres ad Clerum Cantabrigienſem habitæ in templo B. Mariæ. III. Theſes publicæ in Scholis peroratæ et diſputatæ. [Theſe Theſes, being only two, were tranſlated into Engliſh by John Ludham, under theſe titles; Firſt, 'God's purpoſe and decree taketh 'not away the liberty of man's corrupt will.' The ſecond, 'Our conjunction with Chriſt is altogether 'ſpiritual.' Printed at Lond. 1590, 8vo.] IV. Precationes quibus uſus eſt author in ſuis prælectionibus inchoandis & finiendis. All theſe were publiſhed at London 1579, fol. by the care of Oſmund Lake, B. D. Fellow of King's Coll. Cambr. who corrected them before they went to the preſs. V. De Fide ejuſque ortu et natura plana et dilucida explicatio, &c. Lond. 1580, 8*vo*. VI. De præſtantia & dignitate divinæ Legis, lib. 2. Printed in 1586, 8*vo*. VII. Tractatus in quo docet expetitionem oblati a mente boni et fiduciam ad fidei juſtificantis naturam pertinere. VIII. Summa trium ſententiarum de prædeſtinatione, &c. Hardr. 1613, 8*vo*. printed with the Notes of Joh. Piſcator, Diſquiſition of Franc. Junius, and Prelection of Will. Whitacre. IX. 'Special treatiſe of God's providence, and 'of comforts againſt all kind of croſſes and calamities 'to be fetched from the ſame; with an expoſition on 'Pſalm cvii.' X. Four Sermons; the firſt on Pſalm 'cxxxiii. 1, 2, 3; the ſecond, on Pſalm xv. 1, 2, 3, '4, 5, &c (21). 1560, 8*vo* (22). M.

(21) Wood, Faſti, Vol. i. col. 114.

(22) Catal. of Engl. Writers on the Old and New Teſtament, &c. ſecond edit. Lond. 1668, 8*vo*.

BARON (Bonaventure), whoſe true name was Fitz-Gerald [A], was deſcended from a branch of the Fitz-Geralds of Burnchurch in the county of Kilkenny, a family ſettled in Ireland ſoon after the Engliſh acquiſitions in that country, which has produced ſeveral men of figure in the Church [B]. But he has been more remarkable in the learned world for his maternal genealogy, being the ſon of a ſiſter of Luke Wadding, that eminent Franciſcan Friar, who in the laſt century demonſtrated his great abilities and induſtry, by many voluminous treatiſes of genius and labour. His uncle Wadding took great care of his education in his youth, which he ſaw rewarded by an uncommon diligence; and when he was of a proper age procured his admiſſion into the Franciſcan order, and ſent for him to Rome; where he lived under his own eye in the college of St. Iſidore, a ſociety of that order founded by himſelf in 1625, for the education of Iriſh ſtudents in the ſtudy of the Liberal Arts, Divinity, and Controverſy, to ſerve as a ſeminary, out of which the miſſion into England, Scotland, and Ireland, might be ſupplied. Baron, after ſome time, grew into high reputation, and became eſpecially remarkable for the purity of his Latin ſtyle, which firſt fell under the notice of the public, by means of the ignorance of a Roman Cardinal [C]; from which time his fame increaſed, and he became the author of many books both in proſe and verſe, a catalogue of which may be ſeen in the remarks [D]. He was for a conſiderable time Prælector of Divinity in the college aforeſaid, and in all reſided at Rome about ſixty years, where he died, very old and totally deprived of ſight, on the 18th of March 1696, and was buried at St. Iſidore's. D.

[A] Whoſe true name was Fitz-Gerald.] His family were anciently Palatine Barons of Burnchurch, who had no ſeats in the Houſe of Lords, but were created titular Barons by the Count Palatine of that juriſdiction, by virtue of a royal ſeignory granted by the Crown; of which kind of Barons there were many in England. As in Cheſhire (according to Camden) (1) the Barons of Haulton, Malbank, Malpas, and Kinderton, &c. who were made ſo by Hugh Lupus, the firſt Count Palatine of Cheſhire, immediately upon his creation. Of the ſame ſort were the Barons of Walton, in the Palatinate of Lancaſter, and the Baron of Hilton in the Biſhopric of Durham. In Ireland alſo were the Barons of Skrine, Navan, Galtrim, Nerraghmore, Rheban, &c. and the Barons of Burnchurch, from whence many of the Fitz-Geralds, in proceſs of time took the names of Baron, and it is now become a family name.

(1) Britannia, paſſim.

[B] Which has produced ſeveral men of figure in the Church.] As Milo Baron, who was Prior of Iniſtioch, an Auguſtinian abbey in the county of Kilkenny, and from thence tranſlated to the Biſhopric of Oſſory in 1527; and Roland Baron, who was conſecrated Archbiſhop of Caſhel in 1553.

[C] His Latin ſtyle firſt fell under the notice of the Public, by means of the ignorance of a Roman Cardinal.] The ſtory I had in a letter from Rome, containing many curious remarks on the college of Cardinals, which are foreign to the preſent purpoſe—'A certain Cardinal '(ſays the letter writer) writ a ſmall piece in Italian, 'but for fame ſake deſired to have it put into good 'Latin. He employed Luke Wadding to find him 'out a proper perſon to undertake the taſk, and Wad'ding committed it to his nephew Baron's care, 'with whoſe talents that way he was well acquainted. 'The Cardinal, not underſtanding a word of Latin, 'to conceal his ignorance, condemned the tranſla'tion, and blamed Wadding for recommending to 'him ſuch a dunce. This accident made a great 'noiſe in Rome, and became the table-talk of the 'town. For Wadding, who wanted no preferments, 'and Baron who deſpiſed every thing in compariſon 'of his reputation, appealed to the college of Jeſuits, 'who, upon examination, unanimouſly allowed the 'verſion to be extremely well done, to the no ſmall 'confuſion of the Cardinal, and the merriment of 'the Public.'

[D] A catalogue of which may be ſeen in the remarks.] They are theſe, viz.

I. Orationes Panegyricæ Sacro-Prophanæ decem. Romæ 1643, 12*mo*.

II. Metra Miſcellanea, ſive Carminum diverſorum Libri duo; Epigrammatum unus; alter Silvulæ; quibus adduntur Elogia illuſtrium virorum. Romæ 1645, 24*to*.

III. Proluſiones Philoſophicæ. Romæ 1651, 12*mo*.

IV. Harpocrates quinque Ludius; ſeu Diatriba ſilentii. Romæ 1651, 12*mo*.

V. Obſidio et Expugnatio Arcis Duncannon in Hibernia, ſub Thoma Preſtono.

VI. Boëtius Abſolutus; ſive de Conſolatione Theologiæ, lib. iv. Romæ 1653, 12*mo*.

VII. Controverſiæ et Stratagemata, Lugduni 1656, 8*vo*.

VIII. Scotus Defenſus, Coloniæ 1662, folio.

IX. Curſus Philoſophicus, Coloniæ 1664, folio.

X. Epiſtolæ Familiares Paræneticæ, &c. Theſe are among his

XI. Opuſcula varia Herbipoli, 1666, folio.

XII. Theologia (2), 6 vol. Paris 1676.

(2) Lipenius. Biblioth. Theol. Vol. ii. p. 839.

[XIII. 'Johannes Duns Scotus, Ordinis minorum, 'Doctor ſubtilis de Angelis contra adverſantes de'fenſus, nunc quoque Novitate amplificatus. 'Flo'rentiæ, 1678.'

XIV. 'Annales Ordinis S. S. Trinitatis Redemp'tionis Captivorum, Fundatoribus S. S. Johanne de 'Matha, et Felice de Valois in vol. folio. The 'firſt volume was printed at Rome in 1686, and be'gins with the year 1198, in which Pope Innocent 'the Third gave habit to the founders, and is car'ried down to the year 1297, juſt one hundred years. 'In this volume we have an account of the founda'tions of their convents, their privileges, and bene'factions, the eminent fathers of their order, their 'miracles and actions; as alſo, the number of ſlaves 'delivered by them from bondage (3).'] K.

(3) Harris's edit. of Ware's Works, Vol. ii. p. 254.

[BARRINGTON (JOHN SHUTE) Lord Viſcount Barrington, a nobleman of conſiderable learning, and author of ſeveral books, was the youngeſt ſon of Benjamin Shute, merchant, youngeſt ſon of Francis Shute, of Upton, in the county of Leiceſter, Eſq; [A]. He was born at Theobald's, in Hertfordſhire, in the year 1678 *; and received part of his education at Utrecht, as appears from a Latin oration which he delivered at that univerſity, and which he publiſhed there in 1698, in 4*to*, under the following title: 'Oratio, de Studio Philoſophiæ conjungendo cum 'Studio Juris Romani; habita in inclyta Academia Trajectina Kalendis Junii, 1698, 'a Johanne Shute, Anglo, Ph. D. & L. A. M.' After his return to England, he applied himſelf to the ſtudy of the law in the Inner Temple (a). In 1701, he publiſhed, but without his name, 'An Eſſay upon the Intereſt of England, in reſpect to Proteſtants 'diſſenting from the eſtabliſhed Church [B],' 4*to*. This was reprinted two years after, with conſiderable alterations and enlargements [C]. Sometime after this he publiſhed another piece in 4*to*, intitled, 'The Rights of Proteſtant Diſſenters, in two parts [D].' During the proſecution of his legal ſtudies, he was applied to by Queen Anne's Whig Miniſtry, at the inſtigation of Lord Somers, to engage the Preſbyterians in Scotland to favour the important meaſure, then in agitation, of an union of the two kingdoms. Flattered, at the age of twenty-four, by an application, which ſpoke the opinion entertained of his abilities and influence, by the greateſt Lawyer and Stateſman of the age, he readily ſacrificed the opening proſpects of his profeſſion, and undertook the arduous employment. The happy execution of it was rewarded in 1708 by the place of Commiſſioner of the Cuſtoms; from which he was removed by the Tory Adminiſtration in 1711,

* His mother was a daughter of the famous Mr. Caryll, author of the Commentary on Job. From private information.

(a) Supplement to the New and Gen. Biog. Dict.

[A] Was youngeſt ſon of Francis Shute, of Upton, in the county of Leiceſter, Eſq;.] Mr. Salmon ſays, that the Shute family 'is of Norman extraction, in which dutchy, whilſt it continued annexed to the Engliſh 'crown, there were to be ſeen the remains of a caſtle bearing the name of Shute, and formerly in the 'family, with other monuments in ſeveral towns of 'that dutchy. The family hath been long ſeated 'in the counties of Leiceſter and Cambridge, in 'the latter of which, at Hockington, reſided Sir 'Chriſtopher Shute, a deſcendant of the Norman family, who was father of Robert, appointed ſecond Baron of the Exchequer (with a very 'particular clauſe in his patent, ſee Dugdale 'Or. Jud.) in 1579, and a Judge of the King's 'Bench in 1585, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. He was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon Francis, who, by Frances, daughter of Hercules 'Mewlas, Eſq; (who re-married after his death to 'Robert Ratcliff, Earl of Suſſex) had ſeveral children, of whom Francis Shute of Upton, in the 'county of Leiceſter, Eſq; left three ſons, James, 'Samuel, and Benjamin. James had a ſon of 'his own name, who died without iſſue; Samuel 'had three ſons, who all died young; and Benjamin 'died in the year 1683, leaving by Mrs. Mary 'Caryll his wife, three ſons and three daughters (1),' and the youngeſt of theſe ſons was John Lord Barrington, the ſubject of this article.

(1) Short View of the families of the preſent Iriſh Nobility, edit. 1759, p. 157, 158.

[B] An Eſſay upon the intereſt of England, in reſpect to Proteſtants diſſenting, &c.] In this piece the author endeavoured to make it appear, that it would be unjuſt and impolitic to paſs any new laws unfavourable to the Diſſenters, and in particular to prevent occaſional conformity. He ſays, 'I confeſs if the 'Diſſenters were all of them an inconſiderable parcel of people, poor and ignorant, without intereſt or 'influence; their being eaſy could do us no ſervice, 'nor their uneaſineſs any hurt. But ſince a great 'many of the Diſſenters are men of ſenſe and ſubſtance, conſiderable by their monies veſted in trade, 'and the ſhare they have in the lands of England; 'and who, with the aſſiſtance of the government, 'could make a conſiderable intereſt for its ſupport; it 'would be worth the while to conſider, whether any 'of the little ends, that the enemies of the Diſſenters 'ſhould propoſe to themſelves, by diſobliging them, 'could counterbalance the loſs of their direction and 'their purſe (2).'—'Diſſenters are conſiderable for 'their number, as well as their ſubſtance. Some 'who pretend to have conſidered the matter, compute 'them, according to the moſt modeſt calculation, to bear 'the proportion of one to four. Would it be good 'policy then to diſoblige a fourth part of the people 'of England, and to ſhake them off from every dependance on the government, but that of dread and 'fear? Would it be prudence to tempt them to murmur and repine, and ſome violent wicked ſpirits 'perhaps to do what is worſe? And that at a time 'when, to the great grief of every true Engliſhman, 'people ſeem to be ſo univerſally diſcontented and 'uneaſy, ſo jealous and apprehenſive (3).'—'He 'who ſhould adviſe the government to diſoblige the 'Diſſenters, upon a ſuppoſition that they would reſent it, is an enemy to England. And he who 'ſhould give that advice, in expectation that they 'would bear it with a virtuous patience, is a ſworn 'enemy to the Chriſtian faith (4).'

(2) Eſſay upon the intereſt of England, &c. p. 14, 15.

(3) Eſſay, p. 17.

(4) Eſſay, p. 18.

Our author obſerves farther, that 'the Whigs, 'of which the Diſſenters have always made a conſiderable part (and with whom that intereſt is ſo 'cloſely connected and interwoven, that it can't fail 'to ſhare the ſame fortune), have been the men 'noted for their popular principles, and for having 'always acted ſuitably thereto. They have been a 'firm rampart to the liberties of the people againſt all 'the aſſaults of arbitrary power; and have ſo heartily 'oppoſed the deſigns of ill reigns, as to get the names 'of Commonwealth's men: but who to ſhew, that they 'were thorough friends to our conſtitution, and were 'for defending the prerogative veſted in a good 'prince, who they knew would uſe it to their advantage, and who deſerved marks of their gratitude, 'for the great deliverance he had wrought, have gone 'ſo far on the obliging ſide in this reign, as to be 'termed apoſtates and courtiers, in reproach (5).'—'If the preſervation of the balance or conſtitution of 'England depend upon a preſervation of the prerogative on the one hand, and the liberties of the 'people on the other; if moreover the prerogative 'can't be preſerved, nor the liberties of the people 'deſtroyed (which are the only alterations we can 'fear), but by an inclination in the people to preſerve the one, and not to give up the other: if 'moreover theſe inclinations depend upon popular 'principles; and the Whigs are the men noted for 'thoſe principles, and a ſteady practice conformable 'thereto: and if the Diſſenters are known to be the 'men, with whom the Whig-intereſt muſt riſe or fall; 'it is certain, that to weaken the Diſſenters, is to 'deſtroy the balance of England (6).'

(5) Eſſay, p. 26.

(6) Eſſay, p. 28.

[C] This was reprinted, &c.] In the ſecond edition the title was ſomewhat varied. It was then called, 'The Intereſt of England conſidered, in reſpect to Proteſtants diſſenting from the eſtabliſhed 'Church, with ſome Thoughts about occaſional 'Conformity.'

[D] He publiſhed, The Rights of Proteſtant Diſſenters, &c.] The ſecond edition of this was printed in 1705. It was dedicated to Queen Anne. In the firſt part, the author treated of the reaſons of diſſent from the eſtabliſhed church, of the occaſional conformity of the Diſſenters, of the right they have to a toleration, and the intereſt the government has to maintain it. The ſecond part was a vindication of the right of the Diſſenters to an abſolute toleration, from the objections of Sir H. Mackworth, in his treatiſe, intitled, 'Peace at home,' &c.

for

for his avowed oppoſition to their principles and conduct. How high Mr. Shute's character ſtood in the eſtimation even of thoſe who differed moſt widely from him in religious and political ſentiments, appears from the teſtimony borne to it by Dr. Swift (b). In the reign of Queen Anne, John Wildman, of Becket, in the county of Berks, Eſq; adopted him for his ſon after the Roman cuſtom, and ſettled his large eſtate upon him, though he was no relation, and is ſaid to have been but ſlightly acquainted with him (c). Some years after, he had another conſiderable eſtate left him by Francis Barrington, of Tofts, Eſq; who had married his firſt couſin, and died without iſſue. This occaſioned him to procure an act of parliament, purſuant to the deed of ſettlement, to aſſume the name, and bear the arms of Barrington. On the acceſſion of King George I. he was choſen member of parliament for the town of Berwick upon Tweed.

(c) Supplement to the New and Gen. Biog. Dict.

On the 5th of July, 1717, he had a reverſionary grant of the office of Maſter of the Rolls in Ireland, which he ſurrendered the 10th of December 1731. King George I. was alſo pleaſed, by privy ſeal, dated at St. James's the 10th of June, and by patent at Dublin, July 1, 1720, to create him Baron Barrington of Newcaſtle, and Viſcount Barrington of Ardglaſs. In 1722, he was again returned to parliament as member for the town of Berwick; but in 1723, the houſe of commons taking into conſideration the affair of the Harburgh lottery [E], a very ſevere and unmerited cenſure of expulſion was paſſed upon his Lordſhip, as ſub-governor of the Harburgh Company, under the Prince of Wales.

In

(b) Dr. Swift writes thus to Archbiſhop King, in a letter dated London, Nov. 30. 1708. 'One Mr. Shute is named for ſecretary to Lord Wharton. He is a young man, but reckoned the ſhrewdeſt head in England; and the perſon in whom the Preſbyterians chiefly confide; and if money be neceſſary towards the * good work, it is reckoned he can command as far as 100,000 l. from the body of the Diſſenters here. As to his principles, he is a moderate man, frequenting the church and the meeting indifferently.' Small 12*mo.* edit. 1768, Vol. xiv. p. 50.

* He probably means the taking off the ſacramental teſts, alluded to in another part of the letter.

[E] The Houſe of Commons taking into conſideration the affair of the Harburgh lottery.] The account given by Mr. Tindall, in his continuation of Rapin, of the affair of the Harburgh lottery, is not very favourable to Lord Barrington. But the following paper on this ſubject, written by Sir Michael Foſter, and which was never before publiſhed *, will greatly contribute to extenuate, if not juſtify, the conduct of his lordſhip in this tranſaction.

* This paper was obligingly communicated by Michael Dodſon, Eſq; of Clifford's Inn, nephew to Judge Foſter.

'His late Majeſty King George the firſt was deſirous to introduce trade and manufactures into his German dominions: and the town of Harburgh being thought a proper place for that purpoſe, a ſcheme was offered to him, which met with his approbation, for making the port of Harburgh capable of receiving ſhips of burden, and for carrying on the intended trade and manufactures principally at that place. Accordingly his Majeſty, by charter under the great ſeal of the Electorate, about Midſummer 1720, incorporated a number of gentlemen and merchants of London, for ſetting up and carrying on certain manufactures by a joint ſtock at Harburg; and divers privileges were granted to the company, whoſe capital was to be 500,000 l. and a charter for commerce was promiſed to that company. As ſoon as the manufacture charter was paſſed, and ſubſcriptions taken in for raiſing the ſtock, ſhares ſold at an exorbitant price, 50 l. being commonly given for a ſhare on which only 2 l. had been advanced; and I think that ſome ſhares were ſold at 80 l. a ſhare. So great was the madneſs of that memorable year!

'This exorbitant riſe upon the ſtock put ſome gentlemen and merchants of London, who thought themſelves not enough conſidered in the manufacture charter, upon ſoliciting for a ſeparate charter, for opening the port of Harburgh, and carrying on the foreign commerce there; and agents on behalf of the manufacture company, with others on behalf of the ſeparate charter, followed his Majeſty to Hanover, each party for ſome time endeavouring to carry their reſpective points; the manufacture company to get likewiſe the charter for commerce, the other party to get a ſeparate charter for commerce, excluſive of the manufacture company. At length both ſides agreed to accept one charter for commerce and manufactures, which ſhould take in the members of the old company, and thoſe who ſolicited for the ſeparate commerce charter; and that the capital of the united company ſhould be 1,500,000 l. It was likewiſe agreed, that the members of the old company ſhould, over and above the 500,000 l. already ſubſcribed, be intitled to a certain ſhare of the new ſtock upon advancing as before 2 l. upon each ſhare, and that the reſidue of the ſtock ſhould be divided amongſt the new members and their friends. One gentleman in particular, ſecured to himſelf, as I am informed, no leſs than 300,000 l. to be diſpoſed of by him amongſt his friends.

'At this time ſhares were commonly ſold at 20 l. a ſhare; but before the end of the year Harburgh ſtock ſunk, as all other projects of that kind did; and no money having been paid on the new ſtock, and no charter for commerce being paſſed, the gentlemen who ſolicited the new charter refuſed to be any farther concerned in the affair, ſince the opportunity for exorbitant profits was loſt, and a new ſet of gentlemen and merchants, with the members of the old company, undertook to carry it on, and were incorporated by charter under the great ſeal of the Electorate, for opening the port and carrying on the trade and manufactures at Harburgh.

'It was, as I have been informed, part of the original ſcheme, that the expence of opening the port, which was computed at 100,000 l. ſhould be defrayed by the profits of a lottery to be drawn at Harburgh. Accordingly after the new charter was paſſed, his Majeſty by warrant under his ſign manual and the privy ſeal of the Electorate, impowered and required the company to lay before him a ſcheme for the lottery, which they did; and ſome time afterwards his Majeſty by a ſecond warrant under his ſign manual and privy ſeal of the Electorate, ſigned his approbation of the ſcheme, and impowered the company to proceed upon it, and to deliver out tickets here for the lottery, and he named truſtees to manage and direct the drawing at Harburgh. Before the lottery was opened, Lord Barrington, who was ſub-governor of the company, (his Royal Highneſs the preſent Prince of Wales being named Governor) thought it neceſſary to procure a Britiſh charter of incorporation, and meaſures were taken for that purpoſe with the Britiſh miniſters; for hitherto every thing touching the company had been tranſacted with the German miniſters.

'His lordſhip, as I have reaſon to believe, was perſuaded that the miniſters intended that the company ſhould have a Britiſh charter; and things went ſo far in that way, that a draught of a Britiſh charter was prepared and laid before the Attorney General. While things were in this ſtate, ſome of the gentlemen in London concerned in the affair opened a ſubſcription for the lottery, Lord Barrington being then in the country. This ſtep they took contrary to his lordſhip's opinion and advice.

'Within a few days after the ſubſcription for the lottery was opened, advertiſements were publiſhed by ſome of the gentlemen who had formerly ſolicited the commerce charter, and afterwards when the price of ſtock fell, had refuſed to accept their ſhares, treating the affair as a public cheat; and

'the

In 1725, he publiſhed, in two volumes, 8*vo*, his ‘ Miſcellanea Sacra [F]; or a new ‘ Method of conſidering ſo much of the Hiſtory of the Apoſtles, as is contained in ‘ Scripture; in an abſtract of their Hiſtory, an Abſtract of that Abſtract, and four criti- ‘ tical Eſſays.’ In this work the noble author has traced, with great care and judgment, the methods taken by the apoſtles, and firſt preachers of the goſpel, for propagating Chriſtianity; and explained with great diſtinctneſs, the ſeveral Gifts of the Spirit, by which they were enabled to diſcharge that office. Theſe he improved into an argument for the truth of the Chriſtian religion; which is ſaid to have ſtaggered the infidelity of Mr. Anthony Collins [G]. In 1725, he publiſhed in 8*vo*, ‘ An Eſſay on the ſeveral ‘ Diſpenſations of God to Mankind, in the order in which they lie in the Bible: or, a ſhort ‘ Syſtem of the Religion of Nature and Scripture [H],’ &c. He was alſo author of ſeveral other tracts, which will be mentioned in the notes [I]. He ſometimes ſpoke in parliament, but appears not to have been a frequent ſpeaker. On the 12th of April 1717,

‘ the matter was ſoon brought before the houſe of ‘ commons.

‘ While it was there depending, I was, in Lord ‘ Barrington's abſence, conſulted by the gentlemen ‘ concerned touching the beſt method for avoiding ‘ the ſtorm which ſeemed to be gathering, and threat- ‘ ened the ruin of the company. My advice was, ‘ that the company ſhould, without any heſitation, ‘ lay their charter, with the two warrants for the lot- ‘ tery, before the houſe; and ſubmit their caſe up- ‘ on the foot of thoſe powers; ſince it would appear ‘ by thoſe powers, that what they had done in the af- ‘ fair was done by virtue of powers received from his ‘ Majeſty. But this advice was ſoon laid aſide, and ‘ the ſecretary (Mr. Ridpath) was inſtructed to ac- ‘ quaint the houſe, as he did, that the company ‘ having acted under powers received from his Ma- ‘ jeſty as Elector, in an affair concerning his Electo- ‘ rate, they did not think themſelves at liberty to ‘ lay ſuch powers before the houſe without his Ma- ‘ jeſty's permiſſion. This anſwer exactly ſuited the ‘ views of thoſe people who intended to ruin the ‘ company, without ſeeming to do a thing which re- ‘ flected diſhonour on his Majeſty. Accordingly the ‘ houſe was ſatisfied with the anſwer, ſo far as not to ‘ inſiſt on a ſight of the charter and warrants; and ‘ immediately came to a reſolution, that the perſons ‘ concerned in the affair, had acted therein without ‘ any authority from his Majeſty; and Lord Barring- ‘ ton, who then ſerved for Berwick upon Tweed, was ‘ expelled the houſe.

‘ This matter was made an occaſion of bringing ‘ this ſevere cenſure on Lord Barrington; who was ‘ ſuſpected to have formerly taken ſome ſteps very ‘ diſagreeable to the reigning miniſter, Sir Robert ‘ Walpole. His lordſhip was firmly attached to the ‘ adminiſtration during the time of Lord Sunderland's ‘ miniſtry, and employed all his credit and influence ‘ with the Diſſenters, which was then very great, to ‘ keep that body in the ſame intereſt: but upon the ‘ death of Lord Sunderland, Sir Robert Walpole, ‘ who, for many years during Lord Sunderland's ad- ‘ miniſtration, had oppoſed every public meaſure, ‘ ſucceeded him, as Prime Miniſter, and could not ‘ forget the part which Lord Barrington had acted ‘ againſt him.’

Copied from Sir MICHAEL FOSTER's hand-writ- ing. M. DODSON.

[F] In 1725, he publiſhed, in two volumes, 8*vo*. his Miſcellanea Sacra.] A ſecond edition of this work, with large additions and corrections, was publiſhed by his ſon the preſent Lord Biſhop of Landaff, in 1770, in three volumes, 8*vo*. It is obſerved in an advertiſement prefixed to this edition, that the work had received ſuch improvements from the author, as add new force to his arguments, and elucidation to his criticiſms. ‘ He employed the interval between its ‘ publication in 1725, and his death in 1734, in re- ‘ viewing, correcting, and enlarging it. The addi- ‘ tions, which bear no ſmall proportion to the ori- ‘ ginal work, are now faithfully given to the world, ‘ from an interleaved copy written in the author's ‘ own hand.’ To this edition is alſo added, a Diſ- ſertation on Heb. xii. 22—25, which had not been be- fore publiſhed: and it is obſerved in the advertiſe- ment juſt referred to, that it is believed there will be diſcovered in this ‘ the ſame critical ſagacity, and ‘ the ſame accurate knowledge of ſcripture, which ‘ ſo peculiarly characteriſe the other writings of this ‘ author.’ The four critical eſſays in this work are on the following ſubjects. I. On the witneſs of the Holy Spirit. II. On the diſtinction between Apoſtles, Elders, and Brethren. III. On the time when Paul and Barnabas became Apoſtles. IV. On the Apoſto- lical Decree.

In the preface to the Miſcellanea Sacra, Lord Bar- rington, ſpeaking of the deſign of his work, ſays, I have endeavoured ‘ to give a ſhort abſtract, in the ‘ order of time, of all the Scripture-hiſtory of the ‘ apoſtles; and chiefly with regard to thoſe parts of ‘ their hiſtory that may ſhew us what the apoſtolical ‘ work and office was, as diſtinguiſhed from other ‘ miniſters of the firſt Chriſtian church; and what ‘ were the ſteps by which they were directed by pro- ‘ vidence to ſpread the Chriſtian religion in the ‘ world; in which, I think, the greateſt wiſdom, ‘ harmony, beauty, and proportion, will appear: ‘ ſuch as will ſhew the new creation every way wor- ‘ thy of the word and wiſdom by which God not ‘ only made the world, but introduced this new ‘ ſyſtem of religion into ours (8).’

(8) Pref. p. viii. edit. 1770.

[G] Staggered the infidelity of Mr. Anthony Collins.] This gentleman, who lived in Eſſex, often viſited Lord Barrington at Tofts, his ſeat in that county, where Dr. Jeremiah Hunt alſo ſometimes viſited his lordſhip. They therefore occaſionally met there; and it is ſaid to have been their cuſtom, after dinner, to have a Greek Teſtament laid upon the table, as they were all men of letters, and had a taſte for ſcripture criticiſm. In one of their converſations, Mr. Collins obſerved that he had a very great reſpect for the memo- ry of St. Paul; and added, ‘ I think ſo well of him, ‘ who was both a man of ſenſe and a gentleman, that ‘ if he had aſſerted he had worked miracles himſelf, I ‘ would have believed him.’ Lord Barrington im- mediately produced a paſſage in which that apoſtle aſſerts his having wrought miracles: Mr. Collins ſeemed ſomewhat diſconcerted, and ſoon after took his hat, and quitted the company (9). When Lord Barrington, in another converſation, aſked Mr. Col- lins, what was the reaſon, that though he ſeemed him- ſelf to have very little faith in the doctrines of religion, he yet took great care that his ſervants ſhould attend re- gularly at church. His reply was, that he did this to prevent their robbing or murdering him.

(9) From the in- formation of the Rev. Dr. Ca- leb Fleming, to whom Dr. Jer. Hunt communi- cated this par- ticular.

[H] An eſſay on the ſeveral Diſpenſations of God to mankind, &c.] After this had paſſed through a ſecond edition, ſome acute and learned remarks were pub- liſhed upon it in 1733, by Joſeph Dodſon, M. A. a clergyman of Marlborough, but without his name. A third edition of the Eſſay on the ſeveral Diſpenſa- tions, &c. was publiſhed in the third volume of the Miſcellanea Sacra, edit. 1770.

[I] He was alſo author of ſeveral other tracts, &c.] Theſe were, I. A Diſſuaſive from Jacobitiſm; ſhewing in general what the nation is to expect from a Popiſh King; and in particular, from the Pretender. The fourth edition of this was printed in 8*vo*, in 1713. II. A Letter from a layman, in communion with the church of England, though diſſenting from her in ſome points, to the Right Rev. the Lord Biſhop of ———. With a Poſtſcript, ſhewing how far the bill to prevent the growth of ſchiſm, is inconſiſtent with the act of tolera- tion,

1717, he made a ſpeech in favour of the motion for a ſupply (d). On the 7th of January 1718-19, he ſpoke in ſupport of the bill for ſtrengthening the proteſtant ſucceſſion (e); as he did alſo the 17th of June, 1721, in favour of the ſubſidy to Sweden (f). He died at his ſeat at Becket in Berkſhire, after a ſhort illneſs, on the 14th of December 1734, in the fifty-ſixth year of his age (g). He generally attended divine worſhip among the Diſſenters, and, for many years, received the ſacrament at Pinner's-Hall, when Dr. Jeremiah Hunt, an eminent and learned Nonconformiſt divine, was paſtor of the congregation that aſſembled there. He had formerly been an attendant on Mr. Thomas Bradbury, but quitted that gentleman on account of his bigotted zeal for impoſing unſcriptural terms upon the article of the Trinity (†). His lordſhip was a diſciple and friend of Mr. Locke (*), had a high value for the ſacred writings, and was eminently ſkilled in them. As a writer in theology, he had great merit; and contributed much to the diffuſing of that ſpirit of free ſcriptural criticiſm, which has ſince obtained among all denominations of Chriſtians. As his attention was much turned to the ſtudy of divinity, he had a ſtrong ſenſe of the importance of free inquiry in matters of religion [K]. In his writings, whenever he thought what he advanced was doubtful, or that his arguments were not ſtrictly concluſive, though they might have great

(d) Chandler's Debates, Vol. vi. p. 123.

(e) Ibid. p. 192.

(f) Ibid. p. 253.

(g) Supplement, ubi ſupra.

(†) From private information.

(*) See Mr. Locke's Life, prefixed to the fifth edition of his works.

tion, and the other laws of this realm. The ſecond edition of this was printed in 1714, 4*to*. In this letter the author obſerves, that, 'As to break in upon 'a man's liberty in the indifferent things of life, is an 'encroachment on the rights of human nature; ſo 'to break in upon it in religious matters that are not 'injurious to another, is not only an encroachment, 'which is called perſecution for conſcience ſake, but 'is an uſurpation of the divine prerogative over the 'minds of men.' Beſides, it will appear very plainly, 'that government can have no rightful power over 'men's profeſſions or practices in points of this nature; becauſe government can't in any wiſe affect men's ſentiments. For penalties, which is all the 'force that government can exert over its ſubjects, 'have not the leaſt tendency to alter men's opinions. 'All that a government can do, is to reſtrain men's 'profeſſions or practices. But to reſtrain their profeſſions or practices in points that are not injurious 'to others, when they can't alter their belief, tends 'only to make men hypocrites, that is, to believe 'one thing, and to profeſs and practiſe another: 'which, as it by conſequence tends to damn the man 'that is thus tempted to hypocriſy, ſo it tends to deſtroy all government, by looſing men from the ties 'of their conſciences, the beſt ſecurity a government 'can poſſibly have for the trueſt obedience of its ſubjects (10).' III. The Layman's Letter to the Biſhop of Bangor. The ſecond edition of this was publiſhed in 1716, 4*to*. IV. An account of the late proceedings of the Diſſenting-miniſters at Salters-Hall; occaſioned by the differences amongſt their brethren in the country: with ſome thoughts concerning the impoſition of human forms for articles of faith. In a letter to the Rev. Dr. Gale, 8*vo*, 1719. The differences referred to in the title of this piece, it is obſerved by the author, 'had their 'riſe from ſome diſputes concerning the doctrine of 'the Trinity; whereupon ſome weak Chriſtians, of 'more zeal than charity, took it into their heads to 'be uneaſy in communion with ſuch as they were 'jealous of on that account; and inſiſted upon a defection from ſome articles, or forms upon that head, 'to be a ſufficient ground of excommunication, or 'excluſion (11).' But at the meeting of Diſſenting-miniſters at Salters-Hall, of which this piece gives an account, it was carried by a majority againſt the impoſition of 'human compoſitions, or interpretations of 'the doctrine of the Trinity.' Our author's pamphlet, however, gave offence to the violent ſticklers for orthodoxy, and indeed ſome of the paſſages in it were rather ſevere upon Mr. Thomas Bradbury, a Diſſenting-miniſter of ſome note, but of more zeal than judgment, who had much diſtinguiſhed himſelf in this affair, though in a manner not greatly to his honour. However, he publiſhed a piece the ſame year, intitled, 'An Anſwer to the reproaches caſt on thoſe 'Diſſenting-miniſters, who ſubſcribed their belief of 'the Eternal Trinity. In a letter to John Barrington-Shute, Eſq; by Thomas Bradbury.' V. A Diſcourſe of natural and revealed Religion, and the relation they bear to each other, 8*vo*, 1732. VI. Reflections on the 12*th query, contained in a paper, intitled, Reaſons offered againſt puſhing for the repeal of the Corporation and Teſt-Acts, and on the animadverſions on the anſwer to it,* 8*vo*, 1733.

(10) Letter from a Layman, &c. p. 8, 9. 2d edit.

(11) Account, p. 3.

[K] He had a ſtrong ſenſe of the importance of free inquiry in matters of religion.] Thus he ſays, in the preface to his Miſcellanea Sacra, that 'nobody who 'has read hiſtory with any attention, but muſt have 'obſerved, that there have been certain diſpoſitions 'which have reigned in certain periods of the world: 'owing perhaps to ſome great genius, in whom that 'diſpoſition has been firſt kindled and ſhone, and by 'whom it has been communicated to others; till at 'length it has ſpread ſo far as to become the prevailing humour of the age. Nor is there any one, 'who has but curſorily examined our own times in 'particular, but muſt have taken notice, that a very inquiſitive turn has prevailed in them, eſpecially 'in philoſophy, and in natural and revealed religion; 'and that likewiſe a happy temper has grown up 'along with it, of bearing with one another in the 'reſult of our inquiries.'

'As theſe are in themſelves ſome of the beſt diſpoſitions that can have place in mankind (the one 'being the ſeed-plot of all truth and virtue, and the 'other that which, like warmth and moiſture, cheriſhes them whereever they ſpring); and being 'both of them the only promiſing ſymptoms (I mean, 'of a moral nature), among a great many threatening 'appearances, that a curious obſerver will find among 'us; there is no man, who has been bleſſed by God 'with having had any ſhare in exciting or advancing 'this happy temper, but has found reaſon for the 'higheſt ſatisfaction in his own breaſt, as well as for 'the greateſt thankfulneſs to God, the author of 'every good and perfect gift, on that account; and 'that, notwithſtanding all the neglects, the diſappointments, and the ill uſage, which he may have 'met with at any time, for his attempts or ſucceſs 'this way, from the powerful, the ſtupid, the lazy, and the corrupt part of mankind.'

'Such treatment is what muſt be generally expected 'from the great and the powerful, who have their views 'too much fixed on power, wealth, and honours, to 'take them off, in order to purſue truth or virtue. 'Inſtead of looking after theſe ſpiritual poſſeſſions 'themſelves, they are generally afraid, leſt the purſuits that are made after them by others ſhould 'diſturb them in their daily acquiſitions of another 'kind; and therefore ſeldom fail to raiſe a cry of 'danger to ſomething or another, that really is, or 'that is thought to be, valuable, by the ſtupid, the 'lazy, and the corrupt; the conſtant tools and confederates of the mighty, and who are at the ſame 'time the ſworn enemies of all enquiries; hating 'to be diſturbed in their ſentiments, eſpecially in 'thoſe that tend to their worldly eaſe and advantage. 'Thus the men of power generally keep the moſt 'jealous eye on theſe honeſt and diligent enquirers, 'and worry them by the others; apprehending a 'ſpeedy diſcovery of their own ſecret ways of corruption, from their penetration and integrity, and 'perhaps ſome trouble and oppoſition of one kind or 'other by that means; were it no more than their 'making it appear to the world, that ſometimes when 'the great weight, he expreſſed himſelf with a becoming diffidence [L]. He was remarkable for the politeneſs of his manners, and the gracefulneſs of his addreſs, as we are aſſured by thoſe who perſonally knew him (b). He married Anne, eldeſt daughter of Sir William Daines, by whom he left ſix ſons and three daughters. William, his eldeſt ſon, ſucceeded to his father's honours; was elected, ſoon after he came of age, member for the town of Berwick; and in the late and preſent reigns, has paſſed through the ſucceſſive offices of Lord of the Admiralty, Maſter of the Wardrobe, Secretary at War, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Treaſurer of the Navy. Francis, the ſecond, died young. John, the third, was a Major General in the army, commanded the land-forces at the reduction of the Iſland of Guadaloupe in 1758, and died in 1764. Daines, the fourth, King's Counſel, and one of the Welch Judges, is author of 'Obſervations upon the ancient ſtatutes,' a work which hath gone through four editions, and of ſeveral curious and valuable papers in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, and in the Archæologia of the Antiquarian Society. Samuel, the fifth, is Rear-Admiral of the Red, who greatly diſtinguiſhed himſelf in the wars of 1741 and 1756. Shute, the ſixth, had his education at Eaton-ſchool, and the univerſity of Oxford; took Orders in 1756, the degree of LL. D. in 1762, and was promoted to the Biſhoprick of Landaff in 1769; who hath obligingly communicated to us ſome of the facts above mentioned, as well as ſeveral pieces written by his Lordſhip's father, and which have been enumerated in this article. Of the three daughters, who ſurvived their father, Sarah, married Robert Price, Eſq; of Foxley in Herefordſhire; Anne, Thomas Clarges, Eſq; only ſon of Sir Thomas Clarges, Bart.; and Mary died unmarried.] T.

(b) See Letters of deceaſed Perſons, 8*vo*, 1773.

'the powerful are doing what are, or are thought to 'be, high acts of juſtice, or even endeavouring to 'procure ſome conſiderable advantage to the public, 'it is but as a neceſſary part of their private ſcheme, 'beyond which they ſeldom run the riſk, or give 'themſelves the trouble, ſo much as to aim at the 'good of ſociety.'——'But whatever is generally to 'be expected from men in power, and from thoſe who 'are in a combination with them, yet there is no 'good man but will endeavour to feed and cheriſh 'theſe happy diſpoſitions in all the ways he can. 'And as this inquiſitive turn has brought men to 'look more curiouſly into the ſcriptures, from ſeeing 'that they alone muſt be the ſtandards of truths 'which are not diſcoverable by the light of na-'ture; and to judge of the books of the Old and 'New Teſtament more according to the rules of 'criticiſm, from a better taſte that obtains; they 'will contribute all the help they can to aſſiſt others 'in reading them with greater advantage.'

[L] In his writings, &c. he expreſſed himſelf with a becoming diffidence.] He ſays, in his firſt eſſay, 'I 'cannot but have a very mean opinion of writers, 'who will put on the appearance of aſſurance and 'certainty, that they may carry the guiſe of perfect 'knowledge and judgment to the bulk of their 'readers, in points where they are far from being at 'that certainty which they affect ſo much to be 'thought to have; and every one muſt have a much 'worſe opinion of thoſe who give themſelves this 'air, only to ſerve party or private views. The firſt 'proceeds from a degree of pride, to which human 'nature is more eaſily carried; while the ſecond ariſes 'from a degree of diſhoneſty, that has been contract-'ed by lower acts of it, repeated from time to time, 'till it has grown habitual, and ends in venturing 'on this high injury to mankind. The firſt moral 'virtues of a writer are to diveſt himſelf of theſe 'enormous paſſions; to ſearch for truth alone, and 'to propoſe it to his reader, with that degree of evi-'dence and certainty, or of doubt and difficulty, 'which it has in his own mind. Conſidering him-'ſelf as accountable to God, for miſleading any 'man by the ſuperiority of his talents; and as ac-'countable to his reader, for the inſolence of en-'deavouring to impoſe on him, by means of any 'real or imagined advantage he has over him. If 'theſe virtues were practiſed by every writer, we 'ſhould receive more profit from the beſt, and leaſt 'hurt from the worſt, than we now reap from either 'of them; and writing would then be in the beſt 'ſtate that this ſtate of imperfection would allow '(12).']

(12) Miſcellanea Sacra, Vol. i. p. 157, 158. edit. 1770.

BARROW (Isaac), Biſhop of St. Aſaph in the reign of King Charles II., was ſon of Iſaac Barrow of Spiney-Abbey in Cambridgeſhire, and uncle of the famous Dr. Iſaac Barrow, Maſter of Trinity-College in Cambridge (a). He had his education at Peter-houſe in Cambridge, and became Fellow of that college; but was ejected by the Preſbyterians about the year 1643: whereupon going to Oxford, he was appointed one of the Chaplains of New-College by the Warden Dr. Pink (b). It is ſaid, he was created Bachelor of Divinity in that univerſity the 23d of June 1646; but his name is not to be found in the regiſter (c). He continued at Oxford till the garriſon of that place ſurrendered to the Parliament, after which time he ſhifted from place to place, and ſuffered with the reſt of the loyal and orthodox clergy, till the Reſtoration of King Charles II., when he was not only reſtored to his fellowſhip in Peter houſe, but elected likewiſe one of the Fellows of Eaton-College near Windſor. July the 5th, 1663, he was conſecrated Biſhop of the Iſle of Man, in Henry the VIIth's chapel at Weſtminſter; and the year following he was appointed, by Charles Earl of Derby, Governor of the Iſle of Man; which office he diſcharged with great reputation all the time he held that See, and ſome time after his tranſlation to that of St. Aſaph. He held his fellowſhip of Eaton in commendam with the biſhopric of Man, and was a conſiderable benefactor to that iſland, and eſpecially the clergy thereof (d) [A]. Afterwards going into England for the ſake of his health, and lodging in a houſe belonging to the Counteſs of Derby in Lancaſhire called Croſs-Hall, he

(a) See the following article.

(b) Wood, Ath. Oxonienſis, Vol. ii. col. 1140.

(c) Id. Faſti Oxon. Vol. ii. col. 56.

(d) Id. Athen. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

[A] He was a conſiderable benefactor to the iſland of Man, and eſpecially to the Clergy thereof.] He collected with great care and pains from pious perſons one thouſand eighty-one pounds, eight ſhillings, and four pence; with which he purchaſed of the Earl of Derby all the impropriations in the iſland, and ſettled them upon the Clergy in proportion to their ſeveral wants. He obliged them all likewiſe to teach ſchool in he there received the news of his Majesty's conferring on him the bishopric of St. Asaph, to which he was translated March the 21st 1669, and to which diocese he was no inconsiderable benefactor [B]. This worthy Prelate died in the 67th year of his age, at Shrewsbury, the 24th of June 1680, and was buried the first of July following at the cathedral church of St. Asaph [C]. His epitaph [D] gave great offence to the Presbyterians (e) [E].

(e) Ib. col. 1154.

in their respective parishes, and allowed thirty pounds per annum for a free-school, and fifty pounds per annum for academical learning. He procured also from King Charles II., one hundred pounds a year (which, Mr. Wood says, had like to have been lost) to be settled upon his Clergy, and gave one hundred thirty-five pounds of his own money for a lease upon lands of twenty pounds a year, towards the maintenance of three poor scholars in the college of Dublin, that in time there might be a more learned body of Clergy in the island. He gave likewise ten pounds towards the building a bridge over a dangerous water; and did several other acts of charity and beneficence (1).

(1) Wood, Athen. Oxonienſis, Vol. ii. col. 1141.

[B] He was no inconsiderable benefactor to the diocese of St. Asaph.] He repaired several parts of the cathedral church, especially the north and south isles, and new covered them with lead, and wainscotted the East part of the choir. He laid out a considerable sum of money in repairing the episcopal palace, and a mill thereunto belonging. In 1678, he built an alms-house for eight poor widows, and endowed it with twelve pounds per annum for ever. The same year, he procured an act of parliament for appropriating the rectories of Llaurhaiader and Mochnant in Denbighshire and Montgomeryshire, and of Skeiviog in the county of Flint, for repairs of the cathedral church of St. Asaph, and the better maintenance of the choir therein, and also for the uniting several rectories that were sinecures, and the vicarages of the same parishes, within the said diocese. He designed likewise to build a free-school, and endow it, but was prevented by death. Nevertheless, in 1687, Bishop Lloyd, who succeeded Bishop Barrow in the see of St. Asaph, recovered of that Prelate's executors two hundred pounds, towards a free-school at St. Asaph (2).

(2) Ib. ib. col. 1154.

[C] He died at Shrewsbury —— and was buried —— at the cathedral church of St. Asaph.] Six days after his death, his corpse was removed to his house called Argoed-Hall in Flintshire, and from thence carried to his palace at St. Asaph, and the same day interred, after divine service and a sermon, by Dr. Nicholas Stratford, Dean of St. Asaph, on the south side of the West door in the cathedral church-yard, which was the place he had appointed (3).

(3) Ibid.

[D] His epitaph.] Over his grave was laid a large flat stone, and another over that supported by pedestals; on the last of which is the following inscription engraven: Exuviæ Isaaci Asaphensis Episcopi, in manum Domini depositæ, in spem lætæ resurrectionis per sola Christi merita. Obiit dictus reverendus pater festo Divi Johannis Baptistæ, anno Domini 1680, ætatis 67, et translationis suæ undecimo; i. e. 'The 'remains of Isaac, Bishop of St. Asaph, deposited in 'the hand of the Lord, in hope of a joyful resurrec- 'tion through the alone merits of Jesus Christ. This 'reverend father died on the feast of St. John Bap- 'tist, in the year of our Lord 1680, the 67th of 'his age, and the eleventh of his translation.' On the lower stone, which is even with the ground, is the following inscription, engraven on a brass plate fastened thereunto, which was made by the Bishop himself. Exuviæ Isaaci Asaphensis Episcopi, in manum Domini depositæ, in spem lætæ resurrectionis per sola Christi merita. O vos transeuntes in domum domini, domum orationis, orate pro conservo vestro, ut inveniat misericordiam in die Domini; i. e. 'The 'remains of Isaac, Bishop of St. Asaph, deposited in 'the hand of the Lord, in hope of a joyful resur- 'rection through the alone merits of Jesus Christ. O 'ye who are passing into the house of the Lord, the 'house of prayer, pray for your fellow-servant, that 'he may find mercy in the day of the Lord.' The said brass plate was fastened at first, as is reported there, over the said West door, but was afterwards taken down, and fastened to the lower stone next the body (4).

(4) Ibid.

[E] —— gave great offence to the Presbyterians.] What they excepted against in this epitaph was, no doubt, the latter part of the second inscription, as savouring too much of the Popish doctrine of Prayers for the dead. But let us cite Anthony Wood (5). 'As soon as this last epitaph was put up, the contents 'thereof flew about the nation by the endeavours of the 'godly faction (then plumped up with hopes to carry on 'their diabolical designs upon account of the Popish 'plot, then in examination and prosecution) to make 'the world believe that the said Bishop died a Papist, 'and that the rest of the Bishops were Papists also, 'or at least popishly affected, and especially for this 'reason, that they adhered to his Majesty, and took 'part with him at that time against the said faction, 'who endeavoured to bring the nation into confusion 'by their usual trade of lying and slandering, which 'they have always hitherto done to carry on their 'ends, such is the religion of the Saints. But so it 'is, let them say what they will, that the said Bishop 'was a virtuous, generous, and godly man, and a true 'son of the Church of England; and it is to be 'wished that those peering, poor-spirited, and sneak- 'ing wretches would endeavour to follow his example, 'and not to lie upon the catch, under the notion of 'religion, to obtain their temporal ends, private 'endearments, comfortable importances, filthy lusts, '&c.' B.

(5) Ibid.

[However blameable the Nonconformists might be, either in reality, or according to Anthony Wood's representation of them, for reflecting upon Bishop Barrow's general character, they certainly were not wrong in their disapprobation of his epitaph. Every member of the Church of England, who is a sound and consistent Protestant, will join in the same disapprobation. The epitaph undoubtedly favours the Popish Doctrine of prayers for the dead; and if it was agreeable to the Bishop's sentiments, or put up according to his direction, shews him to have been extremely superstitious. Without disputing the excellency of his heart, it must be acknowledged that he had not an enlarged understanding, and that his ideas of religion were very unbecoming a Protestant Prelate. His admirable nephew would not have admitted any thing so degrading into his character.] K.

BARROW (Isaac), an eminent Mathematician and Divine of the last century, was descended from an ancient family of that name in Suffolk (a). His father was Mr. Thomas Barrow [A], a reputable citizen of London (b) and Linen-Draper to King Charles I. (c); and his mother, Anne, daughter of William Buggin of North-Cray in Kent,

(a) Mr. John Ward's Lives of the Professors of Gresham-College, fol. Lond. 1740, p. 157.

(b) Mr. Abr. Hill's Account of the Life of Dr. Isaac Barrow, prefixed to the first Volume of the Doctor's English Works, fol. Lond. 1716. The pages are not numbered.

(c) Dr. Walter Pope's Life of Dr. Seth Ward, Bishop of Salisbury, 8vo. Lond. 1697, p. 130.

(1) Mr. Abr. Hill's Account of the Life of Dr. Isaac Barrow, prefixed to the first Volume of the Doctor's English Works, fol. Lond. 1716. and Mr. John Ward's Lives of the Professors of Gresham-College, fol. Lond. 1740, p. 157.

[A] His father was Mr. Thomas Barrow.] He was son of Isaac Barrow, Esq; born at Gazeby in Suffolk, in 1563, but afterwards of Spiney-abbey at Wickham in Cambridgeshire; a gentleman of a good estate, and forty years in the commission of the peace for that county. This Isaac Barrow was son of Philip Barrow, who published a Method of Physic, and whose brother Isaac was a Doctor in that faculty, a benefactor to Trinity-College in Cambridge, a Fellow of that college, and tutor therein to Robert Cecil, Earl of Salisbury, and Lord Treasurer of England (1). They were the sons of John Barrow of Suffolk, and grandsons of Henry

Kent, Eſq; whoſe tender care he did not long experience, ſhe dying when he was about four years old. He was born at London in October 1630 [B], and was placed firſt in the Charter-houſe ſchool for two or three years, where his behaviour afforded but little hopes of ſucceſs in the profeſſion of a ſcholar [C], for which his father deſigned him. But being removed from thence to Felſtead ſchool in Eſſex, his diſpoſition took a more happy turn, and he quickly made ſo great a progreſs in learning, that his maſter appointed him a kind of tutor to the Lord Viſcount Fairfax of Emely in Ireland, who was then his ſcholar (d). During his ſtay at Felſtead, he was admitted, December the 15th 1642, being then fourteen years of age, a Penſioner of Peter houſe in Cambridge, under his uncle Mr. Iſaac Barrow, afterwards Biſhop of St. Aſaph, and then Fellow of that college. But when he was qualified for the univerſity, he was entered a Penſioner in Trinity-College, the 5th of February 1645; his uncle having been ejected, together with Seth Ward, Peter Gunning, and John Barwick, who had written againſt the Covenant (e). His father having ſuffered greatly in his eſtate by his attachment to the royal cauſe, our young ſtudent was obliged at firſt for his chief ſupport to the generoſity of the learned Dr. Hammond, to whoſe memory he paid his thanks, in an excellent epitaph on the Doctor (f). In 1647, he was choſen a ſcholar of the houſe (g); and, though he always continued a ſtaunch Royaliſt, and never would take the Covenant, yet, by his great merit and prudent behaviour, he preſerved the eſteem and good-will of his ſuperiors [D]. Afterwards, when the Engagement was impoſed, he ſubſcribed it; but, upon ſecond thoughts, repenting of what he had done, he applied himſelf to the Commiſſioners, declared his diſſatisfaction, and prevailed to have his name razed out of the liſt. He applied himſelf with great diligence to the ſtudy of all parts of literature, eſpecially Natural Philoſophy; and though he was yet but a young ſcholar, his judgment was too great to reſt ſatisfied with the ſhallow and ſuperficial Philoſophy, then taught and received in the ſchools. He applied himſelf therefore to the reading and conſidering the writings of the Lord Verulam, M. Des Cartes, Galileo, &c. who ſeemed to offer ſomething more ſolid and ſubſtantial (h). In 1648, Mr. Barrow took the degree of Bachelor of Arts (i). The year following, he was elected Fellow of his college, merely out of regard to his merit; for he had no friend to recommend him, as being of the oppoſite party [E]. And now, finding the (d) Hill, ubi ſupra.

(e) Ward, ubi ſupra.

(f) Printed among his Opuſcula, edit. 1687, p. 301.

(g) Hill, ibid.

(h) Hill, ibid.

(i) Ward, ibid.

(2) Communicated by Mr. Werthington, apud Ward, ibid.

(3) Dr. Walter Pope's Life of Dr. Seth Ward, Biſhop of Saliſbury, 8vo. Lond. 1697, p. 130.

(4) See his article.

(5) Wood, Ath. Oxonienſes, Vol. ii. col. 1140.

(6) See the remark [W].

(7) Lives of the Profeſſors, &c. ubi ſupra.

(8) Life of Dr. Seth Ward, &c. p. 129.

Henry Barrow (2). Mr. Thomas Barrow, our Divine's father, adhered to the intereſts of King Charles I. whom he followed to Oxford; and, after the murder of that Prince, he went to his ſon Charles II. then in exile, whom he attended till the reſtoration (3). He had a brother whoſe name was Iſaac, afterwards Biſhop of St. Aſaph (4), whoſe conſecration ſermon, his nephew and name-ſake preached at Weſtminſter-Abbey (5).

[B] He was born —— in October 1630.] The year of his birth is evidently inferred from that of his death, which, according to his funeral inſcription (6), written from the information of his father, was the year 1677; from which ſubſtracting the years of his life, ſaid in the ſame inſcription to be 47, we find he was certainly born in the year 1630. And this is farther confirmed by the date of his admiſſion in Peterhouſe, which, Mr. Ward tells us (7), was in 1643, at which time, according to the expreſs words of the college regiſter (annum agens decimum quartum) he was entered upon the fourteenth year of his age. Notwithſtanding all which, Dr. Pope will have it, that the date aſſigned by Mr. Hill is not right. 'Mr. Hill, ſays 'he (8), fixes Dr. Barrow's birth in the month of 'October, A. D. 1630. But I hope he will not be 'offended, if I diſſent from him, both as to the year and 'month, and produce reaſon for ſo doing; 'tis this: 'I have often heard Dr. Barrow ſay, he was born 'upon the twenty-ninth of February; and if he ſaid 'true, it could not be either in October, or in 1630, 'that not being a Leap year. I would not have aſ'ſerted this upon the credit of my memory, had it 'been any other day of any other month, it being 'told me ſo long ſince, had I not this remarkable 'circumſtance to confirm it; he uſed to ſay, "It is, in "one reſpect, the beſt day in the year to be born "upon; for it afforded me this advantage over my "fellow-collegiates, who uſed to keep feaſts upon "their birth-day; I was treated by them once every "year, and I entertained them once in four years, "when February had nine and twenty days." Theſe accounts are ſo inconſiſtent, that we muſt either ſuppoſe, that Dr. Barrow's father was miſtaken as to the year of his ſon's birth, and that his age was falſely entered in the regiſter of Peter-houſe; or (which is no improbable conjecture) that Dr. Pope has, thro' forgetfulneſs, aſcribed that to Dr. Barrow, which he had heard of ſome other friend.

[C] He gave but little hopes of ſucceſs in the profeſſion of a ſcholar.] His greateſt recreation, Mr. Hill tells us (9), was in ſuch ſports as brought on fighting among the boys; to which he adds, his negligence of his cloaths, and (which was much worſe) that of his book. Nay, there was then ſo little appearance of that comfort, which his father afterwards received from him, that he often ſolemnly wiſhed, that if it pleaſed God to take away any of his children, it might be his ſon Iſaac, ſo vain a thing, as my author judiciouſly obſerves, is man's judgment, and our providence unfit to guide our own affairs. It is obſervable, that Dr. Barrow always retained a natural courage though he had perfectly ſubdued all inclination to quarrelling, and that the neglect of his dreſs continued with him to the laſt.

(9) Ubi ſupra.

[D] He preſerved the eſteem and good will of his ſuperiors.] Of this we have an inſtance in Dr. Hill, Maſter of the college, who had been put in by the parliament in the room of Dr. Comber, ejected for adhering to the King (10). One day laying his hand upon our young ſtudent's head, he ſaid, Thou art a good lad, 'tis pity thou art a Cavalier; and when, in an oration on the Gunpowder-Treaſon, Mr. Barrow had ſo celebrated the former times, as to reflect much on the preſent, ſome Fellows were provoked to move for his expulſion; but the Maſter ſilenced them with this, Barrow is a better man than any of us (11). This, Dr. Pope obſerves (12), is very remarkable, and an evident teſtimony of our young ſcholar's irreſiſtible merits, which could, as the Poets feign of Orpheus,

(10) Dr. Pope, ubi ſupra, p. 132.

(11) Mr. Hill, ibid.

(12) Ibid.

------ lenire tigres rabidoſque leones,
Make ſavage tygers and fierce lions tame;

that is, as the Doctor interprets it, make a Preſbyterian kind to a Cavalier and Malignant, which names the adherents to the King, Church, and Laws, went under in thoſe days.

[E] He had no friend to recommend him, as being of the oppoſite party.] Dr. Pope, having mentioned this particular circumſtance attending Mr. Barrow's election, ſays, 'This brings to my memory a certificate the times not favourable to men of his opinions in matters of Church and State, he turned his thoughts to the profeſſion of Phyſic, and made a conſiderable progreſs in the knowledge of Anatomy, Botany, and Chemiſtry: but afterwards, upon deliberation with himſelf, and with the advice of his uncle, he applied himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity, to which he was further obliged by his oath on his admiſſion to his fellowſhip. By reading Scaliger on Euſebius, he perceived the dependance of Chronology on Aſtronomy; which put him upon reading Ptolemy's Almageſt: and finding that book and all Aſtronomy to depend on Geometry, he made himſelf maſter of Euclid's Elements, and from thence proceeded to the other ancient Mathematicians. He made a ſhort eſſay towards acquiring the Arabic language, but ſoon deſerted it. With theſe ſeverer ſpeculations, the largeneſs of his mind had room for the amuſements of Poetry, to which he was always ſtrongly addicted (k) [F]. In 1652, he commenced Maſter of Arts (l), and, on the 12th of June the following year, was incorporated in that degree at Oxford (m). When Dr. Duport reſigned the chair of Greek Profeſſor, he recommended his pupil Mr. Barrow to ſucceed him; who juſtified his tutor's opinion of him by an excellent performance of the probation exerciſe: but being looked upon as a favourer of Arminianiſm, the choice fell upon another (n); and this diſappointment, it is thought, helped to determine him in his reſolution of travelling abroad (o) [G]. In order to execute this deſign, he was obliged to ſell his books. Accordingly, in the year 1655, he went into France; where, at Paris, he found his father attending the Engliſh court, and out of his ſmall Viaticum made him a ſeaſonable preſent (p). The ſame year his Euclid was printed at Cambridge, which he had left behind him for that purpoſe (q). He gave his college an account of his journey to Paris in a poem (r), and ſome farther obſervations in a letter (s) [H]. After a few months, he went into Italy, and ſtayed ſometime at Florence, where he had the advantage of peruſing ſeveral books in the Great Duke's Library, and of converſing with Mr. Fitton his Librarian (t) [I]. Here the ſtraitneſs of his circumſtances muſt have put an end to his travels, had he not been generouſly ſupplied with money by Mr. James Stock, a young merchant of London, to whom he afterwards dedicated his edition of Euclid's Data (u). He was deſirous to have ſeen Rome; but the plague then raging in that city, he took ſhip at Leghorn, November the 6th 1656, for Smyrna. In this voyage they were attacked by a corſair of Algiers, who, perceiving the ſtout defence the ſhip made, ſheered off and left her; and upon this occaſion Mr. Barrow gave a remarkable inſtance of his natural courage and intrepidity (w) [K]. At Smyrna, he made himſelf welcome to Mr. Bretton the Conſul (upon whoſe death he afterwards wrote an elegy (x),) and

(k) Hill, ibid.

(l) Ward, ibid.

(m) Wood, Faſt. Oxon. Vol. ii. col. 103.

(n) Mr. Ralph Widdrington.

(o) Hill, ibid.

(p) Hill and Ward, ibid.

(q) Ward, ibid.

(r) Printed among his Opuſcula, p. 317.

(s) Ibid. p. 351.

(t) Hill, ib. and Ward, ib. p. 152.

(u) Dr. Worthington's Letter to Mr. Hartlib, Auguſt 5, 1656, MS. apud Ward, ibid.

(w) Hill and Ward, ib. Dr. Pope, ubi ſupra, p. 136.

(x) Inter Opuſcula, p. 302.

'or teſtimonial, which my worthy friend Dr. Gilbert 'Ironſide, then Warden of Wadham-College in Oxford, and now Biſhop of Hereford, gave to a member of that college, who was candidate for a fellowſhip in another college; it was to this purpoſe: If 'this perſon, whom I recommend to you, be not a better 'ſcholar than any of thoſe who are his competitors, 'chooſe him not; and he did, upon examination and 'trial, ſo far ſurpaſs the reſt, that they could not refuſe him, without being and appearing partial and 'unjuſt. I mention this as parallel to Dr. Barrow's 'caſe (13).'

(13) Life of Biſhop Ward, p. 133.

(14) Ubi ſupra.

[F] He was always ſtrongly addicted to Poetry.] This is ſufficiently evident from the many performances he has left us in that art. Mr. Hill tells us (14), he was particularly pleaſed with that branch of it, which conſiſts in deſcription, but greatly diſliked the hyperboles of ſome modern poets. As for our plays, he was an enemy to them, as a principal cauſe of the debauchery of the times; the other cauſes he thought to be, the French education, and the ill example of great perſons. For ſatires, he wrote none; his wit, as Mr. Hill expreſſes it, was pure and peaceable.

[G] This diſappointment helped to determine him in his reſolution of travelling abroad.] His other motives, according to Dr. Pope (15), were the melancholy aſpect of public affairs, and a deſire to ſee ſome of thoſe places mentioned by the Greek and Latin authors. But whatever they were, there is no doubt, as Mr. Hill obſerves (16), but that he, who, in leſſer occurrences, did very judiciouſly conſider all circumſtances, had on good grounds made this reſolution.

(15) Ibid.

(16) Ibid.

[H] Some obſervations in a letter.] This letter, which ſhews Mr. Barrow's piercing judgment in political affairs, when he turned his thoughts that way, gives a particular account of the controverſy between M. Arnaud the Janſeniſt and the Jeſuits, and mentions the favourable diſpoſition of the King and Queen of France towards the Proteſtants of that kingdom, which plainly appeared upon the following remarkable occaſion. The Archbiſhop of Thouloufe, being come to Paris, waited upon the Queen, and in diſcourſe with her Majeſty began to complain that the Proteſtants enjoyed too great a liberty in his dioceſe; to which that Princeſs replied by aſſuring him, that ſhe had ſufficiently experienced their loyalty, and had found them to be more faithful ſubjects than thoſe who accuſed them of ſedition. The King coming in during the converſation, joined with the Queen in her opinion of the Proteſtants, and declared he would continue to them the liberty, which had been granted them by the edicts of his predeceſſors. In ſpeaking of the univerſity of Paris, Mr. Barrow tells them, that it produced at that time very few men of diſtinguiſhed learning and abilities, and that it's colleges were remarkable for nothing but their ſtructures, though, even in that reſpect, the Univerſity of Cambridge had no reaſon to envy that of Paris, ſince Trinity-college alone equalled, if not exceeded, the Colleges of the Sorbonne, Navarre, and Clermont, thrown together.

[I] Mr. Fitton, the Great Duke's Librarian.] This gentleman, who was an Engliſhman, had been appointed by the Great Duke of Tuſcany to take upon him the charge of that valuable treaſure of antiquity, his library, on account of his extraordinary abilities in that ſort of learning (17). This is ſo clearly expreſſed by Mr. Hill, that one would wonder how Dr. Pope came to miſtake him ſo far, as to aſſert (18), that, upon Mr. Fitton's recommendation, Mr. Barrow was invited by the Great Duke to accept of the office of his Librarian.

(17) Hill, ibid.

(18) Ubi ſupra, p. 134.

[K] A remarkable inſtance of his natural courage and intrepidity.] Take it in Dr. Pope's words: 'In 'his paſſage from Leghorn to Conſtantinople, the ſhip 'he ſailed in was attacked by an Algerine Pirate: 'during the fight, he betook himſelf to his arms (*), 'ſtayed upon the deck chearfully and vigorouſly 'fighting, and to the Engliſh factory. From thence he proceeded to Conſtantinople, where he met with a very friendly reception from Sir Thomas Bendiſh the Engliſh Ambaſſador, and Sir Jonathan Daws, with whom he afterwards kept up an intimate friendſhip and correſpondence. This voyage, from Leghorn to Conſtantinople, he has deſcribed in a Latin Poem (y) [L]. At Conſtantinople, he read over the works of St. Chryſoſtom, once Biſhop of that See, whom he preferred to all the other Fathers. Having ſtayed in Turkey above a year, he returned from thence to Venice, where, ſoon after they were landed, the ſhip took fire, and with all the goods was conſumed. From thence he came home, in 1659, through Germany and Holland, and has left a deſcription of ſome parts of thoſe countries in his poems. Soon after his return into England, the time (z) being ſomewhat elapſed, before which all Fellows of Trinity-college are obliged to take orders, or quit the ſociety, Mr. Barrow was epiſcopally ordained by Biſhop Brownrig, notwithſtanding the unſettled ſtate of the times, and the declining condition of the church of England. Upon the King's Reſtoration, his friends expected he would have been immediately preferred on account of his having ſuffered and deſerved ſo much; but it came to nothing, which made him wittily ſay (which he has not left in his poems)

(*) Mr. Hill ſays he ſtood to the gun appointed him with great courage.

(y) Ibid. p. 302.

(z) Viz. Seven years after the degree of Maſter of Arts.

Te magis optavit rediturum, Carole, nemo,
Et nemo ſenſit te rediiſſe minus (a).

(a) Hill, Ibid.

That is,

Thy Reſtoration, Royal Charles, I ſee,
By none more wiſh'd, by none leſs felt, than me.

However, he wrote an ode upon that occaſion, in which he introduces Britannia congratulating the King upon his return (b). In 1660, he was choſen, without a competitor, Greek Profeſſor of the univerſity of Cambridge (c). His oration, ſpoken upon that occaſion [M], is preſerved among his Opuſcula (d). When he entered upon this province, he deſigned to have read upon the Tragedies of Sophocles: but, altering his intention, he made choice of Ariſtotle's Rhetoric (e). Theſe Lectures, having been lent to a perſon, who never returned them, are irrecoverably loſt (f). The year following, which was 1661, he took the degree of Bachelor in Divinity (g). July the 16th 1662, he was elected Profeſſor of Geometry in Greſham-college, in the room of Mr. Lawrence Rooke, and chiefly through the intereſt and recommendation of Dr. Wilkins, Maſter of Trinity-college, and afterwards Biſhop of Cheſter. In this ſtation, he not only diſcharged his own duty, but ſupplied, likewiſe, the abſence of Dr. Pope the Aſtronomy Profeſſor. Among his Lectures, ſome were upon the projection of the ſphere; which being borrowed and never returned, are loſt (h). But his Latin Oration, previous to his

(b) Opuſc. p. 309.

(c) Hill, ibid.

(d) Page 100.

(e) Dr. Worthington to Mr. Hartlib, Oct. 21, 1661, MS. Mr. Worthington, apud Ward, ubi ſupra, p. 160.

(f) Hill, ib.

(g) Ward, ib.

(h) Hill, ib.

' fighting, till the Pirate, perceiving the ſtout de' fence the ſhip made, ſheered off and left her. I
' aſked him why he did not go down into the hold,
' and leave the defence of the ſhip to thoſe to whom
' it did belong: he replied, " It concerned no man
" more than myſelf; I would rather have loſt my " life, than have fallen into the hands of thoſe mer-
" cileſs Infidels." This engagement, and his own
' ſtout and intrepid behaviour in it, to defend his ' liberty, which he valued more than his life, as he
' aſſerts in that verſe,

' Almaque libertas vitali charior aura,

(19) It is entitled, Iter maritimum a portu Liguſtico ad Conſtantinopolim. See his Opuſcula, or fourth Vol. of his Works, p. 211.

(20) Life of Dr. Seth Ward, &c. p. 136, 137.

' he deſcribes at large in a copy of verſes (19) in the ' fourth volume of his works (20).' Dr. Pope adds to this another accident, which, becauſe it is a farther proof of Dr. Barrow's natural courage and intrepidity, I ſhall inſert in this place. ' He was at a
' gentleman's houſe in the country, if I miſtake not
' in Cambridgeſhire, where the neceſſary-houſe was ' at the end of a long garden, and conſequently at a ' great diſtance from the room where he lodged: as ' he was going to it very early, even before day, for
' he was ſparing of ſleep, and a very early riſer, a
' fierce maſtiff, who uſed to be chained up all day,
' and let looſe at night for the ſecurity of the houſe,
' perceiving a ſtrange perſon in the garden at that
' unſeaſonable time, ſet upon him with great fury.
' The Doctor catched him by the throat, threw him,
' and lay upon him, and, whilſt he kept him down,
' conſidered what he ſhould do in that exigent; once
' he had a mind to kill him, but he quite altered
' this reſolution, judging it would be an unjuſt
' action; for the dog did his duty, and he himſelf
' was in fault for rambling out of his lodgings before
' 'twas light. At length he called out ſo loud, that ' he was heard by ſome of the houſe, who came ' preſently out, and freed both the Doctor and
' the dog from the imminent danger they were both
' in (21).'

(21) Ibid.

[L] This voyage —— he has deſcribed in a Latin poem.] The time of his ſailing from Leghorn is, at the head of this poem, through miſtake, printed Nov. 6. anno 1657; it ſhould be 1656; otherwiſe he could not have ſtayed above a year in Turkey, as Mr. Hill aſſures us he did, and is manifeſt from his letter to the Maſter and Fellows of Trinity-college, dated at Conſtantinople Aug. 1, 1658 (22).

(22) It is printed in Mr. Ward's Lives, &c. Appendix, No. 10. p. 39.

[M] His oration ſpoken upon that occaſion.] In this ſpeech Dr. Barrow pays a high compliment to the memory of Sir Thomas Smith, Sir John Cheke, Downs, Chrichton, and Dr. Duport; and particularly commemorates Eraſmus, who had been ſo nobly inſtrumental in reviving the ſtudy of the learned languages. He compliments the univerſity of Cambridge upon the good ſenſe, true judgment, real wit, and extenſive learning with which it abounded; in which reſpects it had the advantage over all the univerſities he had ſeen in his travels. He apologizes for his own inſufficiency and inability to fill that chair: but, as he had the honour to be elected, he ſhould uſe his utmoſt endeavours to ſupply the want of genius, by induſtry and diligent application. He congratulates his hearers upon the revival and encouragement of good literature and the politer arts by his Majeſty's happy Reſtoration. Laſtly, he expatiates upon the great antiquity, extenſive uſe, peculiar energy, and ſuperior advantages of the Greek language; and diſplays the ſeveral merits of its writers in every branch of learning.

Lectures,

Lectures, is ſtill extant [N]. The ſame year 1662, he wrote an Epithalamium on the marriage of King Charles and Queen Catherine, in Greek verſe (i). About this time, Mr. Barrow was offered a very good Living, but the condition annexed of teaching the patron's ſon, made him refuſe it, as too like a ſimoniacal contract (k). Upon the 20th of May 1663, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, in the firſt choice made by the Council after their charter (l). The ſame year, Mr. Lucas having founded a Mathematical Lecture at Cambridge, Mr. Barrow was ſo powerfully recommended, by Dr. Wilkins, to that gentleman's executors Mr. Raworth and Mr. Buck, that he was appointed the firſt Profeſſor; and the better to ſecure the end of ſo noble and uſeful a foundation, he took care that himſelf and his ſucceſſors ſhould be obliged to leave yearly to the Univerſity ten written Lectures (m). We have his Prefatory Oration [O], ſpoken in the public Mathematical ſchool, March the 14th 1664 (n). Though his two Profeſſorſhips were not inconſiſtent, he choſe to reſign that of Greſham-college; which he accordingly did, May the 20th 1664. He had been invited to take the charge of the Cotton Library; but, after a ſhort trial, he declined it, and reſolved to ſettle in the Univerſity. In 1669, he reſigned the Mathematical chair, to his very worthy friend and learned ſucceſſor Mr. Iſaac Newton, being determined to quit entirely the ſtudy of the Mathematics for that of Divinity [P]. In 1670, he wrote a Latin poem upon the death of the Ducheſs of Orleans (o), an Epicedium upon the Duke of Albemarle (p), and a Latin Ode upon the Trinity (q). He was only a Fellow of Trinity-college, when he was collated by his uncle, the Biſhop of St. Aſaph, to a ſmall Sine-Cure in Wales, and by Dr. Seth Ward, Biſhop of Saliſbury, to a Prebend in that cathedral [Q]; the profits of both which he applied to charitable uſes, and afterwards reſigned them, when he became Maſter of his college (r). This year, 1670, he was created Doctor in Divinity by mandate (s). In 1672, Dr. Pearſon, Maſter of Trinity-college, being, upon the death of Biſhop Wilkins, removed to the Biſhoprick of Cheſter (t), Dr. Barrow was appointed by the King

(i) Opuſc. P. 275.
(k) Hill, ib.
(l) Ward, ib.
(m) Hill, ib.
(n) Opuſc. P. 78.
(o) Ib. p. 293.
(p) Ib. p 294.
(q) Ib. p. 273.
(r) Hill, ibid.
(s) Ward, ubi ſupra, p. 162.
(t) Dr. Pope, ubi ſupra, p. 138.

[N] His Latin oration, previous to his Lectures, is ſtill extant.] It is printed in his Opuſcula, or fourth volume of his Works (23), and opens with a compliment to the memory of Sir Thomas Greſham, founder of the college. From thence the Orator proceeds to celebrate his predeceſſors in the Geometry Lecture, Mr. Henry Briggs, Sir Chriſtopher Wren, and Mr. Laurence Rooke; and laments his own want of abilities to ſupply the place of ſuch great men. The reſt of the oration is taken up in diſplaying the ſolid foundation, and great advantages, of Geometry, to which the world has been obliged for ſo many noble and uſeful diſcoveries.

(23) Page 90.

[O] His Prefatory Oration.] In this piece the Doctor gives us a fine encomium on Mr. Lucas, founder of the Lecture, and pays a compliment to his executors Mr. Raworth and Mr. Buck. He then mentions the reaſons, which induced him to reſign the Greek Profeſſorſhip for that of the Mathematics, which were chiefly, that the bent of his genius led him more ſtrongly to the ſtudy of Philoſophy than of Philology, the knowledge of things than of words; and that, having undertaken the Greek lecture, at a time when the duty of it was very great and the profits very ſmall, he thought himſelf at liberty, eſpecially now that the circumſtances of that lecture were altered very much to its advantage, to quit it, and exchange a very laborious duty for one of leſs fatigue. He employs the reſt of the oration on the praiſes of the Mathematics, and their excellent uſe in freeing the mind from credulity, fortifying it againſt the vanity of Scepticiſm, reſtraining it from raſhneſs and preſumption, inclining its aſſent to proper evidence, ſubjecting it to the juſt authority of reaſon, and ſetting it free from the unjuſt tyranny of deluſive prejudices; in fixing the volatility of the imagination, ſharpening the dull and heavy genius, pruning the luxuriant, bridling the impetuous, and ſpurring the ſlow and indolent.

[P] He determined to quit entirely the ſtudy of the Mathematics for that of Divinity.] What contributed not a little to detach him from the farther purſuit of mathematical knowledge, was, the little notice that had been taken of his Geometrical Lectures; which had now been ſome time publiſhed, and yet Mr. Hill tells us (24), he had heard of very few that had read and conſidered them thoroughly, beſides M. Sluſius of Liege, and Mr. Gregory of Scotland, two that might, indeed, be reckoned inſtead of many: but the little reliſh that ſuch things met with helped to looſen him from theſe ſpeculations, and the more engage his inclination to the ſtudy of Morality and Divinity, which had always been ſo predominant, that, when he commented on Archimedes, he could not forbear in diſcourſe to prefer and admire much more Suarez for his book de Legibus.

(24) Ubi ſupra.

[Q] He was collated by Biſhop Ward to a Prebend in the cathedral church of Saliſbury.] That Prelate, Dr. Pope tells us (25), had invited Dr. Barrow to live with him, not as a Chaplain, but rather as a friend and companion, though he frequently officiated in the abſence of the domeſtic Chaplain. About this time, the archdeaconry of North Wiltſhire becoming void, the Biſhop made an offer of it to Dr. Barrow, who modeſtly and abſolutely refuſed it, for a reaſon, which Dr. Pope thinks it not neceſſary to declare. Soon after, a Prebendary of Saliſbury being dead, and the Biſhop offering Dr. Barrow the Prebend, he gratefully accepted it, and was inſtalled accordingly. 'I remember about that time, ſays Dr. Pope, I heard 'him once ſay, I wiſh I had five hundred pounds. I 'replied, That's a great ſum for a Philoſopher to de-'ſire; what would you do with ſo much? I would, 'ſaid he, give it my ſiſter for a portion, that would procure her a good huſband: Which ſum, in few 'months after, he received, for putting a life into 'the corps of his new Prebend; after which he re-'ſigned it to Mr. Corker of Trinity-college in Cam-'bridge.' Dr. Pope relates a circumſtance during Dr. Barrow's reſidence in the Biſhop's family, which, however trifling it may be thought, I ſhall here ſet down in that writer's own words: 'We were once 'going from Saliſbury to London, he in the coach 'with the Biſhop, and I on horſeback: as he was 'entering the coach, I perceived his pockets ſtrutting 'out near half a foot, and ſaid to him, What have 'you got in your pockets? He replied, Sermons; Ser-'mons, ſaid I, give them me, my boy ſhall carry them 'in his portmanteau, and eaſe you of that luggage. But, 'ſaid he, ſuppoſe your boy ſhould be robbed. That's 'pleaſant, ſaid I; do you think there are Parſons pad-'ding upon the road for ſermons? Why, what have 'you, ſaid he; it may be five or ſix guineas; I hold 'my ſermons at a greater rate; they coſt me much pain 'and time. Well then, ſaid I, if you'll inſure my five 'or ſix guineas againſt Lay-Padders, I'll ſecure your 'bundle of ſermons againſt Eccleſiaſtical Highwaymen. 'This was agreed; he emptied his pockets, and filled 'my portmanteau with Divinity, and we had the 'good fortune to come ſafe to our journey's end, 'without meeting either ſort of the padders before-'mentioned, and to bring both our treaſures to London (26).'

(25) Ubi ſupra, p. 142, &c.
(26) Ib. p. 144.

to ſucceed him [R]; and his Majeſty was pleaſed to ſay upon that occaſion, he had given it to the beſt ſcholar in England (u). His patent [S] bears date February the 13th 1672, and he was admitted the 27th of the ſame month (w). He gave the higheſt ſatisfaction to that ſociety, whoſe intereſt he conſtantly and carefully conſulted (x) [T]. In 1675, he was choſen Vice-Chancellor of the univerſity (y). This great and learned Divine died of a fever [U], the 4th of May 1677, and was buried in Weſtminſter-Abbey, where a monument was erected to him by the contribution of his friends. His epitaph [W] was written (u) Hill, ib.

(w) Ward, ib.
(x) Hill, ib.
(y) Ward, ib.

[R] He was appointed by the King Maſter of Trinity-college.] The Doctor being at that time one of the King's Chaplains, his Majeſty had often done him the honour to converſe with him, and in his facetious way uſed to call him an unfair Preacher, becauſe he exhauſted every ſubject, and left no room for others to come after him (27). This preferment was not at all obtained by faction or flattery: it was the King's own act, though Dr. Barrow's merit made thoſe of the greateſt power forward to contribute towards it, particularly, Gilbert Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Duke of Buckingham, then Chancellor of Cambridge, and formerly a member of Trinity-college (28).

(27) Ward, ib.

(28) Hill, ib.

[S] His patent.] His patent, according to Mr. Hill (29), being drawn up, as it had been for ſome others, with permiſſion to marry, he was at the charge of getting it altered, as thinking it not agreeable to the ſtatutes, from which he deſired no diſpenſation. Dr. Pope pretends, he procured a new patent, 'Nay, 'ſays that Life writer (30), he choſe rather to be at 'the expence of double fees, and procure a new pa-'tent, without the marrying clauſe, than perpetually 'to ſtand upon his guard againſt the ſieges, batteries, 'and importunities, which he foreſaw that ho-'nourable and profitable preferment would expoſe 'him to;

'- - - - - Imitatus Caſtora, qui ſe
'Eunuchum ipſe facit, &c.

'in this wiſely imitating the beaver; who knows for 'what he is hunted. Thus making matrimony a 'forfeiture of his preferment, it was as effectual a way 'to ſecure him from all dangers of that kind, as 'caſtration itſelf could have been; for women, in 'this age, like hens, deſire only to lay where they ſee 'neſt-eggs.' But it is not true, that Dr. Barrow procured a new patent, the original inſtrument, in the hands of the Earl of Oxford, having a blank occaſioned by the eraſement (31).

(29) Ibid.

(30) Ubi ſupra, p. 165.

(31) Communicated by the late Rev. Mr. Baker of Cambridge. See Ward, ubi ſupra, p. 162.

[T] He conſtantly and carefully conſulted the intereſt of that ſociety.] Particularly, he excuſed them from ſome expences, and allowances, which they had made to his predeceſſors (32). Among other inſtances, he remitted to them the charge of keeping a coach for him, as had been done for other maſters (33). Upon the ſingle affair of building their library, which was begun under his maſterſhip, he wrote out quires of paper in letters, chiefly to thoſe who had been of the college, firſt to engage their benefactions, and then to give them thanks, which he never omitted. He kept no copies of theſe letters; but by the generous returns they brought in, they appeared to be of no ſmall value (34).

(32) Hill, ib.

(33) Dr Pope, ubi ſupra, p. 165.

(34) Hill, ib.

[U] He died of a fever.] It pleaſed God, Mr. Hill tells us (35), that being invited to preach the Paſſion-Sermon, April 13, 1677, at Guild-Hall, (which, by the way, was the ſecond ſermon, for which he received any pecuniary recompence) he never preached but once more, preſently after falling ſick of a fever. The like diſtemper he had once or twice before, though otherwiſe of a conſtant health; but this fatally prevailed againſt the ſkill and diligence of many Phyſicians his good friends. Dr. Pope is more particular in relating the circumſtances of Dr. Barrow's death. 'The laſt time he was in 'London, ſays that writer (36), whither he came, 'as it is cuſtomary, to the election of Weſtminſter, 'he went to Knightſbridge to give the Biſhop of 'Saliſbury a viſit, and then made me engage my 'word to come to him at Trinity-college immediately 'after the Michaelmas enſuing. I cannot expreſs 'the rapture of the joy I was in, having, as I 'thought, ſo near a proſpect of his charming and 'inſtructive converſation; I fancied it would be a 'heaven upon earth, for he was immenſely rich in 'learning, and very liberal and communicative of it, 'delighting in nothing more than to impart to 'others, if they deſired it, whatever he had attained 'by much time and ſtudy: but of a ſudden all my 'hopes vaniſhed, and were melted like ſnow before 'the ſun. Some few days after he came again to 'Knightſbridge, and ſat down to dinner, but I ob-'ſerved he did not eat. Whereupon I aſked him 'how it was with him; he anſwered, that he had 'a ſlight indiſpoſition hanging upon him, with 'which he had ſtruggled two or three days, and 'that he hoped by faſting and opium to get it off, as 'he had removed another and more dangerous ſick-'neſs, at Conſtantinople, ſome years before. But 'theſe remedies availed him not: his malady proved, 'in the event, an inward, malignant, and inſuper-'able fever, of which he died May 4, Anno Dom. '1677, in the 47th year of his age, in mean lodg-'ings, at a ſadler's near Charing-Croſs; an old, 'low, ill-built houſe, which he had uſed for ſeveral 'years: for though his condition was much bet-'tered by his obtaining the maſterſhip of Trinity-'college, yet that had no bad influence upon his 'morals; he ſtill continued the ſame humble perſon, 'and could not be prevailed upon to take more re-'putable lodgings.' The ſame writer informs us (37), that my Lord Keeper ſent a meſſage of condolance to Dr. Barrow's father, who had then ſome place under him, importing that he had but too great reaſon to grieve for the loſs of ſo good a ſon; but that he ſhould mitigate his ſorrow upon that very conſideration.

(35) Ibid.

(36) Ubi ſupra, p. 166, &c.

(37) Ibid.

[W] His epitaph.] It is as follows:

ISAACUS BARROW
S. T. P. Regi CAROLO II. A SACRIS.
Vir prope Divinus, et vere Magnus, ſi quid magni habent
Pietas, Probitas, Fides, ſumma Eruditio, par Modeſtia,
Mores ſanctiſſimi undequaque et ſuaviſſimi.
Geometriæ Profeſſor Londini Greſhamenſis,
Græcæ linguæ et Matheſeos apud Cantabrigienſes ſuos.
Cathedras omnes, Eccleſiam, Gentem, ornavit.
Collegium S. S. Trinitatis Præſes illuſtravit,
Jactis Bibliothecæ verè Regiæ fundamentis auxit.
Opes, Honores, et univerſum vitæ ambitum,
Ad majora natus, non contempſit, ſed reliquit ſeculo.
Deum quem à teneris coluit, cum primis imitatus eſt
Pauciſſimis egendo, benefaciendo quam plurimis,
Etiam poſteris, quibus vel mortuus concionari non deſinit.
Cætera et penè majora ex ſcriptis peti poſſunt.
Abi, Lector, et æmulare.
Obiit 4 Die Maii. Ann. Dom. MDCLXXVII.
Ætat. ſuæ XLVII.
Monumentum hoc Amici poſuere.

In Engliſh.

'ISAAC BARROW, Doctor in Divinity, and Chaplain 'in Ordinary to King Charles II. A godlike, and 'truly great man, if piety, probity, fidelity, the moſt 'extenſive learning, and no leſs modeſty, together with 'moſt holy and ſweet manners, can confer that title. 'He was Profeſſor of Geometry in Greſham-college, 'London; and of the Greek tongue and Mathema-'tics, at Cambridge: An ornament to all his chairs, 'to the Church, and to the nation. He added luſtre to 'Trinity-college, as Maſter, and improved it by laying 'the foundation of a truly Royal Library. Riches, 'honours, and whatever elſe men eagerly purſue, he 'did not deſpiſe, but neglect, being born to greater 'and nobler views. God, whom he had ſerved from 'his youth, he imitated in wanting but few things, 'and doing good to all, even poſterity, to whom, 'though dead, he yet preacheth. The reſt, and 'even greater things than theſe, may be found in his 'writings.

written by his dear friend Dr. Mapletoft (z). He left his manuſcripts to Dr. Tillotſon and Mr. Abraham Hill, with permiſſion to publiſh of them what they ſhould think fit (a). We ſhall give a catalogue, with ſome account, of Dr. Barrow's Works in the remark [X]. He (z) Hill, ib.

(a) Dr. Pope, ubi ſupra, p. 167.

' writings. Go, reader, and imitate him. He ' died the 4th of May 1677, in the 47th year of ' his age. His friends erected this monument to his ' memory.'

[X] A catalogue, with ſome account of Dr. Barrow's works.] The following were publiſhed in his lifetime: I. Euclidis Elementa; i. e. ' Euclid's Ele- ' ments.' Printed at Cambridge in 1655, and oftner, 8vo. This is an edition of all the books and propoſitions of Euclid, demonſtrated in a more compendious manner than had been done before. It was afterwards tranſlated into Engliſh, and publiſhed at London, 1660, &c. 8vo. II. Euclidis Data; i. e. ' Eu- ' clid's Data.' Cambridge 1657, 8vo. This was ſubjoined to the Elements in ſome following editions. III. Lectiones Opticæ XVIII. Cantabrigiæ in Scholis publicis habitæ, in quibus Opticorum Phænomenon genuinæ rationes inveſtigantur et exponuntur; i. e. ' Op- ' tical Lectures, read in the public ſchools at Cam- ' bridge, in which the true reaſons of the Optical ' Phænomena are inveſtigated and explained.' London, 1669, 4to. It is dedicated to Robert Raworth and Thomas Buck, Eſquires; the executors of Mr. Lucas, founder of the Mathematical Profeſſorſhip. In the preface, he acquaints us, that Mr. Iſaac Newton reviſed the copy, pointed out ſeveral things which wanted correction, and made ſome additions of his own. An account of this book is publiſhed in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, No. LXXV. pag. 2258 for September, 1671. Theſe Lectures being ſent to the learned Mr. James Gregory, Profeſſor of the Mathematics at St. Andrews in Scotland, and peruſed by him, he gave the following character of the author in a letter to Mr. John Collins (38): ' Mr. Barrow in his Optics ſheweth ' himſelf a moſt ſubtil Geometer, ſo that I think him ' ſuperior to any that ever I looked upon. I long ' exceedingly to ſee his Geometrical Lectures, eſpecially ' becauſe I have ſome notions upon that ſame ſubject ' by me. I entreat you to ſend them to me preſently, ' as they come from the preſſe, for I eſteem the author ' more than yee can eaſilie imagine.' Being informed by letter, that an account of theſe Lectures, together with thoſe on Geometry, was deſigned to be printed in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, he ſhews by his anſwer (39), how cautious he was, that nothing might be ſaid to recommend them to the reader. ' Con- ' cerning the character (ſays he) which you ſpeake ' of my bookes, I ſhall eſteem myſelf obliged to you, ' if you will effect, that there be nothing ſaid of them ' in the Philoſophical Reports, beyond a ſhort and ' ſimple account of their ſubject. I pray, let there ' be nothing of commendation, or diſcommendation ' of them; but let them take their fortune or fate, ' pro captu lectoris. Any thing more will cauſe me ' diſpleaſure, and will not do them, or me, any good.' IV. Lectiones Geometricæ XIII., in quibus præſertim generalia linearum curvarum ſymptomata declarantur; i. e. ' Thirteen Geometrical Lectures, treating more ' eſpecially of the Properties of Curve Lines.' London, 1670, 4to. An account of this book is publiſhed in the abovementioned Tranſaction, pag. 2260; with An Addition of ſome Corollaries communicated by the author, belonging to the ſecond Problem of his third Appendix to the twelfth Lecture. Theſe Lectures were firſt printed ſeparately from the former upon Optics; but afterwards, in the years 1672 and 1674, they were publiſhed together with them, but without the Corollaries now mentioned, whence it is probable they were not re-printed, but only a new Title-page prefixed to them. V. Archimedis Opera, Apollonii Conicorum libri IV., Theodoſii Sphærica, methodo nova illuſtrata, et ſuccinctè demonſtrata; i. e. ' The Works of Archi- ' medes, the four Books of Apollonius's Conic Sec- ' tions, and Theodoſius's Sphærics, explained in a ' new method, and briefly demonſtrated.' London, 1675, 4to. As to the Lemmata of Archimedes publiſhed in this volume, we are told in the Preface, that they now appear in Latin, from two tranſlations; the one by the learned John Gravius, publiſhed, with ſome Animadverſions, by Mr. Samuel Foſter, Profeſſor of Aſtronomy at Greſham-college, in 1659; the other by Abraham Ecchellenſis, publiſhed at Florence with notes by that excellent Mathematician, Alphonſus Borellus. An account of this work may be ſeen in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, No. CXIV. pag. 314. May 1675. And the copy of all the books of Archimedes, publiſhed in it, except the ſecond book De Æquiponderantibus, the two books, De inſidentibus humido, the Lemmata, and the book De Arenæ Numero, written in Dr. Barrow's own hand, in one octavo volume, and the four books of Apollonius in another volume in quarto, are repoſited in the library of the Royal Society (40). Before his Apollonius Dr. Barrow wrote the following divine ejaculation. Ὁ Θεὸς γεωμετρεῖ. ' Tu autem, Do- ' mine, quantus es Geometra? Quum enim hæc ' ſcientia nullos terminos habeat; cum in ſempiter- ' num novorum theorematum inventioni locus relin- ' quatur, etiam penes humanum ingenium; tu uno ' hæc omnia intuitu perſpecta habes, abſque catena ' conſequentiarum, abſque tædio demonſtrationum. ' Ad cætera penè nihil facere poteſt intellectus noſter; ' et tanquam Brutorum phantaſia videtur non niſi in- ' certa quædam ſomniare; unde in iis quot ſunt ho- ' mines, tot exiſtunt fere ſententiæ. In his conſpiratur ' ab omnibus, in his humanum ingenium ſe poſſe ali- ' quid, imo ingens aliquid et mirificum viſum eſt, ut ' nihil magis mirum; quod enim in cæteris penè in- ' eptum, in hoc efficax, ſedulum, proſperum; &c. ' Te igitur vel ex hac re amare gaudeo, te ſuſpicor, ' atque illum diem deſidero ſuſpiriis fortibus, in quo ' purgata mente et claro oculo non hæc ſolum omnia ' abſque hac ſucceſſiva et laborioſa imaginandi cura, ' verum multo plura et majora ex tua bonitate et im- ' menſiſſima ſanctiſſimaque benignitate conſpicere et ' ſcire concedetur, &c.' i. e. God acts the Geometrician. But how great a Geometrician art thou, O Lord! For whereas this ſcience has no bounds, and there is room even for human wit to diſcover infinite new theorems, thou perceiveſt all theſe truths at one view, without a chain of conſequences, and without the tireſome length of demonſtrations. In other points our underſtanding is almoſt entirely at a ſtand, and, like the imagination of brutes, ſeems only to dream of ſome uncertain objects; whence in ſuch matters there are almoſt as many opinions as there are men. But in theſe there is an univerſal agreement; in theſe the human mind ſeems capable of ſomething great and wonderful; for notwithſtanding its inability in other reſpects, here it exerts itſelf with diligence and ſucceſs, &c. Thee, therefore, even upon this account, I rejoice to love; to thee I look up, and with ardent wiſhes expect that day, when thy immenſe goodneſs ſhall enable me to perceive and underſtand, not only all theſe things, but even more truths, and of much greater importance, with a mind purged from error and prejudice, and without this ſucceſſive and laborious effort of the imagination.

(38) Dat. 29 Jan. 1670, MS. Mr. Jones, apud Ward, ubi ſupra, p. 161.

(39) Dat. 25 Ap. 1670, MS. Mr. Jones, apud Ward, ib. p. 162.

(40) In the Catalogi librorum Manuſcriptorum Angliæ, &c. printed at Oxford. Theſe two manuſcripts are thus imperfectly deſcribed: Iſaacus Barrow in Apollonii Conica. 2 Vol. tom. ii. p. 84.

Theſe, which follow, were publiſhed after Dr. Barrow's deceaſe: I. Lectio in qua Theoremata Archimedis de Sphæra et Cylindro, per methodum indiviſibilium inveſtigata, ac breviter demonſtrata, exhibentur; i. e. ' A Lecture, in which Archimedes's Theorems ' of the Sphere and Cylinder are inveſtigated and ' briefly demonſtrated by the method of Indiviſibles.' London, 1678, 12mo. This was written in Engliſh, but ſoon after the author's death being turned into Latin, was ſubjoined to the editions of Euclid's Elementa and Data. II. Mathematicæ Lectiones, habitæ in Scholis publicis Academiæ Cantabrigienſis, Ann. Dom. 1664, 5, 6, &c. i. e. ' Mathematical Lectures, ' read in the public ſchools of the univerſity of Cam- ' bridge, in the years 1664, 1665, 1666, &c.' London 1683, 8vo. Theſe were ſome of his Lucaſian Lectures; to which the editor, Mr. Wells, has prefixed the author's Oratio Præfatoria (41), made at the opening of them. III. The WORKS of the learned ISAAC BARROW, D. D. late Maſter of Trinity-College in Cambridge (being all his Engliſh Works) in THREE VOLUMES. Publiſhed by his Grace Dr. JOHN TILLOTSON, late Archbiſhop of Canterbury. The firſt edition of (41) See the remark [O].

He was not only remarkable for the excellence, but for the extraordinary length likewiſe, of theſe works was in 1685, when Dr. Tillotſon was Dean of Canterbury; to whom Mr. Abraham Hill addreſſes his Account of the Life of Dr. Iſaac Barrow, prefixed to the firſt volume. There have been ſeveral editions, the laſt in 1741. It is dedicated to the Earl of Nottingham, then Lord-Chancellor, by the author's father Mr. Thomas Barrow. The firſt volume contains, Thirty-two Sermons preached upon ſeveral occaſions; A Brief Expoſition of the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the Decalogue; to which is added, The Doctrine of the Sacraments; and A Treatiſe of the Pope's Supremacy, to which is added, A Diſcourſe concerning the Unity of the Church. The excellency of Dr. Barrow's Sermons is ſo thoroughly underſtood at this time of day, as to ſtand in need of no Elogium. M. Le Clerc ſays of them; Les Sermons de cet auteur ſont plûtôt des traitez, ou des diſſertations exactes, que des ſimples harangues pour plaire à la multitude (42); i. e. 'This author's ſermons are rather treatiſes, or 'compleat diſſertations, than mere harangues to 'pleaſe the multitude.' The editor, Dr. Tillotſon, gives us the following account of the ſubject-matter, and ſome other particulars relating to theſe ſermons (43). The deſign of the five firſt is, to recommend religion to our eſteem and practice, from the conſideration of the manifold excellencies and advantages of it. The four next treat of the two great duties of religion, and parts of Divine worſhip, prayer and thankſgiving; and contain likewiſe a very powerful perſuaſive to the practice of them. The three following were preached upon three ſolemn occaſions; the firſt of them upon the 29th May, 1676, the anniverſary of his Majeſty's happy Reſtoration; the ſecond upon the 5th of November 1675, in commemoration of our deliverance from the Powder-Treaſon; both in the year of his Vice-Chancellorſhip; the third, at the conſecration of the Biſhop of Man (afterwards Lord Biſhop of St. Aſaph) his uncle; in which he pleads for the due reſpect and revenue of the Clergy, with ſo much modeſty, and yet with ſo great force of reaſon and eloquence, that the whole profeſſion may juſtly think themſelves for ever indebted to him. Some of theſe twelve ſermons were the very firſt that he made; by which we may judge with what preparation and furniture he entered upon this ſacred employment. The firſt of them was preached at St. Mary's in Cambridge, June 30, 1661, and was (the editor thinks) the firſt that he ever preached. Thoſe two excellent ſermons of thankſgiving were, it is ſaid, the next. The fourth in order was the firſt that he preached before the King. In placing of them as they now ſtand, the editor had very little regard to the order of time, but rather to ſome ſmall reaſon taken from the ſubject-matter of them. The next ten ſermons were placed together, becauſe of their affinity to one another, all of them relating to the ſame argument, and tending to reform the ſeveral vices of the tongue. The two laſt of them indeed, againſt pragmaticalneſs, and meddling in the affairs of others, do not ſo properly belong to this ſubject; but conſidering that this vice is chiefly managed by the tongue, and is almoſt ever attended with ſome irregularity and indiſcretion of ſpeech, they are not altogether ſo foreign and unſuitable to it. The eight following ſermons are likewiſe ſorted together, becauſe they explain and enforce the two great commandments of the law, the love of God, and of our neighbour. The two next were publiſhed by himſelf, and only theſe two. The firſt of them, concerning the duty and reward of bounty to the poor, was preached at the Spital, and publiſhed at the deſire of the Lord-Mayor and Court of Aldermen: 'This (ſays the editor) was received 'with univerſal approbation; and perhaps there is 'nothing extant in Divinity more perfect in its kind: 'it ſeems to have exhauſted the whole argument, and 'to have left no conſideration belonging to it un-'touched.' The other, on the Paſſion of our bleſſed Saviour, 'was the laſt he preached but one, and, I 'think, the occaſion of his death, by a cold he then 'got, which, in all probability, was the cauſe of the 'fever of which he died, to our unſpeakable loſs.' This he ſent to the preſs himſelf, but did not live to ſee it printed off. The Expoſition on the Creed, &c. Mr. Ward tells us (44), was a taſk enjoyned him by the College, being obliged by the ſtatutes to compoſe ſome Theological diſcourſes; and theſe, he ſays (45), ſo took up his thoughts, that he could not eaſily apply them to any other matter. The excellent and elaborate Treatiſe of the Pope's Supremacy was written after his promotion to the Headſhip of Trinity-college. 'He underſtood Popery (ſays the writer of his life) 'both at home and abroad: he had narrowly obſerved 'it, militant in England, triumphant in Italy, diſ-'guiſed in France; and had earlier apprehenſions than 'moſt others of the approaching danger, and would 'have appeared with the forwardeſt at a needful time '(46).' The learned author, upon his death-bed, gave Dr. Tillotſon a particular permiſſion to publiſh it, with this modeſt character of the performance, that he hoped it was indifferent perfect, though not altogether as he intended it, if God had granted him longer life. He deſigned indeed to have tranſcribed it again, and to have filled up thoſe many ſpaces, which were purpoſely left in it, for the farther confirmation and illuſtration of ſeveral things by more teſtimonies and inſtances, which probably he had in his thoughts. However, as it is, (to uſe the editor's words) it is not only a juſt, but an admirable diſcourſe upon this ſubject; which many others have handled before, but he hath exhauſted it; inſomuch that no argument of moment, nay, hardly any conſideration properly belonging to it, hath eſcaped his large and comprehenſive mind. He hath ſaid enough to ſilence the controverſy for ever, and to deter all wiſe men, of both ſides, from meddling any farther with it. 'And I dare ſay (adds Dr. Tillotſon, with ſome 'warmth) whoever ſhall carefully peruſe this Treatiſe, 'will find, that this point of the Pope's Supremacy '(upon which Bellarmine hath the confidence to ſay, 'the whole of Chriſtianity depends) is not only an in-'defenſible, but an impudent cauſe, as ever was un-'dertaken by learned pens. And nothing could have 'kept it ſo long from becoming ridiculous in the 'judgment of all mankind, but it being ſo ſtrongly 'ſupported by a worldly intereſt. For there is not one 'tolerable argument for it, and there are a thouſand 'invincible reaſons againſt it. There is neither from 'ſcripture, nor reaſon, nor antiquity, any evidence 'for it; the paſt, and the preſent ſtate of Chriſten-'dom, the hiſtory and records of all ages, are a per-'petual demonſtration againſt it; and there is no 'other ground in the whole world for it, but that 'now of a long time it hath been by the Pope's Ja-'nizaries boldly aſſerted, and ſtiffly contended for 'without reaſon. So that any one might with as 'much colour and evidence of truth maintain, that 'the Grand Seignor is of right, and for many ages 'hath been acknowledged, ſovereign of the whole 'world, as that the Biſhop of Rome is of Right, and 'in all ages from the beginning of Chriſtianity hath 'been owned to be the Univerſal Monarch and Head 'of the Chriſtian Church (47).' The ſecond volume of Dr. Barrow's Engliſh Works conſiſts of Sermons and Expoſitions upon all the Articles of the Apoſtles Creed. They are dedicated by his father to the King, and are in number thirty-four. The third and laſt volume, containing Forty-five Sermons upon ſeveral Occaſions, is dedicated by his father to the Princeſs Anne of Denmark, and has the following Imprimatur: C. Alſton, R. P. D. Hen. Epiſc. Lond. à Sacris, Feb. 11, 1685-6. IV. Iſaaci Barrow, S. S. T. Profeſſoris Opuſcula, viz. Determinationes, Conciones ad Clerum, Orationes, Poemata, &c. Volumen quartum; i. e. 'The 'fourth volume of Dr. Barrow's Works, conſiſting 'of Determinations in the Divinity-Schools, Sermons 'ad Clerum, Speeches, Latin Poems, &c.' London 1687, folio. This is called Volumen quartum, becauſe it was printed after the three Engliſh volumes in folio. It is dedicated by his father to Dr. Montague the Maſter, and the Senior Fellows of Trinity-college in Cambridge. The Diſſertatiuncula de Seſtertio, page 356, was reprinted the ſame year in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, No. CXC. p. 383. V. There are two letters written by Dr. Barrow to Mr. Willoughby, and printed in the Philoſophical Letters between Mr. Ray and his Correſpondents, p. 360. 362, upon the following ſubjects. The former, dated March (42) Bibliotheq. Univerſelle, tom. iii. p. 325.

(43) See the Publiſher to the Reader.

(44) Ubi ſupra, p. 161.

(45) Letter to Mr. John Collins, dated on Eaſter-Eve, 1669, MS. Mr. Jones, apud Ward, ib.

(46) Hill, ubi ſupra.

(47) Dr. Barrow's Works, Preface to the Treatiſe, &c.

of his ſermons [Y], which he generally tranſcribed three or four times, his greateſt difficulty being always to pleaſe himſelf (b). He left little behind him, except books, which were ſo well choſen, that they ſold for more than the prime coſt. Though he could never be prevailed with to ſit for his picture (c), ſome of his friends contrived to have it taken (d) without his knowledge, whilſt they diverted him with ſuch diſcourſe as engaged his attention (e). As to his perſon, he was low of ſtature, lean, and of a pale complexion, and negligent of his dreſs to a fault [Z]; of extraordinary ſtrength, a thin ſkin,

(b) Ward, ubi ſupra, p. 164.

(c) Hill, ib.

(d) This picture was painted by Mrs. Beale, and was in the poſſeſſion of the late James Weſt, Eſq;

(e) Ward, ib. p. 163.

March 26, 1662, contains the Method, whereby Monſ. Robervell was ſaid to have demonſtrated the Equality of a Spiral Line with a Parabola. And in this letter he ſignifies his intention of reading lectures upon Archimedes De Æquiponderantibus; but whether he afterwards put that deſign in execution is uncertain. In the latter, dated October 5, 1665, he approves Mr. Willoughby's Diſcourſe, inferring the Solidity of the Sphere from the Surface, by comparing the concentrical Surfaces of the Sphere with the parallel Arches of the Cone, and acquaints him with his own method of doing it.

Here follows a ſhort account of ſeveral curious papers of Dr. Barrow, written in his own hand, and communicated by William Jones, Eſq; to the author of the Lives of the Profeſſors of Greſham College (48). I. A Latin volume in quarto, wherein are contained: 1. Compendium pro Tangentibus. 2. Æquationum Conſtructio per Conicas Sectiones. 3. Æquationum Conſtructio Geometrica. 4. Additamenta de Curvis. Theſe tracts ſeem to have been written before his Geometrical Lectures. II. Theorema generale ad lineis curvis tangentes, et curvarum figurarum areas, per motum determinandas; i. e. 'A general Theorem for determining 'the tangents to curve lines, and the areas of curve 'figures, by motion.' folio, half a ſheet. III. Letters to Mr. John Collins upon various mathematical ſubjects; viz. 1. Concerning Parabolical Conoids: without a date. 2. Rectifying a miſtake of Mr. Collins, concerning the parallel Sections of the cubical parabolical Conoid: without a date. 3. Rules to compute the portions of a Sphere or Spheroid. September 5, 1664. 4. A Character of Mengolus's Elementa Geometriæ Specioſæ, with whom he is diſpleaſed for his affectation of new Definitions, and uncouth terms. November 12, 1664. 5. He thanks him for a Catalogue of Mathematical books which he ſent him. Gives a character of Alſted's Admiranda Mathematica, which he thinks a work of no great importance. November 29, 1664. 6. Concerning a parabolical Conoid cut parallel to the Axis. January 9, 1664. 7. About printing his Archimedes, Apollonius, and Theodoſius; as alſo a new edition of his Euclid. March 3, 1665. 8. Concerning the Area of the common Hyperbola, found by Logarithms. February 1, 1666. 9. Containing a variety of Rules relating to the Circle and Hyperbola, with Theorems concerning the curve ſurfaces of Conoids ana Spheroids. March 6, 1667. 10. A Continuation of much the ſame ſubject. March 26, 1668. 11. A farther Continuation of the ſame ſubject. May 14, 1668. 12. Concerning the Linea Secantium; with two papers, one of the figure of Secants and Tangents, applied to the Arch or Radius; the other concerning the Ciſſoidal Space. March 13, 1668. 13. Concerning the publication of his Lectiones Opticæ. Eaſter-Eve, 1669. 14. Sends him ſome few things to be inſerted in his Lectiones Geometricæ, which were then printing. March 29, 1670. 15. Concerning the publication of thoſe Lectures. April 23, 1670. 16. Sends him his Apollonius and Perſpective Lectures. October 11, 1670.

(48) Page 166, 167.

[Y] The extraordinary length of his ſermons.] Dr. Pope gives us (49) the following inſtances hereof. 'He was once requeſted by the Biſhop of Rocheſter, 'Dean of Weſtminſter, to preach at the Abbey, and 'withal deſired not to be long; for that auditory 'loved ſhort ſermons, and were uſed to them. He 'replied, My Lord, I will ſhew you my ſermon; and 'pulling it out of his pocket, put it into the Biſhop's 'hands. The text was the 10th chapter of the Proverbs, the latter end of the 18th verſe; the words 'theſe; He that uttereth a ſlander is a liar. The 'ſermon was accordingly divided into two parts; one 'treated of ſlander, the other of lyes. The Dean 'deſired him to content himſelf with preaching only 'the firſt part, to which he conſented, not without 'ſome reluctancy; and in ſpeaking that only, it took 'up an hour and a half. Another time, upon the ſame 'perſon's invitation, he preached at the Abbey on an 'holiday. Here I muſt inform the reader, that it is a 'cuſtom for the ſervants of the church, upon all holidays, Sundays excepted, betwixt the ſermon and 'evening prayers, to ſhew the tombs and effigies of 'the Kings and Queens in wax, to the meaner ſort of 'people, who then flock thither from all quarters of 'the town, and pay their two-pence to ſee the Play of the Dead Volks, as I have heard a Devonſhire 'clown not improperly call it. Theſe perceiving 'Dr. Barrow in the pulpit, after the hour was paſt, 'and fearing to loſe that time in hearing, which they 'thought they could more profitably employ in receiving; theſe, I ſay, became impatient, and cauſed 'the organ to be ſtruck up againſt him, and would not 'give over playing 'till they had blowed him down. 'But the ſermon of the greateſt length was that concerning charity, before the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen at the Spital; in ſpeaking which he ſpent three 'hours and an half. Being aſked, after he came 'down from the pulpit, whether he was not tired; 'yes indeed, ſaid he, I began to be weary with ſtanding ſo long.

(49) Ubi ſupra, p. 147.

[Z] He was negligent of his dreſs to a fault.] This could not but expoſe him to ſome inconveniences, and was apt to prejudice his hearers againſt him, where he was not known; of which Dr. Pope gives us (50) the following very remarkable inſtance. 'Dr. Wilkins, then Miniſter of St. Laurence-Jury, being 'forced by ſome indiſpoſition to keep his chamber, 'deſired Dr. Barrow to give him a ſermon the next 'Sunday, which he readily conſented to do. Accordingly, at the time appointed, he came, with an 'aſpect pale and meagre, and unpromiſing, ſlovenly 'and careleſsly dreſſed, his collar unbuttoned, his 'hair uncombed, &c. Thus accoutred, he mounts 'the pulpit, begins his prayer, which whether he did 'read or not, I cannot poſitively aſſert or deny. 'Immediately all the congregation was in an uproar, 'as if the church were falling, and they ſcampering to 'ſave their lives, each ſhifting for himſelf with great 'precipitation: there was ſuch a noiſe of pattens of 'ſerving-maids and ordinary women, and of unlocking of pews, and cracking of ſeats, cauſed by the 'younger ſort haſtily climbing over them, that, I 'confeſs, I thought all the congregation were mad: 'but the good Doctor, ſeeming not to take notice of 'this diſturbance, proceeds, names his text, and 'preached his ſermon, to two or three gathered, or 'rather left together, of which number, as it fortunately happened, Mr. Baxter, that eminent Non-'conformiſt, was one; who, afterwards gave Dr. 'Wilkins a viſit, and commended the ſermon to that 'degree, that he ſaid, he never heard a better diſcourſe. There was alſo amongſt thoſe who ſtayed 'out the ſermon, a certain young man, who thus 'accoſted Dr. Barrow as he came down from the pulpit, Sir, be not diſmayed, for I aſſure you, it was a good ſermon. By his age and dreſs, he ſeemed to 'be an apprentice, or at the beſt a foreman of a 'ſhop, but we never heard more of him. I aſked 'the Doctor, what he thought, when he ſaw the 'congregation running away from him? I thought, 'ſaid he, they did not like me, or my ſermon, and I have no reaſon to be angry with them for that. But what was your opinion, ſaid I, of the apprentice? 'I take him, replied he, to be a very civil perſon, and if I could meet with him, I'd preſent him with a bottle of wine. There were then in the pariſh a 'company of formal, grave, and wealthy citizens, 'who having been many years under famous Miniſters, as Dr. Wilkins, Biſhop Ward, Biſhop Reynolds,

(50) Ib. p. 139, &c.

ſkin, and very ſenſible of cold; his eyes grey, clear, and ſomewhat ſhort-ſighted; his hair a light brown, very fine, and curling (f). He was of a healthy conſtitution, very fond of tobacco, which he uſed to call his Panpharmacon or Univerſal Medicine, and imagined it helped to compoſe and regulate his thoughts (g). If he was guilty of any intemperance, it ſeemed to be in the love of fruit, being of opinion that if it kills hundreds in autumn, it preſerves thouſands (b). He ſlept little, generally riſing in the winter months before day (i). His conduct and behaviour were the moſt amiable imaginable: for he was always ready to aſſiſt others, open and communicative in his converſation, in which he generally ſpoke to the importance, as well as truth, of any queſtion propoſed; facetious in his talk upon fit occaſions, and ſkilful to accommodate his diſcourſe to different capacities; of indefatigable induſtry in various ſtudies, clear judgment on all arguments, and ſteady virtue under all difficulties; of a calm temper in factious times, and of large charity in mean eſtate; he was eaſy and contented with a ſcanty fortune, and with the ſame decency and moderation maintained his character under the temptations of proſperity (k). In ſhort, he was, perhaps, the greateſt ſcholar of his times; and, as an ingenious writer expreſſes it, 'he may be eſteemed as having ſhewn a compaſs 'of invention equal, if not ſuperior, to any of the moderns, Sir Iſaac Newton only 'excepted (l).' B.

(f) Hill, ib.

(g) Dr. Pope, ib. p. 145.

(b) Hill, ib.

(i) Dr. Pope, ib.

(k) Hill, ib.

(l) Preface to Dr. Pemberton's View of Sir I. Newton's Philoſophy.

'Mr. Vines, &c. had a great opinion of their ſkill in 'Divinity, and their ability to judge of the goodneſs 'and badneſs of ſermons. Many of theſe came in a 'body to Dr. Wilkins, to expoſtulate with him, why 'he ſuffered ſuch an ignorant, ſcandalous fellow, 'meaning Dr. Barrow, to have the uſe of his pulpit. 'I cannot preciſely tell, whether it was the ſame day, 'or ſome time after in that week, but I am certain it 'happened to be when Mr. Baxter was with Dr. Wil'kins. They came, as I ſaid before, in full cry, 'ſaying, they wondered he ſhould permit ſuch a man 'to preach before them, who looked like a ſtarved 'Cavalier, who had been long ſequeſtered, and out 'of his living for delinquency, and came up to Lon'don to beg, now the King was reſtored; and much 'more to this purpoſe. He let them run their ſelves 'out of breath: when they had done ſpeaking, and 'expected an humble, ſubmiſſive anſwer, he replied 'to them in this manner. The perſon you thus deſpiſe, 'I aſſure you, is a pious man, an eminent ſcholar, and 'an excellent preacher: for the truth of the laſt, I 'appeal to Mr. Baxter here preſent, who heard the 'ſermon you ſo vilify. I am ſure you believe Mr. Baxter 'is a competent judge, and will pronounce according to 'truth. Then turning to him, Pray, Sir, ſaid he, 'do me the favour to declare your opinion concerning 'the ſermon now in controverſy, which you heard at 'our church the laſt Sunday. Then did Mr. Baxter 'very candidly give the ſermon the praiſe it deſerved: 'nay more, he ſaid that Dr. Barrow preached ſo well, 'that he could willingly have been his auditor all day 'long. When they heard Mr. Baxter give him this 'high encomium, they were pricked in their hearts, 'and all of them became aſhamed, confounded, and 'ſpeechleſs; for though they had a good opinion of 'their ſelves, yet they durſt not pretend to be equal 'to Mr. Baxter: but at length, after ſome pauſe, 'they all, one after another, confeſſed, they did not 'hear one word of the ſermon, but were carried to 'miſlike it, by his unpromiſing garb, and mien, the read'ing of his prayer, and the going away of the congre'gation: for they would not by any means have it 'thought, if they had heard the ſermon, they ſhould 'not have concurred with the judgment of Mr. Bax'ter. After their ſhame was a little over, they ear'neſtly deſired Dr. Wilkins to procure Mr. Barrow 'to preach again, engaging themſelves to make him 'amends, by bringing to his ſermon their wives and 'children, their man-ſervants, and maid-ſervants, in 'a word, their whole families, and to enjoyn them not 'to leave the church till the bleſſing was pronounced. 'Dr. Wilkins promiſed to uſe his utmoſt endeavour 'for their ſatisfaction, and accordingly ſolicited Dr. 'Barrow to appear once more upon that ſtage, but 'all in vain; for he would not by any perſuaſions be 'prevailed upon to comply with the requeſt of ſuch 'conceited, hypocritical coxcombs.'

[Too much cannot well be ſaid in praiſe of Dr. Barrow, who was one of the greateſt Divines and Mathematicians which this country, fruitful in eminent men of that kind, hath produced. We remember that in the earlier editions of Thomſon's Seaſons, where that Poet, in a fine apoſtrophe to Britain, celebrates the illuſtrious characters ſhe has given birth to, there uſed to be the two following lines:

And for the ſtrength and elegance of Truth,
A Barrow and a Tillotſon are thine.

For what reaſon theſe lines were afterwards omitted by Mr. Thomſon, we are not informed.

Mr. Granger ſays, that Dr. Barrow, 'in his ex'cellent Sermons on the Creed, ſolved every diffi'culty, and removed every obſtacle that oppoſed itſelf 'to our Faith, and made Divine Revelation as clear 'as the demonſtrations in his own "Euclid'" (51). This however, is not a ſtrictly accurate mode of expreſſion. For though the evidence in favour of the Chriſtian religion may be, and, we are perſuaded, is entirely ſatisfactory and deciſive to every impartial man who fully conſiders the ſubject, yet it cannot be conſidered as properly demonſtrative, at leaſt in the ſame ſenſe in which that word may be applied to Euclid's propoſitions. If that were the caſe, the proof, where a man was capable of underſtanding the terms made uſe of, and of purſuing the chain of reaſoning, would be abſolutely irreſiſtible. Moral writers have ſometimes called that demonſtration, which only includes ſuch a high degree of probability as can admit of no rational doubt.

(51) Biographical Hiſt of Eng. Vol. i. p. 281. 8vo edition.

The following circumſtances, concerning Dr. Barrow's death, are related by Mr. Roger North, in his Life of Dr. John North. 'The good Dr. Barrow 'ended his days in London, in a Prebend's houſe 'that had a little ſtair to it out of the Cloiſters, 'which made him call it a Man's Neſt, and I pre'ſume it is ſo called at this day. The Maſter's 'diſeaſe was an high fever. It had been his cuſtom, 'contracted when (upon the fund of a travelling 'Fellowſhip) he was at Conſtantinople, in all his 'maladies, to cure himſelf with opium. And, being 'very ill (probably) augmented his doſe, and ſo in'flamed his fever, and at the ſame time obſtructed 'the criſis: for he was as a man knocked down, and 'had the eyes as of one diſtracted. Our Doctor '(Dr. North) ſeeing him ſo, was ſtruck with hor'ror; for he, that knew him ſo well in his beſt 'health, could beſt diſtinguiſh; and when he left 'him, he concluded he ſhould ſee him no more; and 'ſo it proved (52).] K.

(52) Lives of Sir Dudley North, and Dr. North, p. 253, 254.

BARRY (GIRALD), better known by the name of GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS, i. e. Girald of Wales, and by ſome called Silveſter Giraldus Cambrenſis, (which addition of Silveſter is certainly (a) erroneous) is one of thoſe writers, whoſe ſtyle is ſo puerile and affected, ſo diffuſe and full of quibbles, and gingling conceits, (eſpe-cially in his treatiſes relating to Ireland, which were written in his younger years) that it can by no means pleaſe men of ſober taſte. He was born (b) near Pembroke in South Wales, in the caſtle of Mainarpir, about the year 1146, and was deſcended of a noble family, with which circumſtance he takes care that the world ſhould not be unacquainted [A], ſince he often repeats it in his Works. While he was a boy, the omens of his future learning and reputation were ſo extraordinary, that he could not paſs them over in ſilence, and yet in themſelves ſo trifling, that it is irkſome to repeat them [B]. He was not very lucky in his early education: for keeping company with his brothers, he followed them in their play, grew a truant, and neglected his books, and had like to have diſappointed thoſe omens, which were conceived of him. But his uncle, the Biſhop of St. Davids, took him to taſk, and his maſters wrought a reformation in him, which was effected more out of a principle of ſhame than fear: from which time he altered his courſe, and applied himſelf to his books with ſuch diligence, that he ſoon got the ſtart of all his ſchool-fellows. He was three times ſent to France for the ſake of improvement, and at firſt continuing there three years, he obtained a great reputation in Rhetorick [C], which upon his return in 1172, ſoon brought him into notice, and he was promoted to ſeveral Eccleſiaſtical Livings in Wales and England, in the laſt of which places he was Canon of Hereford (c). His buſy temper, eſpecially in what related to Church affairs, ſoon made him notorious, and, as he deſigned it, proved no ſmall motive to his advancement, in an age, when the temporal intereſt and ſplendor of the Church were more conſidered, than the piety and virtue of its members. He gives two inſtances (d) of his vigilance in this particular, one of which, it muſt be confeſſed, does not redound much to his honour [D]. Being inveſted with the Archdeaconry of Brechin, in the manner mentioned in the remarks, he behaved himſelf with great activity in his Archidiaconal viſitations, and reformed many abuſes. In 1176, he was elected, by (e) the Chapter of St. Davids, Biſhop of that See, being not then more than thirty years of age: but he declined the election, fearing to be foiled; as alſo, becauſe the King had not been previouſly conſulted, nor iſſued his licence to go to election, as the law required. King Henry II. was (b) Whart. Pref. to Vol. ii. of the Anglia Sacra, p. xx. & Camb. de Reb. a ſe Geſt. lib. i. cap. i.

(a) Waræus de Script. Hib. p. 112. Whart. Angl. Sacra Pref. to Vol. ii. p. xx.

(c) Whart. Angl. Sacr. Pref. to Vol. ii. p. xxiii.

(d) De Geſt. Girald, cap. iii. iv.

(e) Ib. cap. vi.

[A] Deſcended of a noble family, with which circumſtance he takes care, that the world ſhould not be unacquainted.] 'Patre (inquit) natus Willielmo de 'Barri, viro egregio, matre Angareth filiâ Neſtæ, no-'bilis filiæ Rhæſi, Principis Sudwalliæ, ſcilicet, filii 'Theodori (1). — My father (ſays he) was William 'de Barry, a man of extraordinary fame, my mother, 'Angareth, the daughter of Neſta, who was the 'noble daughter of Rhees, Prince of South-Wales, the 'ſon of Tudor.' This, in fact, was his genealogy; but it would have come with more decency out of the mouth of a Herald than his own.

(1) De Reb. a ſe Geſt. lib. i. c. i.

[B] Omens irkſome to repeat.] 'Ex fratribus qua-'tuor germanis et uterinis minor, tribus aliis nunc 'caſtra, nunc oppida, nunc palatia puerilibus, ut ſolet 'hæc ætas, præludiis in ſabulo vel pulvere protrahen-'tibus ac conſtruendis modulo ſuo, ſolus hic (i. e. Gi-'raldus) ſimili præludio ſemper eccleſias et monaſteria 'erigere ſatagebat, Pater hæc conſiderans, ductus 'prognoſtico quodam ipſum literis et liberalibus diſ-'ciplinis applicandum præſaga mente decrevit, eum-'que ſuum epiſcopum vocare conſuevit. — Being the 'youngeſt of four brothers by the ſame mother, while the 'other three employed themſelves, as children will do, 'in raiſing caſtles, towns and palaces in dirt, Girald 'alone, though he buſied himſelf in the like work, yet his 'employment was to erect churches and monaſteries. 'His father taking this matter into his conſideration, 'and prognoſticating what his child would come to, 'ominouſly determined to educate him to learning, and 'the liberal arts, and uſed frequently to call him 'his little Biſhop.' ——— And then he proceeds to tell us, that in ſome hoſtile invaſion, when all people were running to their arms, he deſired to be carried to the church, declaring, by a wonderful forethought in a child, that the immunity of the houſe dedicated to God ought to be ſecured; from whence people made a judgment, that in time to come he would prove a champion and protector of the liberties and immunities of the Church. ——— It is certainly the moſt difficult taſk in the world, for a man to write the hiſtory of his own actions; nor ſhould any body attempt it but a man of mortified paſſions, which was by no means Girald's caſe. Self-love, on the one hand, will not ſuffer him to vend any thing to the diſadvantage of himſelf: on the other hand, if he ſpeaks in his own praiſe, every mortal will cry out on his vanity. This laſt particular has been the fate of the author now under conſideration: every page of his book, entitled de Rebus a ſe geſtis, is ſtuffed with this kind of vanity; and ſo full is he of himſelf, his learning, his importance, and his conduct in great affairs, that it is impoſſible to turn him over without being ſurfeited: and the ſame ſelf-ſufficiency runs through all his other writings, ſo that he often ſtops ſhort, and rambles from his ſubject, in order to dwell upon his dear ſelf: and thus much enough to obſerve in this place once for all.

[C] Obtained a great reputation in Rhetorick.] Probably it was during this firſt journey that he was made Rector of the public ſchools in Paris, which (as he (2) ſays) he governed for ſome time.

(2) Epiſt. Girald. ad Capit. Hereford.

[D] Two inſtances of his vigilance, one of which does not redound to his honour.] He tells us (3), that obſerving through the dioceſe of St. Davids that by the negligence of the Prelates, neither tithes of wool nor cheeſes were payed, he informed Robert, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, then the Pope's Legate, of this loſs to the Church, and by that means, in 1175, obtained a Vice-Legantine authority from the Archbiſhop through all Wales, to viſit and ſee theſe and other exceſſes amended; and by a ſtrict diſcipline he effected a thorough reformation. This would have been tolerable, and might have been imputed to zeal for the ſervice of the Church; but the other inſtance carries in it the appearance of covetouſneſs, and a ſordid baſeneſs: The ſtory is beſt heard from his own mouth (4). Being informed that an aged Archdeacon of Brechin, in the dioceſe of St. Davids kept a concubine (a crime not very uncommon among the the Eccleſiaſtics of England in that age, as will appear in the ſequel of Girald's life), he ſuſpended him and ſeized his Archdeaconry, which he put into the hands of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Archbiſhop made Girald a complement of the fruits of his information, and advanced him to the Archdeaconry in the room of the degraded old man. Virtue or honour would have perſuaded him to have refuſed the promotion; and by that means he would have convinced the world, that conſcience, and the good of the Church, were the motives to this action, and not covetouſneſs, or the deſire of ſtepping over the head of his brother. His refuſal would have been the reſult of an honourable principle, as his acceptance implied, that he was actuated by ſomething oppoſite: and as this was the caſe of an aged man (who do not often keep concubines, as younger Clerks might have done) it gives a ſtrong preſumption, that he had caſt his eye upon the warm Archdeaconry, and made his appetite to that, the motive of his information.

(3) De Geſt. Girald. cap. iii. iv.

(4) Ib. cap. iv.

a Prince

a Prince exceeding jealous of his prerogative; and though the Archdeacon's ſeeming modeſty might have excuſed this over-haſty ſtep in the Chapter, yet the King did not like to ſee even the appearance of his growing intereſt, which would be a means of fortifying the power and grandeur of his relations in Wales, in his Majeſty's opinion too conſiderable already; and ſo he expreſſed himſelf, in a conſultation held with the Archbiſhop of Canterbury upon the occaſion [E], which was followed by the election and conſecration of another Biſhop. Notwithſtanding this ſhew of modeſty in declining the election, yet he could not well digeſt the diſappointment, and the more ſo, as it afforded him a proof of the King's inclinations, and a demonſtration that thoſe qualities, which would have advanced another man, ſerved only to depreſs him. Being informed of what paſſed at the conſultation, he at once determined to quit his country for a time; and accordingly the ſame year he paſſed a ſecond time (f) into France, in order to purſue his ſtudies at Paris, that is, to add to his knowledge in the Arts and Sciences, the ſtudy of the Civil and Canon Laws, with the more important one of Divinity. With his uſual vanity he boaſts (g), what a prodigious fame he acquired here, eſpecially in the knowledge of the Decretals [F]. In 1179, he was elected Profeſſor of the Canon Law in the univerſity of Paris; but rejected the honour, out of an expectation of more ſolid advantages in his own country. In 1180, he returned (b) home through Flanders and England, and in his way ſtopped at Canterbury, where he emphatically deſcribes (i) (what may be well allowed him) the great luxury of the Monks of that Place. At length he got home, where he found the whole country in a flame, the Canons and Archdeacons of Menevia having joined with the inhabitants, in driving out the Biſhop of that See [G], the adminiſtration of which was committed (k) to our author, by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Under this authority he governed the See of St. Davids for three or four years, and made wonderful reformations in it. The abdicated Biſhop, whoſe name was Peter, did not acquieſce in the conduct of his Clergy; but by letters he ſuſpended and excommunicated the Canons and Archdeacons, uncited and unheard: and at length, Girald, not having power to redreſs them, reſigned his charge to the Archbiſhop, who abſolved the excommunicated. Biſhop Peter imputed his diſgrace, or at leaſt the continuance of it, to Girald; upon which great conteſts and bickerings aroſe; appeals upon the occaſion were made to Rome: but at length they were reconciled, and the Biſhop reſtored. About the year 1184, King Henry II. ſent (l) for Girald to Court, and made him his Chaplain, and at times he attended the King for ſeveral years, and was very uſeful to him in keeping all matters quiet in Wales. Yet though the King approved of his ſervices, and in private often commended his prudence and fidelity, yet he never could be prevailed on to promote him to any eccleſiaſtical benefices, on account of the relation he bore to Prince Rhees, and other grandees of Wales. In 1185, the King ſent (m) him to Ireland with his ſon John, in quality of Secretary and Privy-Counſellor to the young Prince: but the expedition did not meet with ſucceſs, becauſe Earl John made uſe only of youthful counſels, and ſhewed no favour to the old adventurers, who were men experienced in the affairs of Ireland. While Girald thus employed himſelf in Ireland, the two Biſhopricks of Ferns and Leighlin fell vacant, which Earl John offered to unite and confer on him (n); but he rejected the promotion, and gave the Earl an anſwer worthy of a great and good man [H]. He took this opportunity of collecting materials for writing two books, which he compiled and publiſhed a few years after [I]. In the ſpring of the year 1186, John (f) Ib. lib. ii. c. i.

(g) Ib. cap. iv.

(b) Ibid. ibid.

(i) Ib. cap. v.

(k) Ib. cap. vi.

(l) Ib. cap. viii.

(m) Ib. cap. x. Waræus de Script. Hib. p. 112.

(n) Ib. cap. xiii. Harris's Biſhops, p. 439. Waræus de Script. Hib. p. 112.

[E] And ſo the King expreſſed himſelf, in a conſultation held with the Archbiſhop of Canterbury upon the occaſion.] When the King had information given him of the election of Girald, he was much moved, and ſent (5) for the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and his ſuffragans, to conſult what ſhould be done in the election of a Biſhop of St. Davids. They were of opinion, that Girald ought to be conſecrated, both on account of his birth and learning, and as he was a man of courage, parts, and activity. But the King told them, that for the reaſons they had given, he by no means thought Girald a fit perſon to fill that ſtation; becauſe his advancement would ſtrengthen the power and intereſt of Rhees, Prince of South-Wales, to whom the Archdeacon was a near relation, as he was to moſt of the grandees of that country.

(5) Ib. cap. x.

[F] Acquired great fame in the knowledge of the Decretals.] The Decretals are that part of the Canon Law that conſiſts of the Papal Conſtitutions, called Litteræ Decretales, or Reſcripts of Popes, by which ſome difficulties in the Eccleſiaſtical laws are cleared up.

[G] In driving out the Biſhop of Menevia.] Menevia is an ancient Epiſcopal See, ſeated on the weſt ſide of Pembrokeſhire in Wales, ſubject to the juriſdiction of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and known better by the name of St. Davids, from the founder of a church here, St. David, the patron of Wales. The land about Menevia, is called (*) Kantrev Dewi; i. e. David's Cantred, but Ptolemy's name for it is Octapitarum Promontorium, or the promontory of the Octapitæ. A late Antiquary (6) thinks this word of Ptolemy to be corrupted, and that it ought to be Octo Petrarum Promontorium, or the promontory of the eight rocks, ὀκτὼ πετρῶν, which eight rocks are thoſe called the Biſhop and his Clerks. The notion carries with it a good deal of weight.

(*) Camd. Brit. Vol. i. p. 756.

(6) Baxter in Gloſſario, p. 186.

[H] An anſwer worthy of a great and good man.] He told the Prince, that if he ſaw him inclined to be beneficial to the Church of Ireland, he would chearfully accept the honour he offered him; but becauſe he found by his actions that he had no regard to that particular, he choſe rather to continue in a private ſtation, than, being unprofitably placed in power, to be able to do no ſervice.

[I] Materials for two books, which he compiled and publiſhed a few years after.] They bear this title, namely, Topographia Hiberniæ; 'A Topography of 'Ireland:' and Hiſtoria Vaticinalis de expugnatione Hiberniæ; 'The Vaticinal Hiſtory of the Conqueſt of 'Ireland.' The reaſon he gave ſuch a whimſical title to the laſt of theſe treatiſes, appears in the firſt preface to his Deſcription of Wales, where he ſays, 'that he 'had given the name Vaticinal, to the ſaid hiſtory, 'becauſe he had ſprinkled up and down in it, the 'prophecies of Caledonius and Ambroſius Merlin, in 'ſuch convenient places as the ſubject required.' He might

John Comyn (o), Archbiſhop of Dublin, convened a Synod of his Clergy, in Chriſt-church in that city. The firſt day of the meeting, the Archbiſhop himſelf preached on the (o) Ib. cap. xiii. Harris's Biſhops, p. 315. 439.

might have added alſo, the prophecies of Moling, Braccan, Patrick, and Columbkille, which he has alſo inſerted in the ſaid work. The Topography contains three books or diſtinctions, and not four, as Bale ſays (7), and the Vaticinal Hiſtory contains only two books and not three; and thus they came originally out of Girald's hands. For he himſelf ſays (8), 'Se Hibernicam Topographiam, cum abditis ſuis, et naturæ ſecretis, in tribus diſtinctionibus trennii labore digeſſiſſe, & Vaticinalem expugnationis Hibernicæ ſubſequenter Hiſtoriam, duabus diſtinctionibus biennali lucubratione compleviſſe.—That he had employed three years labour in digeſting the Topography of Ireland, with the hidden things thereof, and the ſecrets of nature in three diſtinctions; and that by the ſtudy of two years, he had afterwards compleated the Vaticinal Hiſtory of the Conqueſt of Ireland in two diſtinctions.' He wrote indeed a preface (9) to a third book of the Vaticinal Hiſtory; but it ſeems he never finiſhed it: Bale (10) alſo makes him the author of a Vaticinal Hiſtory diſtinguiſhed from that on the conqueſt of Ireland; but the error of that writer manifeſtly appears in the reaſons given before by Girald (11), why he called his book Vaticinal; as alſo from the catalogue he has himſelf furniſhed (12) of his writings, wherein he mentions not a word of any other Vaticinal Hiſtory than that of the Conqueſt of Ireland. The ſame reaſon extends to ſet aſide other inventions of Bale in aſcribing (13) to Girald, one book of the Caledonian Merlin, and one book of Merlin Ambroſius, as alſo, Illuſtrationes Merlinorum;—'Illuſtrations on the Merlins in two books,' beginning Quoniam in Prioribus Libris Merlini. For theſe words are taken from the beginning of the preface of the third book of the Vaticinal Hiſtory of the Conqueſt of Ireland, which he intended to have written. Bale makes him the author of another book called Diſtinctiones Giraldi, beginning, —Nunc ad ea quæ contra naturæ curſum; but this is manifeſtly the ſame with the ſecond book of the Topography of Ireland. Girald began his Topography and Vaticinal Hiſtory while he was in Ireland; but finiſhed them after his return to Wales. They lay in manuſcript from about the year 1190 to the year 1602, when they were firſt publiſhed by Mr. Camden at Frankfort, as appears from what Peter Lombard ſays (14), who being educated under Mr. Camden at Weſtminſter-ſchool muſt probably have known the matter; and he having written his Commentary on Ireland, a ſhort time before the Frankfort edition of Girald came out, though not publiſhed till after, taking occaſion to mention this author's Topography, ſays Topographia iſta non eſt excuſſa typis—'That Topography of Girald's is not yet printed.' When it firſt came out in manuſcript, Girald heavily complains (15) of the Carpers and Critics who had then taken it to taſk: but when it appeared in print, the many invectives contained in it againſt Ireland, and the natives of it, the fables with which it abounded, and the groſs errors through the whole, alarmed many of the Iriſh, and ſet their pens a going. Stephen White, a Jeſuit of that country, firſt took up arms upon the occaſion; and in an Hiſtorical Treatiſe confuted thoſe baſe and ſcandalous aſperſions related by that writer. A part of this work was in the cuſtody of John Lynch (16), though ſo imperfect that it could not be fitted for the preſs, a loſs to be lamented, ſince ſo good a judge as Archbiſhop Uſher (17), calls the author: 'Virum Antiquitatum, non Hiberniæ ſolum ſuæ, ſed aliarum etiam gentium, ſcientiſſimum;—'A man of exquiſite knowledge not only in the antiquities of his own country, Ireland, but alſo of other nations (*).' Philip O-Sullevan next took Cambrenſis to taſk, a writer much inferior to White, who in a treatiſe entitled Zoilomaſtix, or a Whip for Zoilus, expoſed that writer, as well as Stanihurſt: but it does not appear that this Treatiſe of O-Sullevan's was ever printed. For in an encomiaſtick copy of verſes prefixed to another work (18) of O-Sullevan's by George Mendoza, a Portugueſe, there are the following lines; where the Poet having firſt complimented his publiſhed works, proceeds thus:

(7) De Script. Centr. III. cap. vi.

(8) Prima Præfat. in Deſcript. Cambr.

(9) Uſſerii Sylloge Epiſt. Hib.

(10) De Script. Centr. III. cap. vi.

(11) Prima Præfat. in Deſcript. Cambr.

(12) Wharton's Angl. Sacra, Part ii. p. 445.

(13) Waræus de Script. p. 116.

(14) Commentatio de Hib. p. 9.

(15) Præfat. Prima ad Expugn.

(16) Cambrenſis everſus, cap. i. p. 1. cap. xiv. p. 127.

(17) Primord. 4to, p. 400.

(*) See Steph. White.

(18) Patriciana decas.

Divulgata typis hæc; ſed ſunt condita plura,
Quæ tamen in tenebris aurea ſcripta latent.
Invidiæ partus, mendacia magna Gyraldi.
Rejicit, et Stolidus quæ Stanihurſtus habet.
Notitiâ variâ pulchrum, ſermone politum,
Zoilomaſtix et dicitur illud opus.

The next who undertook Girald was John Lynch (‖), under the feigned name of Gratianus Lucius; who doubtleſs had good aid from White's Fragment, which, he confeſſes, was in his hands: and it may be not imbrobable, but that he had White's whole treatiſe, and deſtroyed it to inhance the value of his own performance. Such things have been done in ancient and modern times, and will be done again till pride be rooted out of the human conſtitution. Lynch's book, entitled, Cambrenſis Everſus, was printed in folio in 1662, and in that he has purſued Girald ſtep by ſtep, and chapter by chapter; wherein he ſhews not only his ignorance and malice; but has demonſtrated, that he had not one quality fit for an Hiſtorian. Nor has Giraldus eſcaped the cenſure of Sir James Ware (19), who expreſſes himſelf with an aſperity uncommon to him: 'Admonendus eſt (inquit) interim lector, Topographiam eam cautè legendam, id quod ipſe Giraldus quodamodo fatetur in apologia, quam habemus in primâ ſuâ prefatione in librum Expugnationis Hibernicæ, cum ob fabuloſa, jam dictæ Topographiæ inſerta, inſimularetur; cui hanc etiam admonitionem è retractationum ſuarum tractatu hic adjicere viſum.—— De Topographiâ Hibernicâ, labore ſcilicet, noſtro primævo ferè nec ignobili, ubi multa nova, aliiſque regionibus prorſus incognita (ideoque magis miranda) ſcribuntur, hoc pro certo ſciendum, quod quorundam, quinimo et quamplurium per diligentem et certam indagationem, a magnis terræ illius, et authenticis viris notitiam elicuimus, de cæteriſque, totius terræ famam potius ſecuti fuimus. De quibus omnibus cum Auguſtino ſentimus, qui in libro de Civitate Dei, de talibus, quæ ſolum fama celebrat, nec certa veritate fulciuntur, loquens, nec ea affirmanda plurimum, nec prorſus abneganda decrevit.—— Sic ipſe Giraldus. —— Atqui non poſſum non mirari viros aliquos hujus ſæculi, alioquin graves et doctos, figmenta ea Giraldi mundo iterum pro veris obtruſiſſe.——Yet (ſays the learned Knight) I muſt admoniſh the reader to turn over that Topography of Cambrenſis with great caution; which Cambrenſis himſelf in ſome ſort acknowledges in an Apology made by him in his firſt Preface to the Hiſtory of the Conqueſt of Ireland, after he had been taxed with the fabulous reports inſerted in his ſaid Topography, to which it is proper alſo to add this admonition taken out of a treatiſe of his called, his Retractations.—— Concerning the Topography of Ireland (ſays he) our firſt and not altogether contemptible labour, in which many things new, and unknown to other countries, and therefore the more wonderful, are written, the reader may with certainty be convinced, that we have obtained the knowledge of ſome, nay, of moſt of the things therein related by a diligent and painful inquiry from the authentick teſtimonies of men of weight and reputation in that country, and in other particulars we have contented ourſelves to follow the reports and fame of the whole kingdom. Concerning all which we are of opinion with St. Auguſtin, who, in his book de Civitate Dei, ſpeaking of things which fame only has ſpread abroad, and which are not ſupported by indiſputable evidence, ſays, that as ſuch things are not poſitively to be affirmed, ſo neither are they to be wholly rejected. —— Thus much Cambrenſis himſelf owns: —— But I cannot forbear expreſſing my aſtoniſhment, that ſome men of this age, who in other reſpects, are men of gravity and learning, ſhould again obtrude theſe fictions of Cambrenſis upon the world for truths.'——Yet Cambrenſis himſelf had the confidence (20) to obtrude them on a body of grave and learned men. For in a catalogue that he furniſhes of his own works, this is what he ſays of his Topography: —— 'Item de Topographia

(‖) See the article LYNCH (JOHN).

(19) Antiq. cap. xxiii.

(20) Nicolſon's Iriſh Hiſt. Library, p. 3.

the Sacraments of the Church. The ſecond day, Albin O-Mulloy, Abbot of Baltinglas, afterwards Biſhop of Ferns, made a prolix diſcourſe on the continence of the Clergy, wherein he inveighed bitterly againſt the Clergy that came from England and Wales to Ireland, and by their evil examples, had vitiated the probity and innocence of the Iriſh Clergy, and ſhewed how great their chaſtity was, before they had contracted contagion from the evil examples of corrupted foreigners. After the ſermon was ended, the Engliſh Clergy of Wexford were accuſed and convicted by the teſtimony of witneſſes, for cohabiting publicly with harlots, and received ſentence of ſuſpenſion, which gave no ſmall mirth and triumph to the Iriſh Clergy. The third day Girald mounted the pulpit, by order of the Archbiſhop, and preached on the paſtoral duty. He did not conceal what he had truly to ſay in praiſe of the Iriſh Clergy: but afterwards he took occaſion to enlarge on their vices, and taxed them with that of drunkenneſs; and turning his diſcourſe to the Prelates, he proved their neglect of the paſtoral charge, by irrefragable reaſons. He ſeems to have valued himſelf much upon this ſermon, ſince he has given it to the world at large, both in his Topography (p), and in his Life (q). The ſame evening, Felix, Biſhop of Oſſory, happening to ſup with the Archbiſhop, was aſked, How he approved Girald's ſermon? Felix, who was ſuſpected to be an eunuch Monk [K], anſwered, That it was true, Girald ſaid many ſcandalous things well, and with a good grace; but he called us, added he, drunkards. Indeed, I could ſcarce contain myſelf from flying in his face, or at leaſt from returning him in words a like treatment. It ſeems to have been at this ſame Synod, that Maurice, Archbiſhop of Caſhel, made that ſtinging and poignant repartee, that Girald (r) takes notice of [L]. Having obtained a great fame in Ireland, as he has the modeſty to tell us himſelf (s), between Eaſter and Whitſuntide 1187, he returned to Wales, and employed all his time in writing and and reviſing his Topography, to which, when he had put the laſt hand, he took a journey to Oxford, and repeated it in a public audience of the univerſity; and as it conſiſted of three diſtinctions, he repeated one every day of three ſucceſſively: and in order to captivate the people, and ſecure their applauſe, the firſt day he entertained all the poor of the town, the next day the Doctors and ſcholars of fame and reputation, and the third day the ſcholars of the lower rank, the ſoldiers, townſmen, and burgeſſes. In the year 1188 (t), he accompanied Baldwin, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in a journey through the rough and mountainous parts of Wales, in order to preach up to the people the neceſſity of taking the croſs, and engaging in an expedition in defence of the Holy Land. Here our author runs riot in his own praiſe, and ſhews the vaſt ſucceſs his eloquence met with, in perſuading the greateſt part of the country to engage in this fooliſh adventure; whereas the Archbiſhop was able to do nothing. Girald himſelf took the croſs at this time, and it afforded him the opportunity of writing a book, mentioned below in the remarks [M]. The ſame year he poſted over into France, in the retinue of King Henry II., which he did by the advice of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Ranulph de Glanville, Chief-Juſtice of England:

(p) Diſtinct. laſt.

(q) Lib. ii. cap. xiv.

(r) Topogr. Hiſt. diſt. iii. cap. xxxii. Waræi Comment. de Præſul. p. 163.

(s) De rebus a se Geſtis, lib. ii. cap. xvi.

(t) Ib. cap. xvii, xviii.

' graphiâ Hibernicâ, liber, ſcilicet, de ſitu terræ illius, ' et mirabilibus ejuſdem multis exaratus, apud Oxo- ' niam per tres dies continuos in publicâ cleri audientiâ ' recitatus: —— This book (ſays he) of the ſitu- ' ation of Ireland, and the wonderful things in it, ' written at large, was read over at Oxford for ' three whole days in a public audience of the Clergy.' In an epiſtle (21) to William Vere, Biſhop of Hereford, he is in raptures upon that part of the third diſtinction of his Topography, wherein he treats of the Iriſh harp and other muſical inſtruments, and with vanity enough imagines, that he has handled the ſubject with an elegance ſuitable to the dignity of it. The author (22) of Cambrenſis Everſus hints, that Girald had malicioufly deſtroyed a great many old annals of Ireland, that his own performance might carry the greater weight: but the conſequence drawn by Stillingfleet (23) from this action is not juſt; namely, that he had therefore better authorities to build his hiſtory on than Keating: but unfortunately, whatever number of Iriſh annals might have been in his hands, he could make no uſe of them, as he had not the leaſt knowledge in the language.

(21) Uſſer. Epiſt. Hib. Sylloge, p. 115.

(22) Lynch, p. 40, 41.

(23) Orig. p. 268.

(24) Ib. cap. xv.

[K] Suſpected to be an eunuch Monk.] Girald's (24) words are, ' Monachus mutilatus, ut videbatur, et ' eunuchatus: —— A mutilated Monk, as it ſeemed, ' and one gelt.'

[L] A poignant repartee that Girald takes notice of.] Cambrenſis objected to Archbiſhop Maurice, ' that there never were any martyrs in Ireland, who ' ſuffered for the faith: It is true, ſaid the Archbiſhop; ' for though our country be looked on as barbarous, ' uncultivated, and cruel, yet they always have payed ' reverence and honour to the Eccleſiaſtics, and never ' would ſtretch out their hands againſt the Saints of ' God. But now, added he, there is come a people ' among us, who know how, and are accuſtomed, to ' make martyrs.' Alluding to the affair of Thomas Becket.

[M] Gave him the opportunity of writing a book mentioned below in the remarks.] This book paſſes under different titles: Bale (*) calls it in two words, Itinerarium Cambriæ. Mr. Wharton (25) enlarges the title from ſome of the manuſcripts of Girald, and ſhews us not only what the book was, but the time and intention of writing it; namely, Itinerarium Giraldi, et laborioſa Baldwini Cantuarienſis Archiepiſcopi legatio, devotaque per Walliam in crucis obſequium prædicatio; i. e. The Itinerary of Girald, and the laborious embaſſage of Baldwin, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and his devout preaching up the duty of taking the croſs through Wales. Girald (26) himſelf calls it, Itinerarium laborioſum per hiſpida et inæqualia Walliæ loca; i. e. A laborious Itinerary through the rough and mountainy places of Wales. Bale (27) has ſplit this treatiſe into two, one of which he calls, Itinerarium Cambriæ, and the other, Itinerarium Baldwini, both which are manifeſtly one and the ſame work; nor does it contain three or four books, as he ſays, but two. It has been printed (28), with the annotations of David Powell, under the title of Itinerarium Cambriæ, ſeu laborioſæ Baldwini Cantuarienſis Archiepiſcopi per Walliam legationis accurata deſcriptio. Probably, it was at the ſame time he compiled, Kambriæ totius Mappam (29); i. e. A Map of all Wales, wh ch Bale (30) calls, Cambricæ Mappæ expoſitionem, lib. 1. whereas it is a coloured Geographical Map yet extant, as Mr. Wharton ſays, and beſides, rivers, mountains, and the ſea-coaſts, and the neighbouring places of England, it lays down 43 towns of Wales.

(*) Cent. III. No. 59.

(25) Anglia Sacra, Vol. ii. p. 445.

(26) Epiſtola ad Capitulum Hereforden ſe, in Wharton, Angl. Sacra, Vol. ii. p. 439.

(27) Cent. III. No. 59.

(28) Waræus de Script. p. 117.

(29) Epiſt. ad Capit. Hereſ. ut ſupra.

(30) Cent. III. No. 59.

but the King dying the year after, he was diſpatched back by King Richard I., to aſſiſt upon this alteration in keeping the peace in Wales, which was then in great confuſion. He effected this commiſſion with great addreſs, and the King the ſame year, going to the aſſiſtance of the Holy Land, left the chief government of the kingdom in the hands of William Longchamp, Biſhop of Ely, Lord-Chancellor, and joined Girald in commiſſion with him [N]: but he was under the neceſſity of obtaining a diſpenſation from the Pope's Legate, for not purſuing the voyage to the Holy Land, having been ſigned with the croſs for that purpoſe, in the year 1188. In the year 1190, the Biſhop of Ely, and the Pope's Legate, offered to advance him to the See of Bangor, then void by the death of the Biſhop of it, which he declined. About the ſame time he adviſed Earl John, the King's brother, to go over to Ireland, and make a final conqueſt of it; but without ſucceſs, the Earl aſpiring to uſurp the kingdom of England in his brother's abſence. In 1191, Earl John having obtained the chief rule in England, by expelling the Biſhop of Ely, offered to advance Girald to the Biſhoprick of Landaff; but this promotion he alſo refuſed, waiting for the opportunity of ſtepping into the See of St. Davids, which he had his heart ſet upon from his youth. In the year 1192 (u), Girald retired from Court, where he ſaw promotions did not go according to merit, and removed to Lincoln for the ſake of ſtudying Divinity, as to a more ſecure and quiet port; and here, it is ſaid, he remained ſix or ſeven years (w). In this retirement he employed his pen in writing ſome works [O]. Upon the death of Peter, Biſhop of St. Davids, in 1198, he was adviſed by the Chapter and the Barons of that country, to beſtir himſelf in ſeeking this promotion, and in procuring the intereſt of the King, to whom and his father he had been upon many occaſions eminently ſerviceable. But he rejected the motion, and made uſe of a memorable ſaying [P], which perhaps was the faſhion of the age, and equivalent to the term, Nolo epiſcopari, I won't canvas or make intereſt for a Biſhoprick. Yet being put in nomination for it the beginning of the year following, he was active enough in ſupporting his intereſt. For two of the Archdeacons, and four of the Canons of St. Davids, in September, nominated three perſons for the Biſhoprick, to Hubert Archbiſhop of Canterbury, then Chief-Juſticiary, and in the firſt place the Archdeacon of Brecknock, Girald; to whom they added Reginald Foliot, an Engliſhman, of whoſe ſucceſs they did not think there was any likelihood. The Archbiſhop rejected Girald, and when the Canons expoſtulated with him, and deſired to know his reaſons, why he refuſed a diſcreet and learned man, a gentleman, and one born in lawful matrimony; he told them, 'That the King would have no Welſhman a Biſhop in 'Wales, and eſpecially him, who was ſo near in blood to the Prince of Wales.' And the Archbiſhop rejected not only Girald, but all the Welſhmen who were put in nomination. Beſides the political reaſons before mentioned, the Archbiſhop had a private one of his own, namely, a particular pique againſt Girald. On the twenty-ninth of June 1199, the Chapter went again to election, and without one diſcordant voice, choſe Girald. The day following he paſſed over into Ireland (where his kinſman Meiler Fitz-Henry was then Lord-Juſtice), in order to ſtrengthen his intereſt among his great relations there, and probably to ſupply himſelf with money to proſecute his claim. Having received promiſes of their aſſiſtance, in leſs than three weeks he returned to St. Davids, where he was informed, that, during his abſence, the Canons had received a mandate from the Archbiſhop and Juſticiary, to elect and admit Geoffry, Prior of Lhanthony, for their Biſhop. Girald appealed to the Pope, and the Canons by letter requeſted his Holineſs to conſecrate him. Furniſhed with theſe credentials, he took a journey to Rome, where he arrived, about the feaſt of St. Andrew, and preſented his letters to the Pope. The Prior of Lhanthony was not behind him in ſupporting his intereſt; and he alſo went armed with letters from the Archbiſhop, ſtuffed, as Girald ſays (x), with nothing but calumnies and lies. All the letters being read, and the ſuit canvaſſed during the whole winter, the Pope perceived that the cauſe would not ſoon be determined, and therefore (u) De Rebus a ſe Geſt. lib. iii. cap. i.

(w) Angl. Sacra, Vol. ii. ut ſupra.

(x) De Rebus a ſe Geſtis, ut ſupra, where the letters are ſet forth at large.

[N] Joined Girald in the commiſſion of government with the Biſhop of Ely.] This fact is unnoticed by the Hiſtorians of England, and for what we know, only told by Girald (31) himſelf, out of a vanity to inhance his own importance. As the Biſhop of Ely was Chancellor, as well as chief governor, perhaps he appointed Girald, his deputy, or co-adjutor in the cuſtody of the Great Seal, to eaſe him of part of the burthen, that was too heavy in the whole adminiſtration of the kingdom; and this is the moſt we can upon this occaſion allow to our author.

(31) De Rebus a ſe Geſtis, lib. ii. cap. xxi.

[O] In this retirement he employed his pen in writing ſome works.] In 1193 he wrote the Life of Geoffrey, Archbiſhop of York, called by Bale (32), Certamina Galfridi Eboracenſis; i. e. The Strifes of Geoffrey Archbiſhop of York: lib. 1. but he himſelf (33) entitles it, Librum de promotionibus et perſecutionibus Gaufredi Eboracenſis Archiepiſcopi; i. e. A book of the promotions and perſecutions of Geoffry, Archbiſhop of York, divided into two books. About 1197 he wrote Gemmam Eccleſiaſticam, ſubſequenter de ſacramentis eccleſiaſticis ſaluti animarum perneceſſariis, et de Clericali continentia et honeſtate. This is the title he gives it himſelf (34); and ſome (35) think it is the ſame book with the Gemma Animæ, publiſhed at Mentz, by John Cochlæus, an. 1549, without prefixing the author's name to it; which opinion ſeems no way improbable, ſince both books begin with the ſame words, (viz.) Agmen in caſtris æterni Regis. ——— Certainly the latter part of this tract, called de Clericali continentiâ, is the ſame with a book inſcribed to him by Bale, entitled, de Honeſtate Clericali, lib. 1.

(32) Cent. III. No. 59.

(33) Epiſt. ad Capit. Hereford. de libris a ſe ſcriptis, in Wharton Angl. Sacra, Vol. ii. P. 439.

(34) Epiſt. ad Capit. Hereford. ut ſupra.

(35) Waræus de Script. p. 117.

[P] He made uſe of a memorable ſaying.] He tells (36) us himſelf the ſaying, namely, Virum Epiſcopalem peti non petere debere: —— That a man ought to be courted to accept a Biſhoprick, inſtead of ſuing for it.

(36) De Reb. a ſe Geſt. lib. iii. cap. iii.

to

to provide in the mean time that the See ſhould receive no detriment, and to give Girald ſome ſeeming ſatisfaction, in May 1200, he appointed him Adminiſtrator both in ſpiritualities and temporalities of the biſhoprick of St. Davids, during the continuance of the litigation, and ſent him home. At this time he publiſhed one of his treatiſes mentioned in the remark [Q]. In the year 1201, about Midlent, he again went to Rome, and finding his ſuit not far advanced, he returned to England before the end of ſummer; and in November 1202, he took his third journey to Rome, where he continued till the fifteenth of April 1203, on which day the Pope gave a definitive ſentence in the cauſe, and vacated both candidates claims, and in Auguſt, Girald returned home to ſolicit a new election. Notwithſtanding all the oppoſition made by him, Geoffry, Prior of Lhanthony, was elected by the Canons, and Girald, finding it to no purpoſe to withſtand the Archbiſhop's weight, deſiſted from all farther pretences to the See of St. Davids, and ſoon after reſigned the archdeaconry of Brechin, to a nephew of his called William. He ſeems to have ſpent the remainder of his life in a ſtate of inaction, and for the moſt part buried in retirement, where he wrote many books, of which the reader may ſee a catalogue below [R], partly collected from his own works, and partly from the obſervations and collections

[Q] At this time he publiſhed one of his treatiſes mentioned in the remark.] The treatiſe here mentioned, was that, De Rebus a ſe Geſtis; lib. 2. which Ward (37) calls de Vitâ ſuâ; lib. 2. There are two reaſons that induce us to think, that the birth of this piece was at the time mentioned. Firſt, As it ſets forth all the great actions in which Girald was concerned, in lively colours, and with no little ſhare of vanity; ſo it ſeems calculated to fortify his intereſt with the Pope, by letting him ſee how fit a man he was to ſerve the Pope's views in point of activity and conſequence, a matter of no mean conſideration with Innocent the third: Secondly, As the book breaks off abruptly juſt at the time the Archbiſhop of Canterbury's letters againſt Girald were read before the Pope, after which he returned to Wales.

(37) Script. p. 315.

[R] The reader may ſee a catalogue of ſuch books as he wrote after his retirement.] Several of our author's books are mentioned before in the remarks I, M, O, Q, which therefore we ſhall not repeat. The others are theſe, namely:

Epiſtola ad Capitulum Heretordenſe de libris a ſe ſcriptis; — i. e. An Epiſtle to the Chapter of Hereford concerning the books written by himſelf.

Chronographia Metrica, et Mundi naſcentis Deſcriptiuncula;—i. e. A Chronology in Metre, or a Deſcription of the growing World.

Coſmographia pentametris verſibus exornata; i. e. A Coſmography embelliſhed with pentameter verſes.—— Bale calls this piece Coſmographia Mundi, lib. I.

Eccleſiæ Speculum, ſive de Monaſticis Ordinibus ex Eccleſiaſticis Religionibus variis Diſtinctionum, Lib. IV.—i. e. The Mirror of the Church, or four books of Diſtinction concerning Monaſtick Orders, or Eccleſiaſtical Religious.——— Mr. Wharton (38) ſays, 'That 'Girald bore an immortal hatred to the Monks, inſo- 'much that to his Litany he added this deprecation; — 'A Monachorum malitiâ, libera nos Domine—From 'the malice of the Monks, good Lord deliver us;— 'which he uſed in his daily prayers, and adviſed his 'friends to do the like; and in all his writings he 'takes a delight in railing at their hypocriſy, frauds, 'and ignorance. But he took three years in compil- 'ing his Speculum, that he might to the full indulge 'his ſpleen againſt the Monks, and lay an eternal 'brand of infamy on them.' Bale has given us the title of Eccleſiæ Speculum; but then has formed two other tracts out of it (viz.) de Monachis et Clericis, lib. I. and de Ciſtertientium Nequitiis, lib. I.

(38) Pref. to Angl. Sacra, p. xx.

Librum de Invectionibus; —i. e. A book of Invectives;——which Bale calls, Invectiones Triennales, alluding to his three years journies to Rome, in each of which it is not improbable, but that Archbiſhop Hubert wrote ſharp letters againſt him, to which this book of invectives was an anſwer. Bale multiplies theſe invectives in his catalogue, and thereby makes Girald the author of another book called, Ad Invectiones Huberti, lib. 1. which manifeſtly is the ſame with the former. In another place (*) our author enlarges his former title, and ſhews therein the cauſe of his writing it. Thus he calls it, Liber Invectionum Romæ in Giraldum acriter inchoatus, et ibidem ab ipſo, Papa monente, in pleno Conſiſtorio ad injurias reſpondente, et objecta crimina non incompetenter evacuante pariter et refundante; nec non et utilia quædam adjiciente conſummatus.—i. e. A book of Invectives ſeverely ſet on foot at Rome againſt Girald, and by the advice of the Pope, an anſwer given in a full Conſiſtory to the injuries and crimes objected; wherein the ſame are ſufficiently retorted and confuted, and ſome other uſeful things added.

(*) Cambrenſis Catal. brev. Libr. ſuorum in Angl. ſacra, Vol. ii. p. 445.

Epiſtolas:—Theſe are what Bale calls Remordentes Epiſtolas; and he has ſome reaſon for it. Becauſe our author ſays (39), that to his ſpeculum Duorum he hath added, Epiſtolas paucas ad injurias illatas reſpondentes ac remordentes, quaſi querulum carmen.

(39) Epiſt. ad Com. Hereford.

Symbolum Electorum, ſive Epiſtolæ variæ a ſemet ipſo collectæ. In his ſunt plures invectivæ adverſus Wibertum, Abbatem de Bethleſdene, ordinis Ciſtertienſis, Epiſtola prolixa ad Petrum Menevenſem Epiſcopum de officio Epiſcopi; altera ad Adamum, Abbatem Eveſhemenſem de laude amicitiæ et alia.— i. e. A collection of pieces, or various Epiſtles collected by himſelf. In which are many invectives againſt Wibert, Abbot of Bethleſdene, a Ciſtertian Monk; a prolix Epiſtle to Peter, Biſhop of St. Davids, concerning the office of a Biſhop; another to Adam, Abbot of Eveſham, in praiſe of friendſhip, and other things.

Speculum Duorum, Commonitorium et Conſolatorium, et quod ſola peperit indignatio, quaſi querulum carmen emiſſum.— i. e. A double Mirror, Commonitory and Conſolatory, ſet forth in the form of a querulous copy of verſes, produced by indignation alone. Bale makes two ſeparate books of this one, which conſiſts of two parts.

Liber de Principis Inſtructione;—i. e. A book for the Inſtruction of a Prince; in three diſtinctions.

Dialogum; i. e. A Dialogue. This ſingle Dialogue Bale has enlarged into a volume, intituled Dialogos Proſaicos, lib. 1. and indeed it may be well called a volume, if (as is highly probable) it be the ſame tract, which is called, Liber de Geſtis Giraldi laborioſiſſimis, Menevenſi Eccleſiæ futuris fortè diebus perneceſſarius; — i. e. A book of the moſt laborious actions of Girald, which in future times may be very neceſſary for the Church of Menevia; written in the form of a dialogue between Quærens and Solvens; from whence Bale takes occaſion to father on him a treatiſe, de Quærente et Solvente, lib. 1. but it is the ſame with the dialogue de Jure Statûs Menevenſis Eccleſiæ, divided into ſeven diſtinctions.

De Fidei orthodoxæ fructu, Fideique defectu.—— i. e. Of the advantages of the orthodox Faith, and of the failing of Faith.

Vita S. Ædelberti Martyris Herefordenſis egregii, S. Davidis, S. Caradoci, loci ejuſdem Heremitæ nobilis et Preſbyteri, S. Remigii, Lincolnienſis Epiſcopi primi, et S. Hugonis, ſedis ejuſdem Epiſcopi. — i. e. The life of St. Adelbert, the excellent Martyr of Hereford, the life of St. David, the life of St. Caradoc, a noble Hermit and Prieſt of the ſame place; the life of St. Remigius, the firſt Biſhop of Lincoln; the life of St. Hugo, Biſhop of the ſame. In the ſhort catalogue he gives (40) of his own works, he intitles this piece, de Legendis Sanctorum; i. e. of the Legends of the Saints, and then enumerates the foregoing lives.

(40) Wharton, as before.

Topographiæ Cambriæ, et tam terræ quam morum gentis illius compendioſa deſcriptio; cujus in fine ſatis ſuccinctus ac dilucidus, tam Retractationum Tractatus, quam collections of Mr. Wharton; and though he lived till after the year 1220, yet we do not find that he engaged in any public buſineſs, except that in the year 1215, he was offered his favourite biſhoprick of St. David's, upon ſome terms that he look ed upon as unreaſonable, and therefore rejected it. The time of his death is not mentioned by any author that we know of. Bale (y), in giving his character, deſcribes his perſon as particularly as if he had been his intimate acquaintance.——— 'Adoleſcens ſtaturâ pro-'cerus, facie & formâ nitidus, &c.——— A young man tall of ſtature, and of a delicate 'form and countenance.' It is more certain that he was a man of learning, and of conſiderable addreſs and merit; but that his other good qualities were much tarniſhed by an exceſſive vanity; and whoever reads his works cannot but ſee, that he was either extremely credulous or diſhoneſt, in endeavouring to impoſe manifeſt falſhoods on the world for truths.

D.

(y) Cent. III. 4to. 60.

quam librorum noſtrorum catalogus non incompetenter eſt appoſitus.——— i. e. A Topography of Wales, and a compendious deſcription of both the land and cuſtoms of that nation; to which is added, a Treatiſe of Retractations ſuccinct and clear enough, and a catalogue of our books is not incompetently annexed. This is the title Girald himſelf gives. Bale divides this Topography into four books; but it conſiſts only of two, the firſt of which intituled, de Laudabilibus Cambrorum; —i. e. of the Praiſes of the Welch, was publiſhed by David Powell with annotations; but the ſecond intitled, de Illaudabilibus Cambrorum, out of zeal to his country, was left by him unpubliſhed; which omiſſion has been ſince ſupplied by Mr. Wharton (41), and intitled, Giraldi Cambrenſis liber ſecundus, de Deſcriptione Walliæ, ſeu liber de Illaudabilibus Walliæ; —i. e. The ſecond book of the Deſcription of Wales written by Girald Cambrenſis, or a book of the Diſpraiſes of Wales. In ten chapters. This book eſcaped the induſtry of Sir James Ware (42), who unjuſtly imputes it as an invention of Bale, that Girald wrote de Illaudabilibus Cambrorum.

(41) Ibid. p. xxi. Præf.

(42) De Scriptor. p. 117.

Retractationes: ——— Catalogus librorum ſuorum, mentioned under the foregoing head.

Epiſtola ad Stephanum Langton, Archiepiſcopum Cantuarienſem; —i. e. An Epiſtle to Stephen Langton, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; the purport of which is to adviſe him not to reſign his See.

Epiſtola ad Willielmum Vere Epiſcopum Hereford-enſem; ſee before under remark [I].

Carmen de Miſeriâ conditionis humanæ. — i. e. A copy of verſes on the Miſery of Man's Condition. It begins with Unde ſuperbit homo.

Liber Carminum et Epigrammatum. — i. e. A book of Verſes and Epigrams.

De Proëmiis operum ſuorum.—i. e. Of the Prefaces to his own works. This piece is mentioned in his epiſtle to the Chapter of Hereford.

Epiſtolas et Dictamina ad varias perſonas variis temporibus deſtinata, lib. 1.

Rhetoricas Orationes; theſe were diſperſed through his other works as they were occaſionally written.

De Dictis Quatuor, per totidem diſtinctas particulas artificioſè contextas, ſicut delectabilet, ſic et opus non inutile compaginare curavit:— ſays he in his epiſtle to the Chapter of Hereford. This treatiſe contained a collection of the four immediately preceding pieces.

Bale, who upon many occaſions was fond of multiplying the works of writers, has been liberal to Girald, and has aſcribed many treatiſes to him, which nobody elſe ever dreamed of, ſome of which have been obſerved before, as they occurred in the remarks. Among the ſpurious pieces, are the Topographia Britanniæ Primæ, lib. 4.—Relationem Dormientium, lib. 1.—In Opera quædam Senecæ, lib. 1.—De Planctu Lachrymabili, lib. 1.—Pro reddenda Talione, lib. 1.—It is probable this is another title for his Liber de Invectionibus, the ſubject being the ſame, and contains returns to the Archbiſhop's invective letters againſt him.—Acta Regis Johannis, lib. 1.—De Avibus et earum naturis, lib. 1. This is manifeſtly a part of his Topography of Ireland.—Querulum Carmen.—the ſame as his ſpeculum Duorum.—De Floſculis Philoſophicis.—De Mahumeto et ejus nequitiis, lib. 1.—Pro Guidone Warwicenſi, lib. 1.—Prerogativarum Computum, lib. 1—De Mundi Mirabilibus, lib. 1.—Deſcriptiones Magnorum Virorum:—i. e. the Characters of Great Men—are certainly a part of the hiſtory of the conqueſt of Ireland.

(43) Append. ad Geſner. Biblioth. Ware, de Script. p. 117.

Joſias Simler (43) erroneouſly aſcribes to Girald, a book de Viſi-Saxonum Regibus, lib. 1. And another called Anglorum Chronicon, lib. 1. But he was led aſtray by the firſt edition of Bale's writers of Britain; for they are not mentioned in the ſecond.—The books alſo Demonâ Inſulâ, and de Vitâ S. Patricii, which are extant in manuſcript in the public library at Cambridge, are none of his; though ſome have made a handle from their being mentioned by Dr. Thomas James in his Eclogâ Oxonio-Cantabrigienſi to aſcribe them to Girald. But that writer only enumerates them as bound together in one volume with ſome works of Girald.

[Perhaps in the foregoing article, and eſpecially in the introduction and the notes [A], [B], and [D], Giraldus Cambrenſis is treated with too much ſeverity. His mentioning his family ſeems to have no extraordinary vanity in it; and the defects of his ſtile muſt, in part, be imputed to the times in which he lived. The ſame may be alledged with relation to his ſpeaking ſo much of himſelf. The delicacy and decorum which would now be required on ſuch a ſubject were not then underſtood. We are by no means inſenſible of Giraldus's faults: but, in eſtimating the merit of any writer, a regard ſhould undoubtedly be had to the literature, manners, and other circumſtances of the age to which he belonged. A conſiderable, and, indeed, a very natural prejudice againſt our author, hath ariſen from his treatiſes concerning Ireland. Mr. Walter Harris, ſpeaking of his Retractationes, at the end of his deſcription De Illaudibilibus Cambriæ, ſays, that 'it is only a very 'ſlight apology for the many baſe ſcandals and in-'vectives he had heaped together concerning Ire-'land in his Topography, many of which he con-'feſſes he had picked up only from (that public lyer) 'Common-Fame; and yet has not remorſe enough 'to diſown them; concluding only, that he would 'not for the moſt part affirm them, nor would he al-'together deny them.' Mr. Harris adds, that John Lynch, whoſe work is mentioned in the note [I], 'has to ſome purpoſe taken him to pieces, and with 'a ſharp and judicious pen, expoſed the numberleſs 'miſtakes, falſehoods, and calumnies of that mali-'cious writer (44).'

(44) Harris's edit. of Sir James Ware's Works, Vol. 2d. p. 317.

Mr. Thomas Warton, whoſe knowledge and taſte will not be diſputed, hath given a very favourable account of Giraldus: 'Gyraldus Cambrenſis deſerves 'particular regard for the univerſality of his works, 'many of which are written with ſome degree of 'elegance. He abounds with quotations of the beſt 'Latin poets. He was an hiſtorian, an antiquary, a 'topographer, a divine, a philoſopher, and a poet. 'His love of ſcience was ſo great, that he refuſed 'two biſhopricks; and from the midſt of public buſi-'neſs, with which his political talents gave him a 'conſiderable connection in the court of Richard the 'firſt, he retired to Lincoln for ſeven years, with a 'deſign of purſuing theological ſtudies. He recited 'his book on the topography of Ireland in public at 'Oxford, for three days ſucceſſively. On the firſt 'day of this recital he entertained all the poor of 'the city; on the ſecond, all the Doctors in the ſe-'veral faculties, and ſcholars of better note; and on 'the third, the whole body of ſtudents, with the 'citizens and ſoldiers of the garriſon. It is probable 'that this was a ceremony practiſed on the like oc-'caſion in the univerſity of Paris; where Giraldus 'had ſtudied for twenty years, and where he had been 'elected profeſſor of canon law in the year 1189. 'His account of Wales was written in conſequence of 'the obſervations he made on that country, then al-'moſt unknown to the Engliſh, during his attendance 'on an archiepiſcopal viſitation. I cannot reſiſt the 'pleaſure of tranſcribing from this book his picture 'of the romantic ſituation of the abbey of Lantony 'in Monmouthſhire. I will give it in Engliſh, as 'my meaning is merely to ſhew how great a maſter 'the author was of that ſelection of circumſtances 'which forms an agreeable deſcription, and which 'could only flow from a cultivated mind. "In the 'deep vale of Ewias, which is about a bowſhot 'over, and encloſed on all ſides with high moun-'tains, ſtands the abbey church of St. John, a ſtruc-'ture covered with lead, and not unhandſomely built 'for ſo loneſome a ſituation: on the very ſpot, where 'formerly ſtood a ſmall chapel dedicated to St. Da-'vid, which had no other ornaments than green moſs 'and ivy. It is a ſituation fit for the exerciſe of 'religion; and a religious edifice was firſt founded 'in this ſequeſtered retreat to the honour of a ſolita-'ry life, by two hermits, remote from the noiſe of 'the world, upon the banks of the river Hondy, 'which winds through the midſt of the valley.—The 'rains which mountainous countries uſually produce, 'are here very frequent, the winds exceedingly tem-'peſtuous, and the winters almoſt continually dark. 'Yet the air of the valley is ſo happily tempered, as 'ſcarcely to be the cauſe of any diſeaſes. The monks 'ſitting in the cloiſters of the abbey, when they chuſe 'for a momentary refreſhment to caſt their eyes a-'broad, have on every ſide a pleaſing proſpect of 'mountains aſcending to an immenſe height, with 'numerous herds of wild deer feeding aloft on the 'higheſt extremity of this lofty horizon. The body 'of the ſun is not viſible above the hills till after 'the meridian hour, even when the air is moſt clear.' 'Giraldus adds, that Roger, biſhop of Saliſbury, prime 'miniſter to Henry the firſt, having viſited this place, 'on his return to court told the King, that all the 'treaſure of his Majeſty's kingdom would not ſuffice to 'build ſuch another cloiſter. The biſhop explained 'himſelf by ſaying, that he meant the circular ridge 'of mountains with which the vale of Ewias was en-'cloſed (45).'

(45) Hiſt. of Poetry, Diſſertation 2d.

Mr. Warton's note concerning the entertainment which Giraldus gave at Oxford is too curious to be omitted.—'Wood inſinuates, that this ſumptuous 'entertainment was partly given by Giraldus, as an 'inceptor in the arts. Hiſt. Antiq. Univ. Oxon. l. 'i. p. 25, col. 1. Which practice I have mentioned, 'Sect. ix. p. 290. infr. And I will here add other 'inſtances, eſpecially as they are proofs of the eſti-'mation in which letters, at leaſt literary honours, 'were held. In the year 1268, the inceptors in civil 'law at Oxford were ſo numerous, and attended by 'ſuch a number of gueſts, that the academical houſes 'or hoſtels were not ſufficient for their accommoda-'tion: and the company filled not only theſe, but 'even the refectory, cloiſters, and many apartments of 'Oſeney abbey, near the ſuburbs of Oxford. At which 'time many Italians ſtudying at Oxford were admit-'ted in that faculty. Wood, ubi ſupr. p. 25, col. 1. 'It appears that the mayor and citizens of Oxford 'were conſtantly invited to theſe ſolemnities. In 'the year 1400, two monks of the priory of Chriſt 'Church in Canterbury were ſeverally admitted to 'the degree of Doctor in Divinity and Civil Law at 'Oxford. The expences were paid by their mo-'naſtery, and amounted to 1181. 3s. 8d. Regiſtr. 'Priorat. pergamen. MSS. Tanner, Oxon. Num. '165, fol. 212. a. Among other articles there is, "In ſolutione facta HISTRIONIBUS." fol. 213. a. '[See Sect. ii. p. 91. infr.] At length theſe ſcho-'laſtic banquets grew to ſuch exceſs, that it was or-'dered in the year 1434, that no inceptor in arts 'ſhould expend more than "3000 groſſos Turonen-"ſes." Vet. Stat. See Leland, Coll. P. ii. tom. i. 'p. 296, 297, edit. 1770. But the limitation was a 'conſiderable ſum. Each is ſomewhat leſs than an 'Engliſh groat. Notwithſtanding, Neville, after-'wards archbiſhop of York, on his admiſſion to the 'degree of maſter of arts in 1452, feaſted the acade-'mics and many ſtrangers for two ſucceſſive days, at 'two entertainments, conſiſting of nine hundred 'coſtly diſhes. Wood, ibid. 219, col. 1. 2. Nor 'was this reverence to learning, and attention to its 'inſtitutions, confined to the circle of our univerſi-'ties. Such was the pedantry of the times, that 'in the year 1503, Archbiſhop Wareham, chancellor 'of Oxford, at his feaſt of inthronization, ordered 'to be introduced in the firſt courſe a curious diſh, 'in which were exhibited the eight towers of the 'univerſity. In every tower ſtood a bedell; and un-'der the towers were figures of the King, to whom 'the Chancellor Wareham, encircled with many 'Doctors properly habited, preſented four Latin 'verſes, which were anſwered by his Majeſty. The 'eight towers were thoſe of Merton, Magdalene, and 'New College, and of the monaſteries of Oſeney, 'Rewley, the Dominican, Auguſtine, and Franciſ-'can Friars, which five laſt are now utterly deſtroy-'ed. Wood, ubi ſupr. lib. 1. p. 239, col. 1. Com-'pare Robertſon's Charles V. i. 323, ſeq. (46).'] K.

(46) Ibid. note (w).

BARRY (JAMES), Lord Baron of Santry. The family of the Barrys were originally Welch, ſeated in Pembrokeſhire, and deſcended from the Princes of that country by a female line. Several of them paſſed into Ireland among the firſt adventurers in 1169 [A], of whom Robert de Barry is highly celebrated by Girald Barry (a) [B], commonly called Cambrenſis, who was of the ſame family. Camden (b) makes this Robert an Engliſhman, meaning, it may be preſumed, that he was born within the allegiance of the King of England, to whom the Princes of Wales paid homage, and to underſtand that careful writer in any other ſenſe, would be to detract from his ſkill in genealogy, of which indiſputably he was a great maſter; and yet it may be doubted, whether one ſmall error in relation to this family of the Barrys ſettled in Ireland may not be imputed to him [C]. It is certain therefore, that Robert de Barry was a Cambro-Briton,

(a) Expugn. Hib. Lib. i. cap. iv.

(b) Brit. N. edit. p. 1339.

[A] Several of the Barrys paſſed into Ireland in 1169.] We read in hiſtory of four principal adventurers of the name of Barry, who arrived in Ireland upon the firſt invaſion undertaken by Robert Fitz-Stephens, namely, 1. Robert Barry the elder. 2. Robert Barry the younger. 3. Philip Barry, and 4. Walter Barry; beſides Girald Barry (1) the Hiſtorian, an Eccleſiaſtick, who went thither in Earl John's retinue in the year 1210.

(1) See the preceding article.

[B] Of whom Robert de Barry is highly celebrated by Gerald Cambrenſis.] The character Cambrenſis gives of Robert de Barry is this: 'That he was a 'young gentleman ambitious rather to be really great 'than to ſeem ſo; was by nature both noble and 'valiant, and could not bear either to glorify his own 'actions, or to hear others do it; that he was of a 'ſedate, ſtayed courage, one whom no ſudden miſ-'adventure could terrify; was always ready at his 'arms, forward in battle, and the firſt that received 'a wound in the conqueſt of Ireland.'

[C] Whether one error in relation to the Barrys may not be imputed to Camden.] Camden makes Robert de Barry the anceſtor of the family of Barry-mor, or Barry the great (one of whom was created Baron Barry, afterwards Viſcount Buttevant, and they are now Earls of Barrymore): Whereas it is ſtrongly to be preſumed, that that branch of the family are deſcended from Philip de Barry, to whom his uncle, Robert Fitz-Stephen, made large grants in the county of Cork, which that family enjoy to this day, as appears from King John's Charter of confirmation (2). For then (ſays the Charter) 'Johannes Rex confirma-'vit Willielmo de Barry donationem quam Robertus 'Filius Stephani fecit Philippo de Barry, (ejus et ſo-'rore nepoti) patri ejuſdem Willielmi, cujus hæres 'ipſe fuit de tribus Cantredis in terra ſua de Corcaiâ. 'ſcilicet Olethan, cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis, et 'aliis duobus, ſcilicet, Muſcherie Dunegan, et Can-'tredo de Killede, per ſervitium decem militum, ſi-'cut charta prædicti Roberti, quam inde habebat 'teſtabatur.

(2) Pat. in Rot. tur. Birmingham de anno nono Johan.

Briton, and nephew to Robert Fitz-Stephen, who firſt invaded Ireland in aid of Dermod Mac Murrough, King of Leinſter, a year or two before Earl Strongbow's arrival. From which of the four branches mentioned in the remark [A], the gentleman, who is now our ſubject, is deſcended, muſt be left to the heralds to trace: but both his father and grandfather were bred to merchandiſe in the city of Dublin, by which they not only acquired a conſiderable eſtate, but alſo enjoyed, and with ſufficiency executed, the ſeveral poſts of honour in the government of the city [D]; which his father repreſented more than once in parliament. He educated this his ſon in the ſtudy of the Law, who did not diſappoint his expectations: for being called to the bar, he practiſed his profeſſion for ſeveral years, with great reputation and ſucceſs. In 1629, the King thought him a proper perſon on whom to confer the office of his Majeſty's Serjeant at Law (c), for the kingdom of Ireland, at a yearly fee of twenty pounds ten ſhillings ſterling, and in as full a manner as the ſame office was granted before to Sir John Brereton, Knt. This was a prelude only to his future advancement. For the Lord Wentworth, afterwards Earl of Strafford, found him in this poſt when he firſt arrived Lord-Deputy of Ireland, and ſoon diſcovered his abilities, and took him under his protection. His Excellency laid hold of the firſt opportunity he had to promote him; and accordingly on the fifth of Auguſt 1634, he obtained a grant (d) of the office of Second Baron of the Exchequer of Ireland, to hold during pleaſure, with ſuch fees, rewards, and profits, as Sir Robert Oglethorpe, Sir Lawrence Parſons, Sir Gerard Lowther, or any other Second Baron did or ought to receive; and he ſoon after received the honour of knighthood. He obtained this favour, notwithſtanding a powerful recommendation from England in behalf of another [E]; and it was merely the fruit of the Lord Wentworth's friendſhip, of which he had occaſion ſoon after of making a public acknowledgment [F]. In the times that followed in the year 1640, when the Parliament of Ireland were upon the point of ſending over a Committee of their body to England, to impeach the Earl of Strafford, he joined all his weight and intereſt with Sir James Ware (e), and other members of the Houſe of Commons, to oppoſe thoſe meaſures; though the torrent was ſo violent, that all he or his party could do to ſtop it was vain and fruitleſs, and he had nothing left him but prayers to avert the fate of his noble friend. Times of diſtraction and confuſion afforded only a few opportunities to gentlemen of the long robe, to diſplay their talents in: the gown upon ſuch occaſions muſt give way to the ſword; and therefore we hear not much of our Baron during the long courſe of the rebellion, till a little before the reſtoration of King Charles II. in the year 1660, when he was appointed Chairman of the Convention, which voted his Majeſty's reſtoration without any previous conditions, in which reſolution no doubt he was inſtrumental, ſince we find his Majeſty took his merit into conſideration a very ſhort time after. For on the ſeventeenth of November that year, the King iſſued a privy-ſeal (f), for advancing him to the office of Chief-Juſtice in the King's-Bench in Ireland, and another (g) on the eighteenth of December following, in conſideration of his eminent fidelity and zeal, ſhewn in his Majeſty's ſervice, for creating him Lord Baron of Santry in the kingdom of Ireland, to him and the heirs male of his body; and ſeparate patents (h) accordingly paſſed

(c) In Offic. Rot. Hib. 6th. Octob. 5 Car. I.

(d) Pat. in Offic. Rot. Canc. Hib. 5 Aug. 10 Car. I.

(e) Autograph. Jacob Ware.

(f) Rot. Canc. Hib. 17 Nov. 12 Car. II.

(g) Ibid.

(h) Ibid.

' teſtabatur.—King John, (ſays the Charter) confirmed ' to William de Barry, the donation which Robert Fitz- ' Stephen made to Philip de Barry, his ſiſter's ſon, father ' of the ſaid William, whoſe heir he is, of three Can- ' treds, or hundreds, in his land of Cork; namely, Ole- ' than with all his apurtenances, and two others, namely, ' Muſcry-Dunnagan, and the Cantred of Killede, to ' hold by the ſervice of ten Knights, as the ſaid Ro- ' bert's charter, in the hands of the ſaid William, ' teſtifies.'

[D] His father and grand father enjoyed the ſeveral poſts of honour in the government of the city.] His grand father, James Barry, was one of the ſheriffs (3) of the city of Dublin in 1577. His father, Richard Barry, was alſo ſheriff (4) of the ſame city in 1604, and Mayor thereof in 1610. He likewiſe ſerved as member of parliament (5) for the city in 1613, with his colleague, Sir Richard Bolton, Recorder; and again in 1634 (6), with Serjeant Catelin, who was the King's Serjeant Recorder, and Speaker of the ſame Parliament. Lord Wentworth ſpeaks of him to Mr. Secretary Coke in terms of reſpect, and as a good Proteſtant.

(3) Archives in the chamber of the city of Dublin, MS.

(4) Ibid.

(5) Liſt of Members, MS.

(6) Strafford's Letters, 24 June, 1634.

[E] He obtained this favour, notwithſtanding a powerful recommendation from England in behalf of another.] This recommendation was from Dr. Laud, Archbiſhop of Canterbury in behalf of Mr. Chadwick. Lord Wentworth takes notice of it in a letter (7) to his Grace of Canterbury at that time. ' Your Grace (ſays ' he) recommends unto me Mr. Chadwick, in your ' letter of the 23d of June, for a ſecond Baron's place ' in the Exchequer: But I had, with the advice of the ' Chief Baron, promiſed it before to Serjeant Barry, ' the King's Serjeant, ſo as I could not with honeſty ' recall it. Beſides, Mr. Chadwick is not held here ſo ' fit as yet for the Bench; nay, the Chief Baron has ' a very mean opinion of his judgment in his own ' profeſſion. But I will be anſwerable to your Grace, ' he ſhall be by me effectually remembered in virtue of ' your Lordſhip's recommendation, at one time or ' other, and as ſoon as ever any occaſion ſhall preſent ' itſelf.'

(7) Strafford's Letters, 23 Aug. 1634.

[F] Of which favour he had occaſion ſoon after to make a public acknowledgment.] This acknowledgment appears in a book he publiſhed in the year 1637, intitled, The caſe of Tenures upon the Commiſſion of defective Titles, argued by all the Judges of Irelana, with the Reſolution and the Reaſons of their Reſolution. Dublin 1637, folio; ibid. 1725, 12mo. In the report of this caſe he diſplays his own abilities in the Law, and in the dedication of it to the Lord Strafford, he acquaints the world with his gratitude to his patron in terms very full and expreſſive: ' This work (ſays he) ' my Lord, is your's by more than one intereſt, and ' therefore it returns naturally unto you; for to lay aſide ' my particular reſpects (it being by your Lordſhip's ' favour that I ſerve his Majeſty in this place) you are ' Pater Patriæ, and not more ſo by your office, than ' by your love to this nation, and your moſt equal, ' and indifferent diſpenſation of juſtice (next under ' his Majeſty) the father of this Church and Common- ' wealth: And for whom can an oblation of this na- ' ture be more proper? Beſides, all that is here, as it ' was at firſt ſpoken, in an humble obedience to your ' Lordſhip's order, ſo it was after upon a noble invi- ' tation from you digeſted into this form, and it is ' now ſed on the eighth of February enſuing, and he was preſently after called unto the Privy-Council. He died ſome time in March 1672, and was buried in Chriſt-Church, Dublin, having left behind him iſſue to inherit his eſtate and title [G].

' now made public by your commandment; ſo that in ' all the paſſages of it, it carries your image, your ſu-' perſcription, and therefore by this dedication, I do ' not ſo much give it, as reſtore it. If there be any ' thing in it, that is mine, that anſwers your expecta-' tion, even in that, that it anſwers your expectation, ' I have my reward; for all that are below your Lord-' ſhip, I hope it ſhall have their uſe, to ſatisfy them ' that your Lordſhip's proceedings in this buſineſs have ' been in all points agreeable both to honour and ' juſtice, &c.'

[G] Having left iſſue to inherit his eſtate and title.] He married Catherine, daughter to Sir William Parſons of Bellamont in the county of Dublin, Baronet, one of the Lords Juſtices of Ireland in the year 1640, and anceſtor to the Earl of Roſs; and by her had iſſue Richard, Lord Santry, the father of Henry, Lord Santry, who by Bridget, daughter of Sir Thomas Domville of Temple-Oge, Baronet, and half ſiſter to Sir Compton Domville, had iſſue Henry, Lord Santry, who unfortunately forfeited the title.

D.

BARRY (Gerat), a gentleman deſcended from the noble family of Barrymore, Earls of that title in Ireland, as he tells us himſelf in a book of his writing, mentioned in the remarks [A]. He ſerved many years with reputation as an inferior officer in the armies of the King of Spain, in Germany and the Low Countries, being (as we apprehend) of the Popiſh religion, from the circumſtance of his not being employed at home; and in the Spaniſh ſervice he never roſe higher than to the office of a Captain of foot, few foreigners in that age obtaining conſiderable poſts. At leaſt he ſtiles himſelf only Captain in the title of his book, which was in the library of Dr. King, late Archbiſhop of Dublin, and is now in the Dioceſan library at Caſhell; a ſcarce piece, but of little intrinſic value. What became of the author, or when he died, I know not, having met with no account of him, but in his own Preface. But of whatever ſufficiency he was in the army, he ſeems to have been very ignorant in other reſpects, not being able even to ſpell in the manner uſed in his time; of which his title-page and the whole work are manifeſt proofs.

[A] A book of his writing mentioned in the remarks.] The title of the book here referred to is as follows. A Diſcourſe of Military Diſcipline, divided into three bookes, declaringe the Partes and Sufficiencie ordained in a private Souldier, and in each Officer ſerving in the Infanterie, till the Election and Office of the Captain-General; and the laſt booke treatinge of Fire-Wourks of rare Executions by Sea and Lande; as alſo of Firtifaſions. Compoſed by Captain Gerat Barry Iriſh. Bruſſels 1634, folio. Dedicated to David Earl of Barrymore. D.

[A learned correſpondent, who has ſeen the 'Diſ-' courſe of Military Diſcipline,' hath informed us, that the great blunder of ſpelling is in the word Firtifaſions; and that this is plainly an error of the Printer, who did not underſtand Engliſh. In the book itſelf the word is ſpelt properly.] K.

BARRY (Lodowick), a gentleman of Iriſh birth, flouriſhed in England about the middle of the reign of King James I.; and, it ſeems, muſt have been a man of ſome figure, ſince Anthony Wood (a) is pleaſed to compliment him with the title of Lord Barry, which is certainly a miſtake; nor ſhould we have thought him worth introducing into this work, but to correct that error. Mr. Langbaine (b) ranks him among the dramatick poets, and makes him the author, as well as Anthony Wood (c) does, of a Comedy, intituled, Ram Alley, or Merry Tricks, printed at London, 1611, acted by the children of the King's revels, before the year 1611, but printed that year. Some have aſcribed this Play to Philip Maſſinger; but the author (d) above quoted clears that miſtake. The plot in this play of Will. Smallſhanks decoying the widow Taffeta into marriage, is the ſame with that in Killigrew's Parſon's Wedding, and both taken from the Engliſh Rogue (e), where a ſervant is introduced decoying his miſtreſs into a wedding, by bribing the city muſick to play under her window, and wiſh her joy of her marriage, when at the ſame time he appeared at the window of her bed-chamber in his ſhirt, and threw them money. D.

(a) Athen. Oxon. Vol. i. p. 629.

(b) Engliſh Dramatic Poets.

(c) Athen. ibid.

(d) Athen. ibid.

(e) Part iv. cap. xix.

BARTON (Elizabeth) (a), when or where born we do not find. It is more than probable ſhe was of no great extraction or family, ſince we firſt meet with her in the character of a ſervant to one Thomas Knob of Aldington in Kent, in the year 1525, in whoſe ſervice, and much about which time, ſhe firſt began her pranks (b): for being troubled with hyſterical fits, and the uſual ſymptoms of riſings in her throat, faintings, deliria, &c. which ſtrangely diſtorted her limbs, and threw her body into very unuſual agitations; it was no difficult matter in an age of credulity and ſuperſtition, to make people believe, there was ſomething more in her fits than a bare paroxyſm of the diſeaſe (c); and ſhe accordingly became the object of their wonder and ſurprize: thus her ſtrange fits and odd geſticulations, together with a little ſucceſs (ſhe accidentally met with) in divination [A], ſoon ſpread her fame abroad, and made people believe ſhe was really inſpired

(a) Stapleton calls her Anne Berton, Vita Th. Mori, p. 281. Several other authors call her Berton, but none elſe Anne.

(b) Hall's Chron. fol. 279. Thomas Cobbs. Harris's Hiſt. of Kent, p. 24.

(c) Godwin's Annals, 1534. Fox's Martyrs, p. 333. Holinſhed's and Speed's Chronicles.

(1) Harris's Hiſt. of Kent, p. 24. See alſo a Pamphlet (called A New-Year's Gift, dedicated to the Pope's Holineſs, and all Catholics addicted to the See of Rome, 1579, 4to. which contains about thirteen pages, about this Holy Maid, in Bibliotheca Med i Temp. Vol. lxxxviii. of Miſcellan. Tracts, No. 12.

[A] Together with a little ſucceſs (ſhe accidentally met with) in divination.] It happening, that a child of her maſter's, that was ſick in the cradle by her, being near death, juſt as ſhe was come out of one of her fits; ſhe aſked, with great pain and groaning, whether it were dead or not? And hearing it was alive, ſhe ſaid it would die anon; which words were ſcarce out of her mouth, but the child fetched a deep ſigh and died; as might be naturally ſuggeſted without any great ſkill in divination (1): This ſucceſs however, inſpired of God. This affair coming to the ears of Maſters, the parſon of Aldington, he immediately reſolved to ſet her up for a propheteſs, in hopes perhaps thereby to prop the ſinking foundation of the Romiſh Church (though the event turned out directly the contrary) [B]. This, or at leaſt the hopes of making his chapel famous, that he might reap thereby the advantages of pilgrimages, offerings, &c. (d) made him very ready to contribute to, and carry on the impoſture. To this end his firſt care was, to adviſe her to pretend (or at leaſt to perſuade her to believe) ſhe had a ſupernatural impulſe, and that what ſhe ſaid was truly prophetic: for when her fits were over, and ſhe had forgotten all ſhe had ſaid in them, Maſters, the Prieſt, took care it ſhould not go ſo; but perſuaded her, all ſhe had ſaid was of the Holy Ghoſt, and that ſhe ought publicly to confeſs it was ſo (e). This diſtemper holding her for ſome time, ſhe had thereby an opportunity (as it were by daily habit and experience) of attaining ſuch perfection in counterfeiting her fits, that when cured, ſhe could ſo exactly imitate them, as would have deceived any body, ſo ready and expert was ſhe at it, to which her own application and obſervance, and the diligent tuition of her preceptors, Maſters and other Monks and Friars, did not a little contribute (f): For having by her art brought the fit upon her, ſhe would lie as it were in a trance for ſome time, then coming to herſelf (after many ſtrange grimaces and odd geſticulations) ſhe would break out into devout ejaculations, hymns, and prayers, ſometimes delivering herſelf in ſet ſpeeches, ſometimes in uncouth monkiſh rhymes, pretending to propheſy, and that ſhe had been honoured by God with many ſtrange viſions, heard heavenly voices and melody, and had the revelations of many things, talking much about religious matters, as Heaven, Hell, Purgatory, &c. [C] declaiming againſt the wickedneſs of the times, and evil life, in no bad manner; and was always particularly vehement againſt Hereſy and innovations, exhorting to frequent the church, to hear maſſes, to uſe frequent confeſſion, and to pray to our Lady and all Saints, and to all the ſuperſtitions of the Romiſh Church. The artful management of this impoſture, together with her pretended piety, virtue, and auſterity of life, gained her undoubted credit to all ſhe ſaid; the common people looking on her with a kind of reverence, as a perſon truly however, ſimple as it was, together with her odd fits, ſoon ſet her up for a Propheteſs: For a little while after this, ſhe took upon her to tell things that were done at church, court, and other diſtant places, where ſhe could not be preſent, or have any apparent information; nay ſo low did her divinations deſcend, that ſhe would alſo tell in particular on any night, what meat the Hermit of that chapel had for his ſupper, and many other things told ſhe concerning him, to the great admiration of thoſe about her; delivering her ſpeeches, as ſhe lay immoveable, and as it were dead, all which ſhe ſeemed (by ſigns that ſhe gave) moſt lively to behold, as it were with her eyes—— See more of her pretended miracles in note [C].

(d) Burnet's Hiſt. of the Reformation, Vol. i. p. 150.

(e) Hall's Chron. fol. 219. See her Speech.

(f) Collier's Eccleſiaſt. Hiſt. Vol. ii. P. ii. p. 86. Hall's Chron. p. 220. Holinſhed's Chr. Vol. i. p. 936. Burnet, ubi ſupra.

[B] In hopes thereby to prop the ſinking foundation of the Romiſh Church, though the event turned out directly the contrary.] For the foulneſs and wicked deſigns of this impoſture, ſays Burnet (2), did much alienate people from the intereſt of Rome, and made the other acts paſs more eaſily, and be better received by the people; inſomuch that it was generally believed, or at leaſt ſhrewdly ſuſpected, that what was now diſcovered was no new practice, but that many of the viſions and miracles, by which religious orders had raiſed their credit ſo high, were of the ſame nature; on which account, it was not a little inſtrumental in making way for the deſtroying of all the monaſteries in England, though all the ſeverity which at that time followed on it, was that the Obſervant Friars at Richmond, Greenwich, Canterbury, Newark, and Newcaſtle, were removed out of their houſes, and with the other Grey Friars and Auguſtine Friars put in their houſes (3).——This however, was the firſt thing that provoked the King againſt the regular clergy, and drew after it all the ſeverities that were done in the reſt of this reign, and not undeſervedly; for had it fallen out in a darker age, in which the world went mad after viſions, the King might have loſt his crown by it *.

(2) Hiſt. of the Reformat. Vol. i. B. ii. p. 153.

(3) Stowe, p. 570.

(*) Burnet's Hiſt. of the Reformation.

[C] Saying that ſhe had been honoured by God with many ſtrange viſions, and heard heavenly voices and melody, and that ſhe had the revelations of many things to come, talking much about religious matters, as Heaven, Hell, Purgatory, &c.] In her trances ſhe would often ſay, that ſhe would go home; and ſometimes when ſhe came out of them, that ſhe had been at home; and being aſked where her home was; ſhe ſaid it was in Heaven, where St. Michael weighed ſouls, and St. Peter carried the keys; and where ſhe had the company of our Lady of Court of Strete, who had commanded her, to offer a taper up to her in her chapel, and that then ſhe would immediately be cured; diſcovering great pleaſure in the thoughts of being talked of for the miracles: Saying, our Lady would ſhow more miracles there ſhortly, and that if any one ſhould chance to depart this life ſuddenly, or by miſchance, or in deadly ſin; if they vowed heartily to our good Lady at Court of Strete, they ſhould be reſtored to life again, to receive ſhrift and houſell, and ſhould after depart this life with God's bleſſing (4).

It was alſo given out that ſhe had much converſation with, and many revelations from, Mary Magdalen, who gave her a letter that was written in Heaven, which was ſhewed to many, being written in golden characters: this was however afterwards found to be written by one Haukherſt, a Monk of Canterbury (5).

She pretended alſo to be preſent at Henry the VIII.'s interview with the French King at Calais, and that God being diſpleaſed with King Henry, an angel, when he was at maſs, took away the ſacrament out of the Prieſt's hand inviſibly, as he was going to adminiſter it to the King, and gave it to her, being then inviſibly preſent, and that ſhe was immediately wafted over ſea again to her monaſtery, as ſhe had been carried from it (6).

In the chapel of St. Giles in the monaſtery of Chriſt Church, Canterbury, ſhe is ſaid to have been particularly honoured by God with the ſight of heavenly lights, the ſound of celeſtial voices and melody, and ſenſation of unſpeakable joys; to which chapel, ſhe, by the peculiar command of God, is ſaid oftentimes to have reſorted (eſpecially by night) to receive viſions and revelations, the door of the dormitory opening itſelf to her by the power of God, and not only to her, but to Dr. Bocking and ſome others: however, her ſtealing forth of the dormitory by night (which ſhe did four or five times a week), was at laſt found not to be for ſpiritual buſineſs, nor to receive revelations of God, but rather for bodily communication and pleaſure with her friends, who could not have ſo good leiſure and opportunity with her in the day (7).——

The books and papers written about her, mentioned the devil's having appeared to her, and tempted her in diverſe forms and faſhions, ſometimes like a man wantonly dreſſed, &c. ſometimes like a deformed bird, and ſometimes in other ſhapes (8).—

One of her propheſies or revelations was, that there was a root with three branches, and till they were plucked up, it ſhould never be merry with England; interpreting the root to be the late Lord Cardinal, the firſt branch the King, the ſecond, the Duke of Norfolk, and the third, the Duke of Suffolk (9).—

(4) Harris's Hiſt. of Kent, p. 24. Alſo the Pamphlet, as quoted in note [A].

(5) Hall's Chron. p. 220.

(6) Hall's Chron. The Pope's New Year's Gift, by B. G. Citizen of London, as before in note [A].

(7) Hall's Chron. Pamphlet, ibid.

(8) Hall's Chron. See Sir Thomas More's converſation with her, in note [K].

(9) Hall's Chron.

inſpired of God; and not only the commonalty were deceived, but ſeveral learned men of uncommon underſtanding, and perſons of great characters were wrought upon to give credit to her pretended revelations (g). Among the reſt was Sir Thomas More, and Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter, who are by ſome reported (though falſely) to have been afterwards appointed by the King to examine her [D]; as alſo Warham, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; to whom Maſters having ſet this holy Nun off in an extraordinary manner, by relating her pretended revelations, divinations, and long ſpeeches (h), Warham ordered him to attend her carefully, and bring him a farther report of any new trances, &c. ſhe might afterwards fall in; to whom was joined Dr. Bocking a Canon of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, and Mr. Hadley and Barnes, two Monks of the ſame place, together with Father Lewis his official of Canterbury (i), and others, as commiſſioners to examine further into this affair (k). However, for all this piece of outward ceremony, Warham was not a little ſuſpected, with ſome others, to have countenanced this impoſture underhand. And if he was not really privy to the contrivance, he muſt have been moſt egregiouſly impoſed on. For Fiſher, in his letter of excuſe to Cromwell (l), ſeems to throw the chief of his credit or belief in this affair, upon the teſtimonies and accounts he received from Warham. His words are theſe: 'Finally, my Lord of Can-'terbury, that then was both her Ordinary, and a man reputed of high wiſdom and 'learning, told me that ſhe had many great viſions: and of him I learned greater 'things, than ever I heard of the nun herſelf, &c.' (*) Maſters, and the reſt (thus commiſſioned by Archbiſhop Warham) finding her upon examination a ſtanch Catholic, that they might reap ſome benefit from the noiſe her inſpiration and revelations had made in the world, inſtructed her to ſay, in her counterfeit trances, that the Bleſſed Virgin had appeared to her, and that ſhe never could recover, till ſhe went and viſited her image, in the famous chapel that was dedicated to her, and was called the Chapel of our Lady, of Court of Strete (†). Accordingly, the day being made public that ſhe intended to go and viſit the image of the Virgin, a mob of above 3000 people gathered together to attend her there, as did likewiſe ſeveral perſons of quality of both ſexes, and the hopeful commiſſioners made a part of the ſolemn proceſſion (m). At her entrance ſhe was ſaluted in a hymn, with Ave Regina Cœlorum: when ſhe came before the image of our Lady, ſhe fell down before it in one of her trances, delivering therein rhymes, ſpeeches, &c. all tending to the honour of that Saint, and the Popiſh religion (n): ſhe wiſhed alſo that there were a ſinging Prieſt to attend the chapel; and ſaid, that ſhe herſelf was by the inſpiration of God called to be a Religious; and that it was alſo the will of our Lady, that Bocking ſhould be her Ghoſtly Father, but there were violent ſuſpicions of her incontinency, and that Bocking was her carnal as well as ſpiritual Father (o). It was now given out, that ſhe was, by the interceſſion of our Lady, miraculouſly recovered of her former diſtemper; and on the report made by the faithful commiſſioners, the Archbiſhop ordered the wench to be put into the nunnery of St. Sepulchre's in Canterbury, where ſhe feigned to have frequent returns of her former trances, viſions, and revelations, working (as was pretended) many miracles, on all ſuch as would but make a good profitable vow to our Lady, at Court at Strete. The deſign of the contrivance was now in ſome meaſure anſwered; the Prieſts had made plentiful gains of her, the Hermit thrived well on the offerings, and the convent was much pleaſed with the new Nun, who was in ſuch great credit and vogue, that there were ſeveral books written, about her ſanctity of life,

(g) Cotta's Trial of Witchcraft, p. 64.

(h) Hall's Chron. fol. 219.

(i) Burnet's Hiſt. of the Reformat. Vol. i. p. 150.

(k) Harris's Hiſt. of Kent, p. 25.

(l) Weever's Funeral Monuments, p. 550.

(*) See the Letter at large, in Bibliotheca Cotton.

(†) For Court at Strete.

(m) Burnet's Hiſt. of the Reformat. Vol. i. p. 150.

(n) Hall's Chron.

(o) Harris's Hiſt of Kent, p. 24. See the latter end of note [C].

[D] Among the reſt were Sir Thomas More, and Biſhop Fiſher, who are by ſome reported (though falſely) to have been afterwards appointed by the King to examine her.] Sanders (10) has the following paragraph, 'Quam fœminam, cum inter cæteros Roffenſis & Mo-'rus diligenter examinâſſent, confeſſi ſunt ſe nullo 'indicio deprehendere potuiſſe, eam fanatico ſpiritu '(quod in ejus invidiam tunc ſpargebatur) agitatam 'fuiſſe: Unde et ipſi in ſuſpicionem, apud Regem 'venerunt, quod cum illa ſentirente, &c.—Which wo-'man (ſpeaking of the Holy Maid of Kent) when, among 'the reſt, Biſhop Fiſher and More had carefully exa-'mined, they confeſſed, that they could not by any ſign 'or token find out, that ſhe was poſſeſſed by a fanatical 'ſpirit (as was then reported in her diſpraiſe), upon which 'they themſelves, as agreeing with her in ſentiments, be-'came ſuſpected by the King, &c.' Stapleton (11) in his life of Sir Thomas More is ſtill ſtronger in this reſpect; his words are theſe: 'Hujus rei invidia in 'Thomam Morum, qui illam, juſſu Regis examina-'verat, devolvitur, quod præter examinationis tem-'pora, ſecreto cum ipſam contulerit; quodque lite-'ras ad eam miſerat, ab eâque acceperit: Jamque 'adeo accuſatur, &c.—The blame of this affair turned 'chiefly on Sir Thomas More, who having examined 'her by the King's command, did nevertheleſs, after the 'time of examination was over, hold private con-'ferences with her, writing and receiving letters from 'her, for which reaſon, &c.' Both theſe authors, but eſpecially the laſt quoted, make Sir Thomas, as one among the reſt, appointed by the King to examine her and her aſſociates in this affair: But this ſeems highly improbable; for in the firſt place, we find no other circumſtances in hiſtory to corroborate it; and in the next place, Sir Thomas, in his long letter of juſtification to Cromwell (in note K) tells us, the manner of his being brought acquainted with her, the ſeveral conferences, &c. he had with herſelf and her accomplices about her; but throughout all his letters in no way intimates any command he ever had to viſit her, or inſpect into the affair, which had it been true, beſides being too material a point to be omitted by inadvertency, would have been too good an excuſe, to have been paſſed by in ſilence: nay, the paſſage marked with an aſteriſm thus *, in his long letter (note K) indicates directly the contrary.—In this letter he acknowledges he had eſteemed her highly, not ſo much out of any regard he had to her propheſies, but for the opinion he conceived of her holineſs and humility; but he adds (12) that he was then convinced, that ſhe was the moſt falſe, diſſembling hypocrite, that had been known; and guilty of the moſt deteſtable hypocriſy, and deviliſh diſſembling falſhood: he alſo believed that ſhe had communication with an evil ſpirit, and had, we find by his other letters, as well as this, a very mean opinion of her; looking on her as a weak woman, and in diſcourſe with his beloved daughter Roper, he commonly called her the Silly Nun (13): ——And Fiſher diſowned her when the cheat was diſcovered, though he had given her too much encouragement before (14): See note [F] for Fiſher's opinion of her, &c.

(10) De Schiſmate Anglicano, lib. i. p. 106, 107.

(11) Tres Thomæ Vitæ—In Vita Thomæ Mori, per Stapleton, p. 281.

(12) Burnet's Abridgment of the Hiſt. of the Reformation, Vol. i. p. 115. See his Letter in note [K].

(13) Roper's Letter in Sir Thomas More's Works, p. 1435.

(14) Burnet's Errors and Falſehoods of Sanders's Book of Engliſh Schiſm.

viſions, visions, revelations, and prophesies [E]: and thus matters went glibly on for divers years together. But now the Roman clergy being apprehensive, that the King's marriage with Anna Bullen would prove very detrimental to their religion; they set every engine at work to prevent it, and among the rest, Bocking and her other associates were prevailed upon, to persuade her to menace the King, with death or the loss of his crown: she, puffed up with her former success, and the credit she bore in the world as to her sanctity, &c. was hardy enough to be governed by this advice, and made no scruple to declare publicly, that God had revealed to her, that in case the King went on in the divorce, and married another wife while Queen Catherine was living, he should not be King of England a month longer, and in the reputation of Almighty God, not one hour longer, but should die a villain's death. This she said was revealed to her, in answer to the prayer she had put up to God, to know whether he approved of the King's proceedings or not (p). This coming to the ears of the Bishop of Rochester, and some others who adhered to the Queen's interests, they had frequent meetings with her and her accomplices [F], concealing what she spoke concerning the King, and some of them gave such credit to what she said, that they practised on many others, to draw them from their allegiance; and prevailed with several of the Fathers of the Nuns of Sion, and the Charter-House in London, and Shene, and of the Observants of Richmond, Canterbury, and Greenwich, and a great many other persons, which appeared, however, most signally at Greenwich [G]. Nor was this all: but the Fathers that were in the conspiracy, had agreed to publish these revelations in their sermons up and down the kingdom: for by Sir Thomas More's long letter, as well as by the act itself, we find, that Rich, Risby, and several other Monks and Friars, made it their business to travel up and down the country, artfully introducing and insinuating themselves, not only to the commonalty, but into every family of note, and all degrees of men. They every where took an opportunity to report, in the most advantageous manner and terms, the hypocritical holiness, and feigned revelations, miracles, &c. of this impostor. By this means they poisoned and prepossessed the minds of the people, not only against the King's intended marriage, but against the King himself, declaiming against the wickedness of his life, and declaring, that he had abused the sword and authority committed to him by Almighty God; stirring up rebellion, withdrawing and absolving his subjects from their allegiance to him, by publicly preaching and declaring, that he was no longer King according to revelation. They had also given notice of these her prophesies to the Pope's Embassadors, and had the maid brought (p) Hall's Chron. Cotta of Witchcraft p. 64. Compleat Hist. of England, Vol. i. an. 1534.

[E] That there were several books written about her sanctity of life, visions, revelations, and prophesies.] Among which books, one pamphlet contains twenty-four leaves, printed by Robert Red Man, intitled, A marvellous work done of late at Court of Strete in Kent, and published to the devout people of their time for their consolation. John Deering, a Monk in the monastery of Christ-Church (says the act) made, wrote, or caused to be wrote, sundry books, both great and small, both printed and written, concerning the particularities of the false and feigned hypocrisy and revelations of Elizabeth Barton in defence and great praise of the same:—And one Edward Thwaites, Gentleman, translated and wrote diverse quires and sheets of paper, concerning the said false, feigned revelations of the said Elizabeth: ——— And Thomas Laurence of Canterbury, being Register to the Archbishop, at the instance and desire of the said Edward Bocking, wrote a great book of the false and feigned miracles and revelations of the said Elizabeth in a fair hand, and ready to be a copy to the Printer; Laurence was also her interpreter to one of the Pope's Legates (15).

(15) Hall's Chron.

[F] This coming to the ears of the Bishop of Rochester, and some others who adhered to the Queen's interests, they had frequent meetings with her and her accomplices, &c.] Not to break into the life of Fisher *, and to avoid being tedious, we shall only give extracts of the two letters that passed between Cromwell and Fisher on this occasion, the original whereof may be found as in the margin. ——— Upon the first discovery of this cheat, Cromwell sent Fisher's brother to him, to reprove him, for his carriage in that affair, and to advise him to ask the King's pardon, for the encouragement he had given the Nun, which he was confident the King would grant him: But Fisher by letter (16) excused himself, and said, he had done nothing, but only tried whether her revelations were true or not? He confessed, that upon the reports he had heard, he was induced to have a high opinion of her; and that he had never discovered any falsehood in her; it is true, she had said some things to him concerning the King's death, which he had not revealed; but he thought it was not necessary to do it; because he knew she had told it to the King herself. She had named no person that should kill the King, but had only denounced it as a judgment of God on him; and he had reason to think that the King would have been offended with him, if he had spoken of it to him; and so he desired to be no more troubled with that matter. Upon that, Cromwell wrote him a sharp letter (17), wherein he shewed him that he had proceeded rashly in that affair, being so partial in the matter of the King's divorce, that he easily believed every thing that seemed to make against it: he shewed him also, how necessary it was to use great caution before extraordinary things should be received, or spread about as revelations; since otherwise the peace of the world would be in the hands of every bold and crafty impostor: yet, in the conclusion, he advised him again to ask the King's pardon for his rashness, and he assures him, that the King was ready to forgive that and every thing else by which he had offended him. But Fisher was obstinate and would make no submission, and so was included within the act; yet it was not executed till a new provocation drew him into further trouble.

(*) See the Article FISHER, (John) Bishop of Rochester.

(16) Bibliothec. Cotton. Cleop. E. 6. fol. 166. Collier's Eccles. Hist. Vol. ii. P. ii. p. 87.

(17) Cotton Libr. Cleopat. E. 4. Burnet's Hist of the Reformation, Vol. i. collect. 49.

[G] This appeared most signally at Greenwich.] The King chiefly residing there in the summer, one Peto, an Observant, being to preach in the King's chapel, denounced heavy judgments upon him to his face. His text was the Prophet Elijah's reproof of Ahab; where the fate of that Prince is denounced in these words: In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth, shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine. Peto quickly discovered what his meaning was in taking this text, and drove the application strong upon the King: he told him, notwithstanding the countenance and opinion of learned men, his second marriage was altogether unlawful; and as for himself, he was resolved, like Micajah, to deliver some unacceptable truths; though he was sensible he should suffer for his plain-dealing; but pretended a divine commission for his freedom. Upon presumption of this warrant, he told the King, his Highness was furnished with a great many Preachers to justify his marriage with Mrs. Boleyn; but that these were men of no sincerity, that courted the King's fancy, and applied to his inclination for wealth and promotion in the church. These were extraordinary sallies: however, the King bore the reprimand with great temper, and suffered Peto to go off without trouble (18).

(18) See more of this in Stowe, and Burnet's Hist. of the Reformat. &c.

to

to declare her revelations to them. They likewiſe ſent an account of them to Queen Catherine, to encourage her to ſtand out, and not ſubmit to the laws (q). Of this confederacy Thomas Abel (r) was one. The thing being now far from a ſecret, the King, who had hitherto deſpiſed it, thinking it now proper to take notice of it, ordered that, in November 1533, the maid and her accomplices (Richard Maſters, Dr. Bocking, Richard Deering, Henry Gold a parſon in London, Hugh Rich an Obſervant Friar, Richard Riſby, Thomas Gold, and Edward Thwaites, gentlemen, and Thomas Laurence) ſhould be brought into the Star-Chamber, where there was a numerous appearance of Lords, &c. Upon examination, they did all, without any rack or torture, confeſs the whole to be a contrivance and impoſture [H], and were firſt ſentenced to ſtand at St. Paul's Croſs, on a ſcaffold built on purpoſe for them, all ſermon-time, and after ſermon the King's officers were to give every one of them their bill of confeſſion, to be opened and publicly read by each before the people, which was accordingly done the Sunday after; the Biſhop of Bangor preaching, and giving an account of their treaſonable practices to the audience. This public manner was thought, upon good grounds, to be the beſt way to ſatisfy the people, of the impoſture of the whole affair; and it did very much convince them, that the cauſe muſt needs be bad, where ſuch methods were uſed to ſupport it (s). From thence they were carried to the Tower, where they lay till the meeting of the Parliament, during which time, ſome of their accomplices ſent meſſages to the Nun, to encourage her to deny all that ſhe had ſaid; and it is very probable, that the reports that went abroad, of her being forced or cheated into a confeſſion, made the King think it neceſſary to proceed more ſeverely againſt her. The thing being brought before, and conſidered in Parliament (t), it was judged a conſpiracy againſt the King's life and crown, and the Nun, Maſters, Bocking, Deering, Rich, Riſby, and Henry Gold, were attainted of high-treaſon; and Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter, Thomas Gold, Thomas Laurence, Edward Thwaites, John Adeſon, and Thomas Abel, were judged guilty of miſpriſion of treaſon, and to forfeit their goods and chattels to the King, and to be impriſoned during his pleaſure (u). But in the concluſion of the act, all others who had been corrupted in their allegiance, by theſe impoſtures, except the perſons abovenamed, were, at the earneſt interceſſion of Queen Anne, (as it is expreſſed in the act) pardoned. On the reading the bill about them the third time, on the ſixth of March, the Lords addreſſed the King to know his pleaſure, whether Sir Thomas More, and others mentioned in the act as accomplices, or at leaſt as concealers, might not be heard for themſelves in the Star-Chamber (*). By this we find, Sir Thomas More was at firſt inſerted in the bill of attainder, and though the King was at laſt, with ſome difficulty, prevailed upon to let his name be eraſed, yet he was nevertheleſs ſo highly diſpleaſed with him for the conference and correſpondence he had carried on with the Nun herſelf, and her accomplices, that this was afterwards laid hold on, and made the ground-work of his ruin [I]. And yet the care

(q) Burnet's Hiſt. of the Reformat. Vol. i. p. 151, &c.

(r) See the article ABLE or ABEL (THOMAS.)

(s) Burnet, Hall, &c. as before.

(t) 25 Hen. VIII. cap. xii.

(u) Godwin's Annals, p. 53.

(*) 12 in the Statute Book. 31 in the Record. 7 in the Journal.

[H] And upon examination, did all, without any rack or torture, confeſs the whole to be a contrivance and impoſture.] Sanders nevertheleſs has the following encomiums on her, calling her and thoſe that ſuffered with her, Martyrs. His words are, 'Celebre erat 'his diebus Elizabethæ Bartonæ Monialis, nomen, 'quæ propter famam ſanctitatis, Virgo ſancta Cantiana, vulgo appellabatur. Hæc aſſerebat Henricum 'non amplius jam eſſe Regem, eo quod ex Deo non 'regnaret, Mariam vero Catherinæ filiam, quæ tunc 'minus legitime nata habebatur, ad Regni gubernacula ſuo jure ſeſſuram eſſe: Ob quæ verba in 'jus vocata & in publicis regni comitiis una cum 'cæteris —— (qui omnes eam Spiritu Dei afflatam 'credebant) capitis condemnata fuit, & poſt ludibria 'publica, omnes conſtanter ſupplicium ultimum ſu-'bierunt, &c. (19) ——— Much about this time, 'Elizabeth Barton, the Nun, was in great eſteem, who 'was ſo highly famed for her ſanctity as to acquire the 'title of the Holy Nun of Kent, She affirmed that 'Henry the eighth was no longer King, becauſe he did not 'now reign of God (*), and that Mary, the daughter of 'Catherine, though then eſteemed illegitimate, ſhould ſuc-'ceed by her own right to the government of the kingdom; 'on account of which words ſhe was, with her accom-'plices, accuſed in Parliament, and there with them, 'who all believed her inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt, con-'demned to die; which, after having been publicly ex-'poſed, they all did with great conſtancy.'

Upon this paragraph of Mr. Sanders's, Burnet has the following evident remarks, viz. That her aſſociates knew ſhe was not inſpired, and that all that was given out about her was a contrivance of theirs, who had inſtructed her to play ſuch tricks; was proved by their own confeſſions and other evidences. Sanders alſo ſays, 'that they all died with great con-'ſtancy; and in the margin calls them ſeven Mar-'tyrs.' ——— Now the Nun herſelf acknowledged the impoſture at her death, and laid the heavieſt weight of it on the Prieſts that ſuffered with her, who had taught her the cheat; ſo that they died both for treaſon and impoſture; and this being Sanders's faith, as appears by his works, they were indeed martyrs for it (20).

(19) Sanderus de Schiſmate Anglicano, p. 196.

(*) Alluding to her Prophecy.

[I] The King was at laſt, with ſome difficulty, prevailed upon, that no bill of attainder ſhould paſs againſt him: he was nevertheleſs ſo highly diſpleaſed with him, &c. that it was made the ground-work of his ruin.] 'Now after the report made of this their exa-'mination of Sir Thomas to the King, by the Lord 'Chancellor and the reſt, King Henry was ſo highly 'diſpleaſed with Sir Thomas More, that he plainly 'told them, that he was reſolutely determined that 'the aforeſaid Parliament bill ſhould undoubtedly paſs 'againſt them. Yet to this the Lord High Chancellor and the reſt ſaid, that they had perceived that 'all the Upper-Houſe, was ſo powerfully bent to hear 'Sir Thomas ſpeak in his own defence, that if he 'were not put out of the bill, it would be utterly overthrown, and have no force againſt the reſt; which 'words although the King heard them ſpeak, yet needs would he have his own will therein, adding, 'that he would be perſonally preſent himſelf at the 'paſſing of it. But Lord Audley and the reſt, among 'whom was Cromwell (*), ſeeing him ſo violently bent 'upon it, fell down on their knees, and beſought his 'Majeſty not to do ſo; conſidering, that if in his own 'preſence he ſhould be confronted and receive an o-'verthrow, it would not only encourage his ſubjects 'ever after to contemn him, but alſo redound to his 'diſhonour for ever throughout Chriſtendom; and 'they doubted not in time, but to find ſome other fitter matter againſt him; for in this caſe of the Nun, 'they ſaid all men accounted him ſo clear and inno-'cent, that for his behaviour therein, every one rec-'koned him rather worthy of praiſe than of reproof; 'at care and caution he uſed in this affair was very extraordinary, and his grandſon ſays (w), 'That he demeaned himſelf ſo diſcreetly in all his talk with her, that he deſerved no blame, 'but rather great commendation, as was afterwards evidently proved, when it was ſore 'laid to his charge.' The ſame was alſo very conſpicuous from his letter of juſtification to Secretary Cromwell, which lays open the artifices, by which he was drawn in to have ſo high an opinion of her, as he at firſt had, as likewiſe that he was at laſt thoroughly convinced of the forgery and impoſture of the whole: but as this letter contains ſeveral remarkable paſſages of the Nun herſelf, and will give ſome light into her character and genius, as well as into thoſe of the clergy that adhered to the intereſt of the Court of Rome, we think it not improper to give it at length, as below in note [K]. Soon after the (w) More's Life of Sir Thomas More, p. 209.

(20) Burnet's Appendix concerning the Errors and Falſehoods in Sanders's Book of the Engliſh Schiſm, p. 288, 289.

(*) Which alſo appears by Sir Thomas's Letters. See his Works, p. 1423.

'at which words of theirs, the King, at their earneſt 'perſuaſion, was contented to condeſcend to their pe-'tition; yet was not his diſpleaſure againſt Sir Tho-'mas More any whit aſſwaged, but much more in-'cenſed (21).' Sir Thomas, however, wrote a letter to the King upon that occaſion, to this effect (22).

He clears himſelf of having any communication with the Maid of Kent to the King's diſpleaſure (23); and for this he refers his Majeſty to his long letter lately written to Secretary Cromwell; he takes the freedom to tell the King, that if he ſhould miſcarry and fall under the forfeiture of the Law, either by bill of attainder or otherwiſe, he ſhould have the ſatisfaction, after his own ſhort life, and the King's long one (as he wiſhes it) was over, after this he ſaid, he ſhould have the ſatisfaction to meet his Highneſs once again, and be merry with him in Heaven, where, among other pleaſures, this would be one, that his Majeſty would clearly ſee there, whatever his opinion might be now, that he had always been his faithful ſubject. In the cloſe of the letter he deſires the King, that no bill of attainder may paſs againſt him, becauſe it muſt be drawn upon untrue ſuggeſtions, miſreport him to the world, and ſtick a blemiſh upon his memory.

(21) More's Life of Sir Thomas More, p. 216, 217. Roper's Life of Sir Thomas More, p. 36. Hoddeſdon's Hiſt. of Sir Thomas More, chap. xii. p. 83. ibid. xxxix. p. 87.

(22) Biblioth. Cotton. Cleop. E. 6. fol. 181.

(23) Sir Thomas More's Works, by Raſtal, p. 1423.

[K] We thought it not improper to give it at length.]

'Right Worſhipful,

Taken from the Norfolk MS. in the Royal Society Library.

'AFTER my moſt hearty recommendations, with 'like thanks for your goodneſs, in accepting my 'rude long letter; I perceive that of your farther 'goodneſs and favour towards me, it liked your 'Maſterſhip to break with my ſon Roper, of that, 'that I had had communication, not only of divers 'that had acquaintance with the lewd Nun of Canter-'bury, but alſo with herſelf; and had over that, by 'my writing declaring favour towards her, given her 'advice and council; of which my demeanour, that 'it liked you to be content to take the labour and the 'pain to hear, by myne own writing, the truth, I 'very heartily thank you, and reckon myſelf therein 'right deeply beholden to you.

'It is, I ſuppoſe, about eight or nine years ago, 'ſith I heard of that houſe-wife firſt, at which time 'the Biſhop of Canterbury, that then was, God 'aſſoyl his ſoul, ſent unto the King's Grace a roll 'of paper, in which were written certain words 'of hers, that ſhe had, as report was then made, 'at ſundry times ſpoken in her trances; whereup-'on it pleaſed the King's Grace, to deliver me the 'roll, commanding me to look thereon, and after-'wards ſhew him what I thought therein; where-'unto at another time, when his Highneſs aſked me, 'I told him, in good faith, I found nothing in theſe 'words, that I could any thing regard or eſteem; for 'ſeeing that ſome part fell in rhyme, and that, God 'wot, full rude alſo, for any reaſon God wots that 'I ſaw therein; a right ſimple woman, might, in 'my mind, ſpeak it of her own wit, well enough: 'Howbeit, I ſaid, becauſe it was conſtantly reported 'for a truth, God wrought in her, and that a miracle 'was ſhewed upon her, I durſt not nor would not be 'bold, in judging the matter; and the King's Grace, 'ſome thought, eſteemed the matter as light, as after 'it proved lewd.

'From that time till about Chriſtmas was twelve-'month, albeit that there was continually much talk-'ing of her, and her holineſs, I never heard of any talk 'rehearſed, either of revelation of her's or miracles, 'ſaving that I heard divers times in my Lord Cardi-'nal's days, that ſhe had been both with his Lord-'ſhip and with the King's Grace, but what ſhe ſaid 'either to the one or the other, upon my faith I 'never heard any one word. Now, as I was about 'to tell you, about Chriſtmas was twelve-month, Fa-'ther Riſby, Friar Obſervant, then of Canterbury, 'lodged one night at mine houſe, where, after ſupper, 'a little before he went to his chamber, he fell in 'communication with me of the Nun, giving her 'commendation of holineſs, and that it was wonder-'ful to ſee and underſtand the works that God 'wrought in her; which thing I anſwered, that I 'was glad to hear it, and thanked God thereof: 'Then he told me, that ſhe had been with my Lord 'Legate in his life, and with the King's Grace too, 'and that ſhe had told my Lord Legate a revelation 'of her's of three ſwords, that God had put into my 'Lord Legate's hand, which if he ordered not well, 'God would put it ſore to his charge; the firſt he 'ſaid was, the ordering the ſpirituality under the Pope 'as Legate; the ſecond, rule he bore, in order of the 'temporality under the King as his Chancellor; and 'the third ſhe ſaid was, the meddling he was put in 'truſt with by the King, concerning the great mat-'ter of his marriage; and therewithal, I ſaid unto 'him, that any revelation of the King's matters, I 'would not hear of. I doubt not but the goodneſs 'of God ſhould direct his Highneſs with his grace 'and wiſdom, that the thing ſhould take ſuch end as 'God ſhould be pleaſed with, to the King's honour 'and the ſurety of the realm: When he heard me 'ſay theſe words or the like, he ſaid unto me, that 'God had ſpecially commanded her to pray for the 'King; and forthwith he break again into her reve-'lations concerning the Cardinal, that his ſoul was to 'be ſaved by her mediation, and without any other 'communication went into his chamber; and he and 'I never talked any more of any ſuch manner of 'matter; nor ſince his departing on the morrow, I 'never ſaw him afterwards to my remembrance, till 'I ſaw him at St. Paul's Croſs.

'After this, about Shrovetide, there came unto 'me a little before ſupper, Father Rich, Fryar Obſer-'vant of Richmond; and as we fell in talking, I 'aſked him of Father Riſby, how he did? Upon that 'occaſion he aſked me, whether Father Riſby had any 'thing ſhewed me of the holy Nun of Kent? And I 'ſaid yea; and that I was very glad to hear of her 'virtue: I would not, quoth he, tell you again what 'you have heard of him already; but I have heard 'and known many great graces that God hath 'wrought in her, and in other folk by her, which I 'would gladly tell you, if I thought you had not heard 'them already; and therewith he aſked me, whether 'Father Riſby had told me any thing of her being 'with my Lord Cardinal? And I ſaid yea; then he 'told you (quoth he) of the three ſwords? yea, verily, 'quoth I: Did he tell you (quoth he) of the revela-'tions ſhe had concerning the King's Grace? Nay, 'forſooth (quoth I), nor if he would have done, I 'would not have given him the hearing: nor verily, 'no more I would indeed; for ſith ſhe have been with 'the King's Grace herſelf, and told him, methought 'it a thing needleſs to tell me, or any man elſe: 'And when father Riſby perceived, that I would not 'hear her revelation concerning the King's Grace, he 'talked on a little of her virtue, and let her revela-'tions alone; and therewith my ſupper was ſet upon 'the board, where I required him to ſit with me; 'but he would in no wiſe ſtay, but departed to Lon-'don. After that night I talked with him twice; 'once in mine own houſe, another time in his own 'garden at the Fryars, at every time a great ſpace, 'but not of any revelations touching the King's Grace, 'but only of other mean folk I know not of whom; 'which things, ſome were very ſtrange, and ſome were 'very the condemnation of theſe delinquents, viz. on the twenty-firſt of April (x), the Nun, and Bocking, Maſters, Deering, Riſby, and Gold (Rich is not named, being perhaps dead or (y) pardoned) were drawn to Tyburn, where the Nun made a ſpeech, as in the note below, (x) Several authors have it the twentieth of April.

(y) Hall's Chron.

‘ very childiſh. But albeit that he ſaid he had ſeen her ‘ lie in a trance in great pains, and that he had at other ‘ times taken great ſpiritual comfort in her communi- ‘ cation; yet did he never tell me that ſhe had told ‘ him thoſe tales herſelf; for if he had, I would for ‘ the tale of Mary Magdalene, which he told me, and ‘ for the tale of the hoſtie, which I have heard ſhe ‘ hath ſaid, ſhe was houſeled at the King's maſs at ‘ Calice; if I had heard it of him, as told unto him- ‘ ſelf by her mouth for a revelation, I would have both ‘ liked him and her the worſe. But whether ever I ‘ heard the ſame tale of Rich or of Riſby, or of nei- ‘ ther of them both, but of ſome other man, ſince ‘ ſhe was in hold, in good faith I cannot tell; but I ‘ wot well, when and whereſoever I heard it, me- ‘ thought it a tale too marvellous to be true, and very ‘ likely that ſhe had told ſome man of her dream, ‘ who told it out for a revelation; and, in effect, I ‘ little doubted but that ſome of thoſe tales that were ‘ told of her were untrue: but yet, ſince I never ‘ heard them reported as ſpoken by her mouth, I ‘ thought, nevertheleſs, that many of them might be ‘ true, and ſhe be a virtuous woman too; as ſome lies ‘ be peradventure written of ſome that be Saints in ‘ Heaven, and yet many miracles indeed done by them ‘ for all that.

‘ After this, I being upon a day at Sion, and talk- ‘ ing with divers of the Fathers together at the grate, ‘ they ſhewed me that ſhe had been with them, and ‘ ſhewed me divers things, that ſome of them miſliked ‘ in her, and in this talking they wiſhed I had ſpoken ‘ with her, and ſaid, they would fain ſee how I ſhould ‘ like her: whereupon afterwards when I heard ſhe ‘ was there again, I came thither to ſee her and ‘ to ſpeak with herſelf. At which communication ‘ had in a little chapel, there were none preſent but ‘ we two. In the beginning where I ſhewed, that my ‘ coming to her was not of any curious mind, any ‘ thing to know of ſuch thing as folks talked that it ‘ pleaſed God to reveal and ſhew unto her; but for ‘ the great virtue I had heard ſo many years, every day ‘ more and more ſpoken and reported of her, I there- ‘ fore had a great mind to ſee her and be acquainted ‘ with her, that ſhe might have ſomewhat the more ‘ occaſion to remember me to God in her devotion and ‘ prayers; whereunto ſhe gave me a good virtuous ‘ anſwer, that as God did of his goodneſs far better ‘ by her than ſhe, a poor wretch, was worthy; ſo ſhe ‘ feared, that many folks yet beſides that, ſpoke of ‘ their own favourable minds many things for her far ‘ above the truth; and that of me, ſhe had many ſuch ‘ things heard, that already ſhe prayed for me, and ‘ ever would, whereof I heartily thanked her. I ‘ ſaid unto her, Madam, one Hellen, a maid at Tot- ‘ nam, of whoſe trances and revelations, there hath ‘ been much talking, ſhe hath been with me of late, ‘ and ſhewed me that ſhe was with you; and that ‘ after the rehearſal of ſuch viſions as ſhe had ſeen, ‘ you ſhewed her that they were no revelations, but ‘ plain illuſions of the Divel, and adviſed her to caſt ‘ them out of her mind; and verily ſhe gave therein ‘ good credit unto you, and thereupon hath left to ‘ lean any longer to ſuch viſions of her own, where- ‘ upon ſhe ſayeth, ſhe findeth your words true; for ever ‘ ſince ſhe has been the leſs viſited with ſuch things, as ‘ ſhe was wont to be before: To this, ſhe anſwered me, ‘ forſooth, Sir, there is in this point no praiſe unto me; ‘ but the goodneſs of God, as it appears, hath wrought ‘ much meekneſs in her ſoul, which hath taken my rude ‘ warning ſo well, and not grudged to hear her ſpirit ‘ and her viſions reproved. I liked her, in good faith, ‘ better for this anſwer, than for many of thoſe things ‘ that I heard reported of her. Afterwards ſhe told ‘ me, upon that occaſion, how great need folk have ‘ that are viſited with ſuch viſions, to take heed, and ‘ prove well of what ſpirit they come of; and in that ‘ communication ſhe told me, that of late the Divel, ‘ in the likeneſs of a bird, was flying and fluttering ‘ about her in her chamber, and ſuffered himſelf to be ‘ taken, and being in hands, ſuddenly changed in their ‘ ſight that were preſent, unto ſuch a ſtrange, ugly- ‘ faſhioned bird, that they were all afraid, and threw ‘ him out at a window.

‘ For concluſion, we talked no word of the King's ‘ Grace, nor any great perſonages elſe, nor in effect, ‘ of any man or woman, but of herſelf and myſelf; ‘ but after no long communication had, for as ſoon as ‘ ever we met, my time came to go home, I gave her ‘ a double ducat, and prayed her to pray for me and ‘ mine, and ſo departed from her, and never ſpake ‘ with her after. Howbeit, of a truth I had a great, ‘ good opinion of her, and had her in great eſtima- ‘ tion, as you ſhall perceive by the letter I wrote unto ‘ her: for afterwards, becauſe I had often heard, ‘ that many right worſhipful folks, as well men as ‘ women, uſed to have much communication with ‘ her; and many folks are of nature inquiſitive and ‘ curious, whereby they fall ſometimes into ſuch talk- ‘ ing, as better were to forbear, of which things I no- ‘ thing thought, while I talked with her of charity; ‘ therefore I wrote her a letter thereof, which, ſith it ‘ may be peradventure that ſhe brake or loſt, I ſhall ‘ inſert the very copy thereof in this preſent letter, ‘ theſe were the very words:

‘ Good Madam, and my right dearly beloved Siſter ‘ in the Lord,

‘ AFTER moſt hearty commendations, I ſhall ‘ beſeech you to take my good mind in good ‘ worth; and pardon me, that I am ſo homely, as of ‘ myſelf unrequired, and alſo without neceſſity, to ‘ give counſel to you, of whom, for thy good inſpira- ‘ tions and great revelations, that it liketh Almighty ‘ God of his goodneſs, to give and ſhew to many ‘ wiſe and well learned, and very virtuous folk, teſtify, ‘ I myſelf have need, for the comfort of my ſoul, to ‘ require and aſk advice; for ſurely, good Madam, ‘ ſith it pleaſeth God ſometimes to ſuffer ſuch as are ‘ far under, and of little eſtimation, to give yet fruit- ‘ ful advertiſement to ſuch as are in the light of the ‘ Spirit far above them, that there were between them ‘ no compariſon, as he ſuffered his prophet Moſes to ‘ be, in ſome things, adviſed and counſelled by Jethro; ‘ I cannot, for the love that in our Lord I bear you, ‘ refrain to put you in remembrance of one thing, ‘ which, in my poor mind, I think highly neceſſary ‘ to be by your wiſdom conſidered, referring to the ‘ end and the order thereof, to God and his Holy ‘ Spirit to direct you. Good Madam, I doubt not ‘ but you remember, that, in the beginning of my ‘ communication with you, I ſhewed you that I never ‘ was, nor would be curious of any knowledge of other ‘ mens matters; and leaſt of all of any matter of ‘ Princes, or of the realm, in caſe it ſo were that God ‘ had, as to many folks beforetime, he hath any time ‘ revealed unto you ſuch things; I ſaid unto your ‘ Ladyſhip, I was not only not deſirous to hear of, ‘ but alſo would not hear of. Now, Madam, I con- ‘ ſider well, that many folk deſire to ſpeak with you, ‘ which was not all, peradventure, of my mind, in ‘ this point, but ſome hap to be curious and inquiſitive ‘ of things that little pertain unto their parts; and ‘ ſome might, peradventure, hap to talk of ſuch things ‘ as might afterwards turn to much harm, as I think ‘ you have heard how the late Duke of Buckingham, ‘ moved with ſome one who was reputed a holy Monk, ‘ and had ſuch talking with him, as after was a great ‘ part of his deſtruction, and diſinheriting of his blood, ‘ and great ſlander and infamy of religion. It ſuffices ‘ me, good Madam, to put you in remembrance of ‘ ſuch things, as I nothing doubt your wiſdom, and ‘ the Spirit of God ſhall keep you from talking with ‘ any perſon, eſpecially with high perſons of ſuch ‘ manner and things, as pertain to Princes affairs or ‘ the ſtate of the realm, but only to commune and talk ‘ with any perſon, high or low, of ſuch a manner of ‘ things, as may to the ſoul be profitable for you to ‘ ſhew, and for them to know. And thus my good ‘ Lady, and dearly beloved Siſter in our Lord, I make below, acknowledging her crime, and the juſtneſs of her ſentence [L], and was then executed with her abovenamed five accomplices, who were all beheaded, and their heads ſet

‘ an end of this my needleſs advertiſement unto you, ‘ whom the Bleſſed Trinity preſerve and increaſe in ‘ grace, and put in your mind to recommend me and ‘ mine unto him in your devout prayer :

‘ At Chelſea this Tueſday, by the hand of ‘ Your hearty loving Brother, and Beadſman,

‘ THOMAS MORE, Kt.

‘ At the receipt of this letter, ſhe anſwered my ſervant, that ſhe heartily thanked me: ſoon after this, there came to mine houſe the Prior of the Charter Houſe at Sheen, and one Brother Williams with him, who nothing talked to me but of her, and of the great joy they took in her virtue; but of any of her revelations they had no communication: but at another time Brother Williams came unto me, with a long tale of her being at the houſe of a Knight in Kent, that was ſore troubled with temptations to deſtroy himſelf; and none other thing we talked of, nor could have done of likelihood, though we had tarried together much longer, he took ſo great pleaſure, good man, to tell the tale with all the circumſtances at length. When I came again another day to Sion, on a day in which there was profeſſion, ſome of the Fathers aſked me how I liked the ſaid Nun, and I anſwered, that in good faith I liked her very well in her talking: howbeit, quoth I, ſhe's never the nearer tried by that, for, I aſſure you, ſhe were likely to be very bad if ſhe ſeemed good, e'er I ſhould think her other, till ſhe happened to be proved naught; and, in good faith, that is my manner indeed, except I were ſet to ſearch and examine the truth, upon likelihood of ſome cloaked evil; for in that caſe, although I nothing ſuſpected the perſon myſelf, yet no leſs than if I ſuſpected him ſo, I would, as far as my wit would ſerve me, ſearch to find out the truth, as you yourſelf hath done very prudently in this matter, wherein you have done in my mind, to your great laud and praiſe, a very meritorious deed, in bringing forth to light ſuch deteſtable hypocriſy, whereby every other wretch may take warning, and be feared to ſet forth their own deviliſh diſſembled falſehoods, under the manner and colour of the wonderful work of God; for verily this woman ſo handled herſelf, with the help of that evil ſpirit that inſpired her, that, after her own confeſſion declared at Paul's Croſs, when I ſent word by my ſervant to the Prior of the Charter Houſe, that ſhe was undoubtedly proved a falſe deceiving hypocrite, the good man had had ſo good opinion of her ſo long, that he could at the firſt ſcarcely believe me therein: howbeit, it was not he alone that thought her ſo very good, but many another right good man beſides, as little marvel was, upon ſo good report, till ſhe was proved naught: I remember me farther, that in communication with Father Rich and me, I counſelled him, that in ſuch ſtrange things as concerned ſuch folk as had come unto her, to whom, as ſhe ſaid, ſhe had told the cauſes of their coming, e'er themſelves ſpake thereof, and ſuch good fruit, as they ſaid, that many men had received by her prayer, he and ſuch other ſo reported it, and thought that the knowledge thereof ſhould much return to the glory of God, ſhould firſt cauſe the things to be well and ſure examined by the Ordinary, and ſuch as had authority thereunto, ſo that it might be ſurely known whether the things were true or not, and that there were no letters intermixt among them, or elſe the letters might after hap to aweigh the credence of the things that were true; and when he told me the tale of Mary Magdalen, I ſaid unto him, Father Rich, that ſhe is a good virtuous woman in good faith I hear ſo many folk ſo report, that I verily think it true, and think it well likely, that God wrought ſome good and great things by her; but yet are you wot well theſe ſtrange tales no part of our Creed, and therefore, before you ſee them ſurely proved, you ſhall have my poor counſel not to wed yourſelf ſo far forth to the credence of them, as to report them very ſurely for true, leaſt that if it ſhould hap, that they were afterwards proved falſe, it might miniſh your eſtimation in your preaching, whereof might grow great loſs: to this he thanked me for my counſel, but how he uſed it after, that I cannot tell.

‘ Thus have I, good Mr. Cromwell, fully declared to you, as far as myſelf can call to remembrance, all that ever I have done or ſaid in this matter; wherein I am ſure, that not one of them all ſhall tell you any further thing of effect; for if any of them, or any man elſe, report of them, as I truſt verily no man will, I wot well, truly no man can, any word or deed by me ſpoken or done, touching any breach of my legal truth and duty towards my moſt redoubted Sovereign and natural liege Lord; I will come to mine anſwer, and make it good, in ſuch wiſe as becometh a true poor man to do, that whoſoever any ſuch thing ſhall ſay, ſhall therein ſay untrue; for I neither in this matter have done evil or ſaid evil, nor ſo much as any evil thing thought, but only have been glad and rejoiced of them that were reported for good, which condition I ſhall nevertheleſs keep toward all other good folk, for the falſe cloaked hypocriſy of any of theſe, no more than I ſhall eſteem Judas the true Apoſtle for Judas the falſe Traytor.

‘ But ſo propoſe I to bear myſelf in every man's company while I live, that neither good man or bad, neither Monk, Fryar, nor Nun, nor other man or woman in this world, ſhall make me digreſs from my truth and faith either towards God, or towards my natural Prince, by the grace of Almighty God; and as you therein find me true, ſo I heartily therein pray you to continue toward me your favour and good will, as you ſhall be ſure of my poor daily prayer, for other pleaſures can I not do you; and may the Bleſſed Trinity, both bodily and ghoſtly, long preſerve and proſper you.

‘ I pray you pardon me that I write not unto you of mine own hand-writing, for verily I am compelled to forbear writing for a while, by reaſon of this diſeaſe of mine, whereof the chief occaſion is grown, as it is thought, by the ſtooping and leaning on my breaſt that I have uſed in writing; and thus eftſoons I beſeech our Lord long to preſerve you.’

Concerning this Letter, a curious diſcovery has been made, viz. That Raſtal, who publiſhed Sir Thomas More's works in Queen Mary's time, hath omitted the above long letter concerning the Nun, though he hath printed other letters of Sir Thomas's, to which this more immediately relates. Now it is a little unaccountable, that the referring letters ſhould be preſerved, and the original letter, referred to in all the others, ſuppreſſed—— but it is highly probable this was done on purpoſe, and with deſign: for in Queen Mary's time they had a mind to magnify that ſtory of the Nun, and canonize her, ſince ſhe was thought to have ſuffered on her mother's account, and was called a Martyr to her mother's marriage, and there was no want of miracles to juſtify it; therefore a letter ſo plain and full againſt her was thought fit to be kept out of the way: and that one of their Martyrs might not leſſen the eſteem of another, it was thought fit to ſuppreſs it: this, however, Burnet acknowledges to be only a conjecture, leaving it to the judgment of the reader to determine (24).

[L] The Nun made a ſpeech, acknowledging her crime and the juſtneſs of her ſentence.] Her dying words, as recorded in Hall's Chronicle, are, Hither I am come to die, and I have not only been the cauſe of mine own death, which moſt juſtly I have deſerved, but alſo I am the cauſe of the death of all thoſe perſons which at this time here ſuffer; and yet to ſay the truth, I am not to be blamed, conſidering that it was well known to theſe learned men, that I was a poor wench without learning, and therefore they might eaſily have perceived, that the things that were done by me could not proceed in no ſuch ſort: but their capacities and learning could right well judge from whence they proceeded, and that they were altogether feigned; but becauſe the thing which I have feigned was profitable to them, therefore they much praiſed ſet up in different parts of the town: as to the Nun's head, Stowe informs us, that was ſet upon London Bridge.

(24) Burnet's Hiſtory of the Reformation, Vol. i. Book i. p. 149.

praiſed me, and bore me in hand, that it was the Holy Ghoſt, and not I, that did them; and then I, being puffed up with their praiſes, fell into a certain pride and fooliſh fantaſie with myſelf, and thought I might feign what I would, which thing hath brought me to this caſe; and for which now I cry God and the King's Highneſs moſt heartily mercy, and deſire you all good people to pray God to have mercy on me, and on all them that ſuffer here (25). O.

(25) Hall's Chronicle.

BARWICK (John), an eminent Engliſh Divine in the XVIIth century, and Dean of St. Paul's. He was born at Wetherſlack, a little village in Weſtmoreland, the twentieth of April, 1612 (a). His father's name was George Barwick, and his mother's, Jane Barrow. They were far from being conſiderable, either for rank or riches; but were otherwiſe both of them perſons of great merit, and remarkably happy in their family [A]. John was the third ſon, and his parents intended him from his childhood for the Church. In his nonage he went to ſchool in the neighbourhood, and loſt much time under maſters deficient alike in diligence and in learning. At length he was ſent to Sedberg ſchool in Yorkſhire, where, under the care of a tolerable maſter, he gave early marks both of genius and piety (b) [B]. In the year 1631, and the eighteenth of his own age, he was admitted of St. John's College at Cambridge, under the tuition of Mr. Thomas Fothergill, who proved at once a Guardian and a Preceptor, ſupplying his neceſſities as well as inſtructing him in learning (c). By this Gentleman's help Mr. Barwick quickly diſtinguiſhed himſelf to ſuch a degree in his college, that when a diſpute aroſe about the election of a Maſter, which at laſt came to ſuch a height as to be heard before the Privy-Council, the college choſe Mr. Barwick, then little above twenty, to manage for them, by which he not only became very conſpicuous in the Univerſity, but was alſo taken notice of at Court, and by the Miniſtry (d). In 1635 he became Bachelor of Arts while theſe affairs were ſtill depending [C]. April the 5th, 1636, he was created Fellow without oppoſition, though a party was already formed againſt him in the college, by ſuch as were inclined to Puritaniſm. In 1638 he took the degree of Maſter of Arts. When the civil war broke out, and the King wrote a letter to the Univerſity, acquainting them that he was in extreme want, Mr. Barwick concurred with thoſe loyal perſons who firſt ſent him a ſmall ſupply in money, and afterwards their college plate (e), and upon information had, that Mr. Cromwell, afterwards the Protector, lay with a party of foot at a place called Lower Hedges, between Cambridge and Huntington, in order to make himſelf maſter of this ſmall treaſure, Mr. Barwick made one of the party of horſe, which conveyed it through by-roads ſafely to (a) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 1. Lloyd's Memoirs of Loyal Sufferers, where it is (perhaps by miſtake) printed Wappenſlacke, p. 610.

(b) Ibid. p. 23.

(c) E Regiſtro Coll. S. Johan. Cantab.

(d) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 9. See alſo the Engliſh Tranſlation of that Life, p. 11. Vit. Richard Holdſworth, à Richard Pearſon. Script. & ſuis Oper. præfix.

(e) Fuller's Hiſt. of the Univerſity of Cambridge, p. 167. Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 16.

[A] Perſons of great merit and remarkably happy in their family.] Mr. George Barwick was deſcended of a very ancient family of that name in Lancaſhire. The village of Wetherſlack, where his ſmall eſtate lay, is about ſix or ſeven miles from Kendal in Weſtmoreland, but is conſiderably nearer the borders of Lancaſhire. Old Mr. Barwick was a great œconomiſt, and, though he bred up a large family, made a handſome figure, and did a great deal of good in the neighbourhood where he dwelt. He was bleſſed with five ſons, who lived to mens eſtate, beſides one who died young. Nicholas and William, the two eldeſt, ſettled in the country, each having a farm; Nicholas that which deſcended from his anceſtors; and William another purchaſed by his father. John and Peter we have particularly accounted for, and as for the youngeſt, Edward, he was bred a Herald-painter, and became a very eminent man in his profeſſion; as well as very remarkable for his loyalty and ſteady courage, as will be obſerved in the courſe of this life (1).

(1) Life of Dr. John Barwick, p. 2, 3, 4.

[B] He gave early marks both of genius and piety.] The maſter of this ſchool at that time was Mr. Gilbert Nelſon, who, we are told, taught his ſcholars Latin very well, and Greek indifferently. Dr. Peter Barwick ſays, 'He was a very pleaſant, facetious man, and by his 'merry comments rendered ſo very agreeable what uſes 'to give moſt uneaſineſs in learning, that his ſcholars 'became fond of their books though never ſo hard. 'They were wonderfully delighted, when he undertook to explain any of the dramatic Poets, particularly Terence or Plautus; for whatſoever in them 'ſeemed difficult to the weaker capacity of the boys, he 'expounded with ſo much wit and merriment, that all 'who had the leaſt ingenuity were extremely in love 'with that ſort of learning. In order alſo more clearly 'and thoroughly to explain the meaning of thoſe Poets, 'whether Comedians or Tragedians, he uſed to teach 'ſuch of his ſcholars as he found fit for it, to tread 'the ſtage now and then for their diverſion, and act 'the ſeveral parts of thoſe plays; without which kind 'of knowledge he knew he might fit them for the lives 'of Monks or hermits, but not to bear any offices in 'the ſtate, or perform the duties of civil life. Among 'ſuch as were moſt ſkilful in acting plays, he took 'greateſt delight in John Barwick, and was mightily 'pleaſed to ſee him act ſo much to the life, the 'part of Hercules raving in the tragedy, as to gain 'the applauſe of all the ſpectators. This ſhewed that 'our young ſcholar had now laid aſide all childiſh 'ſports, and was fit to converſe with men before he 'left ſchool; for Hercules's buſkins (as the proverb 'ſays) are not fit for children. But he never ſuffered 'theſe diverſions to interrupt the ſteady courſe of 'piety, to which he had been remarkably accuſtomed 'from his childhood; for I remember when at a 'breaking-up for Eaſter holidays, he came home from 'ſchool (as is uſual at thoſe great feſtivals), he ſpent 'all Good-Friday at church in devotion, ſuitable to 'that ſolemn occaſion; when every one elſe came 'home after morning prayer, and went not to church 'again till evening ſervice (2).'

(2) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 6, 7.

[C] While theſe affairs were ſtill depending.] The author of the Engliſh tranſlation of Doctor Barwick's Life, ſeems to be a good deal embarraſſed as to the chronology of this fact. Dr. Gwin, the old maſter, died in June 1633, upon which a ſtruggle followed between Dr. Lane and Mr. Holdſworth, wherein though the latter is thought to have had a clear majority of legal votes, yet it was held moſt for the peace of the Univerſity to ſet both candidates aſide; and, in conſequence of this expedient, Dr. Beale was admitted Maſter the 20th of February, 1633-4 (3). Now the difficulty lies here: Mr. Barwick at this time was not ſo much as Bachelor of Arts, nor is there any entry in the college books, of his being appointed Proctor for the ſociety upon this occaſion. I am therefore inclined to believe, there might be a ſubſequent hearing before the Council, in relation to the ſettlement of St. John's college, at which Mr. Barwick might aſſiſt. Dr. Holdſworth was ſoon after Maſter of Emanuel-college, and both Dr. Beale and he were ejected by the Parliament (4).

(3) E Regiſt. Coll. S. Johan. Cantab.

(4) Fuller's Hiſt. of the Univerſity of Cambridge, p. 170. See alſo the Latin Life of Dr. Rich. Holdſworth, prefixed to his Lectures by Dr. Pearſon.

Notting-

Nottingham, where his Majeſty had ſet up his ſtandard (f). By this act of loyalty the Parliament was ſo provoked, that they ſent Cromwell with a body of troops to quarter in the Univerſity, where they committed ſuch outrages, as would ſcarcely have been credible in ſucceeding times, if Mr. Barwick, in conjunction with many other learned members of that celebrated ſociety, had not tranſmitted an authentic account of them to poſterity (g) [D]. Mr. Barwick alſo publiſhed a Piece againſt the Covenant, and having thereby provoked ſuch as were then in power, he thought proper to retire to London, there to render all the ſervice that he was able to the royal cauſe (h) [E]. Soon after he ſettled there, he was intruſted with the management of the King's moſt private concerns, and carried on with great ſecrecy a conſtant correſpondence between London and Oxford, where the King's head-quarters then were: a nice and arduous employment, and for which there never was a man perhaps better fitted than he. For with great modeſty, and a temper naturally meek, he had a cool ſettled courage, and ſo much prudence and ſagacity, that as, on the one hand, he never wanted preſence of mind, ſo, on the other, he was never at a loſs for expedients (i). He lived upon his firſt coming to town with Dr. Morton, then Biſhop of Durham, at Durham-houſe, which being an old ſpacious building, afforded him great conveniencies for hiding his papers (k), and at the ſame time his reſidence with that Prelate as his Chaplain, countenanced his remaining in London. One great branch of his employment, was the bringing back to their duty ſome eminent perſons who had been miſled by the fair pretences of ſome of the great ſpeakers in the long Parliament. Amongſt thoſe who were thus reclaimed by the care of this religious and loyal Gentleman, were Sir Thomas Middleton and Colonel Roger Pope, both perſons of great credit with the party, and both very ſincere converts [F]. By his application likewiſe Mr. Creſſet was convinced of his errors, and became an uſeful aſſociate in the dangerous employment of managing the King's intelligence (l) [G]. Even after the King's affairs became deſperate, Mr. Barwick ſtill maintained his correſpondence; and when his

(f) Ibid. p. 17.

(g) Querela Cantab. p. 2, 3, &c.

(h) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 25.

(i) See the grant of an honourable addition of arms to this family, on account of the ſervices performed by the two brothers John and Peter, in the Preface to the Latin Life.

(k) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 26.

(l) Ibid. p. 33. Clarendon's Hiſt. Vol. iii. p. 143. Dugdale's Short View of the late Troubles, p. 188.

[D] An authentic account, &c.] The account given by Dr. Peter Barwick of theſe ſeverities runs thus: 'The rebels at that time threatened ſome of the 'greateſt men and moſt learned heads, ſuch as Dr. 'William Beale of St. John's, Dr. Edward Martin of 'Queen's, and Dr. Richard Sterne of Jeſus-college, 'with tranſportation into the iſlands of America, and 'even with ſelling them to the Algerines. For theſe 'great men, with ſeveral other eminent Divines, were 'kept cloſe priſoners in a ſhip on the Thames, under 'hatches, almoſt killed with ſtench, hunger, and 'watching; and treated by the ſenſeleſs mariners with 'more inſolence than if they had been the vileſt 'ſlaves, or had been impriſoned there for ſome in'famous robbery, or cruel murder: nay, one Rigby, 'a mean fellow, and of the very dregs of the people, 'did at that time expoſe theſe venerable perſons to 'ſale, and would actually have ſold them for ſlaves, 'if any would have bought them (5).' Sir William Dugdale carries this ſtill farther; he ſays, 'That this 'Mr. Alexander Rigby twice moved the Houſe of 'Commons, that thoſe Lords and Gentlemen, who 'were priſoners for being malignants, ſhould be ſold 'as ſlaves to Algiers, or ſent to the new plantations in 'the Weſt-Indies, becauſe he had contracted with two 'Merchants for that purpoſe (6).' Dr. Fuller, who was a very cautious writer, and rather inclined to favour, than to exaggerate the proceedings of theſe people, is pleaſed to own, that ſoldiers were quartered in their colleges, their chapels abuſed, their bridges broken down, materials for building taken away, Jeſus-college grove cut down, and a noble collection of ancient coins belonging to St. John's-college, ſold by weight for twenty-two pounds (7). Such were the effects of ſome mens zeal for liberty and reformation! But the beſt and moſt authentic account of this perſecution, becauſe written at the time, and wherein our author had a large ſhare, is intitled, Querela Cantabrigienſis, or the Univerſity of Cambridge's Complaint, at the end of which there is a liſt of the Heads and Fellows, &c. ejected and plundered, &c.

(5) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 23.

(6) Short View of the Troubles, chap. xliv. p. 577.

(7) Hiſt of Cambridge, p. 171.

[E] All the ſervice he was able to the royal cauſe.] The title of this piece at large runs thus: 'Certain 'Diſquiſitions and Conſiderations, repreſenting to the 'Conſcience the Unlawfulneſs of the Oath intitled, 'A Solemn League and Covenant for Reformation, '&c. as alſo the Inſufficiency of the Arguments uſed 'in the Exhortation for taking the ſaid Covenant. 'Publiſhed by Command. Oxford, 1644.' It contains forty-nine pages in quarto, beſides the Printer's Poſtſcript to the Reader. It ſeems this was but the ſecond impreſſion; for the firſt was diſcovered, and the greateſt part of it burnt. The learned perſons who joined with our author in compoſing this piece, were Mr. William Lacy of St. John's-college, Mr. Iſaac Barrow of Peter-houſe, Mr. Seth Ward of Sidney-college, Mr. Edmund Baldero, and Mr. William Quarles of Pembroke-hall, and Mr. Peter Gunning of Clare-hall, each of whom took his particular ſhare of this Covenant to confute; and bringing his part of the work to Mr. Gunning's chamber, there they all conferred, and agreed upon the whole (8).

(8) Wood's Faſti Oxon. Vol. ii. col. 50. Life of Dr. Barwick, p. 40.

[F] Both very ſincere converts.] This Sir Thomas Middleton of Chirk-Caſtle in Denbighſhire, had been a Colonel under the Earl of Eſſex, but was afterwards eminently loyal, which ſo far irritated General Lambert, that he pulled his fine ſeat quite down to the ground. As for Colonel Roger Pope, he ſoon after died of the plague, and upon this occaſion, Mr. Barwick performed an act of piety worthy of immortal memory. The Colonel, it ſeems, was under great trouble of mind, and exceedingly deſirous of receiving the ſacrament; but at the ſame time afraid of ſending for any Clergyman on account of his infectious diſtemper. Mr. Barwick being informed of this, though he never had either the meaſles or ſmall-pox, went immediately to aſſiſt his dying friend, and remained with him till he had yielded his laſt breath (9).

(9) Ibid. p. 51.

[G] Managing the King's intelligence.] This Gentleman had lived long in the Biſhop of Durham's family, and afterwards entered into the ſervice of the Earl of Pembroke, who made ſo great a figure on the ſide of the Parliament. He found it impracticable to bring his Lord to a better way of thinking, and was therefore forced to content himſelf with making him an inſtrument in doing good without his knowledge. Thus he obtained paſſports for certain London Pedlars to carry wares into all the quarters of the Parliament army: and under the pretext of this commerce, Mr. Barwick procured a ſafe-conveyance as far as to the King's quarters, which joined upon thoſe of the Rebels; for not a few meſſages of great importance, ſlid in as it were by ſtealth among the Pedlar's wares, and ſometimes alſo for money and ammunition, furniſhed by certain Citizens in his Majeſty's intereſt, to be conveyed thence to Oxford by ſome of the King's party, who waited in thoſe places to receive them. In the mean time, Mr. Barwick himſelf (lying as it were behind the curtain) was known to very few of thoſe of whoſe help he made uſe, either by fight, or ſo much as by name; and thoſe few only perſons of the greateſt probity, and who knew hardly any thing of what was doing, or indeed deſired to know it, but as it were through a lattice, and enveloped in a miſt, to the end that they might more eaſily clear themſelves if they ſhould happen to be taken (10).

(10) Ibid. p. 59.

Majeſty was in the hands of the army, Mr. Barwick had frequent admittance to him, and received his verbal orders, which he executed both punctually and ſucceſsfully. To perform his duty the more effectually, he had the King's expreſs command to lay aſide his clerical habit; and in the dreſs of a private Gentleman, with his ſword by his ſide, he remained without ſuſpicion in the army, and gave the King the trueſt lights poſſible as to the humour both of officers and ſoldiers, till all intelligence of this ſort became unneceſſary, by the army's throwing off all pretences to loyalty, and even ſhew of tenderneſs towards the King's perſon. When his Majeſty came to be confined in Cariſbrook Caſtle, in the Iſle of Wight, ſo cloſely, that guards were poſted at all the avenues to his chamber, and even at his windows, to prevent his having any correſpondence, Mr. Creſſet, who was placed about him, through the dexterous management of Mr. Barwick, defeated all their diligence, and preſerved his Majeſty a free intercourſe with his friends: for this purpoſe he firſt depoſited with Mr. Barwick a cypher, and then hid a copy of it in a crack of the wall in the King's chamber. By the help of this cypher, the King both wrote and read many letters every week, all of which paſſed through the hands of Mr. Barwick (m). He likewiſe was concerned in a very well laid deſign for procuring the King's eſcape, which however was unluckily diſappointed [H]. Theſe labours, though they were very fatiguing, did not hinder him from undertaking ſtill greater: for when Mr. Holder, who had managed many correſpondencies for the King, was diſcovered and impriſoned, he had ſo much ſpirit and addreſs as to procure admittance to, and a conference with him, whereby his cyphers and papers were preſerved, and Mr. Barwick charged himſelf with the intelligence which that Gentleman had carried on [I]. After this he had a large ſhare in bringing about the treaty at the Iſle of Wight, and upon this occaſion

(m) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 51. Sanderſon's Life and Reign of King Charles I. p. 990. Life of King Charles I., by Dr. Perinchief, p. 95.

[H] Which however was unluckily diſappointed.] The Earl of Clarendon was miſinformed as to this project for the King's eſcape. He tells us that it was concerted by Oſborn and Rolph, the latter deſigning to kill the King; that his Majeſty coming to the window at midnight and putting himſelf out, diſcerned more perſons to ſtand there than uſed to do, thence ſuſpecting ſome diſcovery, ſhut the window and retired to bed; and this, ſays his Lordſhip, was all the ground of a diſcourſe which then flew abroad, as if the King had got half out of the window, and could neither draw his body after nor get his head back, and ſo was compelled to call out for help; which was a meer fiction (11). To the authority of the Earl of Clarendon, I oppoſe that of King Charles I, who wrote the following letter with his own hand, which is ſtill preſerved by the deſcendant of the gentleman to whom it is addreſſed; 'D (which in the cypher 'ſtands for Henry Firebrace, i. e. Sir Henry Firebrace, 'to whom it was directed), ſince I ſee that A, i. e. 'Creſſet cannot ſtay, you muſt take the more care to 'ſettle the intelligence between my friends and me 'at London; to which end, I hope you have ſhewn 'the packet to F, i. e. Doucet. I have written to W, 'i. e. Titus, but it is only to refer him to you: wherefore let him know, that the narrowneſs of the window was the only impediment of my eſcape, and 'therefore that ſome inſtrument muſt be had to remove 'the bar, which I believe is not hard to get, for I 'have ſeen many, and ſo portable, that a man might 'put them in his pocket, and yet of force ſufficient to 'do more than this comes to; I think it is called the 'Endleſs Screw, or the Great Force. Likewiſe acquaint him with thoſe other ways that were in diſcourſe among us, deſiring him upon the whole matter (as well upon his own, as other mens inventions) 'to give his judgment, which is the moſt probable 'way to effect this buſineſs (12).'

(11) Hiſt. of the Rebellion, Vol. iii. p. 233.

(12) Appendix to Dr. Barwick's Life, p. 380.

[I] Which that Gentleman had carried on.] This Mr. Thomas Holder was Auditor-General to the Duke of York: he had the care of the King's correſpondence with the Lady Savile, Sir Marmaduke Langdale, and other perſons of great quality. He gives the following account of the kindneſs he received from Dr. Barwick; but as he wrote it in the year 1671, the reader will find that he ſtiles him Dean of St. Paul's. 'On 'account of this correſpondence, ſays he, I took up 'my ſtation in London, where I had an intimate acquaintance with the late reverend Dean of St. Paul's, 'Dr. John Barwick, who, as he was a perſon of great 'zeal towards his Majeſty, ſo he was of great correſpondence alſo with many Lords, and other eminent perſons of the King's Party; and, beſides that, 'of indefatigable induſtry in the ſervice of his Majeſty; to promote which, he and I did often meet 'twice or thrice in a week, and ſometimes oftner, and 'communicated to each other what we had to make 'uſe of from time to time for his Majeſty's ſervice; 'and ſome poſt-days, when I was in danger, he was 'pleaſed to go himſelf, and take up my letters and 'packets at the Poſt-Office, and bring them to me, and 'ſtay with me until I had decyphered them to give 'him the contents thereof, that he might ſerve himſelf of what was fitting amongſt his correſpondents: 'and twice, by his means, I procured conveyance of 'diſpatches to, and of returns from, his Sacred Majeſty, in the time of no addreſs to him in the Iſle of 'Wight, touching ſome difficulties that did ariſe in 'ſome of his Majeſty's affairs within my correſpondences: and he told me ſince, that he was beholden 'to one Mr. Creſſet for effecting that matter of ſo great 'an undertaking and danger. And after I had carried 'on my correſpondences throughout the great buſineſs 'of the year, for the moſt part ſucceſsfully, I was at 'laſt betrayed, and, by order of the Junćto at Derby-'Houſe, committed to cloſe priſon; and then this 'worthy Dean, my dear friend and confident, adventured himſelf, and by my contrivance got to whiſper 'with me through the chinks of a door nailed up, 'and the hangings before it turned by, in the chamber 'next to mine at Peter-Houſe, where Major Polwheel 'was priſoner upon the King's account, by whoſe favour we conferred together; of which I made this 'good uſe, that by my directions the Dean found all 'my cyphers, papers, &c. and burnt them; and at 'my requeſt he alſo expoſed himſelf to give intimation 'to ſome worthy honeſt gentlemen (though ſtrangers 'to him) who had very faithfully acted with me in 'many things to provide for their own ſecurity, which 'I was very deſirous they might have notice of, becauſe I had heard them threatened by thoſe in whoſe 'cuſtody I then was. And when I ſaw myſelf thus 'ſhut up, and paſt hopes of coming again to be farther 'ſerviceable to his Majeſty, I aſked the good Doctor 'if he would adventure and engage himſelf to carry 'on my correſpondences (not knowing then what had 'befallen our friends in the North) which he chearfully 'reſolved on, if I would bring him into a confidence 'with thoſe perſons I had been engaged with; upon 'which I gave him a ſhort character of my moſt incomparable Lady Savile; for till that time I had 'never named her to any perſon but whom ſhe herſelf had truſted, and by letter recommended him to 'her, who received him with much eſteem and confidence, under the ſame truſts I had been with her 'and others: and the worthy Dean going on therein 'as I had done (but with more abilities), came at laſt 'to my misfortune of impriſonment, which it is likely 'might have befallen any other perſon that would have 'adventured to act as he and I did, in ſuch times, under ſuch diſadvantages, and with ſo much danger: 'and for my part, I thank God that I held out ſo 'long sion rode from London thither in one day, and returned in another (n). By this time he was so well known by reputation to all the loyal party, that even those who had never seen him, readily trusted themselves to his care, even in the nicest and most dangerous conjunctures. Thus Sir Marmaduke Langdale, who had been condemned to suffer death before the walls of Pomfret, which he had defended against the Parliament, and who, by the assistance of the Lady Savile, had made his escape while he lay under condemnation, after lying some weeks in a hay-stack, came boldly up to London in a Clergyman's habit, and remained under Mr. Barwick's protection as a poor Minister driven from his benefice in Ireland, till such time as an opportunity offered for his safe conveyance out of the kingdom (o). When the King was murdered, and the royal cause seemed to be desperate, Mr. Barwick still kept up his spirits, and though harassed with a continual cough, followed by a spitting of blood, and afterwards by a consumption of his lungs, yet would not interrupt the daily correspondence he maintained with the Ministers of King Charles II. At last, when he was become very weak, he was content that his brother Dr. Peter Barwick should take off a part of the burthen, by attending the Post-office, which he did for about six months; and then this office was devolved on Mr. Edward Barwick, another of his brothers. This Gentleman had not been engaged two months in this perilous business, before one Bostock, who belonged to the Post-office, betrayed both him and Mr. John Barwick, together with some letters which came from the King's Ministers abroad, into the hands of those who were then possessed of the government. These letters were superscribed to Mr. James Vandelft, Dutch merchant in London, which was a fictitious name made use of to cover their correspondence. Upon his examination, Mr. Barwick did all he could to take the thing upon himself, in order to free his brother Edward. Yet so careful he was of offending against truth, that he would not deny his knowledge of the letters, but insisted that he was not bound to accuse himself. Those who examined him were not ashamed to threaten him, though half dead with his distemper, with putting him to the torture, if he did not immediately discover all who were concerned with him. To this Mr. Barwick answered with great spirit, that neither himself, nor any of his friends, had done any thing which they knew to be repugnant to the laws; and if by the force of tortures, which it was not likely a dry and bloodless carcase like his would be able to bear, any thing should be extorted which might be prejudicial to others, such a confession ought to go for nothing. Mr. Edward Barwick behaved with the like firmness, so that not so much as one person fell into trouble through their misfortune; and as for Mr. John Barwick, he had the presence of mind to burn his cyphers and other papers before those who apprehended him could break open his door (p). This extraordinary fortitude and circumspection so irritated President Bradshaw, Sir Henry Mildmay, and others of the Council who examined them, that, by a warrant, dated the ninth of April, 1650, they committed both brothers to the Gatehouse, where they were most cruelly treated, and three days afterwards committed Mr. John Barwick to the Tower; and the reason they assigned for this change of his prison was, that he might be nearer to the rack, assuring him, that in a few days they would name Commissioners to examine him, who should have that engine for their Secretary. Mr. Francis West, who was then Lieutenant of the Tower, put him in a dungeon, where he was not only kept from pen, ink, and paper, and all books, but the Bible, with restraint from seeing any person except his keepers, but, as an additional punishment, had boards nailed before his window to prevent the coming in of the fresh air. In this melancholy situation he remained many months, during which time the diet he used was herbs or fruit, or thin water-gruel made of oatmeal or barley, with currants boiled in it, and sweetened with a little sugar, by which he recovered beyond all expectation, and grew plump and fat. A cure so perfect, and withal so strange, that many Physicians have taken notice of it in their writings, as a most pregnant instance of the power of temperance even in the most inveterate diseases (q) [K]. While he was thus shut up, his friends laboured incessantly for his service and relief, and his Majesty King Charles II., for whom he thus suffered,

(n) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 63.

(o) Collins's Peerage of England, Vol. iv. p. 151. Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 67. Lloyd's Memoirs of Loyal Sufferers, p. 549.

(p) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 75.

(q) Lloyd's Memorials of Loyal Sufferers, p. 610. Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 89.

'long as I did, till the very day (viz. the 17th of 'August, 1648), on which my Lord Langdale's forces 'were worsted by Cromwell's army, in sight of the 'Scotch army, God in his providence so ordering his 'defeat and my imprisonment on the very same day, 'and thereby making an end of our correspondence 'and endeavours for his Majesty's service together. 'And I must not omit, in gratitude to the memory of 'my worthy friend the good Dean, to acknowledge 'the many comforts he afforded me during my im'prisonment, and the many kind visits and helps after 'my escape, until I got out of England. Thomas 'Holder (13).'

(13) Life of Dr. John Barwick, p. 94.

[K] Even in the most inveterate diseases.] Long before Dr. Peter Barwick wrote his brother's life, this circumstance was become famous. Lloyd tells us the Dean of St. Paul's was in the Tower fed several years with bread and water; which diet, by God's providence, having saved his life when his vein broke, he drank little or nothing but water almost all his life after, and eat nothing but once in twenty-four or thirty hours (14). A late writer mentions this case of Dr. Barwick's as a strong proof of the virtue of water (15). The celebrated Dr. Cheyne gives us the following account of it, wherein the reader will see that he has committed some slight mistakes: 'Dr. Barwick tells us 'in the life of his brother, who in the late civil wars 'had for many years been confined in a low room in 'the Tower, during the Usurpation, that at the time 'of his going in he was under a phthisis, atrophy, 'and dyscrasy, and lived on bread and water only 'several years there, and yet came out at the Resto'ration sleek, plump, and gay (16).'

(14) Memoirs of Loyal Sufferers, p. 610.

(15) The Miracles of Water, in answer to Scelera Aquarum, p. 93.

(16) The natural Method of curing the Diseases of the Body, and the Disorders of the Mind, p. 210.

gave the higheſt teſtimonies of his royal concern for ſo faithful a ſubject [L]. After fifteen months paſſed in this ſtrict confinement, Mr. Otway, and ſome other friends, procured a warrant from Preſident Bradſhaw to viſit him, who were not a little ſurpriſed to find him ſo luſty, and in ſo good health, whom they had ſeen brought ſo low, as to engage this very Mr. Otway to take care of his burial. His prudence and patience under this terrible perſecution was ſo great, that they had a happy effect on all who came about him; ſo that Mr. Robert Brown, who was Deputy Lieutenant of the Tower, became firſt exceeding civil to him, and afterwards his convert, ſo as to have his child baptized by him; and, which was ſtill a ſtronger proof of his ſincerity, he quitted the very profitable poſt he held, and returned to his own buſineſs, which was that of a cabinet-maker (r). Nay, Mr. Weſt, the Lieutenant of the Tower, who treated him ſo harſhly at his entrance, and executed to the full, if he did not exceed the orders of his ſuperiors, abated by degrees of this rigour, and became at laſt ſo much ſoftened, that he was as ready to do him all offices of humanity as Mr. Brown was thoſe of duty and religion; for he removed him out of a noiſome dungeon, into a handſome convenient chamber, with a pair of leads over it, where he might enjoy freer air, and ſometimes alſo the company of his friends. He likewiſe made aſſiduous application to the Council of State, that while Mr. Barwick remained in the Tower, he might have an allowance granted him for his ſubſiſtence; and when he could not prevail, he ſupplied him from his own table. Indeed, after two years confinement, the Commonwealth did think fit to allow him five ſhillings a week, which he received for about four months. Then, through the ſame friendly interceſſion of Mr. Weſt, he was diſcharged on the ſeventh of Auguſt, 1652, but upon giving ſecurity to appear at any time within a twelvemonth before the Council of State (s). This procuring his diſcharge, was the laſt friendſhip Mr. Weſt did him, who within three days after died of an apoplexy, and was ſucceeded by Colonel Barkſted, a barbarous, bloody man, and ſo cruel to his priſoners, that Mr. Barwick thought it the greateſt mercy afforded in his life-time, that he became not one of the number (t). On his deliverance, he went and paid his reſpects to his old patron the Biſhop of Durham, his aged parents, and the incomparable Lady Savile; but the place he choſe for his reſidence, was the houſe of Sir Thomas Eversfield of Suſſex, a man of great integrity as well as learning, with whom he lived for many months (u). After the expiration of the year, to which the recognizance entered into by himſelf and his friends, Mr. Thomas Royſton, Student of Gray's Inn, and Mr. Richard Royſton of London, bookſeller, extended, he began to think of getting up his bond, and entering again into the King's ſervice. With this view he found it expedient to pay a viſit to Preſident Bradſhaw, who received him very civilly, and entered into ſuch a converſation, as deſerves particular notice (w) [M]. Having thus received ſatisfaction, as to his being out of danger from that recognizance, he began to enter again into buſineſs, and drew over ſeveral conſiderable perſons, ſuch as Colonel John Clobery, Colonel Daniel Redman, and Colonel Robert Venables, to the King's ſervice, with whom he conferred on ſeveral ſchemes for reſtoring monarchy, in all which they were long diſappointed by the craft and induſtry of Cromwell. His friend, Sir Thomas Eversfield, dying, and his widow retiring to the houſe of her brother, Sir Thomas Middleton, at Chirk-Caſtle in Denbighſhire, Dr. Barwick accompanied her thither, and remained for ſome time with Sir Thomas, who was his old friend. His own and the King's affairs calling him back to London, he lived with his brother, Dr. Peter Barwick, in St. Paul's Church-Yard, and there managed the greateſt part of the King's correſpondence, with as much care, ſecrecy, and

(r) Ibid. p. 96.

(s) Ibid. p. 98.

(t) See the Groans of the Priſoners in the Tower, a quarto pamphlet, printed in 1657. Hiſtory of Independency, third and fourth Parts. Trials of the Regicides.

(u) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 103.

(w) Ibid. p. 105.

[L] So faithful a ſubject.] About the time of Mr. Barwick's impriſonment, the Lady Savile ſent the King one thouſand pounds, out of which his Majeſty immediately ordered two hundred pounds to be employed for Mr. Barwick's relief. Afterwards he attempted to purchaſe his liberty in exchange for one who had made an attempt upon his own life, which Dr. Barwick thankfully acknowledges in a dedication of his (17). When the King lay encamped near the city of Worceſter, a few days before the battle, Dr. Peter Barwick coming to pay his duty, and mentioning ſlightly his brother's confinement, the King was pleaſed to ſay with great warmth, 'I well know that honeſt man, who for my 'ſake, and that of all my loyal ſubjects, has been 'treated with great indignity, and ſuffered the utmoſt 'hardſhips: but now, ſays he, the time is at hand 'when I ſhall either with theſe arms ſuccour him, and 'the reſt of my deareſt friends that groan under the 'cruel yoke of this Uſurpation, or willingly lay down 'this life for them (18).' Many more inſtances might be given of the King's gratitude, but it will be ſufficient to indicate the pages where they are ſet down in the margin (19).

(17) Prefixed to the Life of Dr. Morton, Biſhop of Durham.

(18) Life of Dr. John Barwick, p. 129.

(19) Ib. p. 178. 181. 227. 294, 295. 301.

[M] As deſerves particular notice.] The account of this converſation given in his Life runs thus: 'Mr. 'Barwick finding the year expired, and no indictment 'againſt him, goes to Bradſhaw, whom Cromwell had 'now turned out, to conſult with him what was to be 'done in order to get his bond cancelled, ſince it ought 'to lay him under no farther obligation to the Com'monwealth, now changed into a new tyranny. Brad'ſhaw receives him with great courteſy and civility, 'and profeſſes himſelf willing to do him any good of'fice, even with Cromwell himſelf, if he had intereſt 'enough in him. But, Sir, ſays he, there is no oc'caſion that you ſhould be very ſolicitous about this 'matter, for ſuch papers are either all loſt, or other'wiſe lie in ſo much diſorder and confuſion, that they 'are never like to give trouble to any one. Hence he 'took occaſion to expreſs himſelf with great bitter'neſs againſt Cromwell, and utter the moſt direful 'execrations againſt his arbitrary tyrannical govern'ment, but ſpake as reſpectfully of the Royal Autho'rity exerciſed within thoſe bounds preſcribed by the 'laws, as if he had had a mind to return into favour 'with Kings: But you Cavaliers (ſays he, ſmiling) 'muſt needs laugh in your ſleeves at our diſſentions, 'and the ſtruggle there is amongſt us who ſhall have 'the government; and promiſe your King, not with'out reaſon, great advantages from our diſagree'ment (20).'

(20) Ibid. p. 159, 160.

 ſucceſs,

(x) Ibid. p. 228. ſucceſs, as ever (x). While he was thus engaged, he received ſome interruption, by the revival of that old calumny on the Church of England, the Nag's Head Ordination, to which he furniſhed the materials for a full and concluſive anſwer [N]. His modeſty and private way of living preſerved him from much notice even in thoſe prying times; and yet, when proper occaſions called for more open teſtimonies of his principles, Mr. Barwick did not decline profeſſing them, as appeared by his aſſiſting Dr. John Hewet, while in priſon for a plot againſt Cromwell, and even on the ſcaffold when he loſt his head (y) [O]. By the death of this Gentleman, his branch of intelligence, and the care of conveying ſome hundred pounds, which he had collected for the King's uſe, devolved upon Mr. Barwick; who, though he had already ſo much upon his hands, readily undertook, and happily performed it. It is indeed ſurpriſing, that a perſon in his circumſtances, and ſo little uſed to an active life, was able to go through the drudgery of ſuch a correſpondence, wherein he met daily acceſſions of fatigue, and yet durſt not take in any aſſiſtance: but what is ſtill more wonderful, is the ſilence of the Earl of Clarendon as to this Gentleman's indefatigable ſervice, who never once mentions him, though he was his principal correſpondent, and his Lordſhip certainly drew from his intelligence, much of that hiſtory which he wrote of theſe times (z). The concern Mr. Barwick had for the King and for the State, did not hinder him from attending, when he was called thereto, the buſineſs of the Church, in which however he had a very worthy aſſociate, Mr. Richard Alleſtrey, who took the moſt troubleſome part on himſelf, by performing ſeveral dangerous journies into Flanders, in order to receive the King's commands by word of mouth: neither did Mr. Barwick's aſſiduity in this reſpect, proceed in any degree from that kind of ambition which is but too common amongſt churchmen; for with great modeſty he declined the epiſcopal dignity when offered him, and with unfeigned humility conſented to receive this office, in caſe the circumſtances of the Church abſolutely required it, and no fitter perſon could be found (a) [P]. In the riſing of Sir George Booth, he had a principal concern in the managing of the deſign, and in providing for the ſafety of ſuch as eſcaped after it miſcarried. Not long after he narrowly miſſed a new impriſonment, through the treachery of ſome who were

(y) Wood's Faſti Oxon. Vol. ii. p. 723. Sir Philip Warwick's Memoirs, p. 385. Lloyd's Memoirs of Loyal Sufferers, p. 553.

(z) See the Appendix to Dr. Barwick's Life in Engliſh. See alſo the ſeventh volume of Thurloe's State Papers.

(a) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 139.

[N] A full and concluſive anſwer.] The revival of this diſpute was occaſioned by a little Piece publiſhed at Rouen under the title of A Treatiſe of the Nature of the Catholic Faith, and of Hereſy. The authors of this Piece, for there was more than one, aſſerted therein, that a Preſbyterian Nobleman, who ſat in the late Parliament, had written a book with intent to exclude the Biſhops from their ſeats in the Houſe of Peers, by ſhewing that they were not the legal ſucceſſors of the antient Biſhops for want of due conſecration; and, in anſwer to this, they pretended that the Biſhop of Durham ſtood up and made a ſolemn ſpeech; in which he averred, in expreſs words, that the firſt Biſhops, after the Reformation, were conſecrated in a tavern (the Nag's Head in Cheapſide); and added farther, that this was a fact notorious to all the world, and to this the book affirms the Biſhops then preſent aſſented. In all probability the coiners of this fine tale perſuaded themſelves, that the Biſhop of Durham, who was now in the ninety-fifth year of his age, had been in his grave, and ſo out of a capacity of contradicting them. But when that grave Prelate heard in the country of this ſtrange reflection caſt upon him, 'he ſent for his Chaplain Mr. 'Barwick, then at London, directing him to bring a 'Public Notary with him, that by a ſolemn proteſtation 'made before them, and other proper witneſſes, he (21) Signed July 17, 1658. 'might declare the falſehood of this ſtory (21). When 'his Lordſhip had made this proteſtation in due form, 'he employed Mr. Barwick to lay it before all thoſe 'Lords who had ſat in that Parliament, and were yet 'ſurviving, whether ſpiritual or temporal, living either 'at London or in the neighbouring counties; appealing to the faith of them all, that, preferring the ſacredneſs of truth to all other conſiderations whatever, 'if they believed him undeſervedly aſperſed with this (22) Signed July 19, 1658. 'calumny, they would freely atteſt it by ſubſcribing 'their names (22). And this was readily done, not 'only by all the Lords of Parliament, to whom the 'proteſtation could be carried (and it was carried to a 'great many), but by all the Clerks alſo, and other 'Officers of the Houſe, whoſe buſineſs it was to regiſter 'in authentic journals all ſuch debates if there had 'been any; but they all declared there was not the 'leaſt footſtep to be found, either of any ſuch book as 'was pretended to be laid before the Houſe, or of any 'ſuch ſpeech, as the adverſaries alledged to have been 'made on that occaſion. The aged Biſhop, now paſt 'managing Church controverſies himſelf, lays his 'command on his Chaplain, Mr. Barwick, to publiſh this proteſtation, together with the noble teſtimony thereto ſubjoined: and this he deſigned to do 'in a volume; but when he heard that the learned 'Biſhop of Derry (23), then an exile in Holland, intended the ſame thing (having been engaged before 'with the ſame adverſaries in that controverſy) (24), 'he readily left his work to his Lordſhip's irrefragable pen, furniſhing him in the mean time with 'materials proper to end this diſpute (25).'

(23) Dr. John Bramhall.

(24) Viz. In his Juſt Vindication of the Church of England, p. 133. In his Replication to the Biſhop of Chalcedon, p. 253. And in Schiſm Guarded, in anſwer to Serjeant, p. 422.

(25) Which was done in his treatiſe, intitled, The Conſecration and Succeſſion of Proteſtant Biſhops juſtified; the Biſhop of Dureſme Vindicated, and the infamous Fable of the Ordination at the Nag's Head, clearly confuted. Life of Dr. John Barwick, p. 424.

[O] Even on the ſcaffold when he loſt his head.] This Dr. John Hewit was a Norfolk man by birth, and educated at the Univerſity of Cambridge, where very probably his acquaintance with Dr. Barwick commenced. He was employed by his Majeſty in keeping his friends together, and collecting money from them for his ſupport; in the courſe of which undertaking his own honeſty made him leſs ſuſpicious than was neceſſary, and ſo he fell into the hands of ſome of Thurloe's agents, by whom he was enſnared (26), and in virtue of a ſentence paſſed by a high court of juſtice for contumacy, loſt his head on the eighth of June, 1658. He was attended by Mr. Barwick, in conjunction with Mr. Wild and Dr. Warmeſtry (27); and the moment before he ſuffered he preſented Mr. Barwick with a ring, the motto of which was, Alter Ariſtides, which he wore to the day of his own death (28). His friendſhip went beyond the grave; for when he attended the King at Breda, he made it his requeſt that Dr. Hewet's widow might be taken under his Majeſty's care and protection, and that her fatherleſs ſon might have ſome place given him (29).

(26) Collection of Thurloe's State Papers, Vol. i. p. 707, & ſeq.

(27) Lloyd's Memoirs of Loyal Sufferers, p. 553.

(28) Life of Dr. John Barwick, p. 175.

(29) Ib. p. 274.

[P] And no fitter perſon could be found.] The buſineſs then in agitation was the filling up the vacant Sees; a point of very great conſequence, and not more warmly puſhed by the Clergy themſelves than by the Chancellor Hyde: yet ſome unexpected difficulties ſprung up, which retarded it. Mr. Barwick declined the epiſcopal dignity, becauſe he thought it irregular at leaſt, if not ſomething more, for a Preſbyter to be made at once a Biſhop without paſſing through any of the leſſer dignities of the Church. When, however, the Biſhoprick of Man appeared to have no candidate, ſeveral eminent Divines looking upon it as a kind of baniſhment to be ſent thither, Mr. Barwick readily accepted of it, and, as we ſhall ſee hereafter, as readily reſigned the promiſe he had of it; when, upon a nearer view of poſſeſſing it, others thought it worth the ſeeking (30). The letters which paſſed between the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Barwick upon this occaſion, and which may be found in the Appendix to his Life, are ſufficient to ſhew how large a ſhare he had in the ſettlement of the Church, and how honeſtly he diſcharged it.

(30) Ibid. p. 238. 246.

intruſted by the King's Miniſters: for by their intelligence, Mr. Alleſtrey was ſeized as ſoon as he landed at Dover, and one of Mr. Barwick's letters intercepted, part of which was, and all might have been decyphered by the famous Dr. Wallis, if in pity to thoſe concerned, or perhaps from ſome proſpect of a change in the King's affairs, he had not been content to appear leſs knowing than he really was (b) [Q]. Secretary Thurloe, with all his intelligence, never gained any notice of Mr. Barwick, though he carried on ſo long and regular a correſpondence with the King and Chancellor Hyde, of which there are ſtill in being a great variety of inſtances, which ſufficiently diſcover how induſtriouſly he enquired into all that paſſed here, as well as how true judgment he made of all the ſchemes of the Cromwellians, and how exact an account he tranſmitted of them to the King and Chancellor Hyde, which is a ſecret but lately revealed (c) [R]. In the midſt of theſe difficulties died the good old Biſhop of Durham, whom Mr. Barwick piouſly aſſiſted in his laſt moments, preached his funeral ſermon, and afterwards wrote his life, which he dedicated to the King (d) [S]. All the hopes that now remained of a Reſtoration reſted upon General Monk, and though it is certain that Mr. Barwick had no direct correſpondence with him, yet it is no leſs certain, that he furniſhed him with the principal inſtruments he employed in the moſt difficult parts of that arduous affair; as for inſtance, Colonel Daniel Redman, who carried over to Monk the Iriſh horſe, and Colonel Cloberry, whom he intruſted chiefly with the guard of the Parliament, as well as with his meſſages to them. After the affair was ſo far ripened, that there ſeemed to be no longer any doubt of the King's return, Mr. Barwick was ſent over by the Biſhops to repreſent the ſtate of eccleſiaſtical affairs. He was received by his Majeſty with the moſt endearing marks of cordial affection, preached before him the Sunday after his arrival, and was immediately appointed one of his Chaplains. Yet did not his great deſerts, or theſe extraordinary marks of the King's favour, induce him to make any requeſt for himſelf, though he did not let ſlip ſo fair an opportunity of recommending effectually ſeveral of his friends, and procuring for them

(b) Ibid. p. 167.

(c) See a more full account in the following note.

(d) Wood's Faſti Oxon. Vol. ii. p. 50.

[Q] Leſs knowing than he really was.] When Chancellor Hyde was informed that letters written by him were not only intercepted, but decyphered, he would ſcarcely believe it; and upon this occaſion he wrote March 8, 1660, thus to Mr. Barwick: 'I confeſs to you, as I am ſure no copy could be gotten of 'any of my cyphers from hence, ſo I did not think it 'probable that they could be got on your ſide the water: but I was as confident, till you tell me you 'believe it, that the Devil himſelf cannot decypher a 'letter that is well written, or find that 100 ſtands for 'Sir Henry Vane. I have heard of many of the pre'tenders to that ſkill, and have ſpoken with ſome of 'them, but have found them all to be Mountebanks; 'nor did I ever hear that more of the King's letters 'that were found at Naſeby, than thoſe which they 'found decyphered, or found the cyphers in which 'they were wrote were decyphered. And I very well 'remember, that in the volume they publiſhed, there 'was much left in cypher which could not be under'ſtood, and which I believe they would have explained 'if it had been in their power; but you can eaſily 'ſatisfy yourſelf in this point, if you either make a 'cypher yourſelf, or write half a ſcore lines out of ſe'veral other cyphers, and ſend them to the artiſt, and 'you will then be convinced yourſelf, and be able to 'convince others; and then it will be to no purpoſe to 'traffick any more in thoſe commodities (31).' The account given by Dr. Peter Barwick of this accident, is to this purpoſe: Mr. Alleſtrey, as he was returning home from thence, i. e. Bruſſels, was betrayed (by whoſe prefidiouſneſs is unknown): but he was no ſooner landed on the Engliſh ſhore, than he was immediately made a cloſe priſoner; and Mr. Barwick's letter, with more ſent by Mr. William Rombald and others, were intercepted by the garriſon of Dunkirk, then at enmity with the King; and what was yet worſe, although every different perſon's letter was written in a diſtinct cypher, and that contrived with great thought, yet they were all decyphered by the art and ingenuity of a certain very famous Mathematician (Dr. Wallis), who was hired by the Rebels: for it was the very ſame artiſt that made theſe diſcoveries, who (too officious to gratify the Rebels) had (as was intimated above) decyphered his Majeſty's papers written alſo in characters, and taken at Naſeby fight. Yet he had now at laſt this in him of a good ſubject, that at this time he diſcovered nothing to the Rebels, which much concerned the public ſafety; though he ſatisfied ſome of the King's friends, that he could have diſcovered a great deal: but all thoſe whom it concerned being ſufficiently aſſured that no key of any cypher had fallen into the enemy's hands, it was thought nothing but vain boaſting, when the Rebels bragged, that by the help of their friends they were able to find out the moſt hidden ſecrets of the Royaliſts, till Mr. Matt. Wren (ſon to the Right Reverend Biſhop of Ely), who was intimately acquainted with this Mathematician, obtained of him ſome copies of thoſe letters as he had decyphered them, and took care to have them delivered ſeverally to the perſons that wrote the letters, who all acknowledged them for their own, and left no room to doubt of the Decypherer's art (32).——By comparing theſe paſſages, the reader will eaſily diſcern that this enquiry by Mr. Wren, who was ſon to the Biſhop of Ely, was made in purſuance of my Lord Chancellor's direction; who yet ſeems, by another letter of his, to have remained fixed in his old opinion, that, without treachery, a good cypher could not be penetrated. There is a letter in Thurloe's collection, ſuppoſed to be written by Chancellor Hyde to Mr. Barwick, in which the names of perſons are not decyphered; yet upon carefully reviewing the letter, I am very poſitive that it was not directed to Mr. Barwick, becauſe it cannot be read by his cyphers, as all the other letters to him in that collection, which are not a few, may (33). If this was a letter from the Chancellor to any body elſe, then it would give ſome probability to his opinion; but as to that I can determine nothing.

(31) Appendix, to Dr. Barwick's Life, p. 503.

(32) Life of Dr. John Barwick, p. 251.

(33) Vol. vii. p. 857.

[R] Which is a ſecret lately revealed.] It is indeed ſomething ſtrange, that, in ſo long a correſpondence, Dr. Barwick ſhould never be detected, eſpecially if Thurloe had been as well furniſhed with intelligence as he is generally ſuppoſed. Yet in his voluminous collection I do not find one of Mr. Barwick's, or of any directed to him. Thoſe that are in the ſeventh volume of that work were communicated to the Editor, and not intercepted (34). This ſhews, that if a man be very prudent and cautious of converſing with ſtrangers, he may avoid great dangers in this way. It was Dr. Hewet's foible to converſe freely with every man who profeſſed himſelf a Royaliſt, and this undid him. Mr. Barwick, on the contrary, avoided being known as much as poſſible, and ſuffered none of his correſpondents to pry into each others affairs, by which means he eſcaped.

(34) Theſe Letters are in the poſſeſſion of Joſ. Radcliffe, Eſq; of the Inner Temple. See Thurloe's Collection of State Papers, Vol. vii. p. 415. 531. 613, 614, 615. 646. 658. 662. 666. 685, 686. 763, 853, 854. 859, 860. 870.

[S] Which he dedicated to the King.] He alſo drew up an Epitaph for him, in which is contained a very juſt, as well as very accurate, panegyric on this great man. A circumſtance from the dedication of Dr. Barwick's book has been before taken notice of, and the title of this Treatiſe will be given in another note. Here we ſhall only add, that an account of Biſhop Morton's life was written by another Chaplain of his, Dr. Joſeph Nelſon, Prebendary of Durham, and Rector of Sedgfield.

an an acknowledgment ſuitable to each of their ſervices (e) [T]. On his return he viſited the univerſity of Cambridge, where he gave a new proof of his diſintereſtedneſs and generoſity, by relinquiſhing his right to his fellowſhip in favour of an intruder, becauſe he had the reputation of being a young man of learning and probity (f). Before he left the Univerſity, he took the degree of Doctor in Divinity, upon which occaſion he performed his exerciſe, though that might have been well diſpenſed with, merely to ſupport the diſcipline of the Univerſity, for which he had a very warm and juſt concern. The theſis made choice of upon this occaſion was very ſingular, viz. That the method of impoſing penance, and reſtoring Penitents in the primitive Church, was a godly diſcipline, and that it is much to be wiſhed it was reſtored. The Latin diſputation upon this queſtion has been preſerved, and it was chiefly for the ſake of inſerting it, that Dr. Peter Barwick compoſed his brother's life in Latin. It is in that reſpect a moſt learned piece, and does our author's memory much honour (g) [U]. When the Church of England was reſtored in all its beauty by King Charles II., the Deans and Chapters revived, Dr. Barwick, according to his uſual modeſty, contented himſelf with recommending his Tutor, old Mr. Fothergill, to a Prebend in the cathedral church of York: but as to himſelf, he would have reſted content with the proviſion made for him by his late patron, the Biſhop of Durham, who had given him the fourth ſtall in his cathedral, and the rectories of Wolſingham, and Houghton in le Spring: nay, when he found of how great value theſe preferments were, he was inclined to think he had too much (h). Among other extraordinary offices to which he was called at this buſy time, one was to viſit Hugh Peters, in order to draw from him ſome account of the perſon who actually cut off the head of King Charles I.; but in this neither he nor Dr. Dolben, his aſſociate, had any ſucceſs (i). Before the Reſtoration there had been a deſign of conſecrating Dr. Barwick, Biſhop of Man; but the Counteſs of Derby deſiring to prefer her Chaplain to that dignity, the Doctor readily reſigned all title thereto in his favour, upon which, the King, of his own motive, would have promoted him to the See of Carliſle, which the Doctor ſteadily refuſed, that the world might not imagine, the extraordinary zeal he had ſhewn for epiſcopacy flowed from any ſecret hope of his one day being a Biſhop. Upon this he was promoted to the Deanery of Durham, with which he kept the rectory of Houghton, which is only four miles diſtant from the city. He took poſſeſſion of his deanery on the feaſt of All Saints, 1660 (k), and as he enjoyed a large revenue, ſo certainly never any man employed it better, or more conſcientiouſly ſtudied the laying it out for thoſe purpoſes for which it was given: he repaired public buildings, relieved the poor, and kept up great hoſpitality, both at the houſe of his deanery and at Houghton. But before the year was out, he was called from theſe cares, in which he would willingly have ſpent his whole life, by his being made Dean of St. Paul's, which though a preferment leſs in value, and attended with much more trouble than that he already poſſeſſed, yet Dr. Barwick readily accepted, becauſe he knew he was called thereto, purely for the ſervice of the Church (l). As ſoon as he had done this, he put an end to all granting of leaſes, even where he had agreed for the fine with the tenants, and did many other things for the benefit of his ſucceſſor, which ſhewed his contempt of ſecular advantages, and his ſincere concern for the rights of the Church (m) [W]. He took poſſeſſion of the deanery of St. Paul's, about the middle of October, 1661, and found, as he expected, all in very great diſorder with reſpect to the Church itſelf, and every thing that concerned it. He ſet about reforming theſe abuſes with a truly primitive ſpirit, and proſecuted with great vigour the recovery

(e) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 199.

(f) This was Mr. John Tuckney, who yet loſt the fellowſhip for Nonconformity, Calamy's Life of Baxter, Vol. ii. p. 90.

(g) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 257.

(h) Ibid. p. 197.

(i) Ibid. p. 203.

(k) Wood's Faſti Oxon. Vol. ii. p. 50.

(l) Le Neve's Faſti Ecc. Angl. p. 185.

(m) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 213.

[T] To each of their ſervices.] In his Life we have the inſtructions given by the Biſhops to Mr. Barwick, in relation to his laying before the King a ſtate of the Church; and we have alſo a paper of his containing the requeſts made by him to his Majeſty; ſuch as that he would be pleaſed to confer the honour of Knighthood on the eldeſt ſon of Sir Thomas Middleton, which was complied with; that his Majeſty would take care of Colonel Cloberry, which had alſo its proper weight; and that Gentleman, ſoon after the Reſtoration, had a grant made him of ſix hundred pounds a year; that ſome eminent mark of the King's favour might be ſhewn to Colonel Robert Venables, the reaſon aſſigned for it I muſt give in Mr. Barwick's own words, viz. Becauſe it was ſufficiently known that he formerly both could have reſtored his Majeſty to his throne, and would have done it, if he had not been hindered by the perfidiouſneſs of ſome to whom the King's buſineſs was truſted, but we are not told what return this repreſentation met with; that ſuch as had tranſmitted money through his or Dr. Hewet's hands might be admitted to kiſs his Majeſty's hand, and that Dr. Hewet's family might be provided for (35).

(35) Life of Dr. John Barwick, p. 270. 273, 274.

[U] Our author's memory much honour.] The title of this piece in Latin runs thus: Exomologeſis primitivæ Eccleſiæ eſt Diſciplina pia, ejuſque Reſtitutio eſt maximè optanda. This diſſertation makes about forty pages at the end of the Latin life, and ſhews the author's perfect acquaintance with the diſcipline of the Primitive Church, and how diligently he ſtudied the ancient Fathers. It is indeed in every reſpect ſo well executed a piece, that it is ſurpriſing the editor of the Latin life, and tranſlator of it into Engliſh, did not take the pains to give us a verſion of it; for though it be true that the ſubject is handled in a ſcholaſtic ſtile, yet it is no leſs evident that its author was as much for Reformation, in what he thought a right courſe, as any man of his time.

[W] For the rights of the Church.] This induced him, upon his coming to Durham, to take great care that the prebendal houſes ſhould be repaired, and a grammar-ſchool erected from the ground. He brought water into the college, and took upon himſelf a very hard taſk, that of bringing all the officers of the Church under a good diſcipline and to a regular life, and at the ſame time to augment ſuch ſalaries as were too ſmall, not only of the Mother Church, but of all the Churches depending upon it; and the Chapter not only gave their conſent to this, but did all in their power to promote it: yet they were ſo far from exacting in the matter of fines, upon ſuch as had leaſes of the Church lands, and were ſo beneficial to all the poor, that, in an age very little favourable to the Clergy, they are mentioned with honour to this day for their humanity, candour, and piety: nay, in many caſes they were ſo bountiful, as to recede from their own right in favour of their ſucceſſors, that the revenues of the Church might deſcend to them with ſome augmentation (36).

(36) Life of Dr. John Barwick, p. 103. 108.

of ſuch revenues, as in the late times of diſtraction had been alienated from the Church; though with reſpect to his own particular concerns, he was never rigid to any body, but frequently gave up things to which he had a clear title (n). By his intereſt with his Majeſty he obtained two royal grants under the Great-Seal of England, one for the repair of the cathedral, the other, for enumerating and ſecuring its privileges. In this reſpect, he was ſo tender, that he would not permit the Lord Mayor of London to erect there a ſeat for himſelf at the expence of the city, but inſiſted that it ſhould be done at the charge of the Church (o). Towards the repairing the cathedral, he, together with the Reſidentiaries, gave the rents of the houſes in St. Paul's Church-yard as a ſettled fund, beſides which they advanced each of them 500*l.* a piece, and, in many other reſpects, he demonſtrated, that neither the love of preferment, nor the deſire of wealth, had any ſhare in his acceptance of this dignity (p) [X]. Though this office might ſufficiently have employed, even as active a perſon as Dr. Barwick was, yet he was called to ſtill greater labours by the good opinion of the King, and the univerſal reſpect of the Clergy. In conſequence of the former, he was appointed one of the nine aſſiſtants to the twelve Biſhops, commiſſioned to hold a conference with the like number of Preſbyterian Miniſters upon the review of the Liturgy; which conference was held at the Biſhop of London's lodgings in the Savoy (q). As an effect of the latter, he was, by the unanimous ſuffrage of all the Clergy of the province of Canterbury aſſembled in Convocation, choſen Prolocutor on the 18th of February, 1661 (r); in which high office he behaved himſelf in ſuch a manner, as added even to the great reputation he had before acquired. His application, however, to the diſcharge of ſo many and ſo great duties brought upon him his old diſtemper, ſo that in November, 1662, he was confined to his chamber: he heightened his diſeaſe by officiating at the Sacrament the Chriſtmas-day following, after which he was ſeized with ſuch a violent vomiting of blood, that he brought up whole baſons full. Upon this he was adviſed to a change of air, for the enjoyment of which he retired to Therfield in Hertfordſhire, of which he was Rector, but finding himſelf there too far from London, he returned to Chiſwick, where he in ſome meaſure recovered his health (s). As ſoon as he found he had a little ſtrength, he applied himſelf there to the putting in order the archives of St. Paul's church, and ſo threw himſelf down again. This was followed by an extraordnary flux of blood, which rendered him very weak, and defeated his favourite deſign of retiring to Therfield. When he firſt found his health declining, he made choice of and procured this living, intending to have reſigned his deanery and office of Prolocutor, to thoſe who had vigour enough to diſcharge them, and to ſpend the remainder of his days in the diſcharge of his paſtoral office, to which he thought himſelf bound by his taking orders (t). But Providence prepared for him a ſtill more quiet manſion; for coming upon ſome extraordinary occaſion to London, he was ſeized with a pleuriſy, which carried him off in three days. He was attended in his laſt moments by Dr. Peter Gunning, afterwards Biſhop of Ely, and as he lived, ſo he died with all the marks of an exemplary piety, on the 22d of October, 1664; after he had ſtruggled almoſt twelve years with this grievous diſtemper (u). Upon inſpection, all his entrails appeared to be decayed, particularly his liver and his lungs, and yet not ſo much vitiated, but that he might have lived conſiderably longer, if the maſs of blood had not been in a great meaſure, by continual evacuations, exhauſted. Many good and great men came of their own accord from all parts to his funeral, where Dr. Henchman, Biſhop of London, read the ſervice, and Dr. Gunning preached the funeral ſermon (w). By his will he bequeathed the greateſt part of his eſtate to charitable uſes, and this with a judgment equal to his piety (x) [Y]. His body was interred in the cathe-

(n) Wood's Faſti Oxon. Vol. ii. p. 50.

(o) Vit John Barwick, p. 219.

(p) Synod. Angl. Append. p. 61. Wherein it appears, that theſe Reſidentaries were Dr. Thomas Turner, Dr. John Hacket, and Dr. Edward Layfield.

(q) See this commiſſion at the end of Dr. Nichols's Preface to his Commentary on the Book of Common Prayer, edit. in folio.

(r) Synod. Angl. Append. p. 101.

(s) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p 231.

(t) Ibid. p. 233.

(u) Ibid. p. 237.

(w) Ibid. p. 238. The particulars relating to his interment, are taken from a letter of the Rev. Mr. John Worthington, communicated to the Tranſlator of Dr. Barwick's Life, by his ſon.

(x) Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 239.

[X] Accepting this dignity.] One may ſafely ſay, that nothing could have happened more for the ſervice of the church of St. Paul's than Dr. Barwick's being appointed its Dean. He boldly entered into ſuits for the ſake of the Church, and was not to be terrified by any interpoſitions of the Great, or ill grounded calumnies of the many. He followed a cauſe even before the Privy Council, and though it came there with an ill grace, yet he procured a good end to it, and juſtified his own conduct to the ſatisfaction of every body. He would have gone a progreſs into Eſſex for the ſettling the eſtates of the Church there, if he had not ſwooned at ſetting out, and even then was hardly prevailed on to deſiſt, and this for no other reaſon, than becauſe he was afraid the tenants might be ſqueezed or haraſſed by ſuch as were employed in this affair (37).

(37) Ibid. p 312. 316, 317. 319, 320. 322, 323.

[Y] Equal to his piety.] He gave to the daughters of his brothers, four in number, one hundred pounds each; to his brother William's ſon, his only nephew, two hundred pounds; the works of King Charles I. to his dear friend Mr. John Otway; the reſt of his ſtudy to Mr. Samuel Howlet; to the ſchool at Sedberg forty pounds; to St. John's College, Cambridge, three hundred pounds; to St. Paul's church one hundred pounds, all to be employed in the repair of thoſe public buildings. He likewiſe purchaſed an eſtate of about fifty pounds a year, belonging formerly to the Church, but now alienated and applied to ſecular uſes for ſeven hundred pounds, and out of this he gave, by way of augmentation, to the poor endowment of the chapel of Wetherſlack, his native village, thirty pounds a year, which chapel in his life-time he rebuilt from the ground far more elegantly than it was before. The ſurplus of this eſtate he directed to be annually diſpoſed of in mending the highways, in the inſtruction of the ſons of the poorer ſort, or in marrying their daughters. Thus, for the moſt part, he diſpoſed of all he had, or was due to him from thoſe whom he thought would readily pay his executors. The reſidue of his eſtate, by reaſon of the doubtful credit of ſome of his debtors, or the leſs doubtful indigence of others, he could not reduce to any juſt eſtimate; but whatever it ſhould amount to, after his funeral expences and other debts paid, he directed it to be diſpoſed of either for the relief of poor families, or to other pious uſes, at his diſcretion, to whom he intruſted the care and execution of his will. And indeed this ſurpluſage of his eſtate, by the diligence and faithfulneſs of ſome perſons that had a juſt value for his memory, and were well verſed in the practice of the Law, amounted, beyond all expectation, to little leſs than one thouſand pounds; ſo faithfully did he diſcharge the public truſt committed to him, and ſo prudently manage his private fortune (38).

(38) Ib. p. 346.

dral of St. Paul's, and his epitaph, compoſed by Mr. Samuel Howlet, then not twenty years of age, is not inferior to the worth of him it celebrates (y) [Z]. The character of Mr. Barwick is ſo eaſily collected from theſe memoirs, that nothing in relation thereto can ſeem neceſſary in this place, as the extraordinary length of this article forbids any addition which is not abſolutely of that kind: I ſhall therefore conclude with obſerving, that as his was a life of action, and not a very long one either, dying at fifty-three, ſo we have no reaſon to wonder, that he did not leave behind him a greater number of writings, though what he has left are ſufficient to ſhew, how well he could have expreſſed his zeal and his loyalty by words, if he had not been better employed, I mean, in expreſſing them by his actions. Mr. Wood has given us a catalogue of his works (z) [AA], which, with thoſe already mentioned, may ſatisfy the reader on this head; only it may not be amiſs to remark, that abundance of his letters to Chancellor Hyde, may be found in the Collection of Thurloe's State Papers. C.

(y) Le Neve's Monum. Angl. Vol. i. p. 107. Whence we learn that he is buried in the ſouth iſle of St. Paul's Cathedral. Wood's Faſti Oxon. Vol. ii. p. 50.

(z) Ibid. ubi ſupra.

[Z] Of him it celebrates.] In this epitaph, which has been often printed both in Latin and Engliſh, there is a conciſe hiſtory of Dean Barwick's life, in a very elegant and claſſic ſtile, though the author was ſo young a man. He had ſome relation to the family, being, as I take it, ſon to Dr. Peter Barwick's wife, by her firſt huſband Dean Howlet, and bred at Cambridge, in St. John's-college, under Mr. Fothergill, Dean Barwick's own tutor. The text, on which Dr. Peter Gunning, afterwards Biſhop of Ely, preached on this occaſion, was Philippians i. ver. 22, 23, 24. His funeral was ſolemnized on the 27th of October, 1664 (39).

(39) This from Dr. Worthington's Letter above mentioned.

[AA] A catalogue of his works.] This worthy perſon, Dr. Barwick, ſays he, has publiſhed, 1. The Fight, Victory, and Triumph of St. Paul, accommodated to Thomas (Morton) late Lord Biſhop of Dureſme, in a ſermon preached at his funeral in the pariſh church of St. Peter at Eaſton Mauduit in Northamptonſhire, on Michaelmas-day, on 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8. Lond. 1660, 4to. 2. A Summary Account of the Holy Life and Death of Thomas late Lord Biſhop of Dureſme, printed with the ſaid ſermon, which Biſhop died at Eaſton Mauduit before mentioned on St. Matthew's day, an. 1659, aged 95 years. 3. Deceivers deceived, or the Miſtakes of Wickedneſs, &c. a ſermon at St. Paul's cathedral the 20th of October, 1661, on Prov. xiv. part of the 8th verſe. Lond. 1661, 4to. (40)

(40) Wood's Faſti Oxon. Vol. ii. col. 56.

BARWICK (PETER), Phyſician in Ordinary to King Charles II. He was brother to John before mentioned, and was born ſome time in the year 1619, at Wetherſlack in Weſtmoreland (a). He went to the ſame grammar ſchool with his elder brother, till ſuch time as he was fitted for the Univerſity, when he removed to St. John's-college in Cambridge. This was about the year 1637, and he continued there about ſix years, being much furthered in his ſtudies, by the care taken of him by his brother. In 1642, being then in the twenty fourth of his age, he took his degree of Bachelor of Arts (b). In 1644, he was nominated by the Biſhop of Ely, to a Fellowſhip of St. John's, in his gift (c) [A]. It is very probable that he had left the college before he obtained this preſentation; for as he was eminently loyal, as well as his brother, there is little reaſon to doubt his withdrawing from the univerſity, about the ſame time his brother did, which was in the foregoing year. It is uncertain, whether, at that time, he had made any choice of a profeſſion or not; ſo that being invited into Leiceſterſhire, in order to become Tutor to Ferdinando Sacheverell, Eſq; of Old Hayes in that county, a young gentleman of great hopes, he readily accepted the propoſition, and continued with him for ſome time (d). In 1647, he returned to Cambridge, and took his degree of Maſter of Arts, applying himſelf then aſſiduouſly to the ſtudy of Phyſic. While he was thus engaged, he loſt his friend and former pupil, Mr. Sacheverell, who, as a teſtimony of his eſteem and affection, bequeathed our author an annuity of twenty pounds, which was very punctually paid him (e). How he diſpoſed of himſelf for ſome years, does not very clearly appear, becauſe he who ſo elegantly recorded the loyal ſervices of his brother, as ſtudiouſly concealed his own. It is however more than probable, that he was engaged in the ſervice of his Sovereign, ſince it is certain that he was at Worceſter in 1651, where he had acceſs to his royal maſter King Charles II., who teſtified to him a very kind ſenſe of the fidelity of his family (f). In 1655, he was created Doctor of Phyſic, and two years afterwards, being then near forty, he took a houſe in St. Paul's Church-Yard, and much about the ſame time, married the widow of an eminent merchant, who was a near

(a) Preface to the Life of Dr. John Barwick, Dean of St. Paul's.

(b) Regiſt. Coll. S. Joan.

(c) Regiſt. Eliens.

(d) Præfat. Vit. J. Barwick, S.T.P. à P. Barwick conſcript. p. 5.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Heath's Chr. Vit. J. Barwick, p. 81.

[A] To a fellowſhip of St. John's in his gift.] The induſtrious and Reverend Mr. Bedford, editor of Dr. Peter Barwick's Life of his brother, the Dean of St. Paul's, had the firſt hint of our author's being not only a ſcholar, but a fellow of St. John's, from his daughter, Lady Dutton. Upon this, he applied to the late excellent Mr. Baker of the ſame college, who, of all men living, was the moſt capable of obtaining for him a true account. He ſearched the college regiſters to no purpoſe, which, to a leſs curious man, would have been a ſufficient proof that this report was ill-grounded: but he, to avoid all poſſibility of miſtake, conſulted the regiſtry of Ely, where he found an entry to this purpoſe, That on the third day of Dec. 1644, Peter Barwick, Bachelor of Arts, was preſented to a fellowſhip in St. John's college, void by the marriage of John Topping, Maſter of Arts, late Fellow, being in the gift of the Right Reverend Father in God, Matthew, Lord Biſhop of Ely. Dated the ſame day from the chamber in which his Lordſhip was then impriſoned in the Tower of London. This Biſhop was the famous Dr. Matthew Wren; and the reaſon why our author made no uſe of this preſentation is obvious enough: the Parliament was then poſſeſſed of the Univerſity, and none could be admitted there who were not well affected to them. Accordingly, in the college regiſter we find, that on April 26, 1650; John Heath, a Middleſex man, was admitted by the Viſitors into this fellowſhip without any notice taken whom he ſucceeded (1). This little circumſtance certainly deſerves notice, as it is an early proof of our author's modeſty, who, in the title of his books, ſtiles himſelf, formerly a ſcholar of that college, though, as we ſee, he might juſtly have written himſelf Fellow, as having for many years a legal title thereto.

(1) Præfat. in Vit. Johannis Barwick, S.T.P. à Pet. Barwick, M. D. conſcrip. p. 2, 3, 4.

relation of Archbiſhop Laud's [B]. Being thus ſettled, he ſoon gained a very great repute in the city, for his ſkill in his profeſſion, as amongſt the learned, by his judicious Defence of Dr. Harvey's Diſcovery of the Circulation of the Blood, which was then, and is ſtill, admired, as one of the beſt pieces written upon that ſubject (g) [C]. At this houſe of his, he entertained his worthy brother Dr. John Barwick, who repaired at his own expence an oratory he found there, wherein he daily read the ſervice of the Eſtabliſhed Church, and with a few ſteady Royaliſts, prayed for his exiled maſter. After the Reſtoration in 1660, he was made one of the King's Phyſicians in Ordinary (b), and in the year following, received a ſtill ſtronger proof of his Majeſty's kind ſenſe of his own and his brother's ſervices [D]. On the eighth of May 1661, Dr. Gilbert Sheldon, then Biſhop of London, with ſeveral other Biſhops, Deans, Archdeacons, &c. met in the morning at our author's houſe, and proceeded thence to the cathedral of St. Paul's in order to open the Convocation (i). In 1666, being compelled by the dreadful fire to remove from St. Paul's Church-Yard, where he had remained all the time of the plague [E], and been very active and ſerviceable in his profeſſion, he thought proper to take another houſe near Weſtminſter-Abbey, for the ſake of being near that cathedral, to which he conſtantly reſorted every morning at Six o'clock prayers (k). He was a very diligent Phyſician, and remarkably ſucceſsful in the ſmall-pox, and in moſt kinds of fevers. Yet he was far from making money the main object of his care; for during the many years that he practiſed, he not only gave advice and medicines gratis to the poor, but likewiſe charitably adminiſtered to their wants in other reſpects. He was very kind to all who had ſuffered for the Royal cauſe, to which he was a conſtant votary all his life; and with a view to its ſervice, in 1671, he drew up in Latin, which he wrote with unuſual elegance and purity, t Life of the Dean his brother, and took care to depoſit it, and the original papers ſervi ; to ſupport the facts therein mentioned, in the library in St. John's college at Cambridge (l) [F]. Twenty years after this, when our author was in the ſeventy-

(g) Præfat. ad Vit. J. Barwick, p. xiii.

(b) Ibid. p. vii.

(i) Synod. Angl. Append. p. 60.

(k) Prefat. ad Vit. J. Barwick. p. 13.

(l) As I was informed by ſeveral members of that college.

[B] A near relation of Archbiſhop Laud's.] This Lady's maiden name was Brown, deſcended of the ancient family of Browns in Norfolk. She married firſt Dr. Richard Howlet, a Clergyman of great merit, who became a Dean in Ireland, but being driven from his deanery in the Rebellion, came over into England in very diſtreſſed circumſtances; on which account, as well as becauſe his wife was his relation, Archbiſhop Laud collated him to the rectory of Lachingdon in Eſſex. After his deceaſe ſhe married Mr. Sayon, a rich Merchant, whoſe widow ſhe was when our author eſpouſed her (2). He had by her ſeveral children, viz. a ſon who died an infant, two daughters who alſo died in their non-age, and one who ſurvived him, mentioned in the text.

(2) Preface to the Life of Dr. John Barwick, p. vi.

[C] Which were then admired as the beſt pieces on that ſubject.] The learned Dr. Harvey publiſhed his uſeful diſcovery of the circulation of the blood when our author was between eight and nine years old (3); and yet the diſputes about it were very warm after Dr. Barwick had taken his degree, the author himſelf being ſtill living. As two things were chiefly inſiſted on, firſt that the fact itſelf was ſtill dubious, and next, that admitting it certain, it was a thing known long ago even to Hippocrates, the Father of the Faculty, our author was excellently qualified to ſhine in this diſpute. The learned writings he left behind him on the human ſyſtem, though they were never publiſhed, ſufficiently demonſtrate his exquiſite ſkill in Anatomy, and his great ſagacity in applying the lights he drew from that ſcience. On the other hand, no man was ever better read than he in the ancient authors on Phyſic, whence he made it evidently appear, that ſuch as attributed this diſcovery to Hippocrates, did it only out of envy to his friend Dr. Harvey. As theſe ſuccours from ſo worthy a perſon were kindly acknowledged by that venerable old man, ſo our author himſelf, as he often told Dr. Woodward, reflected on no action of his life with greater ſatisfaction, than he did on this, of eſpouſing the cauſe of ſo worthy a perſon againſt a troop of malevolent opponents (4). To this we may add what is likewiſe a circumſtance much to our author's honour, that Dr. Woodward, late Profeſſor at Greſham-college, was his pupil, and very probably derived from him his fluency in writing and ſpeaking his elegant Latin.

(3) In his Exercitatio Anatomica de Motu Cordis, printed at Francfort, 1628.

(4) Præf. ad Vit. J. Barwick, &c. p. 15.

[D] His and his brother's ſervices.] The patent under the hand and ſeal of Sir Edward Walker, Knight, Garter King at Arms, bears date the 20th of November 1661, and recites, That whereas nothing can be more juſt, than that ſuch as have deſerved well of their Prince and of their country, ſhould be properly diſtinguiſhed, and their merits pointed out to poſterity, and whereas nothing hath more effectually anſwered the former purpoſe, or furniſhed ſtronger incitements to loyalty, or virtuous atchievements in the latter, than the rules obſerved in bearing arms; and whereas the reverend John Barwick, Profeſſor of Divinity, Chaplain to his Majeſty, late Dean of Durham, and then of St. Paul's, and his brother, Peter Barwick, Doctor in Phyſic, and one of his Majeſty's Phyſicians in Ordinary, during the late troubleſome and diſtracted times, did conſtantly, faithfully, and aſſiduouſly, with their lives and fortunes, ſupport the royal cauſe, deſerving thereby not only an authentic conceſſion of arms to them and their poſterity, but alſo an addition and augmentation to be in them inſerted. Know therefore, that I Edward Walker, Principal King at Arms by the name of Garter, by virtue of the authority to me given by letters patents under the great ſeal of England, do hereby give, grant, and confirm, unto the ſaid John and Peter Barwick, the following arms, which they have hitherto born by the ſurname of Barwick, viz. in a field argent, three bears heads ſable, muzzled, gules, and as a creſt on a helmet proper, a bear's head ſable, muzzled, gules, with a crown Or, by way of collar; ſignifying their extraordinary fidelity to the King, their many great ſervices and toilſome afflictions by them endured with patience; and I farther give and aſſign to the ſaid John and Peter Barwick, the addition and augmentation following; that is to ſay, in the midſt of the field abovementioned, a roſe gules irradiated Or, which arms, creſt, and augmentation ſhall be born by them and their poſterity, &c. (5). This we thought, might with greater propriety be taken notice of here than in the life of his brother John, who lived and died a bachelor.

(5) Præfat. ad Vit. J. Barwick, p. vii. This alſo by the permiſſion of the late Garter King at Arms, John Anſtis, Eſq; a true friend to all Engliſh Antiquaries, was examined with the Original Book of Grants, in the Heralds Office.

[E] Remained all the time of the plague.] This is taken notice of by Dr. Hodges, in his treatiſe de Peſte, wherein he ſays, that there were not wanting many learned and famous Phyſicians, who, notwithſtanding the great danger to which they were expoſed, exerted their utmoſt endeavours to ſtop the progreſs of the contagion, particularly Dr. Francis Gliſſon, Regius Profeſſor of Phyſic in the univerſity of Cambridge, Dr. Nathan. Paget, Dr. Thomas Wharton, Dr. Peter Barwick, Dr. Humphry Brooks, and others (6). This was a noble inſtance of piety, fortitude, and public ſpirit.

(6) Hodges de Peſte, p. 19.

[F] In the library of St. John's college.] Our author had a great reſpect for this learned ſociety, as appeared not only by his depoſiting theſe valuable papers there, but alſo by his lending two hundred and eight pounds to the college for many years without intereſt, and making at length a preſent of the whole ſum (7). This copy, however, was not the only one he left of his ſeventy fourth year of his age, and his eye-ſight ſo much decayed, that he was forced to make uſe of the hand of a friend, he added an appendix in defence of the Εἰκὼν Βασιλικὴ, againſt Dr. Walker, who was very well known to him, and of whom in that treatiſe he has given a very copious account (m) [G]. This piece of his is written with a good deal of aſperity, occaſioned chiefly by the frequency of ſcurrilous libels againſt the memory of Charles I. To this appendix, our author, as well as he could, ſubſcribed his name. In 1694, growing quite dark, and being beſides frequently afflicted with fits of the ſtone, he gave over practice, and dedicated the remainder of his life to the ſervice of God, and the converſation of a few intimate friends, amongſt whom Dr. Buſby, the ever-famous maſter of Weſtminſter ſchool, was one (n) [H]. From this ſedentary courſe of life, his old diſtemper the ſtone grew very much upon him, and toward the end of Auguſt 1705, being ſeized with a vomiting and looſeneſs, followed with an intermitting fever, and in a few days, with a great and ſudden evacuation of blood, he exchanged this life for a better, the fourth of September the ſame year, in the eighty-ſixth year of his age, and by his own direction, was interred without any monument, as well as with great privacy, near the body of his dear wife, in the pariſh church of St. Faith's under St. Paul's (o). He was a man of a very comely perſon, equally remarkable for the ſolidity of his learning, and for a wonderful readineſs as well as elegance in expreſſing it. His piety was ſincere and ſublime, his reputation abſolutely unſpotted, his loyalty exemplary, and his modeſty almoſt without example. In all ſtations of life he was admired and beloved, and of a chearful and ſerene mind in all ſituations. He was happy in the univerſal approbation of all parties, as he was himſelf charitable to all, and never vehement but in the cauſe of truth. He left behind him an only daughter, Mary, who married Sir Ralph Dutton of Sherbourne in Dorſetſhire, Baronet, and brought to him a very conſiderable fortune (p). By this Gentleman ſhe had one ſon, Sir John Dutton, Baronet, and two daughters. The title is now extinct.

(7) Præfat. ad Vit. Johan. Barwick, p. 17.

C.

(m) Vit. J. Barwick, p. 247.

(n) Præf. ad Vit. J. Barwick, p. 16, 17, 18, 19.

(o) Ibid. p. 18.

(p) Preface to the Life of Dr. John Barwick.

his book: on the contrary, he left another MS. to his family, and a third given by him in his lifetime to Dr. Woodward, and depoſited for ſome time with the author's approbation in the library of St. Martin in the Fields. Of theſe the Cambridge copy is moſt authentic, which is fairly copied, bound up in Turkey leather, with three of the King's original letters, and an acquittance, all in his Majeſty's own hand. Together with this volume there is another of the Chancellor's, Dr. Barwick's, and other original letters and papers relating to the ſame ſubject (8).

(8) Preface to the Engliſh Life of Dr. Barwick.

[G] Of whom in that treatiſe he has given a very copious account.] This he was very capable of doing, ſince Dr. Anthony Walker, while at the univerſity of Cambridge was pupil to Dean Barwick, and a very indifferent character is given of him, though without mentioning his name, in the life of the Dean written by our author. In this appendix, the conduct not only of Dr. Walker, but Biſhop Gauden is fully expoſed, in relation to the point therein examined.

[H] Dr. Buſby, the famous maſter of Weſtminſter ſchool was one.] In Mr. Bedford's preface to the Latin life, there is inſerted an elegant letter from the ingenious Mr. Maittaire, wherein he, of his own knowledge, moſt pathetically deſcribes the dear friendſhip there was between thoſe two excellent perſons, particularly the infinite pains taken by Dr. Barwick, as a Phyſician, to alleviate the many painful diſeaſes to which, in the latter part of his life, Dr. Buſby was ſubject. The piece itſelf, though very curious and entertaining, is too long to be inſerted here (9).

(9) Præfat. ad Vit. J. Barwick, p. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20.

BASIER, or BASIRE (Isaac), a learned and active Divine in the XVIIth century, was born in the Iſle of Jerſey (a), in the year 1607 [A]. In what ſchool and univerſity he received his education is altogether unknown. For ſome time, he was maſter of the college or free-ſchool at Guernſey (b): But, at length, became Chaplain to Thomas Morton Biſhop of Durham (c), who gave him the rectory of Stanhope, and the vicarage of Eggleſcliff, both in the county of Durham (d). In July 1640, he had the degree of Doctor of Divinity conferred upon him at Cambridge, by mandate (e); and was incorporated in the ſame at Oxford, the November following (f). About that time he was made Chaplain in Ordinary to King Charles I (g). On the twelfth of December 1643, he was inſtalled into the ſeventh prebend in the church of Durham, to which he was collated by his generous patron Biſhop Morton (h). The next year, on the twenty-fourth of Auguſt, he was alſo collated to the archdeaconry of Northumberland, with the rectory of Howick annexed (i). But he did not long enjoy theſe great preferments. For, in the beginning of the Civil Wars, being ſequeſtered, purſevanted, plundered, and forced to fly (k), he repaired to King Charles at Oxford, before whom, and his Parliament; he frequently preached (l). In 1646, he had a licence granted him under the public ſeal of the univerſity, to preach the word of God throughout England (m). Upon the ſurrender of the Oxford garriſon to the Parliament, not caring to ſtay any longer within the Britiſh dominions, he reſolved to make a virtue of neceſſity, and to go and propagate the doctrine of the Engliſh Church in the Eaſt, among the Greeks, Arabians, &c. (n). Leaving therefore his family in England, he went firſt to Zante, an iſland near the Morea, where he made ſome ſtay; and had good ſucceſs in ſpreading among the

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. Vol. i. Faſti, col. 285, 286. edit. Lond. 1721.

(b) From the information of a friend.

(c) Life of Biſhop Morton, 8*vo*, p. 85.

(d) J. Walker's Attempt towards recovering the number and ſufferings of the Clergy, &c. Lond. 1714, fol. p. 19. Tit. Durham.

(e) As appears from the univerſity regiſters.

(f) Wood, ubi ſupra. In the univerſity regiſter, he is ſtiled, Vir doctiſſimus—ingenii & doctrinæ ornamentis præditus, i. e. a very learned and ingenious man.

(g) Ibid.

(h) Br. Willis's Survey of the Cathedrals of York, &c. Lond. 1727. 4*to*. p. 270.

(i) Ibid. p. 263. 280.

(k) J. Walker, ubi ſupra.

(l) Ibid. and Wood, ubi ſupra.

(m) Wood's Faſti, Vol. ii. col. 57.

(n) Wood, Vol. i. Faſti, col. 286. J. Walker, ubi ſupra.

(1) Faſti, Vol. i. col. 285.

(*) View of the Government and Public Worſhip in the Reformed Churches, Lond. 1662, 4*to*, Appendix, p. 341.

[A] Was born in the Iſle of Jerſey, in the year 1607.] This is expreſsly aſſerted by A. Wood (1), but it is contradicted by a gentleman, who hath imparted ſome materials to the author. And Dr. Durel, a native of Jerſey, and an intimate acquaintance of his, calls him a Frenchman born (*). There is no memorial of him in the iſland, nor any account of his birth and baptiſm in the pariſh regiſters there, which have been ſearched upon this occaſion. That he was born in the year 1607 appears from his epitaph recited below (2); for in the year 1676 when he died, he was 69 years of age.

(2) Note [I].

Greek inhabitants the doctrine of the Engliſh Church, the ſum whereof he imparted to ſeveral of them, in a vulgar Greek tranſlation of our Church-Catechiſm (o). The effect of it was ſo remarkable, that it drew envy, and conſequently perſecution, upon him from the Latins [B]. This occaſioned his voluntary receſs into the Morea, where the Metropolitan of Achaia prevailed upon him to preach twice in Greek, at a meeting of ſome of his Biſhops and Clergy, which was well taken. At his departure, he left with him a copy of the Catechiſm above mentioned. From thence, after he had paſſed through Apulia, Naples, and Sicily again (in which laſt, at Meſſina, he officiated for ſome weeks a board a ſhip) he embarked for Syria; and, after ſome months ſtay at Aleppo, where he had frequent converſation with the Patriarch of Antioch, then reſident there, he left a copy of our Church-Catechiſm, tranſlated into Arabic, the native language of that place. From Aleppo he went in 1652 to Jeruſalem, and ſo travelled over all Paleſtine. At Jeruſalem he received much honour, both from the Greeks and Latins [C]. The Greek Patriarch (the better to expreſs his deſire of communion with the Church of England, declared by the Doctor unto him) gave him his bull, or patriarchal ſeal, in a blank, which is their way of credence, and ſhewed him many other reſpects. As for the Latins, they received him moſt courteouſly into their own convent, though he did openly profeſs himſelf a Prieſt of the Church of England. After ſome diſputes about the validity of our Engliſh ordinations, they procured him entrance into the temple of the ſepulchre, at the rate of a Prieſt, that is half in half leſs than a layman's rate [D]; and, at his departure from Jeruſalem, the Pope's Vicar gave him his diploma in parchment, under his own hand and public ſeal, in it ſtyling him, 'a Prieſt of the Church of England, and Doctor of 'Divinity (p);' at which title many marvelled, eſpecially the French Embaſſador at Conſtantinople. Returning to Aleppo, he paſſed over the Euphrates and went into Meſopotamia, Abraham's country, where he intended to ſend the Church-Catechiſm in Turkiſh, to ſome of their Biſhops, who were moſtly Armenians. This Turkiſh tranſlation was procured by the care of Sir Thomas Bendyſhe, the Engliſh Embaſſador at Conſtantinople. After his return from Meſopotamia, he wintered at Aleppo, where he received ſeveral courteſies from the Conſul, Mr. Henry Riley. In the beginning of the year 1653, he departed from Aleppo, and came to Conſtantinople by land, being ſix hundred miles, without either ſervant, or Chriſtian, or any man with him, that could ſo much as ſpeak the Frank language [E]: Yet, by the help of ſome Arabic he had picked up at Aleppo, he performed that journey in the company of twenty Turks, who uſed him courteouſly; the rather, becauſe he was by the way, Phyſician to them and their friends: A ſtudy (as he ſays) whereunto the iniquity of the times, and the opportunity of Padua drove him (q). After his arrival at Conſtantinople, the French Proteſtants there deſired him to be their Miniſter. And, though he declared to them his reſolution to officiate according to the Engliſh liturgy (a tranſlation whereof, for want of a printed copy, coſt him no little labour) yet they orderly ſubmitted to it, and promiſed to ſettle on him, in three reſponſible mens hands, a competent ſtipend: And all this, as they told him, with the expreſs conſent of the French Embaſſador, but ſtill under the roof and protection of the Engliſh Embaſſador [F]. Before he quitted the Eaſtern parts, he intended to paſs into Egypt, in order to take a ſurvey of the churches of the Cophties, and confer with the Patriarch of Alexandria, as he (o) Letter written by Dr. Baſier to Sir Ric. Brown, at the end of The ancient Liberty of the Britannic Church, Lond. 1661.

(p) Sacerdotem Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ, & SS. Theologiæ Doctorem.

(q) Letter, as above.

[B] From the Latins.] The Latins are thoſe members of the Romiſh Church, diſperſed throughout the Eaſt; who, becauſe they perform their divine ſervice in the Latin tongue, are thence called Latins.

[C] He received much honour both from the Greeks and Latins.] Who the Latins are, hath been explained in the laſt note. As for the Greeks, they are ſuch of the original inhabitants as are Chriſtians and members of the Greek Church.

[D] They procured him entrance into the temple of the ſepulchre at the rate of a Prieſt, &c.] Chriſtians having always expreſſed an uncommon regard, and extreme veneration, for the place of Jeſus Chriſt's burial (on which a church is built), when the Turks became poſſeſſed of thoſe places, they took care to make an advantage of it. And therefore the church doors are guarded by ſeveral Janizaries and other Turkiſh officers; who are placed there to watch, that none enter in, but ſuch as have firſt paid their appointed caphar or tribute: This is more or leſs, according to the country, or character of the perſons that enter. For Franks (i. e. Europeans) it is ordinarily fourteen dollars a head, unleſs they are Eccleſiaſtics; for in that caſe it is but half ſo much, namely ſeven dollars. Having once paid this caphar, you may go in and out gratis as often as you pleaſe during the whole feaſt of Eaſter; provided you take the opportunities in which it is cuſtomary to open the doors. But if you would have them opened purpoſely for your own private occaſion, then the firſt expence muſt be paid again (3). The care of the holy ſepulchre formerly belonged to the Greeks; but was in the laſt century, committed to the Latins: For there being violent diſputes and animoſities about it between the two nations, ſo that, in ſtriving which ſhould go in to celebrate their maſs, they proceeded to blows and even wounds; Lewis the Fourteenth, in order to put an end to thoſe infamous quarrels, did, about the year 1685, write a letter to the Grand Viſier, wherein he requeſted him to order the holy ſepulchre to be put into the hands of the Latins. The conſequence of which letter, and of other inſtances made by that King, was, that the ſepulchre was appropriated about the year 1690, to the Latins: Since which time they alone have the privilege to ſay maſs in it. And though Chriſtians of all nations are permitted to go into it for their private devotions, yet none may ſolemnize any public office of religion there, but the Latins (4).

(3) A Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſalem, by Hen. Maundrell, 4th edit. Oxford, 1721, 8*vo*, p. 67, 68.

(4) Ibid. p. 70, 71.

[E] The Frank language.] That is any of the European languages. For the Turks give the general name of Franks to the European nations, whether French, Engliſh, Dutch, &c.

[F] But ſtill under the roof and protection of the Engliſh Embaſſador.] 'How long, adds he, this li-'berty may laſt, I know not, becauſe they are all of 'them bred after the Geneva diſcipline, and conſe-'quently, not like to perſevere, or to be ſuffered to 'go on in our way, out of which, God willing, I 'am reſolved not to depart, though for it I loſe this, 'as I have loſt all.' This paſſage I take notice of, becauſe it plainly manifeſts the Doctor's inviolable affection for the Church of England.

had done already with the other three Patriarchs, partly to acquire the knowledge of thoſe Churches, and partly to publiſh and give them a true notion of the Church of England (r). But whether he accompliſhed his deſign, is not certain. He went next into Tranſilvania, where he was entertained for ſeven years by George Ragotzi the Second, Prince of that country; who honoured him with the divinity-chair in his new-founded univerſity of Alba Julia (or Weiſſenburg) and endowed him, though a mere ſtranger to him, with a very ample ſalary (s). During his travels he collated the ſeveral confeſſions of faith of the different ſorts of Chriſtians, Greeks, Armenians, Jacobites, Maronites, &c. which confeſſions he kept by him in their own languages (t). His conſtant deſign and endeavour, whilſt he remained in the Eaſt, was, to perſuade the Chriſtians of the ſeveral denominations there, to a canonical reformation of ſome errors; and to diſpoſe and incline them to a communion, or unity, with the Church of England (u). But his pious intentions were afterwards defeated by the artifices of the Court of France (w). Upon the Reſtoration of King Charles II., Dr. Baſier was recalled by his Majeſty to England, in a letter written to Prince Ragotzi. But this unfortunate Prince dying ſoon after, of the wounds he received in a battle with the Turks at Gyala, the care of his ſolemn obſequies was committed to the Doctor by his relict, Princeſs Sophia, whereby he was kept a year longer out of England (x). At length returning in 1661, he was reſtored to his preferments and dignities; and made Chaplain in Ordinary to King Charles II. (y) He wrote ſeveral things [G]. Having for many years after the Reſtoration, quietly enjoyed his large revenues, he died on the 12th of October in the year 1676, and in the 69th year of his age (z): And was buried in the yard belonging to the cathedral of Durham [H], where a tomb was erected over his grave, with an inſcription, ſet down below in the note [I]. His character ſufficiently appears from what hath been ſaid of him in this article: Namely, That he was a learned, active, and induſtrious man; a true ſon of the Church of England; and a loyal ſubject to his two maſters, King Charles I. and II. [K]. His ſon, John Baſire, Eſq; who had been Receiver General for the four weſtern counties, died on the 2d of June 1722, in the 77th year of his age (a).

(r) Letter, as above.

(s) Dr. Baſier's own words, in Biſhop Kennet's Regiſter and Chronicle Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, &c. fol. Lond. 1728, p. 526. See alſo Wood's Faſti, Vol. i. col. 286.

(t) Letter to Sir Rich. Brown, as above.

(u) Ibid.

(w) See Etat. preſent des Nations & Egliſes Grecque Armenienne, &c. par le Sieur de la Croix. Paris 1695, 12*mo*, in the Preface.

(x) Dr. Baſier, in Kennet, ubi ſupra.

(y) See his epitaph below.

(z) Ibid.

(a) Hiſtorical Regiſter, Vol. vii. p. 29. of the Chronological Diary.

[G] He wrote ſeveral things.] Namely, I. Deo & Eccleſiæ Sacrum; 'Sacrilege arraigned and condemned by St. Paul, Romans ii. 22. Oxford 1646, 4*to*.' Reprinted at London in 1668, 8*vo*. II. Diatriba de antiquâ Eccleſiæ Britannicæ libertate; written on occaſion of Chr. Juſtell's intended Geographia Sacro-politica, but which was never publiſhed. It was found in the Lord Hopton's cabinet after his deceaſe, by Richard Watſon an exile for his loyalty, who not only cauſed it to be printed at Bruges in 1656, 8*vo*, but alſo tranſlated it into Engliſh, and put it out under the title of 'The ancient Liberty of the Britannic Church, and the legitimate exemption thereof from the Roman Patriarchate, diſcourſed on four poſitions, and aſſerted, &c.' To which are ſubjoined, 'Three chapters concerning the Privileges of the Britannic Church, &c. ſelected out of a Latin manuſcript intitled, Cathelico-Romanus Pacificus, written by F. I Barnes of the Order of St. Benedict.' At the end, there is 'A Letter, written by Dr. Baſier to the Honourable Sir Richard Brown, when Reſident at Paris for his Majeſty of Great Britain; relating his travels and endeavours to propagate the knowledge of the doctrine and diſcipline, eſtabliſhed in the Britannic Church, among the Greeks, Arabians, &c. dated from Pera, near Conſtantinople, 20 Julii, 1653.' Sir Richard Brown, in a letter to R. Watſon, printed at the beginning of this book, obſerves, 'That he could never read this letter, but as a kind of nine and twentieth of the Acts.' The Doctor wrote ſome farther accounts of his travels, in letters to Sir George Radcliffe, but they could not be recovered. This book, dedicated by the tranſlator to Sir Richard Brown above-mentioned, was printed at London 1661, ſmall 8*vo*. III. Dr. Baſier hath alſo written, 'The Hiſtory of the Engliſh and Scotch Preſbytery, Lond. 1659, 1660, 8*vo*.' IV. Oratio privata, boni Theologi (ſpeciatim concionatoris practici) partes præcipuas complectens. Lond. 1670, 8*vo*, in half a ſheet. V. 'The dead man's real ſpeech;' being a ſermon on Hebr. xi. 4. at the funeral of Dr. John Coſin, late Biſhop of Durham, 29th of April, 1672. 'Together with a brief (account) of the life, dignities, benefactions, principal actions and ſufferings of the ſaid Biſhop:' And an Appendix of his 'profeſſion and practice, and of his laſt will concerning religion.' Lond. 1673, 8*vo*. Mr. Wood thinks he publiſhed ſome other things, but does not mention what they were (5).

(5) Wood's Faſti Vol. i. col. 286.

(6) Col. 286.

[H] He was buried in the yard belonging to the cathedral of Durham.] And, as Wood informs us (6), 'Near the body of an ancient ſervant that had lived many years with him, and not by that of his wife in the cathedral.'

[I] A tomb was erected over his grave, with an inſcription, &c.] The inſcription on this tomb, is as follows: Depoſitum IS. BASIRE, S. T. D. Archidiaconi Northumbr. hujus eccleſiæ Canonici, & Regibus aug. CAROLO I. & CAROLO II. a Sacris, qui obdormivit 12 die Octob. Anno Domini 1676. anno Ætatis ſuæ 69. 1 Theſſ. iv. Deus eos qui dormierunt per Jeſum adducet cum eo (7); i. e. 'Here lie the remains of ISAAC BASIRE, D. D. Archdeacon of Northumberland, Prebendary of this Church, and Chaplain to their Majeſties King CHARLES I. and II., who fell on ſleep the 12th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1676, and in the 69th year of his age. 1 Theſſ. iv. 14. Them which ſleep in Jeſus, will God bring with him.'

(7) J. Le Neve Monum. Anglic. from 1650, to 1679, p. 171. n. 432. and Willis, ubi ſupra, p 263.

[K] A true ſon of the Church of England; and a loyal ſubject, &c.] An undeniable inſtance of this, and a ſignal proof of his ſincerity was, his ſuffering the loſs of his large preferments, rather than ſubmit to what he thought unlawful. And a farther confirmation of it was the reſolution he took, 'not to exerciſe his function where the duty of praying for King Charles ſhould be prohibited.' Accordingly, he refuſed from the Conſul at Smyrna the offer of a plentiful ſupport, becauſe that would not be allowed (8). But, let us hear the Doctor's own words to the ſame effect (9). 'I ſhould now, ſays he, long for a comfortable poſtliminium (return) to my family; but yet I am reſolved rather intermori (to die) in theſe toilſome eccleſiaſtical peregrinations, than to decline the leaſt, on either hand, from my religion, or allegiance.' M.

(8) R. Watſon, in his epiſtle dedicatory at the beginning of 'The ancient Liberty of the Britannic Church.'

(9) Concluſion of his Letter to Sir R. Brown, as above.

BASINGE (John) (a), more commonly known by the name of Baſingſtochius, or de Baſingſtoke, was born at Baſingſtoke, a town in the north part of Hampſhire, and from thence took his ſurname (b). He was a perſon highly eminent for virtue and learning. For having very good natural parts, he ſo improved them by ſtudy, that he became a perfect maſter of the Latin and Greek languages; and alſo an eloquent Orator, a complete Mathema-

(a) Leland, Comment. de Script. Brit. Lond. 1709, p. 266. Baleus de Script. cent. iv. n. 15.

(b) Pits, de Illuſt. Angl. Script. an. 1252.

Mathematician, a ſubtil Philoſopher, and a ſound Divine (c). The foundation of his great learning he laid in the univerſity of Oxford (d), and, for his farther improvement, went to Paris [A], where he reſided ſome years (e). Not ſatisfied with that, he travelled to Athens (f), that agreeable ſeat of the Muſes, and the mother of all polite literature, where he made many curious obſervations, and perfected himſelf in his ſtudies, particularly in the knowledge of the Greek tongue [B]. At his return from thence to England, he brought over with him ſeveral curious Greek manuſcripts (g), and introduced the uſe of the Greek numeral figures into this kingdom (h). He became alſo a very great promoter and encourager of the ſtudy of that language (i), which was much neglected in theſe weſtern parts of the world [C]: And to facilitate it, he tranſlated from Greek into Latin a Grammar (k), which he entitled, The Donatus of the Greeks [D]. Our author's merit and learning recommended him to the eſteem of all lovers of literature; particularly to the favour of Robert Groſteſte, Biſhop of Lincoln, by whom he was preferred to the archdeaconry of Leiceſter, as he had been ſome time before to that of London (l). He died in the year 1252 (m), the 26th of King Henry III.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Leland, ubi ſupra.

(e) Pits, ubi ſupra.

(f) Leland, Baleus, & Pits, ubi ſupra.

(g) Leland, Baleus, & Pits, ubi ſupra.

(b) Matth. Paris. Hiſt. Angl. edit. 1640. p. 835.

(i) Leland, ubi ſupra, p. 267.

(k) M. Paris, & Leland, ibid.

(l) Leland, Baleus, & Pits, ibid.

(m) M. Paris, ubi ſupra.

[A] For his farther improvement went to Paris.] The univerſity of Paris was then, and had been for ſome years before in great reputation, on account of the famous perſons that taught there; namely, Peter Abailard, Alberic of Reims, and eſpecially Peter Lombard. See Cinquieme diſcours ſur l'Hiſtoire Eccleſiaſtique, par l'Abbé Fleury (1).

(1) Hiſt. Eccleſiaſtique par M. Fleury, tom. xvii. Paris, 1721, 12*mo*.

[B] Particularly in the knowledge of the Greek tongue.] He uſed to ſay that he learned moſt there, from a young Lady named Conſtantina, daughter of the Archbiſhop of Athens; who, before the age of twenty, was a prodigy of learning, and, through her great ſkill in Natural Philoſophy, could foretel plagues, earthquakes, thunder, eclipſes, and the like (2).

(2) M. Paris, ubi ſupra.

[C] Which was much neglected in theſe weſtern parts of the world.] From the ninth to the fourteenth century, nay even to part of the fifteenth, the ignorance in all points of learning, and among the reſt in the Greek tongue was extreme. So that, as Eſpencæus obſerves (3), Græcè noſſe ſuſpectum fuerit, Hebraicè propè Hæreticum; for a man to underſtand Greek, rendered him ſuſpected; but, if he knew Hebrew, it made him be looked upon almoſt as a Heretic. The Monk's ſaying is alſo well known, Græcum non eſt legi, Greek is not to be read. For more inſtances of that monſtrous ignorance, See an Apologie or Declaration of the Power and Providence of God, by George Hakewill, D. D. (4).

(3) 2 Tim. iii. Digreſſione 17.

(4) Book iii. c. vii. § 2.

[D] Which he entitled, The Donatus of the Greeks.] The reſt of his works are, I. A Latin tranſlation of a Harmony of the Goſpels. II. A volume of ſermons. III. Particulæ ſententiarum per diſtinctiones, or a Commentary upon part of Lombard's Sentences, &c. (5).

(5) Baleus, Leland, & Pits, ib.

——It was he alſo that informed, Robert, Biſhop of Lincoln, that he had ſeen at Athens, a book called The Teſtament of the XII Patriarchs. Upon which the Biſhop ſent for it, and tranſlated it into Latin (6), and it was printed among the Orthodoxographa, Baſileæ, 1555, fol. M.

(6) M. Paris, ubi ſupra.

BASKERVILE (Sir Simon), Knight, (of the ancient family of the Baſkerviles in Herefordſhire) (a), an excellent ſcholar and eminent Phyſician, famous for his ſkill in Anatomy, and happy practice (b) in the time of King James the Firſt, and King Charles the Firſt, born at Exeter 1573, was the ſon of Thomas Baſkervile, an Apothecary of that city (c), who obſerving an early love of knowledge and thirſt after learning in his ſon, gave him a proper education for the univerſity, to which he was ſent about eighteen years old, entering him in Exeter-college in Oxford, on the 10th of March 1591, putting him under the care of Mr. William Helm (d), a man no leſs famous for his piety than learning, under whoſe tutorſhip he gave ſuch early proofs of his love of virtue and knowledge, that he was on the firſt vacancy elected Fellow of that houſe, before he had taken his Bachelor's degree in Arts, which delayed his taking it, till July the eighth, 1596 (e), to which he ſoon after added that of Arts-Maſter; and when he was admitted, had particular notice taken of him (according to our author's own words) for his admirable knowledge in Humanity and Philoſophy (f) [A]. After this, viz. 1606, he was choſen Senior Proctor of the univerſity; when he bent his ſtudy wholly to Phyſic, in the knowledge of which uſeful faculty, he became a moſt eminent proficient, and was then in as great eſteem at the univerſity for his admirable knowledge in medicine, as he had been before for other parts of learning, taking at once by accumulation (on the 20th of June, 1611) both his degrees therein, viz. that of Bachelor and Doctor (g). After many years ſtudy and induſtry, leaving the univerſity, he came to London, where he became of great eminency in his profeſſion; being a member of the College of Phyſicians, and for ſome time alſo Preſident thereof (h). His high reputation for learning, great ſkill and good ſucceſs in Phyſic [B], ſoon brought him in vogue at court, where he was ſworn Phyſician to King James the Firſt,

(a) Dugdale's Hiſtory of St. Paul's, p. 107.

(b) Dugdale, ut ſupra.

(c) Danmonii Orient. Illuſtr. p. 93.

(d) Dr. Prideaux's Epiſt. Dedic. to his Conſecration Sermon, as in note [B]. Lloyd's Memoirs, p. 539.

(e) Wood's Ath. Oxon. Vol. i. p. 778.

(f) Wood's Faſti Oxon. Vol. i. p. 811.

(g) Wood, ut ſupra.

(h) Danmonii Orient. Illuſtr. p. 94.

[A] For his admirable knowledge in humanity and philoſophy.] He was ſo noted and eminent for his excellent parts, knowledge of the arts and ſciences, and quickneſs in arguing, that, upon the firſt coming of King James to ſee that flouriſhing univerſity, he was choſen as a prime perſon to diſpute before him in the philoſophic art, which he performed with great applauſe of his Majeſty, who was not only there as an hearer, but as an accurate judge.——After this he had the honour to be one of the Proctors of that univerſity, which gave him farther occaſion of ſhewing himſelf publicly; and, having laid his grounds ſo firmly in Natural Philoſophy, he went on happily in the ſtudy of Phyſic, according to the known method of Ubi deſinit Philoſophus, ibi incipit Medicus (1).

(1) Dugdale's Hiſtory of St. Paul's, p. 107.

[B] His high reputation for learning, great ſkill and good ſucceſs in phyſic.] This gentleman is one of the famous men mentioned by Dr. John Prideaux (as the great ornament of Exeter college, nay even of the univerſity itſelf in their time) in his epiſtle to the reader before his conſecration ſermon (2); the dedication whereof (to the right worſhipful George Hakewill, D. D. Archdeacon of Surry, and founder of St. James's Chapel), after a ſhort preamble, runs thus: 'About 'your ſtanding in Exeter college, what a knot of noted 'ſcholars appeared in ſight of one another, to the cre- 'dit of our common mother, who ſupplied her other 'defects with ſuch a fair iſſue?' He then enumerates the 'ſeveral perſons,' and among the reſt Dr. Baſkervile, (whom he compliments with the title of a Worthy Phyſician)

(2) Preached at the conſecration of St. James's chapel, Exeter-college, Oct. 5, 1624.

First, and afterwards to King Charles the First: with whom, Mr. Wood (i) tells us, he was in such esteem for his learning and accomplishments, that he conferred the honour of knighthood upon him. —— He, by his practice, obtained a very plentiful estate, and shewed in his life a noble spirit suitable to the largeness of his fortune [C]. What family he left besides his wife, or who became his heir to all his great wealth, we can no ways find: He died July the 5th, 1641, aged 68 years (k), and was buried in the cathedral church of St. Paul, in the city of London; unto which, says Mr. Prince, 'he had probably 'been a liberal benefactor.' Adding, where, if he had any monument erected to his memory [D], it fell under the ruins of that church, occasioned by the dreadful conflagration, which happened in the year 1666 (l).

(i) Fasti Oxon. Vol. i. p. 811. See also Dugdale's Hist. of St. Paul's, p. 107.

(k) Dugdale's Hist. of St. Paul's p. 106, 107. where also see his monument, as below in note [D].

(l) Danmonii Illustr. p. 94.

Physician) 'who had there laid those grounds which, 'since improved, have attained that height the world 'now takes notice of.'

[C] He by his practice obtained a plentiful estate, and shewed in his life a noble spirit, suitable to the largeness of his fortune.] No Physician of that age could, we imagine, have better practice than he, if what is reported of him be true, viz. that he had no less than one hundred patients a week; so that it is not at all strange he should amass so great an heap of wealth, as to acquire the title of Sir Simon Baskervile the Rich (3). Fuller, speaking concerning the stoppage of the river Ex in Devon, has the following words: 'Some 'knowing Sir Simon Baskervile, a Physician, and na- 'tive of this place, to have a plentiful purse and a 'public spirit, wished he would have taken the work 'in hand to cure this obstruction; but it was no Phy- 'sician's work to meddle therewith, nor is it either 'powder or steel, or gilded pills, which can do the 'deed, but only pills of massy gold and silver (4).'— As to his spirit being equal to the largeness of his fortune, we have, among others, the following instances recorded of him: That being a great friend to the clergy and inferior loyal gentry, he would never take a fee of an orthodox minister under a Dean, nor of any suffering Cavalier in the cause of King Charles the First, under a gentleman of an hundred a year, but would also with physic to their bodies generally give relief to their necessities (5).

(3) Lloyd's Memoirs of the Lives, Actions, Sufferings, &c. p. 539.

(4) Fuller's Worthies of England, p. 276.

(5) Lloyd's Memoirs of the Lives, Actions, &c. p. 635.

[D] Adding, where if he had any monument erected to his memory, &c.] By this Mr. Prince seems to make a doubt, or at least not to know of his having a monument at all. —— But in a catalogue of tombs, inscriptions, &c. of memorable persons (6) in London, destroyed by the fire, we find the name of Sir Simon Baskervile, Knight, M. D. as having one; but Dugdale (7) goes yet farther, giving the very figure of the marble tablets, on which were the following inscriptions:

(6) Printed in 1668.

(7) History of St. Paul's, p. 106.

On one,

NEERE THIS PLACE LYETH BURIED THE BODY OF THAT WORTHY AND LEARNED GENT. SIR SIMON BASKERVILE KNIGHT AND DR IN PHYSICK WHO DEPARTED THIS LIFE THE 3D OF (it should be the 5th) July 1641 AGED 68 YEARS

And on another,

P. M. CHARISSIM: CONJUGIS, P: KATH. RELICTA S: BASKERVILE EQ: AUR. O.

[BASKERVILLE (JOHN) (*), a very ingenious artist of the present century, especially in letter-founding and printing, was born, in January 1706, at Woverley, in Worcestershire, and was heir to an estate of about sixty pounds a year; the whole income of which estate, with an exemplary filial piety and generosity, he allowed to his parents till their deaths, which happened at an advanced age. He was brought up to no particular trade or profession; but acquired, early in life, a love for fine writing and cutting in stone, in which arts he attained to great proficiency. When he was about twenty years old, he commenced Writing-master at Birmingham. In a little while his active genius, attentive to the improvements which were making in the rising manufactures of that industrious town, and formed for the invention of such improvements, led him to the japan business. This he carried on a long time with distinguished excellence and success. Mr. Baskerville applied himself, in 1750, to letter-founding, the bringing of which to perfection cost him much labour, and was accompanied with a very large expence. From letter-founding he proceeded, in a few years, to printing. The first work published by him was an edition of Virgil, in royal quarto, which now sells for three guineas. Soon after this, he obtained leave, from the university of Cambridge, to print a Bible in royal folio, and editions of the Common Prayer in three sizes; for the permission of doing which he paid a great premium to that university. He afterwards printed Horace, Terence, Catullus, Lucretius, Juvenal, Sallust, and Florus in quarto royal, Virgil in octavo, and several books in 12*mo*. He published, likewise, some of our English Classics. These publications rank the name of Baskerville with those persons who have the most contributed, at least in modern times, to the beauty and improvement of the art of printing. Indeed, it is needless to say to what perfection he has brought this excellent art. The paper, the type, and the whole execution of the works performed by him are the best testimonies of their merit. Mr. Baskerville, however, not meeting with that encouragement from the booksellers which he hoped for and expected, set up, a little before his death, a letter-foundry for sale, which business is now carried on by his widow. He died in January, 1775, leaving no issue.

(*) From information of the family, communicated by Mr. Joseph Wilkinson, Merchant in Birmingham.

Mr. Derrick, in a letter written to the Earl of Corke, July 15, 1760, containing a description of Birmingham, says, 'I need not remind your Lordship, that Baskerville, 'one of the best printers in the world, was born in this town (a), and resides near it. 'His house stands at about half a mile's distance, on an eminence that commands a fine 'prospect. I paid him a visit, and was received with great politeness, though an entire 'stranger. His apartments are elegant; his staircase is particularly curious; and the 'room in which he dines, and calls a smokeing-room, is very handsome. The grate 'and furniture belonging to it are, I think, of bright wrought iron, and cost him a 'round sum. —— He has just completed an elegant 8*vo* Common Prayer Book; has a

(a) This, as we have seen, was a mistake.

'ſcheme for publiſhing a grand folio edition of the Bible; and will ſoon finiſh a beautiful 'collection of Fables by the ingenious Mr. Dodſley (b). He manufactures his own 'paper, types, and ink; and they are remarkably good. This ingenious artiſt carries 'on a great trade in the japan way, in which he ſhewed me ſeveral uſeful articles, 'ſuch as candleſticks, ſtands, ſalvers, waiters, bread-baſkets, tea-boards, &c. elegantly 'deſigned, and highly finiſhed.—Baſkerville is a great cheriſher of genius, which, 'wherever he finds it, he loſes no opportunity of cultivating. One of his workmen has 'manifeſted fine talents for fruit-painting, in ſeveral pieces which he ſhewed me (c).' The writer of this article can add his own teſtimony concerning Mr. Baſkerville's politeneſs to ſtrangers, and the chearful hoſpitality with which he treated thoſe who were introduced to him. He was well known to many ingenious men, and was particularly intimate with the late Mr. Robert Dodſley and Mr. Shenſtone.] K.

(b) All ſince publiſhed.

(c) Derrick's Letters, Vol. i. p. 4, 5.

BASNET (EDWARD), Dean of St. Patrick's, Dublin, was an active man at the time of the Reformation, and a Privy-Counſellor to King Henry VIII., and King Edward VI. He was deſcended of an Eſquire's family, long ſeated at Eaton in the county of Denbigh, in Wales, and had ſome relations in Ireland, who probably came over with him [A]; for we find no ſuch names in hiſtory or records planted in Ireland before his time. He was preſented (a) by King Henry VIII. to the vicarage of Swords, in the dioceſe of Dublin, on the 11th of May, 1535, during the vacancy of that ſee by the murder of Archbiſhop Allen (b); and this is the firſt promotion we find he had in Ireland; ſo that in all probability he came over the year before in the retinue and under the countenance of Sir William Skeffington, Lord-Deputy. About the latter end of April 1537, he was elected by the Chapter Dean of the Cathedral of St. Patrick's, Dublin [B], that dignity being void on the the eighth of the ſaid month by the death of Geoffry Fitche, his predeceſſor; and this promotion gave him a rank almoſt equal to the epiſcopal [C]. He was ſtiled Sir Edward Baſnet, and is ſo named in an act of parliament of that time [D]; not that he had been dubbed a Knight, but was called ſo in the ſame ſenſe as thoſe are called Sirs, who have taken the firſt degree in the univerſity [E]. However active he was in the work of the Reformation, when he found his Prince, King Henry the Eighth, was in earneſt to ſhake off the Pope's power, it is certain, he did not ſhew his zeal in other particulars, by running ſo faſt into it as his Metropolitan, Archbiſhop Brown, had done; who having received an order (c) from the Lord Thomas Cromwell, for removing all ſuperſtitious images and reliques out of the churches of his dioceſe, he ſet about it immediately, and removed them from all his pariſh churches. But the cathedral of St. Patrick's being not under his juriſdiction, as Ordinary, but under the Dean alone, he could not make any alteration there, but through the Dean in perſon, who had neglected to carry this order into execution. The Prior of Chriſt-Church, who was head officer of that cathedral, was guilty of the ſame diſobedience, and both of them had written to Rome for encouragement. The Archbiſhop attributes this their negligence to their avarice (d), on account of the rich offerings that devotees uſed to make at the ſhrines of the ſaints. Wherefore he applied to the Lord Privy-ſeal, Cromwell, for a more extenſive commiſſion, in the execution of which, if occaſion required, he might be ſupported by the civil power [F]. It is not likely that Dean Baſnet waited to ſee ſuch a new coercive authority in the hands of his Metropolitan: For he received ſuch honours from his Prince, for his

(a) Rot. Canc. Hib. 27 Hen. VIII.

(b) Ware's Annals, ad ann. 1534.

(c) Cox's Hiſt. Vol. i. p. 256.

(d) Ibid. and Ware's Annals, ad ann. 1538.

[A] Had ſome relations in Ireland, who probably came over with him.] One Finian Baſſet was a near relation of his, who was ſeated at Nangre, in the county of Dublin, to whom Richard Baſnet of Eaton in Denbighſhire, Eſq; was heir. Our Edward, being a married man, had a daughter named Catherine, who was married to one Patrick Dillon.

[B] Elected Dean of St. Patrick's cathedral, Dublin.] The Chapter of this cathedral had a right of electing their own Deans conferred on them by the crown, as early as the beginning of the reign of King Henry III.; and this right of election, after the ſuppreſſion of the cathedral in the laſt year of King Henry VIII., was expreſsly renewed to the Chapter, by the charter of renovation of 3d and 4th Philip and Mary.

[C] Gave him a rank almoſt equal to the epiſcopal.] The juriſdiction of the Dean of this church, is called quaſi epiſcopalis, as it were epiſcopal, and is founded upon the model of the church of Sarum in England. He is Lord of a manor extended about the cathedral, and has a ſeneſchal for holding courts leet and baron.

[D] Named Sir Edward Baſnet in an act of Parliament of that time.] He is ſo named in an Iriſh ſtatute of 28 Hen. VIII., chap. xiv. for the payment of the 20th parts, whereby it is provided, 'That nothing 'in the ſaid act ſhould extend to charge the ſaid Sir 'Edward Baſnet, now Dean of the ſaid cathedral 'church of St. Patrick's Dublin, for the payment of the 'ſaid twentieth part of the yearly profit or revenue 'of the ſaid deanery, till the feaſt of the nativity of 'our Lord, which ſhall be in the year 1538.' The ſame act diſcharged him, and the other dignitaries of the ſaid church, for the time being, from going or ſending to any hoſting, road, voyage, or journey, under the penalty of ten pounds forfeiture on the Sheriff who ſhould diſtrain for his or their abſence; the weight of which extraordinary charges of hoſting for reducing the kingdom to the obedience of the Engliſh government, uſed to be borne by ſuch ſubjects as were anſwerable to the Engliſh laws; and whenever they failed to ſend their proportion of armed men and horſes, they were amerced in certain ſums of money.

[E] In the ſame ſenſe as thoſe are called Sirs, who have taken the firſt degree in the univerſity.] In this ſenſe it is taken by Selden (1), and Chamberlayne (2); and we find in Chaucer and Shakeſpeare, Clergymen frequently introduced under the titles of Sirs, though they were no Knights.

(1) Titles of Honour, p. 551.

(2) Preſent State of England, Part iii. ch. iv.

[F] Applied for a more extenſive commiſſion, and required to be ſupported by the civil power.] All the matter alledged above in the text, appears from a complaining letter (3) of Archbiſhop Brown's couched in theſe terms, viz. 'I have obſerved your Lordſhip's let-'ter of commiſſion, and do find ſeveral of my pupils 'leave me for ſo doing. I will not put others in their 'livings his fidelity and perſonal bravery againſt the Popiſh rebels, as wipes off any ſuſpicion of his being a bigot to Popery; farther, than ſtanding out a while againſt innovations, until he ſaw upon what foundation they were built. In 1539, O-Neal and O-Donnel, with ſome other Iriſh chieftains, or heads of clans, conſpired againſt the gentlemen of the Pale [G], and made terrible ravages in the county of Meath, by burning towns and villages as far as Tara-hill, before the country was able to oppoſe them. The Lord-Deputy Grey, attended by ſeveral of the nobility and gentry, and the citizens of Dublin and Drogheda, marched out to ſuppreſs the inſolence of the rebels; and Dean Baſnet, laying aſide his ſacerdotal habit, ſerved in a military capacity upon this occaſion. Both armies were encamped on each ſide of the river Belahoa, where the Engliſh waited till their whole forces were come up; and then paſſing the river, they attacked the Iriſh, killed great numbers of them, put the reſt to flight, and took all their baggage. Stanihurſt (e) gives an account of thoſe gentlemen, who diſtinguiſhed themſelves for their courage and conduct in this action, and among the reſt, mentions Sir Edward Baſnet, Prieſt, who, on account of his good ſervices to the State upon this occaſion, was made one of his Majeſty's Privy-Council [H]. In 1541, an act (f) paſſed in the Iriſh Parliament, declaring Henry the VIIIth King of Ireland, who before only enjoyed the title of Lord of Ireland [I], and making it high-treaſon in any perſon to impeach that title. His Majeſty was accordingly proclaimed King of Ireland, in St. Patrick's cathedral, on the 13th of June, the principal nobility attending the ſolemnity in their parliament robes (g). And Dean Baſnet, with all his Chapter in their Pontificalibus; and the joy upon that occaſion in banquets, plays, and other entertainments, was very extraordinary. On the 5th of July 1542, the King wrote a letter (h) with his own hand to Dean Baſnet, and others of the Privy-Council [K], 'Shewing them the neceſſity of providing good and faithful paſtors through 'the dioceſe of Dublin, for inſtructing the people in the duties of religion, and no leſs 'in obedience to thoſe new laws, which every day reſtored to them more and more of 'their Chriſtian liberty, and promoted trade and induſtry through the whole kingdom.' In 1544 a report was made by the Lord-Deputy about the ſingular merit of Dean Baſnet from the Crown. For this the King was pleaſed to reward him with a grant (i) to him and his heirs of the caſtle, town, lands, and rectory of Kilternan [L], in the marches of the county of Dublin, to hold in capite by the ſervice of one Knight's fee for ever, and three (e) Stanihurſt in Holinſhed's Ir. Chron. p. 101. and MS. Trin. Coll. Dub.

(3) See Ware's Engliſh Annals, in the Life of Geo. Brown, p. 150.

(f) Ir. Stat. 33 Hen. VIII. Seſſ. 1. cap. i.

(g) Annal. Waræi Lat. ad ann. 1541.

(h) Rolls of Chancery.

(i) Rolls Office; ibid.

'livings till I do know your Lordſhip's pleaſure; for 'it is meet I acquaint you firſt. The Romiſh reliques 'and images of both my cathedrals in Dublin, of 'the Holy Trinity, and St. Patrick's, took off the 'common people from the true worſhip; but the Prior 'and the Dean find them ſo ſweet for their gain, 'that they heed not my words: Therefore ſend in 'your Lordſhip's next to me, an order more full, 'and a chide to them and their Canons, that they 'might be removed. Let the order be, that the chiefe 'governors may aſſiſt me in it. The Prior and Dean 'have written to Rome to be encouraged, and if it 'be not hindered before they have a mandate from 'the Biſhop of Rome, the People will be bold, and 'then tug long before his Highneſs can ſubmit them 'to his Grace's orders, &c.' ———

[G] Conſpired againſt the gentlemen of the Pale.] The Pale was a canton of land, which was ſometimes larger, and ſometimes leſs, as the Engliſh power prevailed or was depreſſed. It originally comprehended all Leinſter, which, upon the Engliſh acquiſition, was divided into the counties of Louth, Dublin, Meath, (afterwards divided into two counties) Kildare, Kilkenny, Carlow, and Wexford, and alſo properly comprized that diſtrict, which, in latter times, was converted into ſhire ground, and called the county of Wicklow. For all Leinſter becoming the property of Earl Strongbow, upon his marriage with Eva, daughter of Mac-Murrough King of Leinſter, on the death of that Monarch in 1171, the whole became ſubject to the Engliſh power, and was called the Pale, from Palor, an old Latin word, which ſignified to incloſe with ſtatutes, as though the Engliſh by this imaginary fortification were ſeparated from the Iriſh. What was immediately without the Pale, was called the Marches; all within the Pale was ameſnable to law, and the King's writ obeyed there. It once extended from Dundalk, the moſt remote part of the county of Louth, to Carlow and Kilkenny; but in Queen Elizabeth's time was included within much narrower bounds. The notion of the Pale became obſolete when the whole kingdom ſubmitted to the Engliſh laws, and now is only to be found in hiſtory; the Marches of the kingdom being only the ſeas ſurrounding it.

[H] For his ſervices upon this occaſion was made one of his Majeſty's Privy-Council.] Stanihurſt (4) alledges, that he was for this ſervice made alſo Dean of St. Patrick's, Dublin; but this muſt be a miſtake, he having been made ſo two years before this action; and it appears before, remark [B], that it was not in the power of the Crown to promote him to this dignity, the Deanery being elective by the Chapter.

(4) Holinſhed's Chron. p. 101.

[I] Who before only enjoyed the title of Lord of Ireland.] The Kings of England from the firſt conqueſt of Ireland to this time, never aſſumed any other title than Lords of Ireland, though they enjoyed Regal authority and juriſdiction under that ſtile, in as full a meaſure as if they had been called Kings: Yet the Iriſh did not pay the ſame reverence to the name of Lord, as they did to the name of King, and thoſe who were traiterouſly inclined often made uſe of the diſtinction to inveigle the common people into rebellion. This was the cauſe of making the ſtatute before mentioned in the text, and it anſwered the end intended by ſilencing all objections.

[K] The King wrote a letter to Dean Baſnet, and others of the Privy-Council.] The letter here mentioned was ſent in anſwer to an application made by the Privy-Council, in favour of Archbiſhop Brown, to obtain for him a remittal of a ſum of money which he owed to Lord Rochford, then a forfeiting perſon. It may not be unpleaſant to the curious reader to ſee the language and manner of writing in that age. It runs thus (*), 'We bene pleaſed at youre 'humble ſuittes to forgyve to th Archbuſhope of 'Dublyn the two hundreth and fyfte poundes, whyche 'he oughte to the late Lorde Rochford, not doubtynge but he woll the better applie his charge and 'offyce, and provyde that there may be ſome good 'prechers, to inſtructe and teche the people ther 'dutyes to God and us; the lacke whereof is grete 'in thos parties: Wyllyng therefor youe, our Deputie and Counſail, that yeoue have a ſpecialle 'regard alſoo to this poynte: And as youe may provyde, that they may lerne by good and Catholique 'teaching, and the mynyſtracione of juſtice to knowe 'Godde's lawes and ours togythir, whiche ſhall dailie 'more and more frame and conforme theym in honeſt 'lyving, and due obedyence to ther owne beneficſtes, 'and th univerſalle good of the countrey.'

(*) Chancery Rolls.

[L] Grant of the caſtle, town, lands, and rectory of Kilternan.] Kilternan lies about five miles S. S. E. of Dublin, in the road to Power's court; and was part of three ſhillings Iriſh money, per annum rent. In 1545, Auguſt the 20th, the King, as a mark of his royal indulgence, granted to the Dean a particular favour [M], in which his Chapter, under his countenance, was concerned, which is regiſtered among the records of the deanery (k). About Chriſtmas this year, the Dean was employed to mediate a reconciliation between the Lord-Deputy St. Leger, and the Earl of Ormond [N], whoſe bickerings and quarrels had cauſed no little uneaſineſs to the ſubjects; but he had the misfortune to fail of ſucceſs. Notwithſtanding his Majeſty's gracious favour, lately conferred on the Dean and his Canons, yet, in the year 1546, the King projected (l) the ruin of that ancient cathedral, which he ſoon effected [O]. The Dean had a penſion aſſigned him of two hundred marks ſterling a year, to commence from the day that the church was ſurrendered, and penſions were ſettled by the King's Commiſſioners upon each of the Dignitaries, Prebendaries, Minor-Canons, and Vicars, in proportion to the income of their ſeveral offices before the diſſolution of the cathedral. In the firſt year of King Edward the VIth, Commiſſioners were appointed (m), for diſpoſing of all the revenues and buildings belonging to this cathedral. The deanery houſe, wherein Baſnet lived was given to the Archbiſhop of Dublin, who was deſired to accommodate the Lord Deputy with the Archiepiſcopal palace. Another houſe was ordered for the Lord-Chancellor's dwelling. The plate, jewels, and ornaments, were given to the Dean and Chapter of Chriſt-Church, except what was reſerved for the pariſh-church of St. Nicholas without the walls, whoſe ſervice was always celebrated in St. Patrick's church. One part of the building was ordered for holding the courts of juſtice in, while another part was appropriated to the uſe of the ſaid pariſh-church. The hall belonging to the Vicars choral, was appointed for keeping a grammar-ſchool, of which one Matthew Talbot was conſtituted maſter. The public records, which before had been kept in Bermingham tower, were removed from the caſtle, and lodged in the library of St. Patrick's; and the college of Minor-Canons and Choriſters was fitted up, for an hoſpital to entertain twelve decayed ſoldiers, worn out in the ſervice. Sir Edward Baſnet lived to ſee all theſe changes, and continued a member of the Privy-Council, during the reign of King Edward the VIth; but did not live to ſee his church reſtored to its former dignity, and all its ancient rights and privileges by King Philip and Queen Mary; for he died in the firſt of that Queen's reign, as appears by an inquiſition (n) poſt mortem Edwardi Baſnet. He continued to write himſelf Dean after the ſurrender of his cathedral. For in an act of Council (o) of the fifth year of Edward VI., about ſending the records of Bermingham-tower to the Library of St. Patrick's, he ſubſcribed himſelf Edward Baſnet, Dean; but a daſh of the pen is drawn over the word Dean.

(k) Dignitas Decani S. Patricii, MS.

(l) Rymer's Fœd. tom. xv. p. 104. Annal Waræus, ad ann. 1546. Cox's Hiſt. Irel. p. 280.

(m) Chancery Rolls.

(n) Chancery Rolls.

(o) Ibid.

the poſſeſſions of the abbey of the bleſſed Virgin Mary near Dublin: After the ſuppreſſion of which it was leaſed for twenty-one years to Walter Pippard of Kilca, gentleman, whoſe intereſt therein probably Baſnet purchaſed; for he lived partly in this caſtle, and partly in the caſtle of Dean-Rath, near Cladolcan, which belongs to the deanery of St. Patrick's. Baſnet is diſtinguiſhed by both places in a pardon (5), that he ſued out in 1545, for the death of one William Fowle.

(3) Filac. Canc.

[M] Granted to the Dean a particular favour.] The favour was a licence or privilege, that if the Dean or any of the Canons of St. Patrick's, had benefices in any diſtant dioceſe, that they ſhould not be obliged to perſonal reſidence in thoſe parts, during their continuance in Dublin, as reſidentiaries near their own cathedral.

[N] To mediate a reconciliation between the Lord-Deputy St. Leger and the Earl of Ormond.] The quarrel between the Lord-Deputy and the Earl of Ormond, had its riſe the preceding year from this motive: The Exchequer being exhauſted, and the exigencies of affairs requiring a ſupply before a Parliament could be convened for that purpoſe, the Lord-Deputy by his own authority (6), would have laid ſome new and extraordinary impoſitions upon the people. The Earl of Ormond oppoſed the Deputy's proceedings; but finding his own influence could not prevail in obtaining a reſpite, he wrote letters of complaint to the Council of England, which were intercepted at ſea by a friend of the Lord-Deputy, and put into his hands. After peruſing them, he employed Dean Baſnet, as a perſon in whoſe prudence he could confide, to repair in all haſte to the caſtle of Kilkenny, and to communicate his knowledge of the letters to the Earl, that he might ſee the Deputy was not inſenſible of his complaints, and he had it in commiſſion, to reaſon with the Earl about the ſubject of their quarrel, and, if poſſible, to end the diſputes between them in a private, amicable manner, that neither the Council of England, nor the ſubjects of Ireland be troubled with their diſputes. The Dean found the Earl immoveable, and finding nothing could prevail on him to drop his complaint, he returned unſucceſsful. Soon after both parties were ſent for by the Engliſh Council, who made up the breach between them, and put an end to all diſputes.

(6) Stanihurſt in Holinſhed, p. 104. Cox, Vol. i. p. 280.

[O] The King projected the ruin of that ancient cathedral, which he ſoon effected.] On the 8th of November, 38 Henry VIII (1546), the King iſſued a commiſſion (7) to Sir Anthony St. Leger, Lord-Deputy, Sir Richard Read, Lord-Chancellor, Edward Staples, Biſhop of Meath, Sir William Brabazon, Vice-Treaſurer of Ireland, Sir Thomas Luttrell, Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, James Bath, Chief-Baron of the Exchequer, and Sir Thomas Cuſach, Maſter of the Rolls, empowering them, or any three of them, of whom Sir Anthony St. Leger was to be one, to receive a reſignation from the Dean and Chapter in perſon, of the church with all its revenues, lands, tythes, &c. which was accordingly complied with on the 8th of January following, and the ſame was inrolled in the High Court of Chancery. But all this was done without the conſent of the Archbiſhop, who is the chief Ordinary there, and the founder and Lord-Paramount of all their benefices. This undue reſignation of the cathedral church afterwards occaſioned a trial at law (8) about the validity of a leaſe perfected by the Archbiſhop of Dublin, without the conſent of this Chapter, to one Brereton, which was only confirmed by the Dean and Chapter of Chriſt-Church, whereas both Deans and Chapters uſually confirmed leaſes made by the Archbiſhop. When Archbiſhop Loftus was advanced to the See of Dublin, he looked upon the leaſe made to Brereton as bad, and endeavoured to break it. The caſe was adjudged in Eaſter-Term, 11 Elizabeth, and certified from England to the Lord-Deputy Sidney, under the hands of the Judges, that the leaſe was allowed to be good and valid in Law; becauſe that at the time of making it, there was no Chapter in being except that of Chriſt-Church. A majority of all the Judges of England were of this opinion, although many held the contrary; who maintained, that after the death of the Archbiſhop who made the leaſe, it could not bind a ſucceſſor; becauſe it ought to have been confirmed by both Chapters, as leaſes always had been before.

(7) Rolls Office.

(8) Dyer's Rep. f. 282.

D.

BASSANTIN (James), a Scots Aſtronomer in the XVIth century, whoſe writings have deſervedly tranſmitted his memory to poſterity, was the ſon of the Laird of Baſſantin in the Mers, and born ſome time in the reign of King James IV (a). He was ſent while young to the univerſity of Glaſgow, where, inſtead of applying himſelf to words, he ſtudied things, and while other young men of his age were perfecting themſelves in ſtyle, he arrived at a ſurprizing knowledge (for that time) in almoſt all branches of the Mathematics (b). In order to improve himſelf in this kind of knowledge, and to gratify his paſſion for ſeeing other countries, he travelled, ſoon after he quitted the college of Glaſgow, through the Netherlands, Switzerland, Italy, and Germany, fixing himſelf at laſt in France, where he taught the Mathematics with applauſe, in the univerſity of Paris (c). He fell in there with the common notions of the times, and was either credulous enough to entertain a good opinion of Judicial Aſtrology, or had ſo much addreſs, as to make the credulity of others uſeful to him, by ſupporting an erroneous ſyſtem, then in too great credit for him to demoliſh, even if that had been his inclination (d). For the humour of believing ſuch kind of predictions never ran ſo ſtrong as at this time, nor ran any where ſtronger than in that country [A]. At laſt, having a deſire to ſee his relations, and ſpend his remaining days in his own country, he reſolved to quit France, where he had acquired a high reputation and ſome fortune, and returned home in the year 1562 (e). It ſeems he made his journey through England; and as he was entering the borders of his native country, he met Sir Robert Melvil, a very worthy gentleman, and a moſt loyal and faithful ſervant to his unfortunate miſtreſs, Mary Queen of Scots; with whom he entered into a converſation on the then ſtate of affairs, which gained him the reputation of being deeply verſed in thoſe ſtiled the Occult Sciences (f) [B]. But whoever maturely weighs what paſſed in that conference, of which we have a moſt authentic

(a) Dempſter. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. ii. p. 108.

(b) Id. ibid.

(c) Mackenzie's Scots Writers, Vol. iii. p. 81.

(d) See note [A].

(e) Dempſter, ubi ſupra.

(f) Melvil's Memoirs, Lond. 1683. fol. p. 92, 93.

[A] Any where ſtronger than in that country.] The great end of publiſhing lives of this nature, and in this manner, is not only to make the hiſtory of learned men, but of learning itſelf thoroughly known, which is a thing equally laudable and uſeful. In order to have a juſt notion of this Scots Aſtronomer's merit, we muſt conſider him as contemporary with the famous Nicholas Copernicus, and ſomewhat earlier than the celebrated Tycho Brahe; ſo that we may thence diſcern how few helps he had, and what an amazing progreſs he made, if, as Voſſius ſays, he was unacquainted with Greek, and knew but little of Latin (1). However, Voſſius himſelf does him injury, by placing him a century later than that in which he flouriſhed (2). In reference to Judicial Aſtrology, it muſt be owned it was at this time in ſo great credit, that almoſt all who applied themſelves to Geometry, Aſtronomy, or, in ſhort, to any branch of the Mathematics, ſtruck alſo into this way, which ſerved in times of ſo much ignorance to keep up the reputation of this ſuppoſed ſcience. As for Tycho Brahe, he was ſo addicted thereto, that he was wholly guided by it; and though he owned he was miſtaken in many, or moſt, of his predictions, yet he remained obſtinate in his opinion, alledging firſt, that the Aſtronomical tables then in uſe were faulty; and when with prodigious labour he had corrected theſe errors, and ſtill found his judgments wrong, he complained that the rules commonly received were bad or miſunderſtood, but never laid the fault on the Art itſelf (3). This conduct of the learned had ſo bad an effect, that almoſt every Prince in Europe had his Aſtrologer. There were, however, more at Paris than almoſt in any other place. Catharine de Medicis was exceſſively addicted to this ſort of ſuperſtition; and we know that the Horoſcope of her Huſband Henry II., was not only calculated, but publiſhed alſo by Gauric; and ſome affirm, but without due proof, that his death, and even the manner of it, was predicted by Jerom Cardan (4). Mr. Finé, better known by his Latin appellation Orontius Finœus, who taught Mathematics in the univerſity of Paris, was famous for the judgments given by him upon Nativities; and once, his predictions having offended the Court, he was impriſoned for it a long while in the Baſtile, which undoubtedly, had he been truly able to read future events in the Stars, he would have both foreſeen and avoided (5). The old friendſhip and intimacy between the Scots and French nations, joined to the cloſe connection between them at the time he was at ſchool, and while Baſſantin flouriſhed, was ſufficient to carry all the French cuſtoms over thither; and this, amongſt the reſt: and that in fact this was the caſe, will manifeſtly appear by what is related in the next note. If therefore we lay all this together, it will not ſeem at all ſtrange that a Scotſman, who had not comprehenſive knowledge, ſhould be led away by ſo many and great authorities, in a matter which perhaps made the beſt branch of his buſineſs, and for which he had naturally a happy turn: for we may with truth affirm, that no man ever ſet off the ſyſtem of the twelve Houſes, and the influences of the Planets in them, in a more plauſible way, or which ſeems more free from abſurdities. It is likewiſe more than probable, that as this humour long ſurvived him, and even grew more and more into faſhion after his deceaſe, it promoted the reputation of his writings, and procured them ſo quick a ſale. But how well or ill founded this notion may be, we are certain of this, that he laboured the point exceedingly, and left no ſtone unturned to maintain a doctrine he had too haſtily embraced, and from which, ſo long as he lived, he never departed. His having this kind of taking way of delivering himſelf on ſuch ſubjects, muſt have recommended him in Courts, where ſuch notions frequently prevail; and I can eaſily conceive, that his being ſo well received took place in his judgment, made him more ſatisfied of the rectitude of his opinions, and gave him ſpirit likewiſe to profeſs, maintain, and defend them againſt all opponents.

(1) Voſſ. de Matheſi, cap. lxiii, lxiv, lxv.

(2) He places him in the XVIIth century, becauſe Tornœſius's tranſlation of his book into Latin, was publiſhed at Geneva in 1609, and even this ſeems to have been a ſecond edition, but the original Work had been publiſhed in French ſixty years before.

(3) Niceron. Mem. pour ſervir a l'Hiſtoire des Hommes Illuſtr. tom. xv. p. 168, 169.

(4) Gaſſend. Oper. tom. i. p. 745. Mem. de Brantom, tom. ii. p. 56. Lettres de Paſquiers, tom. i. p. 346.

(5) See his article in Bayle's Dictionary.

[B] The reputation of being deeply verſed in thoſe ſtiled the Occult Sciences.] There are very few books in better credit for the ſuppoſed candour and veracity of their author, than the Memoirs of Sir James Melvil of Hal-hill, in which, after deſcribing the deciſive action which obliged Queen Mary to fly into England, he proceeds thus (6): 'After the loſs of the battle, her 'Majeſty loſt all courage, which ſhe had never done 'before, and took ſo great fear, that ſhe never reſted 'till ſhe was in England, thinking herſelf ſure of re'fuge there, in reſpect of the fair promiſes formerly 'made her by the Queen of England by word 'to her Embaſſadors, and by her own hand, writ 'before and after ſhe was captive in Lochleven. But 'God and the world knows how ſhe was kept and 'uſed; for not only ſhe refuſed to ſee her, of whom 'ſhe appeared ſo oft ſo deſirous of a ſight and a meeting, but alſo cauſed to keep her priſoner, and at 'length ſuffered her life to be taken away, or elſe it 'was ſubtilely taken againſt her intention. This puts 'me in remembrance of a tale my brother Sir Robert 'told me: The time that he was buſieſt dealing betwixt the two Queens to entertain their friendſhip, 'and draw on the meeting at a place near York, one 'Baſſintoun, a Scotſman, who had been a traveller, 'and was learned in high ſciences, came to him, and 'ſaid to him, Good Gentleman, I hear ſo good a report of you, that I love you heartily, and therefore 'cannot forbear to ſhew you, that all your upright 'dealing and honeſt travel will be in vain: For whereas 'you believe to obtain advantage for your Queen at 'the Queen of England's hands, you do but loſe 'your time and your travel: For firſt, they will never 'meet together; and next, there will never be any 'thing

(6) Melvil's Memoirs, p. 92.

authentic account, will ſee good reaſon to believe, that our learned author was more a Politician than a Prophet, or elſe, that he talked at random, and on falſe or precarious principles. It does not at all appear in what manner he ſpent the remainder of his life, after he came back to Scotland; but it is certain he did not ſurvive long, ſince his deceaſe happened, as thoſe who were well acquainted with him atteſt, in 1568 (g). As to his learning, we are told by thoſe who admired it moſt, it lay not in languages, of which, except his mother-tongue, he knew none thoroughly, though he ſpoke and taught in French, but in a very incorrect manner, and wrote much worſe (h). He had very clear notions in moſt parts of his writings, and was far from being a contemptible Aſtronomer, though the commendations beſtowed on him by ſome authors, very far ſurpaſs his deſerts. He was too much tinctured with the ſuperſtition of the times, not to intermix a vaſt deal of falſe, and even ridiculous ſtuff in his writings, on the virtues, aſpects, and influences of the planets; yet in other reſpects he ſhews much good ſenſe and induſtry, which render his works very well worth reading, and ought to ſecure both them and his memory from oblivion, as they are ſo many indubitable teſtimonies of his merit (i) [C]. As to his religion, he is reported to have been a zealous Proteſtant; and with regard to his political (g) Dempſter, ubi ſupra.

(h) Voſſius de Matheſi, cap. lxv. § 3.

(i) Mackenzie's Scots Writers, Vol. iii. p. 97, 98.

‘ thing elſe but diſſembling and ſecret hatred for a ‘ while, and at length captivity and utter wreck to our ‘ Queen from England. My brother anſwered, he ‘ liked not to hear of ſuch deviliſh news, nor yet ‘ would he in any ſort credit them, as being falſe, ‘ ungodly, and unlawful for Chriſtians to meddle ‘ with. Baſſintoun anſwered, Good Mr. Melvil, en- ‘ tertain not that harſh opinion of me, I am a Chriſtian ‘ of your own religion, and fear God, and purpoſes ‘ never to caſt myſelf on any of the unlawful arts ‘ that you mean; but ſo far as Melancthon, who was ‘ a godly Theologue, hath declared lawful, and ‘ written concerning the Natural Sciences, which are ‘ lawful and daily read in divers Chriſtian univerſities, ‘ in the which, as in all other arts, God gives to ‘ ſome leſs, and to others clearer knowledge; by the ‘ which knowledge I have attained to underſtand, ‘ that at length the kingdom of England ſhall of ‘ right fall to the crown of Scotland, and that at this ‘ inſtant there are ſome born who ſhall brook lands ‘ and heritages in England: But, alas! it will coſt ‘ many their lives, and many bloody battles will be ‘ fought ere things be ſettled, or take effect. And ‘ by my knowledge, ſays he, the Spaniards will be ‘ helpers, and will take a part to themſelves for their ‘ labour, which they will be loath to leave again.’ It has been ſhewn in the former note, that liſtening to theſe kind of predictions was one great foible of thoſe times; and if it had not been ſo, one could hardly account for ſo wiſe a man as Sir James Melvil giving this, and ſome ſtories of the like kind, a place in his book. But it is obſervable, that he gives no judgment upon it; he introduces it only as a tale, and does not at all recommend it to his readers belief by profeſſing it had gained credit with him. A leſs cautious writer, who repeats this ſtory (7), could not help adding, that all our author's predictions were fulfilled except the laſt, and even as to that he makes ſome apology. It may not be amiſs therefore to beſtow a few remarks upon this ſingular ſtory. I. It does not appear how he ſhould come at this knowledge on the principles of his art, ſuppoſing it to be an art. He might indeed have calculated the nativities of both the Queens, and from thence have predicted what would happen to them; but how could he from thence learn that the crown of England ſhould deſcend to a Prince of Scotland? It might be anſwered well enough if King James had been then born; but he was not till four years afterwards; and from the Horoſcopes of the two Queens it was impoſſible, by the rules of Aſtrology, for him to pretend to foretel what he did. II. It is in the next place clear, that the greateſt part of what he foretold was abſolutely falſe; for there was not ſo much as one battle fought, or a drop of blood ſhed, to make way for the acceſſion of the King of Scots, which was the act of Queen Elizabeth herſelf; and the King of Spain was ſo far from aſſiſting in this, that he actually ſet up a title againſt that Prince, and did all that lay in his power to hinder his ſucceſſion: So that if this ſtory proves any thing, it muſt prove that there was either no certainty in this art, or that our author did not ſufficiently underſtand it. III. Upon the whole, it is highly probable that this man was no friend to the negociation Sir Robert Melvil was then engaged in, and that he ſaid what he did, with a view to hinder that Gentleman from proceeding in it: And if we take the thing thus, he may be allowed to have acted very right as a Politician; but a man muſt have had very indifferent parts for a ſtateſman, who could be diverted from his duty by ſuch ſuggeſtions as theſe; and it is certain that they had no weight with Sir Robert Melvil, who behaved in all theſe tranſactions with the utmoſt prudence, ſteadineſs, and courage. But when things were over, and Queen Mary in her grave, Sir Robert Melvil told this tale to his brother, who committed it to writing, and ſo it has paſſed for a full proof of our author's proficiency in theſe high ſciences; whereas there cannot well be a more convincing argument of the contrary.

(7) Mackenzie's Scots Writers, Vol. iii. p. 82.

[C] So many indubitable teſtimonies of his merit.] The works publiſhed by our author were theſe that follow: viz. I. Aſtronomia, Jacobi Baſſantini Scoti, opus abſolutiſſimum, in quo quicquid unquam peritiores Mathematici in cœlis obſervarunt, eo ordine, eaque methodo traditur, ut cuivis poſt hac facile innoteſcant quæcunque de Aſtris ac Planetis, nec non de eorum variis orbibus, motibus, paſſionibus, &c. dici poſſunt, ingens et doctum volumen ter editum Latinè et Gallicè: That is, ‘ The ‘ Aſtronomy of John Baſſintin, a Scot, a complete ‘ work; wherein, whatever the moſt expert Mathe- ‘ maticians have obſerved in the heavens, is digeſted ‘ into ſuch order, and in ſo exact a method, that every ‘ one may henceforward apprehend whatever, as to the ‘ Stars and Planets, their orbs, motions, paſſions, &c. ‘ can be delivered; a work large and learned, now ‘ thrice publiſhed in Latin and French.’ This is the Title given by John Tornœſius, who tranſlated it into Latin, and publiſhed it in a large folio at Geneva in 1599. In his account of our author, in his Epiſtle dedicatory addreſſed to Frederick IV., Count Palatine of the Rhine, he repreſents him as a wonderful proficient in this ſcience; and, as a proof of it, tells him, that this circumſtance was very ſurprizing in him, that though he was unſkilled in polite learning, and underſtood only his Mother-Tongue, yet he made ſo great a progreſs in Aſtronomy, as to be eſteemed one of the greateſt Aſtronomers of the age. And whereas other perſons were obliged to learn the Latin, Greek, and Arabic languages, if they were deſirous of raiſing themſelves any reputation in that ſcience, our author was born an Aſtronomer, and not made one. He obſerves likewiſe, that Baſſantin's book was at firſt publiſhed in French, not as it was written by the author, who was ſo little maſter of that language, notwithſtanding he lived moſt part of his time in France, that he could not write even ſo much as tolerable Grammar; upon which account the ſtyle of his book had been corrected and poliſhed by ſome other perſons who better underſtood the genius of that language. This affords us a ſufficient account of the author: but, perhaps, the value of his book will be better underſtood by taking a view of its contents. In this great work he firſt of all lays down the neceſſary axioms and definitions for the underſtanding of the ſcience, and then gives a table of Sines; after this a treatiſe of Rectilineal Triangles, in twenty propoſitions; and another of Spherical Triangles, in thirteen propoſitions. The next Tract is concerning the Sphere of the World, in thirteen chapters. The firſt chapter treats of the Syſtem of the World in general, and the ſeveral parts of it. The ſecond of the Magnitude of the Earth compared with the Firmament. The third of the Circles political principles, he is ſaid to have adhered to the famous Earl of Murray, then ſtruggling for that power which he afterwards obtained (k). C.

(k) Melvil's Memoirs, p. 92.

Circles of the Sphere. The fourth of the Declination of the Degrees of the Ecliptic from the Equinoctial. The fifth of the Aſcenſion and Deſcenſion of Signs in a direct Sphere. The ſixth of the Aſcenſion and Deſcenſion of the Signs in an oblique Sphere. The ſeventh of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Latitude. The eighth of the Declination, Aſcenſion, Deſcenſion, and Latitude, of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Stars. The ninth of the Elevation of the Stars above the Horizon. The tenth of the Variation of the Artificial Days and Nights in the different parts of the Earth. The eleventh of the Twelve Celeſtial Houſes, and their Diviſions. The twelfth of the Diviſion of the Zones and Climates. And the thirteenth of the Regions of the Earth; to which is annexed, A Table of the Longitudes and Latitudes of the principal cities and places of the world. Then follow the Hypotheſes of the Celeſtial Orbs, containing the Theory of the Sun, Moon, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, and Mercury. After this he gives an account of the direct retrograde and ſtationary motions of the Planets, their various Aſpects, the Declination of the Stars, the Latitude of the Moon, the Latitude of the three Superior Planets, the Latitude of Venus and Mercury; of their Excentricities, Ellipſes, and whatever elſe relates to the Planets. After he has treated of theſe things, he gives us the Theory of the Motion of the Eighth Sphere, and concludes with the practical part of Aſtronomy, in thirty propoſitions; wherein he gives the figures of many curious inſtruments, with proper tables, and directions for the uſe of them. II. Paraphraſe de l'Aſtrolabe avec un amplification de l'uſage, de la Aſtrolabe; that is, 'A Paraphraſe (or ample explanation) of the Aſtrolabe, with an improvement as to the uſes to which this inſtrument may be applied.' This Treatiſe was printed at Lyons in 1555, and again at Paris 1617, in 8*vo*. III. Super Mathematic Genethliaca; i. e. 'Of the Calculation of Nativities.' IV. Arithmetica, or 'A Treatiſe of Arithmetic.' V. Muſica ſecundum Platoni; i. e. 'Muſic on the principles of the Platoniſts.' VI. De Matheſi in genere; i. e. 'Of the Mathematics in general.' The very titles of his works, joined to the age in which he flouriſhed, ſufficiently juſtify his right to a place in this work; and though he might have foibles, yet without doubt his practical ſkill was great, and the pains he took contributed not a little to bring in that accuracy and correctneſs in obſervations, which have effectually exploded thoſe ſuperſtitions to which, with other great men, he was too much addicted.

[Biſhop Tanner ſays, that Baſſantin far excelled all the Mathematicians of his own age; omnes ſui ſæculi mathematicos longe poſt ſe reliquit. We wiſh that the learned Prelate had aſſigned the reaſon for this high encomium. Was it probable that the Biſhop, who chiefly devoted himſelf to antiquities and hiſtory, had ſtudied Baſſantin's Mathematical works with ſuch attention, as to be able to give ſo deciſive a character of them; or did he take it from Dempſter, to whom he makes a reference? Dempſter was ſcarcely a ſufficient authority (8)]. K.

(8) Tanner's Bibliotheca Britannica Hibernica, p. 79.

BASSET (FULK*), Biſhop of London in the reign of King Henry III. (a), was brother of Gilbert Baſſet, one of the Barons, who died by a fall from his horſe, leaving behind him one only ſon, an infant, by whoſe death ſoon after, the inheritance devolved to Fulk (b). In the year 1225, he was made Provoſt of the collegiate church of St. John of Beverly, and in 1230, Dean of York (c). In December 1241, he was elected, by the Chapter of London, Biſhop of that See, in the room of Roger Niger [A], both in regard of his family and his great virtues, and notwithſtanding the King's recommendation of Peter de Egueblanche Biſhop of Hereford (d). The See of Canterbury being vacant at the time of this Prelate's election, he was not conſecrated till the ninth of October 1244 [B], at which time the ſolemnity was performed at London in the church of the Holy Trinity (e). In the year 1250, Biſhop Baſſet began to have a warm diſpute with Archbiſhop Boniface (f), concerning the right of metropolitical viſitation [C]; in the courſe of which he met with very rough treatment from the Archbiſhop, and at laſt,

(a) Vide Henr. Wharton Hiſtor. de Epiſc. et Decan. Londinenſ. &c. p. 89, edit. 1695.

(c) Regiſtr. Grey. Eborac.

(e) Ib. ib. p. 650.

(f) See the article BONIFACE (Abp. of Cant.)

(b) Godwin, de Præſul. Angl. inter epiſc. Lond. ann. 1244.

(d) Matth. Paris, Hiſt. Angl. edit. Lond. 1640. fol. Vol. ii. p. 576.

(*) In Latin Fulco.

[A] He was elected ——— in the room of Roger Niger.] During the vacancy of the See, the King, in conſideration that the temporalities were in his hands, ordered his treaſurer, January the 17th, 1244 (1), to diſtribute victuals, on the enſuing feaſt of the Converſion of St. Paul, to fifteen thouſand poor people, in the church-yard of St. Paul's, and upon that occaſion to light up fifteen hundred wax tapers in the church. Whence it appears what large alms were formerly beſtowed by the Biſhops and other Eccleſiaſtics (2).

(1) Clauſ. 28 H. III. m. 16.

(2) Hen. Wharton, Hiſt. de Epiſc. et Decan. Lond p. 89.

[B] He was not conſecrated till the 9th of October, 1244.] About the beginning of that year, Archbiſhop Boniface, being then in France, commiſſioned a certain number of Biſhops to conſecrate Baſſet at his church in London (3). But, at the interceſſion of the Chapter of Canterbury, he revoked that commiſſion in February following, under pretence that it was ſurreptitiouſly obtained, namely, by diſſembling the privilege of the church of Canterbury; ſo that Baſſet could not obtain conſecration but by entering a ſolemn proteſt (4), that he had no deſign to infringe the rights of that church.

(3) Ex Inſtrum. Autograph.

(4) Extant in the Archives of the Church of Canterbury.

[C] He had a warm diſpute with Archbiſhop Boniface concerning the right of metropolitical viſitation.] The See of Canterbury had from the beginning an undoubted authority over all the churches of that province, received appeals, cenſured offenders, and occaſionally exerciſed a juriſdiction over the Biſhops and Canons of the cathedral churches. But hitherto ſolemn metropolitical viſitations at ſtated times were not in uſe. Boniface was the firſt who introduced them (5), and loaded the Biſhops and Chapters with a prodigious expence, under the name of procurations. On the 12th of May, 1250, he viſited the Biſhop of London, and, being intolerably inſolent, as well as avaricious, treated the good Prelate with the groſſeſt indignities, and moſt opprobrious language. In craſtino autem viſitavit epiſcopum Fulconem, apud quem inverecundiam ab eodem archiepiſcopo factam, tum in eſculentis, tum in poculentis, tum in ferratura, ſcilicet equorum deferratorum, ſi quis enarraret, aures et animos offenderet audientium, imo et corda cruentaret (6). Deſigning to viſit the Chapter of St. Paul's, and the Priory of St. Bartholomew, he was oppoſed by the Canons of both places, alledging that they had a learned and diligent Biſhop, who was their proper viſitor, and that they neither ought, nor would ſubmit to any other viſitatorial power. Cui reſpondit unus Canonicorum pro omnibus, quod epiſcopum haberent peritum et diligentem, qui eos habuit, cum neceſſe fuerat, viſitare, nec voluerunt, nec debuerunt ab alio, ne contemptus videretur viſitari (7). The Archbiſhop hereupon excommunicated the Canons, and involved the Biſhop, as favouring their obſtinacy, in the ſame ſentence (8). Both ſides appealed to Rome, where the Archbiſhop, ſupported by money and the royal favour, pleaded his cauſe in perſon; and, notwithſtanding the Engliſh Clergy, by their Proctors, offered the Pope four thouſand * marks to be exempted from the archiepiſcopal viſitation, he obtained a confirmation of his viſitatorial power, with this reſtriction only, that he ſhould be modreate in his demand of procurations (9).

(5) See his article.

(6) Matth. Paris, Hiſt. Angl. edit. Lond. 1640, Vol. ii. p. 780.

(7) Id. ib. p. 781.

(8) Ib. p. 782.

* Some writers ſay 6000.

(9) Id. ib. & p. 142. 856.

after a long conteſt, thought it beſt to ſubmit [D], and acknowledge his juriſdiction (g). But he ſucceeded better in the oppoſition he made to Ruſtand the Pope's Legate [E], in 1255 (h). In 1256, this Prelate began to build the church of St. Faith, near that of St. Paul, on the ſpot which King John had formerly given to the Biſhops and Chapter of London for a market (i). In the latter part of his life, he is ſaid (k) to have inclined to the cauſe of the Barons [F]. He died of the plague in 1259, having ſat near fifteen years from the time of his conſecration, and was buried the twenty-fifth of May, in St. Paul's church (l). Biſhop Baſſet founded a chantry in his cathedral church, near the altar of the Bleſſed Virgin, for his own ſoul; and another near the altar of St. Catherine, for thoſe of Alan and Alice, his father and mother. He alſo bequeathed to his church a golden apple, two rich cheſts for relics, ſome eccleſiaſtical veſtments, and ſeveral books relating to church matters (m). B.

(g) M. Paris, ubi ſupra, p. 780. 809.

(h) Id. ib. p. 915.

(i) Dugdale's Hiſt of St. Paul's, p. 13.

(k) M. Paris, ib. p. 974.

(l) Id. ib. p. 987.

(m) Dugdale, Monaſt. Angl. tom. iii. p. 303. 309.

[D] He thought it beſt to ſubmit.] Matthew Paris repreſents his ſubmiſſion as the effect of fear, leſt his holding out againſt the Archbiſhop ſhould provoke the King to ſeize his effects, and ruin his family; and therefore, as the leaſt evil, he choſe for the preſent to humble himſelf under the Archbiſhop's authority, rather than experience the conſequences of the King's diſpleaſure. His igitur ſubtiliter penſatis incommodis, quaſi inter duas molas contritus, anguſtiabatur: hinc honor et cauſa eccleſiæ ſuæ, hinc impetus regalis iracundiæ, ipſum hinc inde diſtrahebant. Tandem vero, ut minus malum ſubiret, præelegit, quamvis læſus, et quamvis paſſus injuriam, ad tempus humiliari, et jurare ſtare proviſioni archiepiſcopi licet adverſantis, potius quam regalis impetus diſcrimen experiri (10).

(10) Id. ib. p. 809.

[E] He ſucceeded better in the oppoſition he made to Ruſtand the Pope's Legate.] The King and the Pope had agreed, with their joint force, to ſqueeze a large ſum of money out of the Engliſh Clergy, and to ſhare the plunder. To this end Ruſtand, the Pope's Legate, ſummoned a Council at London in October 1255, in which he produced a commiſſion from the Pope to demand a certain ſum of them. Upon this the Biſhop of London, riſing up, ſaid: 'Before I will ſubmit to 'ſuch great ſervitude, injury, and intolerable oppreſ-'ſion of the Church, I will loſe my head.' Antequam tantæ eccleſiæ conſentiam ſervituti, injuriæ, et intolerabili oppreſſioni, profecto decapitabor. The reſt of the Prelates being animated by Baſſet's conſtancy, it was unanimouſly decreed, that the Pope's demand ſhould not be complied with, nor any regard paid to Ruſtand's authority or cenſures. The Legate carried his complaints to the King, who, ſending for the Biſhop of London, reviled him moſt ſhamefully, threatening him with the ſevereſt Papal cenſures. To which Fulk replied, 'The King and the Pope, though they cannot 'juſtly, yet, as being ſtronger than me, may force my 'Biſhopric from me; they may take away the mitre, 'but the helmet will remain.' Auferant epiſcopatum, quem tamen non poſſunt de jure auferre, Papa et Rex, qui me fortiores ſunt; tollant mitram, galea remanebit. This ſteadineſs, and the decree of the Council, quite diſconcerted the ſcheme (11).

(11) Id. ib. p. 915.

[F] He inclined to the cauſe of the Barons.] Take notice, that it is Matthew Paris, a Monk, who cenſures our Prelate for ſo doing, telling us, That, by this ſtep, he brought the greater ſtain upon his character, inaſmuch as he was a man of more honour than the reſt. In hoc tanto plus famam ſuam denigravit, quanto aliis fuerat generoſior (12). And afterwards, mentioning Baſſet's death, he ſays of him: 'He was 'a noble and an honourable man, and, excepting only 'his laſt ſlip, the anchor of the whole kingdom, and 'the ſhield of ſtability and defence.' Vir quidem nobilis et magnæ generoſitatis, et, niſi paulo ante titubaſſet, totius regni anchora, et clypeus ſtabilitatis et defenſionis (13).

(12) Ib. p. 974.

(13) Ib. p. 987.

[Biſhop Godwin informs us, that our Hiſtorians, who acknowledge Fulk Baſſet to have been a good man, and a wiſe, pious, and moſt vigilant paſtor, blame him for not favouring the cauſe of the ſeditious Barons, that is, for his fidelity to his Prince. Huic ab Hiſtoricis noſtris vitio vertitur, quod ſeditioſorum Baronum cauſæ non faveret, hoc eſt, quod Principi ſuo fidelis exſtiterit. Virum cæteroqui bonum fatentur prudentem, pium, et vigilantiſſimum paſtorem. Quod ſeditioſorum conſiliis ſe non immiſcuerit, puſillanimitati haud tribuendum cæteræ ejus actiones demonſtrant, quibus animi magnitudinem conſtantiamque abunde declaravit (14).] K.

(14) Godwin de Præſulibus, Richardſon's edit. p. 181.

BASSET (PETER, Eſq;) a gentleman of a good family [A], and a writer in the XVth century, was Chamberlain (a), or Gentleman of the Privy-Chamber, to King Henry V. (b). He was a conſtant attendant on that brave Prince, and an eye-witneſs of moſt of his glorious actions both at home and abroad: All which he particularly deſcribed, and faithfully related (c). For, beginning at his tendereſt years, he gave a full and exact account of his ſeveral expeditions into France; his glorious victories, large conqueſts, and illuſtrious triumphs in that kingdom; his moſt advantageous and honourable peace with Charles VI.; his marriage with the Princeſs Catherine, his coronation at Paris: And, finally, his death, and the coronation of King Henry VI., his ſon and ſucceſſor. Theſe ſeveral remarkable events, Peter Baſſet comprized in one volume, which he entitled, The Actes of King Henry V. This book was never printed; but is extant in manuſcript in the college of Heralds, and perhaps in ſome other places [B]. In one particular he differs from the reſt of King Henry the Vth's hiſtorians: For whereas Monſtrelet ſays (d), that that Prince died of a St. Anthony's fire; others, of a fever and dyſentery (e); or of the diſeaſe of St. Fiacre (f), which is a flux accompanied with the hæmorrhoids; Peter Baſſet, who was with him at the time of his deceaſe, affirms, that he

(a) Hall, Chronicle, or Unyon of the two Famelies of Lancaſtre and Yorke, &c. edit. 1550, fol. 82.

(b) Holinſhed's Chronicles, Lond. 1587, fol. p. 662.

(c) Baleus, Scriptor. Brytanniæ, cent. VII, No. 80. Pits, de Illuſtrib. Angliæ Script. Æt. XV. ann. 1430, n. 795.

(d) Fol. 325, Paris edit.

(e) Walſingham, Hiſt. Hen. V., Francof, 1602, p. 406.

(f) J. Des Urſins, fol. Paris, 1653, p. 394. R. Gaguin, l. ix. f. 207, edit. Paris, 1521, 8vo.

[A] A gentleman of a good family. This noble family, which was ſeated at Draiton-Baſſet in Staffordſhire, derived its deſcent from one Turſtin, Lord of that place in the reign of Henry I. They grew up into a numerous and conſiderable family (1). For, from this ſtock at Draiton, were derived the Baſſets of Welleden, Northamptonſhire; Wiccomb, Bucks; Sapcott, Leiceſterſhire; Hedendon, Oxfordſhire; (which were all Barons of the Realm) (2), beſides ſeveral other eminent private families (3).——Ralph Baſſet, and Richard his ſon, were ſucceſſively Juſticiaries of England, in the reigns of King Henry I. and King Stephen (4).

(1) Camden. Britannia, edit. Lond. 1722, col. 635.

(2) Dugdale, Baron. Vol. i. p. 378, &c.

(3) Camden, ubi ſupra, col. 102. 301. 327. 526. 586. 635. 643. 681.

(4) Dugdale, p. 378.

[B] But is extant in MS. in the college of Heralds, &c.] Upon the cloſeſt examination it appears, that he is originally quoted only by Edw. Hall in his Chronicle (5), and perhaps by J. Bale (6). What hath been ſaid of him, or quoted out of his writings, either by Mr. Thomas Goodwin in his 'Hiſtory of the reign of 'Henry the Vth,' or by other Hiſtorians within that period, is viſibly borrowed from Hall. Dr. Nicolſon (7) mentions Baſſet only upon the authority of Pits, who had taken his account from Bale.

(5) Fol. 82.

(6) Ubi ſupra.

(7) Engliſh Hiſt. Library, edit. Lond. 1736, p. 82.

he died of a pleuriſy [C]. This author flouriſhed about the year 1430, under the reign of King Henry VI. (g).

(g) Bale, and Pits, ubi ſupra.

[C] P. Baſſet —— affirms that he died of a Pleuriſy.] Edw. Hall, from whom we learn this particular, calls it a Pluriſis; 'whiche (adds he) at that tyme 'was ſo rare a ſickenes, and ſo ſtraung a diſeaſe, that 'the name was to the moſt part of men unknowen, 'and phiſicions were acquainted as little with any remedy for the ſame; and therfore every man judged 'as he thought, and named a ſickenes that he knew, 'ſhoting not near the pricke, nor underſtandyng the 'nature of the diſeaſe (8).' M.

(8) Unyon of the two Famelies, &c. as above, p. 82.

BASTARD (THOMAS), a Clergyman and a Poet, was born at Blandford in Dorſetſhire, and educated at Wincheſter-ſchool; from whence he removed to New-College in Oxford, where he was choſen Perpetual Fellow in the year 1588, and two years after took the degree of Bachelor of Arts. But indulging too much his talent for ſatire, he was expelled the college for a libel. Not long after, being then in Holy Orders, he was made Chaplain to Thomas Earl of Suffolk, Lord-Treaſurer of England, through whoſe favour and intereſt he became Vicar of Beer-regis, and Rector of Amour or Hamer, in his native country, having ſome time before taken the degree of Maſter of Arts. He was a perſon of great natural endowments, well ſkilled in the learned languages, a celebrated poet [A], and, in his later years, an excellent preacher [B]. His converſation was witty and facetious, which made his company courted by all ingenious men. He was thrice married, as appears from one of his epigrams [C]. Towards the latter end of his life, being diſordered in his ſenſes, and thereby brought into debt, he was confined in the priſon in All-Hallows pariſh in Dorcheſter; where, dying in a very obſcure and mean condition, he was buried in the church-yard belonging to that pariſh, April the 19th, 1618 (a).

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 431, 432.

[A] —— A Poet.] Among other poetical performances of our author's, that had been publiſhed, Mr. Wood tells us (1), he had ſeen only the following: 1. Epigrams, which were greatly admired in that age, and occaſioned Sir John Harrington's addreſſing one or more epigrams to our author. 2. Magna Britannia, a Latin poem in three books, dedicated to King James I. London, 1605, in quarto. Beſides which, there is in the King's Library, Jacobo regi I. carmen gratulatorium (2); i. e. 'A congratulatory poem to King James I.' Under this head we may mention his Libels, two of which Mr. Wood met with in his collection of Libels or Lampoons, written by ſeveral Oxford Students in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. One of them is intitled An Admonition to the City of Oxford; or his Libel intitled Mar-prelate's Baſtardine; wherein he reflects upon all perſons of note in Oxford, who were ſuſpected of criminal converſation with other men's wives, or with common ſtrumpets. The other, made after his expulſion, and in which he diſclaims the former, begins thus; Jenkin, why man? why Jenkin? fie for ſhame, &c. But neither of theſe were printed (3).

(1) Athen. Oxon. Vol. i. col. 432.

(2) D. Caſley's Catal. p. 197.

(3) Wood, ibid.

[B] —— a Preacher.] Under this character, he publiſhed, I. Five Sermons, Lond. 1615, 4*to*. The three firſt, on Luke i. 76, are called The Marigold and the Sun. The two laſt, on Luke vii. 37, 38, are intitled The Sinner's Looking-Glaſs. II. Twelve Sermons, Lond. 1615, 4*to*. The firſt, on Epheſ. iv. 26, is intitled A Chriſtian Exhortation to innocent Anger. The ſecond, on Exod. iii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, is intitled The Calling of Moſes, &c. (4).

(4) Id. ibid.

[C] He was thrice married, as appears by one of his epigrams.] It is this (5):

(5) Ibid.

Terna mihi variis ducta eſt ætatibus uxor,
Hæc juveni, illa viro, tertia nupta ſeni.
Prima eſt propter opus teneris mihi juncta ſub annis,
Altera propter opes, tertia propter opem.

The meaning of which (for it is impoſſible to give the force of it in an Engliſh verſion) is, that he married his firſt wife, in his youth, for love; his ſecond, when he was grown a man, for money; and his third, in his old age, for a nurſe. B.

BASTON (a) (ROBERT), a Poet of ſome note in the XIVth century, and author of ſeveral works [A], was deſcended of a noble family, and born in Yorkſhire, not far from Nottingham. In his youth he became a Carmelite Monk, and afterwards Prior of the convent of that order at Scarborough. He was likewiſe Poet Laureat, and Public Orator, at Oxford (b). King Edward I., in his expedition into Scotland in 1304, took Robert Baſton with him, in order to celebrate his victories over the Scots: But our Poet, being taken priſoner by the enemy, was obliged by torments to change his note, and ſing the ſucceſſes of Robert Bruce [B], who then claimed the crown of Scotland (c). Our author's poetry was ſomewhat barbarous, but not contemptible for the age in which he lived. He died about 1310, and was buried at Nottingham, being ſucceeded in his monaſtery by his brother Philip (d).

(a) Leland (Comment. de Script. Brit. c. 351) calls him Baſſodunus.

(b) Bale, de Script. Brit. Centur. IV. n. 92. and Pits, de Illuſtr. Angl. Script. ann. 1310. n. 452.

(c) Hector. Boëth. Hiſt. Scot. l. xiv. & Joan. Major. Chronic. l. v. c. 3.

(d) Bale and Pits, ubi ſupra.

[A] Author of ſeveral works. Bale and Pits mention the following: I. De Strivilnienſi obſidione; i. e. 'Of the Siege of Striveling;' a poem in one book. II. De altero Scotorum bello; i. e. 'Of the ſecond 'Scottiſh war,' in one book. III. De Scotiæ guerris variis; i. e. 'Of the ſeveral wars of Scotland,' in one book. IV. De variis mundi ſtatibus; i. e. 'Of the 'various ſtates of the world,' in one book. V. De ſacerdotum luxuriis; i. e. 'Of the luxury of the prieſts,' in one book. VI. Contra Artiſtas; i. e. 'Againſt the 'Artiſts,' in one book. VII. De Divite et Lazaro; i. e. 'Of the rich man and Lazarus,' in one book. VIII. Epiſtolæ ad diverſos; i. e. 'Letters to ſeveral 'perſons,' in one book. IX. Sermones Synodales; i. e. 'Synodical Sermons,' in one book. X. A Book of Poems; and XI. A volume of Tragedies and Comedies in Engliſh.

[B] He was obliged to ſing the ſucceſſes of Robert Bruce.] This taſk he undertook ſore againſt his will, as he intimates in the two firſt lines:

In dreery verſe my rhymes I make,
Bewailing whilſt ſuch theme I take (1). B.

(1) Winſtanley's Lives of the moſt famous Engliſh Poets, Lond. 1687, 8*vo*. p. 15.

BASTWICK (John), a man more remarkable for the great noiſe he made in the laſt century, than for any ſingular merit of his own, was born at Writtle in Eſſex (a), in the year 1593 [A]. He was entered in Emanuel-college, Cambridge, the nineteenth of May 1614, where he continued but a little while (b). Leaving the univerſity without a degree, he travelled beyond ſea for the ſpace of nine years (c), where he ſpent his time between the ſchools and the camp (d), and was made Doctor of Phyſic at Padua (e). Upon his return to England, he ſettled at Colcheſter, where he practiſed Phyſic for ſome time (f). But not ſatisfied with his profeſſion, and being a man of ſtrong zeal, with a warm imagination, and commanding a pure and fluent Latin ſtyle (g), he applied himſelf to write books, eſpecially againſt Popery. About the year 1633, he printed in Holland (h) a treatiſe called Elenchus Religionis Papiſticæ, with Flagellum Pontificis & Epiſcoporum Latialium, 'A Confutation of Popery, and a Scourge for the Pope and the 'Latin Biſhops (i);' which he induſtriouſly diſperſed in London, and throughout the kingdom (k). It was in effect an anſwer to one Short a Papiſt, who maintained the Pope's Supremacy, the Maſs, and Papal Religion [B]: And Baſtwick, in his epiſtle to the reader, declared, that he intended nothing againſt ſuch Biſhops, as acknowledged their authority from Kings and Emperors (l). But it ſeems, as Mr. Fuller obſerves, he confined not his character ſo to the Latian Biſhops beyond the Alpes, but that our Engliſh Prelates counted themſelves touched therein (m). The author therefore being queſtioned for this book in the High-Commiſſion-Court, in 1633 (n), was, on the twelfth of February, fined a thouſand pounds, ſentenced to be excommunicated, debarred his practice of Phyſic, his books to be burnt, to pay coſts of ſuit, and to remain in priſon till he made a recantation [C]. In purſuance of this ſentence, he was committed two years to the Gate-Houſe (o), where his violent temper would not permit him to be quiet. For he wrote during his confinement there, Apologeticus ad Præſules Anglicanos, &c. 'An Apology for himſelf, addreſſed to the Biſhops (p),' and another book called the Letany (q), wherein he groſsly reflected upon the Biſhops, taxed them with an inclination to Popery, and exclaimed againſt the ſeverity and injuſtice of the High-Commiſſion's proceedings againſt him (r). The perſons then in power were of too impatient and revengeful a temper, to let ſuch reflections and invectives go unpuniſhed [D]. Accordingly, on the 11th of March 1637, an information was exhibited againſt him (and Henry Burton, B. D. and William Prynne, Barriſter at Law) in the Star-Chamber, by the Attorney-General, 'For writing and publiſhing ſeditious, ſchiſmatical, and libel-'lous books, againſt the Hierarchy of the Church (s).' They being thereupon ſerved with ſub-pœnas returnable immediately, refuſed to appear, unleſs they had liberty of acceſs to Counſel; which being granted them, they prepared their anſwers; but Dr. Baſtwick's Counſel, for fear of offending the Court, refuſed to ſign his anſwer, which he had drawn up himſelf; alledging it was of ſuch a nature, that they could not well ſet their hands to it (t). And indeed, according to Mr. Whitelocke (u), it contained ſomething very abuſive, to this effect: 'The Prelates are invaders of the King's prerogative 'royal, contemners and deſpiſers of the holy ſcriptures, advancers of Popery, ſuperſtition, 'idolatry, and prophaneneſs; alſo they abuſe the King's authority, to the oppreſſion of 'his loyaleſt ſubjects, and therein exerciſe great cruelty, tyranny, and injuſtice; and in 'execution of thoſe impious performances, they ſhew neither wit, honeſty, nor tempe-'rance. Nor are they either ſervants of God, or of the King, but of the Devil, being 'enemies

(a) Church Hiſt. of Great Britain, by T. Fuller, Book xi. p. 151.

(b) As appears by the college books.

(c) Fuller, ubi ſupra.

(d) Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory, edit. Oxford, 1732, 8*vo*, Vol. i. p. 199.

(e) Fuller, ubi ſupra.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Clarendon & Fuller, ubi ſupra.

(b) Clarendon, ib.

(i) Whitelock's Memorials, Lond. 1732, p. 22. and Baſtwick's Petition in Uſhworth's Hiſtor. Coll. Vol. iv. p. 79, 80.

(k) Clarendon, ubi ſupra.

(l) Whitelock, ubi ſupra.

(m) Fuller, ubi ſupra, Book xi. p. 152.

(n) Whitelock, ubi ſupra. See Baſtwick's Dedicat. to his Flagellum, &c. Lond. 1641, p. 6. and his Petition, ubi ſupra.

(o) Fuller, ubi ſupra.

(p) Printed at London, 1630, 8*vo*. See his Dedication to his Flagellum, &c. Lond. 1641, 12*mo*, p. 6.

(q) See Collier's Eccl. Hiſt. Vol. ii. p. 771.

(r) Ibid. & Fuller, ubi ſupra.

(s) Ruſhworth's Hiſtoric. Collect. Part ii. Vol. i. p. 380, edit. Lond. 1680. See alſo State Trials, and New Diſcovery of the Prelates Tyranny, Lond. 1641, 4*to*, p. 17. 27, &c.

(t) Ibid.

(u) Memorials, ubi ſupra, p. 26. See Nalſon's Collect. Vol. i. p. 499, 500, 501, &c.

[A] Was born —— in the year 1593.] This appears from the date on his picture, prefixed to his Flagellum pontificis & epiſcoporum Latialium (1): For there it is ſaid, that he was forty-ſeven years old in 1640, and conſequently muſt have been born in 1593.

(1) Second edit. Lond. 1641, 12*mo*.

[B] He printed in Holland a Treatiſe called Elenchus, &c.] It was firſt printed in Holland, in 1633, and reprinted at London in 1641, 12*mo*, under the title of Flagellum Pontificis & Epiſcoporum Latialium, auctum & multis argumentis locupletatum, with three Letters at the end: 1. To a Proteſtant who had embraced Popery. 2. Concerning the abſurdity of the Popiſh Religion, to one Mr. St. John: And the 3d, to prove that the Church of Rome is not a true Church, directed to one Coleman. In the beginning, there is a Letter of thanks to the King, the Parliament, and the people of England; in which he bitterly inveighs againſt his perſecutor Archbiſhop Laud. The book is written in good Latin, and, to an unprejudiced reader, there doth not appear any thing in it that could deſerve ſo ſevere a cenſure as was inflicted on the author; except it is his maintaining a parity or equality between Biſhops and Preſbyters (2), which was by ſome perſons reckoned a moſt heinous crime in thoſe days. The contents of the book are, An Anſwer to theſe Queſtions: 1. 'Whether Chriſt conſtituted Peter mo-'narch, or ſupreme head, of the Catholic Church: 'Nay, whether Peter was ever Biſhop of Rome? '2. Whether the Pope (if he is Biſhop), as Biſhop 'of Rome, has authority and juriſdiction over his 'fellow-chriſtians, and the flock of God, or no? '3. Whether the Popiſh Biſhops are true Biſhops?' The firſt he thinks is ſufficiently overthrown by theſe paſſages of Scripture, Matth. xx. 25, 26. Mark x. 43, 44. Luke xxii. 25, 26. To the ſecond he oppoſes Acts xx. 28. Titus i. 5. Philip. i. 1. 1 Pet. v. 1, 2, &c. from all which he infers, that Biſhops and Preſbyters were originally the ſame. In anſwer to the third he affirms, that the Popiſh Biſhops not performing the functions of a Biſhop, as laid down by St. Paul, (to Timothy and Titus) are not true Biſhops.

(2) Page 58, &c. 75, &c.

[C] The author —— was fined, &c.] All the Biſhops preſent at this cenſure, as Whitelock obſerves (3), denied openly that they held their juriſdiction, as Biſhops, from the King; but they affirmed, that they had their juriſdiction from God only. For which, as that author farther obſerves, they might perhaps have been cenſured themſelves in the times of Henry II. Edw. III. or Henry VIII.

(3) Memorials, p. 22.

[D] The perſons then in power were of too impatient a temper, &c.] It appears from Ruſhworth (4) that June 6, 1636, all the Judges, and the King's counſel, met at Serjeant's-Inn to conſider, whether there were not divers paſſages in Baſtwick's and Burton's books that amounted to high-treaſon? But the Judges agreeing, that no indictment would be found good for treaſon, unleſs it was grounded upon the ſtatute 25 Edw. III.; 'tis probable that nothing could be found in their books that amounted to high-treaſon, according to that ſtatute.

(4) Hiſtoric. Collect. Part ii. Vol. i. p. 324.

'enemies of God and the King, and of every living thing that is good. All which he is 'ready to maintain.'——And none of his friends could prevail with him to expunge this, and other the like paſſages. Upon the Counſel's refuſing to ſign the anſwers, Baſtwick, and the reſt of the defendants, petitioned the court, that, according to ancient precedents, they might put in their anſwers ſigned with their own hands; and declared, they would abide by the cenſure of the court, if they did not make good what was contained in them. But this was refuſed by the court; which ordered them to put in their anſwers by the Monday following under Counſel's hand, or elſe they ſhould be taken pro confeſſo. Baſtwick, upon this tendered his anſwer under his own hand at the Star-Chamber-Office, and there left it. On the 14th of June, the day wherein ſentence was paſſed on them, they firſt preſented to the court a croſs-bill againſt the Biſhops, which was not admitted (w). Next, they were told, That they had not put in their effectual anſwer into the court, though they had ſufficient notice and competent time. And the Lord-Keeper Coventry informed them of a precedent, wherein, for ſuch a neglect, the court had, after ſix days notice, taken a cauſe pro confeſſo, [as if the parties had confeſſed] whereas they had had ſix weeks allowed them; and therefore the court deſired them to ſhew cauſe, why ſentence ſhould not paſs upon them immediatel; (x). Dr. Baſtwick, in particular, being aſked, why he did not bring his anſwer in due time? laid the blame on the cowardice of his Counſel, that durſt not ſign it, for fear of the Prelates; and then tendered an anſwer upon oath under his own hand: but the Lord-Keeper told him, they had no need of his anſwer. Whereupon Baſtwick ſaid, 'My Lord, I moſt humbly beſeech your Honours to accept of 'it; for it is pretended that it is taken pro confeſſo, as if we had failed on our parts, either 'out of contempt to the order, or negligence, both which on my part I am free from; 'and if your Honours ſhall refuſe it, then I proteſt before men and angels this day, that 'I will put this anſwer of mine in Roman buff (*), and ſend it through the whole Chriſtian 'world, that all men may ſee my innocency, and your illegal proceedings, and this I will 'do if I die for it:' and then caſting it into the court, my Lord-Keeper ſaid, 'Dr. Baſt-'wick, it ſeems we muſt have your anſwer.' After that, Baſtwick taking notice of the puniſhment, which he underſtood was deſigned for him and his fellow-ſufferers, added ——— 'I ſhall preſume to ſay unto your Honours, as Paul ſpake unto the Centurion, 'when they went about to whip him, What, ſaith he, will you whip a Roman? So, my 'good Lords, let me ſay unto your Honours, What, will you cut off a true and loyal 'ſubject's ears for doing his duty to his King and country? Will you cut off a Scholar's ears? 'Will you cut off a Doctor of Phyſic's ears, able to cure Lords, Peers, Kings, and Em-'perors? Will you cut off a Chriſtian's ears? Will you make curs of Chriſtians, my Lords? 'Will you cut off a Catholick, apoſtolick, a Roman's ears? Men, brethren, and fathers, 'what an age do we live in, that we muſt thus be expoſed unto the mercileſs fury of every 'malignant ſpirit (y).' In the end, he, and Burton, and Prynne were cenſured, as ſcandalous, ſeditious, and infamous perſons (z); and condemned in a fine of five thouſand pounds each; to ſtand in the pillory in the palace-yard at Weſtminſter, and there to loſe their ears; and to perpetual impriſonment (a) in three remote places of the kingdom [E]. According to this rigorous ſentence, the three unhappy perſons were ſet in pillories in Palace yard, Weſtminſter, on the 30th of June. Baſtwick made there a very odd ſpeech [F]. Soon after, he was ſent priſoner to Launceſton-caſtle in Cornwall; as Prynne was to Caernar-

(w) New diſcovery of the Prelates Tyranny, &c. as above, p. 27. and Paſſages in the Star-Chamber, p. 20.

(x) Fuller, ubi ſupra; and New Diſcovery, &c. as above, p. 40. and Relation of certain Paſſages in the Star-Chamber, p. 12, &c.

(*) i. e. In Latin.

(y) Ibid. p. 24. Fuller, ubi ſupra.

(z) Lord Clarendon, ubi ſupra, p. 200.

(a) Baſtwick Cenſure, & 32. Clarendon, ibid. & Ruſhworth, ubi ſupra, p. 38. July.

[E] In the end, Baſtwick, Burton, and Prynne were cenſured, &c.] At the paſſing of this cenſure, Archbiſhop Laud made a ſpeech, which was afterwards printed by the King's order. In the dedication to the King (5) he ſays, 'I muſt humbly beſeech 'your Majeſty to conſider, that 'tis not wee only, that 'is, the Biſhops, that are ſtrucke at, but through 'our ſides, your Majeſty, your honour, your ſafety, 'your religion, is impeached. — And again (6)— 'both myſelfe and my brethren have been very 'coarſely uſed by the tongues and pennes of theſe 'men, yet ſhall I never give your Majeſty any ſower 'counſell; I ſhall rather magnifie your clemencie, 'that proceeded with theſe offenders in a court of mer-'cie as well as juſtice: ſince (as the reverend Judges 'then declared) you might have juſtly called the 'offenders into another court, and put them to it in 'a way that might have exacted their lives, for their 'ſtirring (as much as in them lay) of mutinie and ſe-'dition.' And in the ſpeech itſelf (7) —— 'This I 'will ſay, and abide by it, that the calling of Bi-'ſhops is jure divino, by divine right, though not all 'adjuncts to their calling.—But this takes nothing 'from the King's right or power over us: for though 'our office be from God and Chriſt immediately, yet 'may we not exerciſe that power, either of order or 'juriſdiction, but as God hath appointed us, that is— 'by and under the power of the King ——— No 'man can libell againſt our calling (as thoſe men 'doe), bee it pulpit, print, or otherwiſe, but hee 'libels againſt the King and the State, by whoſe 'lawes wee are eſtabliſhed (8).'

(5) Page 3.

(6) Page 9.

(7) Page 6.

(8) Page 9.

[F] Baſtwick made there a very odd ſpeech.] It was to this effect: 'There are many that are this day 'ſpectators of our ſtanding here as delinquents, yet am 'I not conſcious to myſelf wherein I have committed 'the leaſt treſpaſſe to take this outward ſhame, either 'againſt my God or my King.——The firſt occaſion 'of my trouble was by the Prelates, for writing a book 'againſt the Pope; and the Pope of Canterbury ſaid I 'wrote againſt him, and therefore queſtioned me: but 'if the preſſes were as open to us, as formerly they 'have been, we would ſhatter his kingdom about his 'ears. But be ye not deterred by their power, neither 'be affrighted at our ſufferings; let none determine to 'turn from the ways of the Lord, but go on, fight 'courageouſly againſt Gog and Magog. I know there 'be many here who have ſet many days apart for our 'behalf (let the Prelates take notice of it), and they 'have ſent up ſtrong prayers to Heaven for us; we 'feel the ſtrength and benefit of them at this time.— 'In a word, ſo far am I from baſe fear, or caring for 'any thing they can do, or caſt upon me, that had I as 'much blood as would ſwell the Thames, I would 'ſhed it every drop in this cauſe. ——— As I ſaid 'before, ſo I ſay again, had I as many lives as I have 'hairs on my head, or drops of blood in my veins, I 'would give them all up for this cauſe (9).'

(9) Fuller, ubi ſupra, p. 155. and New Diſcovery of the Prelates Tyranny, p. 34, 35. Part ii.

von, and Burton to Lancaſter-caſtle (b). But they finding means to hold a correſpondence together, and to have ſome of their virulent books diſperſed in London (c), the Court thought fit to remove them at a greater diſtance from that city. Accordingly Baſtwick was ſent to St. Mary's-caſtle in Scilly-iſland (d), Prynne to Jerſey, and Burton to Guernſey (e), whence they were not allowed to keep correſpondence with any one (f). And the wives of Baſtwick and Burton were not permitted, after many petitions, to have acceſs unto them, nor to ſet foot in the iſlands where they were confined (g). As the puniſhment of theſe men was exorbitant, and diſproportionate to the offence, it was then, and hath ever ſince, been looked upon by all merciful and unprejudiced perſons with horror and deteſtation [G]. Their impriſonment was of no long continuance: for, upon the meeting of the Parliament in 1640, a petition was preſented by their wives and friends, November 7, to the Houſe of Commons (h), wherein they requeſted 'That the juſtice 'and rigour of their ſentence might be reviewed and conſidered; and their perſons 'brought from thoſe remote and deſolate places they were confined in, to London, that 'ſo they might be able to facilitate or attend their own buſineſs.' Upon this the Houſe ordered, That they ſhould be removed from the foreign priſons they were in, to the places to which they were regularly firſt committed [H]. And for that purpoſe, warrants were ſigned by the Speaker to the Governors and Captains of the ſeveral caſtles, to bring them in ſafe cuſtody to London; which were ſent with all poſſible expedition (i). Baſtwick landing at Dover, on the 4th of December, had his charges borne all the way to London; was loaded with preſents, and received every where by vaſt numbers of people, with wonderful acclamations of joy: particularly, before he came to Southwark, he was met by great crouds of Londoners, with boughs and flowers in their hands [I], and conducted by them to his lodging in the city (k). The 21ſt of February following, the Houſe of Commons declared, That the ſeveral proceedings againſt him were illegal, unjuſt, and againſt the liberty of the ſubject: That the ſentence paſſed upon him be reverſed, his fine remitted, and he reſtored to his profeſſion [K]; and that, for reparation of his loſſes, he ought to have 5000 l. out of the eſtates of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the High-Commiſſioners, and thoſe Lords who had voted againſt him in the Star-Chamber. But the enſuing confuſion of the times prevented the payment of the money (l). However, to make him ſome amends, we find that in 1644, his wife had an allowance ordered for her own, and her huſband's maintenance (m): And October 24, 1648, there was a debate in the Houſe of Commons about Ordinances for him to have reparation for the illegal ſentence againſt him, in the Star-Chamber (n). What became of him, or how long he lived after that time, is not known: only it is very probable that he died in St. Botolph's pariſh, Colcheſter, where a niece of his was living within the memory of man [L].

M.

(b) Ibid. & Whitelocke, ubi ſupra.

(c) Clarendon, ubi ſupra.

(d) Wood, Ath. Vol. ii. col. 436. The order was made in Auguſt 1637.

(e) Ruſhworth, ubi ſupra. Dr. Baſtwick landed in Scilly, Oct. 16, 1637. New Diſcovery of the Prelates Tyranny, &c. Part ii.

(f) Baſtwick's Dedicat. before his Flagellum, as above, p. 8. and Ruſhworth's Hiſt. Coll. Part iii. Vol. i. or Vol. iv. p. 20 and 80.

(g) Ruſhworth, ibid.

(h) Ruſhworth's Collect. Vol. iv. p. 20. Nalſon's Collect. Vol. i. p. 779, 780.

(i) Clarendon, ubi ſupra, p. 202. New Diſcovery of the Prelates Tyranny, &c. p. 135.

(k) Clarendon, ubi ſupra, p. 202. Diurnal Occurrences of Parliament, &c. Lond. 1641, p. 41. 4*to*. Ruſhworth's Hiſtoric. Collect. Vol. iv. p. 193. 203.

(l) Neal's Hiſt. of the Puritans, Vol. ii. p. 385. edit. Lond. 1733.

(m) Whitelock, ubi ſupra, p. 107.

(n) Id. p. 345.

[G] The puniſhment of theſe men —— hath ever ſince been looked upon —— with horror, &c.] My Lord Clarendon obſerves (10), 'That they were men of 'the three ſeveral profeſſions which had the moſt in'fluence upon the people, though none of them of in'tereſt or any eſteem with the worthy part of their 'ſeveral profeſſions, having been formerly all looked 'upon under characters of reproach; yet when they 'were all ſentenced, and for the execution of that 'ſentence brought out to be puniſhed as common and 'ſignal rogues, expoſed upon ſcaffolds to have their 'ears cut off, and their faces and foreheads branded 'with hot irons; men began no more to conſider 'their manners but the men; and each profeſſion, 'with anger and indignation enough, thought their 'education, and degrees, and quality, would have 'ſecured them from ſuch infamous judgments, and 'treaſured up wrath for the time to come.'

(10) Hiſtory, ubi ſupra, Vol. i. p. 94.

[H] To the places to which they were regularly firſt committed.] It ſeems their firſt ſentence was, that they ſhould be committed to ſome priſons in London: but they were afterwards removed thence by an order of the Privy-Council, which was now looked upon as a violation of the ſentence; and therefore that order was reverſed without any ſcruple (11).

(11) See Clarendon, ubi ſupra. p. 201. and Ruſhworth, Hiſtor. Collect. Part iii. or Vol. iv. p. 193.

[I] He was met by great crowds of Londoners, &c.] This could not but be looked upon as a very great affront to, and bold inſult upon authority: but, as Mr. Hobbes judiciouſly obſerves (12), the Parliament's deſign, in ſending for thoſe men to London, was, to try 'how the people would be pleaſed therewith, and, 'by conſequence, how their endeavours to draw the 'people's affections from the King had already pro'ſpered.—So, by the people's flocking together to 'behold thoſe men, and receiving them with ſuch 'acclamations, and almoſt adoration, as if they had 'been let down from Heaven, the parliament was 'now ſufficiently aſſured of a great and tumultuous 'party, whenſoever they ſhould have occaſion to 'uſe it.'

(12) Hiſt. of the Civil Wars of England, Lond. 1679, 8*vo*, p. 87.

[K] And he reſtored to his profeſſion.] June 11, 1641, it was ordered that Dr. Baſtwick be reſtored to his place in the College of Phyſicians, and to the liberty of his practice as formerly (13). The former part of which order ſhews the miſtake of Lord Clarendon, when he ſays (14), that he was 'unknown to 'either Univerſity, or the College of Phyſicians.'

(13) Ruſhworth, Hiſtor. Collect. Vol. iv. p. 283.

(14) Vol. i. p. 199.

[L] Where a niece of his was living, &c.] Beſides the books abovementioned, Dr. Baſtwick publiſhed, I. Independency not God's Ordinance; to which H. Burton wrote an anſwer under this title; 'Vindiciæ Ve'ritatis: Truth vindicated againſt Calumny. In a 'brief Anſwer to Dr. Baſtwick's two late books, 'entitled Independency not God's Ordinance, Lond. '1645, 4to. (15)' II. The utter Routing of the whole Army of all the Independents and Sectaries, with the total Overthrow of their Monarchy. III. Defence of Himſelf againſt Lilburn.

(15) Wood's Faſti, Vol. i. col. 192.

[Mr. Hume, ſpeaking of Prynne, Burton, and Baſtwick, ſays, 'Beſides, that theſe writers had 'attacked, with great ſeverity, and even an intem'perate zeal, the ceremonies, rites, and government 'of the Church; the very anſwers which they gave 'into the Court, were ſo full of contumacy, and of 'invective againſt the Prelates, that no Lawyer could 'be prevailed with to ſign them. The rigour, how'ever, which they underwent, being ſo unworthy 'men of their profeſſion, gave general offence; and 'the patience, or rather alacrity, with which they 'ſuffered, increaſed ſtill farther the indignation of 'the public (16).' Upon this paſſage a Correſpondent hath favoured us with the following remarks. 'Baſtwick offered defences: as they were not ſigned 'by a Lawyer, they were not received. On this he 'was held as confeſt: that is, his anſwers were held 'as never given in at all. Did it require much 'knowledge

(16) Hiſt. of Great Britain, Vol. vi. p. 244, 245. 8*vo*. edit. of 1763.

'knowledge in law, or plain reaſoning, to diſcover 'that Baſtwick could not be puniſhed for expreſſions 'in a paper, for the writing of which he was not ac-'cuſed, and which the Court would not receive.'

We cannot help ſubjoining what is immediately added by Mr. Hume. 'The ſeverity of the Star-'chamber, which was generally aſcribed to Laud's 'paſſionate diſpoſition, was perhaps, in itſelf, ſome-'what blameable; but will naturally to us appear 'enormous, who enjoy, in the utmoſt latitude, that 'liberty of the preſs, which is ſo neceſſary to every 'Monarchy, confined by legal limitations. But as 'theſe limitations were not regularly fixed during the 'age of Charles, nor at any time before; ſo was the 'freedom of ſpeech totally unknown, and was gene-'rally deemed, as well as religious Toleration, in-'compatible with all good government. No age 'or nation, among the Moderns, had ever ſet an 'example of ſuch an indulgence: and it ſeems un-'reaſonable to judge of the meaſures, embraced 'during one period, by the maxims which prevail in 'another (17).' Every reader of reflection will be ſtruck with the beginning of what has now been quoted. 'The ſeverity of the Star-chamber —— was perhaps, 'in itſelf, ſomewhat blameable.' Much, too, might be ſaid, were it needful, on the remainder of what has been advanced by our elegant Hiſtorian. It is, undoubtedly, a juſt obſervation, that, in eſtimating the conduct of former periods, a regard ſhould be had to the maxims which then prevailed. But this rule ought not to be applied to the vindication, or even to any great extenuation of oppreſſion, perſe-cution, and cruelty. There are certain actions which no received principles can juſtify, and which they can ſcarcely palliate. How little ſoever the age of Charles the Firſt might know with regard to the rights of men to freedom of ſpeech and religious Toleration, the nation was enlightened enough to be filled with the utmoſt diſſatisfaction at the treatment of Prynne, Burton, and Baſtwick. But Mr. Hume had very little occaſion for recurring to the ſenti-ments of the times, in order to apologize for the ſeverity of the Star-chamber, if that ſeverity was only perhaps, in itſelf, ſomewhat blameable. Did not the human mind afford ſo many inſtances of incon-ſiſtency, it might ſeem ſtrange that any man ſhould endeavour to leſſen the malignity of perſecution, who had himſelf ventured to attack the moſt ſacred and fundamental principles of religion.] K.

(17) Ibid.

BATE (GEORGE), an eminent Phyſician of the laſt century, was ſon of Mr. John Bate of Burton or Bourton in Buckinghamſhire, and was born at Maid's-Morton near Buckingham in the year 1608. At fourteen years of age, he became one of the Clerks of New-college in Oxford; from whence he removed to Queen's-college for a time, and from thence to St Edmund's-hall. Having taken the degrees of Bachelor and Maſter of Arts, he proceeded on the Phyſic line, and commenced Bachelor in that faculty in the year 1629; about which time, having obtained a licence, he practiſed in and about Oxford for ſome years, but chiefly among the Puritans, who at that time conſidered him as one of their party. In 1637, he took the degree of Doctor of Phyſic, and became more emi-nent in his profeſſion, eſpecially while King Charles I., to whom he was Principal-Phy-ſician, kept his court ſeveral years at Oxford, in the time of the rebellion. When the King's affairs began to decline, Dr. Bate left Oxford, and ſettled in London; where, complying with the times, he became Phyſician to the Charter-houſe, and Fellow of the College; and afterwards Principal Phyſician to Oliver Cromwell; nor did he ſtick (though he pretended to be a concealed Royaliſt) to flatter the Protector in the higheſt degree. At the Reſtoration, he ingratiated himſelf with the Royal party, by means of a report induſtriouſly ſpread by his friends, that he had ſecretly, by a doſe, haſtened the death of the Uſurper; upon which he was made Principal-Phyſician to King Charles II. He was one of the earlieſt members of the Royal Society. Dr. Bate wrote in Latin, An Account of the late Commotions in England, together with a ſhort Narrative of the Regal and Parliamentary Privileges [A], and ſome other pieces [B]. He died at his houſe in Hatton-

[A] An Account of the late Commotions in England, &c.] The Latin title is: Elenchus Motuum nuperorum in Anglia, ſimul ac Juris Regii et Parliamentarii brevis narratio. It was printed at Paris in 1649, and at Francfort upon the Maine in 1650, in quarto. Before it went to the preſs, it was communicated to Dr. Peter Heylyn, who made ſeveral obſervations on it greatly tending to the honour of the King and the Church. The firſt part of the Elenchus was tranſlated into Engliſh by an unknown hand, and printed at London in 1652, in octavo. The ſecond part, in which the au-thor had the aſſiſtance of ſome papers communicated to him by the Lord-Chancellor Hyde, afterwards Earl of Clarendon, was printed in Latin at London in 1661, at Amſterdam the year following in octavo, and re-printed with the firſt part at London in 1663, in octa-vo (1). A learned writer, having condemned George Hornius, Honorius Reggus, an anonymous Scotchman (2), and Salmonetus Scoto-Britannus (3), who have written very erroneouſly of our Engliſh affairs, aſſures us, Dr. Bate is the only author, who has written in La-tin concerning the late tranſactions, that deſerves to be read, though he is accuſed by an anonymous writer of leaning too much to the ſide of Puritaniſm. Eorum omnium, qui hactenus de rebus apud nos nuper geſtis ſcrip-ſerunt Latino idiomate, unus Bateus dignus eſt qui lega-tur; quanquam etiam ab anonymo ſcriptore propenſi ni-mium in Puritanos animi nuper eſt accuſatus (4). There was publiſhed at London, in 1676, a third part of Elenchus Motuum nuperorum, &c. written in Latin by Thomas Skinner, Doctor of Phyſic, and publiſhed with the two former parts. But this part would have been much better performed, if Dr. Bate had lived one year longer. In 1685 came out a tranſlation into Engliſh of all the three parts by one A. Lovel, A. M. of Cambridge. The two parts publiſhed by Dr. Bate having given offence, not only to the Papiſts, but to the Cavaliers likewiſe, on account of their favouring the Puritans; one Robert Pugh, who had been an officer in the King's army, wrote an anſwer to them, entitled Elenchus Elenchi, printed at Paris in 1664, in octavo. Dr. Bate replied thereto; but his anſwer was never publiſhed (5). The firſt part of Dr. Bate's Elen-chus is dedicated to King Charles II. In the preface, the author gives us a plan of his deſign. He tells us, 'he has touched upon ſuch particulars as may ſerve to 'ſettle the juſt boundaries between the Rights of the 'King, the Parliament, and the People; that he has 'briefly related the Cauſes, Progreſs, and Concluſion 'of our Civil Diſſenſions; that he has purpoſely omit-'ted dwelling upon military affairs, chiefly to avoid 'prolixity; and that the facts he relates were not taken 'from the report of others, but from his own know-'ledge and experience, confirmed by Records, Parlia-'ment Rolls, and the authorities of the moſt eminent 'Lawyers; all which he had an opportunity of con-'ſulting in perſon.' He obſerves, that 'towards the 'end of this Tragedy, he was fired with indignation 'at the villanies he related, and his pen grew warm; 'but that he ſtrictly confined himſelf within the 'bounds of truth, and even treated thoſe horrid crimes 'and their actors in a milder ſtyle than they deſerved.'

(1) Wood, Ath. Oxon. Vol. ii. col. 425.

(2) Qui ſcripſit Hiſtoriam Motuum nuperorum in Scotia.

(3) Qui Gallicè ſcripſit de Rebus Anglicis.

(4) Joh. Durel. S. Eccl. Angl. Vindiciæ, Lond. 1669. c. 28. p. 332.

(5) Wood, ubi ſupra.

Sub

Hatton-Garden, April the 19th, 1669, and was buried at Kingſton upon Thames in Surry, near his wife Elizabeth, who died April the 17th, 1667 (a).

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. Vol. ii. col. 425, 426.

There

Sub hujus Tragœdiæ finem, rerum atrocitate motus concepit flammas animus, et incaluit calamus; ſed intrà veritatis metas religioſe ſe continuit, et ſcelera autoreſque meliore ſtylo quam par erat perſtrinxit (6). At the end of the firſt part (7), the Doctor tells us, the manuſcript, before it went to the preſs, was reviſed by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Nicolas Oudart, Secretary to the Prince of Orange, Sir John Wederburn, Dr. Richard Owen, Dr. George Ente, and Fabian Philips the Lawyer; the laſt of whom aſſiſted him in ſearching records, &c. The ſecond part is dedicated to King Charles II., and Edward Earl of Clarendon. The author tells us, it contains an account of King Charles II.'s wonderful eſcape after the murder of his father, and a diſtinct account of the affairs, both civil and military, of England, Scotland, and Ireland. And he promiſes a third part, if his health ſhould permit. Dr. Skinner (as has been obſerved) executed this deſign. His performance is entitled Elenchus, &c. Pars Tertia; ſive Motus Compoſiti. Ubi illuſtriſſimi G. Monchii Albemarliæ Ducis è Scotia Progreſſus; nec non Auguſtiſſimi Caroli 2di in Angliam Reditus, ejuſdemque regiæ majeſtatis per decennium geſta fideliter enarrantur. It is dedicated to Sir Joſeph Williamſon, Privy-Counſellor, and Secretary of State to King Charles II. I cannot forbear giving the learned reader a ſpecimen of Dr. Bate's Latin ſtyle, which I chuſe to do in his character of King Charles I. (8) Nec ſane facile mihi eſt non hic immittere rudentes, non vela pandere, totoque ingenio vehi per virtutum ipſius Oceanum; quanquam hanc mihi licentiam compendii, cui jam incumbitur, ratio interdicat. Paucis itaque iiſdemque perobſcuris radiis hunc ſolem oſtendam. Princeps ſane erat inter optimos omnis retro ævi numerandus; magna ingenii vi, majoribus morum dotibus; omnium ſuffragiis (vel inimiciſſimorum) dignus imperio, ſi non imperaſſet. Qui omnium confeſſione illud magnum præ ſe tulit, quod idem ubique fuerit, quod eundem virtutis et morum tenorem, eundem vultum tenere, in diverſiſſimis, quas expertus eſt, fortunis noſſet; quaſi è torrida in frigidam tranſmigraret Zonam, nil ad quicquam mutato cœloris temperamento. Qui vel invitis placuit, et quaſi incantamento quodam multorum odia lenivit, hoſtes in amicitiam conciliavit, convitia in laudes convertit. Qui tanta prudentia, tot heroicis planè virtutibus præpolluit, ut clarius per opprobria et calumnias emicuerit. Quem mentis inopem finxerant hoſtes, experti ſunt, non politicis modo, ſed et Theologicis ſelectiſſimis parem, ſi non et ſuperiorem: Quem timidum et ad omnia facilem, fluxæ fidei et muliebris inconſtantiæ, infamarunt, eundem in præliis milite promptiorem, minis, probris, periculis interritum, carcere et morte ſenſerunt inconcuſſum: Quem Pontificium affirmarunt, Reformatam Apoſtolicam Religionem ſcriptis viderunt nervosè confirmantem, nec fuſo tantum atramento, ſed et ſanguine vindicantem. Qui eum ut ſanguinarium et ſævum proſciderant, ad eam calumniandi licentiam ſolâ regis clementiâ perducti proceſſerunt, ad quam facilem nimis receptum ſibi promiſerant Rebelles; donec ultrà veniæ metas aſpirante fortuna evecti, mallent tantæ clementiæ Principi veniam negare, quam tandem ab eo jam exarmato petere. Cui ſi revera quid objici poteſt, næ illud fuerit non eximii principis vitium aliquod, ſed corruptiſſimi ſæculi et alieni temporis intempeſtiva quædam et noxia virtus; nimia ſcilicet apud ſævos lenitas, apud prava ingenia candor, rigidumque Honeſtum vix regibus conceſſum; ac verecundia ſuis diffiſa viribus; animuſque tantopere à faſtu alienus, ut minus ſibi tribuerit in optimis conſultis, quam aliis in minus bonis, quaſi inimicorum de ſe convitiis, crederet. Magnum vivendi, majus moriendi exemplum: quem, eâdem qua virtus ipſa ſorte, indignis modis habitum,

(6) Elench. Mot. nuperor. &c. edit. Lond. 1676. Ad Lectorem.

(7) In Epilogo.

(8) Vide Elench. p. 121, 122.

——————— incolumem odimus
Sublatum ex oculis quærimus invidi.

[B] He wrote ſome other pieces.] I. The Royal Apology; or, The Declaration of the Commons in Parliament, Feb. 11, 1647. Printed in 1648, in quarto. II. De Rachitide, ſive morbo puerili, qui vulgo the Rickets dicitur, Lond. 1650, in octavo. Mr. Wood tells us (9), the Doctor was aſſiſted in this work by Francis Gliſſon, and Ahaſuerus Regemorter, Doctors of Phyſic, and Fellows of the College of Phyſicians; and that it was afterwards tranſlated into Engliſh by Philip Armin, and printed at London 1651, in octavo; and about the ſame time tranſlated by Nicolas Culpepper, who ſtyles himſelf Student in Phyſic and Aſtrology, and who was author of ſeveral books and Almanacks. III. After Dr. Bate's death came out a Diſpenſatory in Latin, entitled Pharmacopœia Bateana; in qua octoginta circiter pharmaca pleraque omnia è Praxi Georgii Batei Regi Carolo 2do Proto-medici excerpta. Lond. 1688 and 1691. It was publiſhed by Mr. James Shipton, Apothecary, and tranſlated into Engliſh by Dr. William Salmon, under the title of Bate's Diſpenſatory. We have the following account of this book in the Philoſophical Tranſactions (10). 'The tranſlator 'of this work, in his preface, gives firſt an account of 'the Original, that it is a collection of moſt excellent 'Recipes made by Mr. James Shipton, who was the 'preparer and maker-up of the greateſt part of them, 'though their author was the famous Dr. Bate, whom 'to name is ſufficient, by whoſe knowledge and ex'perience this work was produced. The firſt edition 'was ſo well received by the Learned, that they were 'ſoon preſented with a ſecond, with an addition of 'not only above 100 more of Dr. Bate's Recipes, but 'alſo of the Arcana Goddardiana from the author's 'own MS. which much advanced the value of the 'book, ſo that at leaſt 6000 of this Latin edition 'were ſold; which was digeſted into an alphabetical 'method, with the Arcana Goddardiana at the end 'thereof, which were only nominal without their 'preparations; whereas in this Engliſh edition they 'are at large, and interſperſed in their proper places: 'The method of the book is likewiſe altered claſſically, according to the method and order of the 'chapters of the London Diſpenſatory. The work in the 'Latin being thus approved of by the Learned, and eſpecially Phyſicians, induced our author to publiſh 'this Engliſh edition, as he ſays, for its more general 'uſe and entertainment; adding ſome preparations 'never before printed, as Goddard's Drops, Ruſſel's Powder, Emplaſtrum Febrifugium, with near 50 'more valuable Recipes out of the Collectanea Chymica, and other authors of which he gives a catalogue both of the ancient and modern which he 'has conſulted in this undertaking; which is not a 'bare tranſlation, a Comment being added upon each 'particular, eſpecially upon all the chymical proceſſes, which he has ſearched out from their original 'fountains, and explicated the proceſs itſelf, adding 'as a Supplement a Rationale upon the ſame; and 'having examined the preſcripts of other authors, he 'ſhews wherein they chiefly differ from theſe, and 'gives their proceſſes at large, if new.——He obvi'ates ſome objections againſt the publiſhing this 'work in Engliſh, and diſcovering the ſecrets of the 'Art to the Vulgar, which he hopes he has made 'ſome amends for, by divulging ſeveral ſecrets not 'generally known even by the Learned; amongſt 'which is the Prince's Powder, once accounted a 'great ſecret, and ſold for above five pounds a doſe; 'the preparation whereof is Lib. 1. Cap. 9. Sect. 80. 'Pag. 526. which happens to be omitted in the 'Table; and, as a general anſwer, adds, that all 'particular intereſts ſhould be ſacrificed to the com'mon good, which ought to be preferred before any 'private one, how dear and valuable ſoever: and 'juſtifies himſelf in this by the examples of Hippo'crates, Galen, Paracelſus, Celſus, and others, who 'all publiſhed a ſyſtem of Phyſic in their own lan'guages: as likewiſe from the preſent uſage of the 'French, who now treat of all ſubjects in their own 'tongue; and, as he conceives, they are not to be 'imitated only in their vices.' B.

(9) Ubi ſupra.

(10) Vol. xvii. for the year 1693. N. 206.

[It ought to be remembered, that the ſtory of Dr. Bate's having ingratiated himſelf with the Royal party, by the report of his friends that he haſtened the death of Cromwell, reſts only on the authority of Anthony Wood, who might derive it from accidental rumour. The Doctor, who was very eminent in his profeſſion, who had been chief Phyſician to Charles the Firſt, and who had written in favour of that Monarch, did not ſtand in need of ſuch a ſtrange recommendation to King Charles the Second.

There was another GEORGE BATE, who wrote the Lives, Actions, and Execution of the prime Actors, and principal Contrivers of that horrid Murder of our late pious and ſacred Sovereign King Charles I., London, 1661, 8vo (b).

(b) Wood, Ath. Oxon. Vol. ii. col. 425, 426.

The Salmonetus Scoto-Brittannus, mentioned in the note [A], was Robert Monteith, who had been Miniſter of Preſton or Haugh, in Eaſt Lothian. The tradition is, that he was obliged to leave Scotland upon his being ſuſpected of adultery with the wife of Sir James Hamilton of Preſton-field. Monteith appears to have been a Chaplain of Cardinal de Retz. See Joli. Memoires, tom. ii. p. 86. where he is called 'Homme Scavant & de Merite.' Cardinal de Retz alſo mentions him, Vol. iii. p. 323. His brother was Lieutenant-Colonel of Douglas's regiment (the Royal), and killed in Alſace. In the privilege for printing Monteith's Hiſtory, granted the 13th of September 1660, to Jaques St. Clair de Roſelin, he is ſtyled le defunct St. Montet. In the title-page he is called Meſſire. He ſays, in his Hiſtory, that Salmonet is a place between Airth and Grange, on the South-ſide of the Frith of Forth (11).

(11) From a learned correſpondent.

Dr. Francis Gliſſon, who united with the Doctors Bate and Regemorter, in writing the Treatiſe De Rachitide, ſive Morbo puerili, was the ſecond ſon of Mr. William Gliſſon of Rampiſham in Dorſetſhire. He was educated in Gonville and Caius-college in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he took, in 1620, the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and, in 1624, that of Maſter, and became Fellow of his College. On the 25th of October 1627, he was incorporated Maſter of Arts in the Univerſity of Oxford. Having taken the degree of Doctor in Phyſic in 1634, he was afterwards appointed Regius Profeſſor of Phyſic at Cambridge, in the room of Dr. Ralph Winterton. On the firſt of Auguſt 1634, Dr. Gliſſon was admitted Candidate of the college of Phyſicians in London, and Fellow of it on the laſt day of September in the following year. In 1639 he was choſen Lecturer of Anatomy in that college. During the war between the King and Parliament he practiſed Phyſic at Colcheſter, where he reſided in 1648, when that town was beſieged. He afterwards removed to London. In 1654 he publiſhed, in 8vo, his Anatomia Hepatis: cui præmittuntur quædam ad Rem Anatomicam univerſè ſpectantia: et ad calcem operis ſubjiciuntur nonnulla de Lymphæductibus nuper repertis. This work, which was formed from the Lectures he had read at the College of Phyſicians, contains a more exact deſcription of the liver and its ſeveral veſſels, than had been given by any anatomiſt before: and beſides the diſcovery of the Capſula communis or Vagina Portæ, and an excellent account of Sanguification, acquaints us in what manner, by the continual concoction of the blood, the bile is neceſſarily produced and ſeparated from the blood, with the reaſons of its bitter taſte. In the piece de Lymphæductibus ſubjoined, Dr. Gliſſon gives an admirable account of them, and of the ſuccus nutritius, with the manner of its conveyance; and conjectures about the uſe of the ſpleen and glands. In 1655, he was choſen one of the Elects of the College of Phyſicians, and was afterwards Preſident of that College for ſeveral years. He was one of the earlieſt members of the Royal Society. His Tractatus de Naturæ ſubſtantia energetica, ſeu de Via Vitæ Naturæ ejuſque tribus primis Facultatibus, was printed at London, 1672, in quarto; and his Tractatus de Ventriculo et Inteſtinis at Amſterdam, 167-, in the ſame ſize. Dr. Gliſſon died at a very advanced age, on the 14th of October 1677. Several of his original manuſcripts, which were in Sir Hans Sloane's poſſeſſion, are now in the Britiſh Muſeum (12).] K.

(12) Birch's Hiſt. of the Royal Society, Vol. iii. p. 356, 357.

BATE, in Latin BATUS (JOHN), Prior of the monaſtery of Carmelites at York, in the fifteenth century, was born in Northumberland, and educated at York in the ſtudy of the Liberal Arts; in which he was greatly encouraged by the favour of ſome perſons his patrons, who were at the expence of ſending him to Oxford, to finiſh his ſtudies in that univerſity. Bate abundantly anſwered the hopes conceived of him, and became an eminent Philoſopher and Divine, and particularly remarkable for his ſkill in the Greek tongue. He took the degree of Doctor in Divinity at Oxford, and afterwards diſtinguiſhed himſelf as an author [A]. The Carmelites of York were ſo ſenſible of his merit, that, upon a vacancy, they offered him the government of their houſe; which he accepted, and diſcharged that office with great prudence and ſucceſs (a). He died the 26th of January 1429, in the beginning of the reign of Henry VI. (b) Bale, who cannot refuſe him the character of a learned man, pretends he adulterated the word of God with falſe doctrines, to ſupport the blaſphemies of Antichriſt, and defiled his own writings with the filth of Paganiſm (c).

(a) Leland, Comment. de Script. Brit. c. 705.

(b) Baleus, de Script. Brit. Cent. VII. c. 79.

(c) Ibid.

[A] He diſtinguiſhed himſelf as an author.] His works, as enumerated by Leland, Bale, and Pits, conſiſt of the following Treatiſes. I. On the Conſtruction of the Parts of Speech. II. On Porphyry's Univerſalia. III. On Ariſtotle's Prædicaments. IV. On Porretanus's Six Principles. V. Queſtions concerning the Soul. VI. Of the Aſſumption of the Virgin. VII. An Introduction to the Sentences. VIII. The Praiſe of Divinity. IX. A Compendium of Logic. X. An Addreſs to the Clergy of Oxford. XI. Synodical Conferences. XII. Determinations on ſeveral Queſtions. XIII. A Courſe of Sermons for the whole Year. XIV. A Preface to the Bible. B.

BATECUMBE or BADECOMBE (WILLIAM), an eminent Mathematician (a), is ſuppoſed by Pits (b) to have flouriſhed about the year 1420, in the reign of Henry V. He ſtudied at Oxford (c), where he applied himſelf to Natural Philoſophy in general, but chiefly to the Mathematics, in which he made a very great proficiency, as is evident by his writings in that ſcience [A], which introduced him to the acquaintance and intimacy of the greateſt men of thoſe times (d). It is not known when he died.

(a) Leland, de Script. Brit. n. 509. et Baleus, de Script. Brit. Cent. VII. n. 67.

(b) De Illuſtr. Angl. Scriptor. ann. 1420, n. 784.

(c) Bale, ibid.

(d) Leland, Bale, & Pits, ibid.

[A] His mathematical writings.] He wrote, I. De Sphæræ Concavæ Fabrica et Uſu; i. e. 'Of the 'Formation and Uſe of the Concave Sphere.' This treatiſe Bale ſaw in the library of Dr. Robert Recorde, a learned Phyſician. II. De Sphæra Solida; i. e. 'Of 'the Solid Sphere.' III. De Operatione Aſtrolabii; i. e. 'Of the Uſe of the Aſtrolabe.' IV. Concluſiones Sophiæ; i. e. 'Philoſophical Concluſions (1).' B.

(1) Leland, Bale, & Pits, ubi ſupra.

BATEMAN (WILLIAM), Biſhop of Norwich in the fourteenth century, and founder of Trinity-hall in Cambridge, was born at Norwich; being the ſon of a citizen of good repute in that place (a). He was, from his tendereſt years, of a docile and ingenuous diſpoſition (b). Having therefore made a good proficiency in learning, wherein he ſurpaſſed all his equals (c), he was ſent to the univerſity of Cambridge (d). After having gone through the uſual circle of the ſciences, he applied himſelf to the ſtudy of the Civil Law, in which he took the degree of Doctor, before he was thirty years of age, a thing then uncommon (e). On the 8th of December 1328, he was collated to the Archdeaconry of Norwich (f). Soon after this, he went and ſtudied at Rome, for his farther improvement; and ſo diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his knowledge [A] and exemplary behaviour, that he was promoted by the Pope to the place of Auditor of his Palace. He was likewiſe advanced by him to the Deanery of Lincoln (g); and ſo great an opinion had he of his prudence and capacity, that he ſent him twice as his Nuncio, to endeavour to procure a peace between Edward III., King of England, and the King of France (h). Upon the death of Anthony de Beck, Biſhop of Norwich, the Pope did, by his uſurped proviſional authority, confer that Biſhoprick upon our William Bateman, on the 23d of January 1343, and conſecrated him with his own hands. He was confirmed the 23d of June 1344 (i). Being inveſted with that great dignity, he returned into his native country after many years abſence; and lived in a regular, and withal in a generous and hoſpitable manner (k). Of Pope Clement VI. he obtained for himſelf and ſucceſſors, the firſt-fruits of all vacant Livings within his dioceſe; which occaſioned frequent diſputes between himſelf and his Clergy (l). In the year 1347 (m), he founded Trinity-hall in Cambridge, for the ſtudy of the Civil and Canon Laws [B]; and another Hall dedicated to the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary [C], for the ſtudy of Philoſophy and Divinity (n). Being a perſon

(a) His father's name was William, and his mother's Margaret, Wharton, Anglia Sacra, P. i. p. 803.

(b) De Vita & Morte Rev. admodum Willielmi Batteman, &c. in Peck's Deſiderata Curioſa, Vol. ii. lib. vii. p. 1.

(c) Ibid. p. 2.

(d) Godwin, de Præſulibus, &c. Lond. 1616, 4to, p. 490.

(e) See Peck, ubi ſupra.

(f) Le Neve, Faſti Eccleſ. Anglicanæ, &c. edit. 1716, fol. p. 217.

(g) Ibid. p. 145. and Peck, ubi ſupra.

(b) Peck, ubi ſupra.

(i) Ibid. J. Le Neve, as above, p. 210. Godwin, ubi ſupra.

(k) Vid. Peck & Godwin, ubi ſupra.

(l) Godwin, ubi ſupra. Anglia Sacra, P. i. edit. Lond. 1691, fol. p. 414.

(m) Camden ſays, that it was in 1353. Britannia, in Cambridgeſhire.

(n) Vide Peck, ut ſupra, p. 3. & Godwin, p. 490. & Anglia Sacra, ubi ſupra.

[A] And ſo diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his knowledge.] He was reckoned, at the court of Rome, the moſt eminent Lawyer of his time. In tanta vero juſtitie, equitate, & ſententie, ſoliditate in gradibus illis inflexibilis prepollebat, ut ipſius ſummi Pontificis, ac totius curie, aſſertione, utriuſque Juriſperitorum flos precipuus diceretur (1).

(1) Peck's Deſiderata, &c. ut ſupra, p. 2.

[B] He founded Trinity-Hall in Cambridge, for the ſtudy of the Civil and Canon Laws.] In the place where he built it, there formerly flouriſhed a ſociety of ſtudents, who lived at their own expence. John Crandene, the twenty-ſecond Prior of Ely, purchaſed that houſe with his own money, in the reign of King Edward III., and converted it into an hôtel for the reception of the Monks of Ely, coming thither at their leiſure to improve in learning (2). To theſe beginnings, Richard Ling, Chancellor of the univerſity, Archembald Norwich, Simon Rekenghall, and Walter Elveden, Rector of Smitterton in Norfolk, added four tenements. Likewiſe Robert Stratton, John French, Walter Bakton, Walter Aldeley, and Peter Bittering, gave ſeven parcels of land and two meſſuages, one of which was called Drake's entry. All theſe Biſhop Bateman purchaſed of the aforeſaid Prior and Monks of Ely, giving ſome rectories in exchange for the ſame, and converted them into a Hall, in the year 1347, twenty-firſt of Edward III., which he dedicated to the Holy Trinity. He endowed it with the rectories of Briſton, Kymberley, Brimmingham, Woodalling, Cowling, and Stalling in the dioceſe of Norwich: and deſigned that it ſhould conſiſt of a Maſter, twenty Fellows, and three Scholars; to ſtudy the Canon and Civil law, with an allowance for one Divine. But being prevented by death, he left proviſion only for a Maſter, three Fellows, and as many Scholars. However, by the munificence of ſeveral worthy perſons, it now maintains a Maſter, twelve Fellows, and fourteen Scholars. [Among the twelve Fellows are two Divines for the ſervice of the chapel, who, beſides an equal dividend and privileges with the ten Lay Fellows, enjoy an additional benefaction of 50l. per ann. for reading catechetical lectures in the chapel, in Term time.] The chief benefactors thereto, have been Simon Dalling the third Maſter, who gave two Fellowſhips, and one Scholarſhip; Walter Huke, the eighth Maſter, who gave one Fellowſhip; Robert Goodknape, once a Fellow there, who gave one Fellowſhip; Richard Nix, Biſhop of Norwich, three Fellowſhips and two Scholarſhips; Laurence Maptid, Fellow of the ſame, one Fellowſhip; Gabriel Dun, Canon of St. Paul's cathedral, London, one Scholarſhip; Henry Harvey, the twelfth Maſter, one Scholarſhip; Matthew Parker, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, one Scholarſhip, &c. (3).

(2) Hiſtoria Elienſis, in Anglia Sacra, P. i. p. 650.

[To this liſt of benefactors others may be added. Dr. Eden, who was Maſter of Trinity-Hall in King Charles the Firſt's reign, gave 1000l. with which lands were purchaſed, to maintain wax-candles in the chapel, for an annual commemoration, a Latin ſpeech, and other uſes. Sir Nathaniel Lloyd, who was Maſter in the preſent century, from 1710 to 1735, left 3000l. for rebuilding the Hall, &c.; at the upper end of which there is a beautiful picture of him. Dr. Monſey bequeathed 80l. per ann. for repairing the road towards Hawkſton-Mills, and for placing mile-ſtones on the ſaid road, the execution of which was faithfully attended to by Dr. Warren, Fellow of the College. But the greateſt benefactor has been John Andrews, LL. D. Maſter of the Faculties, and Chancellor of London. This gentleman, who had been Fellow of Trinity-Hall, gave 20,000l. for ſix Fellowſhips, and as many Scholarſhips, and for finiſhing the new buildings. Theſe endowments, which are for the ſtudy of the Civil Law, are appropriated to Merchant-Taylors ſchool. Dr. Andrews, who died at London in 1747, was brought down to Cambridge, and interred in the College-chapel. (*).] K.

(3) J. Caii, Hiſt. Cantebrig. Academiæ, Lond. 1574, 4to, p. 62, 63. and A View of Cambridge, by Ric. Parker, 8vo, Lond. 1721, p. 65, &c.

(*) Carter's Hiſt. of the Univerſity of Cambridge, p. 101. 106, 107.

[C] And another Hall dedicated to the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary.] This is what the writer of his life, publiſhed by Fr. Peck (4), affirms, in the following words: ——— Duas aulas collegiatas in univerſitate Cantebrigienſi, propriis ſumptibus honorifice conſtruxit; unam, quam intitulavit S. Trinitatis, de ſtudentibus in utroque jure; aliam vero Annunciationis B. Marie, de vacantibus theologis & dialectis diſciplinis; quas poſſeſſionibus et proventibus — ditabat; ——— i. e. 'He founded two collegiate halls in the univerſity of Cambridge, at his own expence; one called 'Trinity-Hall, for ſtudents in Law; and the other 'named of the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary, for 'ſtudents in Divinity and Philoſophy, which he en-'riched with poſſeſſions and revenues.' Biſhop Godwin aſſerts the ſame (5), and adds, that he likewiſe adviſed one Gunvile to found the college that bears his name. The author of Biſhop Bateman's life in Anglia Sacra (6), thus expreſſes this fact: ——— Hic etiam duo collegia in univerſitate Cantabrigiæ fundavit, viz. S. Trinitatis & Annunciationis B. Mariæ vocatum Gunwyle-hale; quæ ditavit redditibus & ædificiis —— i. e. 'He alſo founded two colleges in 'the univerſity of Cambridge, viz. Trinity-Hall, 'and that of the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary, 'called Gunvylehale, &c.' Upon comparing theſe ſeveral hiſtorians one with another, and examining

(4) In his Deſiderata Curioſa, ut ſupra.

(5) De Præſulibus, ubi ſupra.

(6) Part i. p. 414.

a perſon of great wiſdom, eloquent, and of a fine addreſs, he was often employed by the King and Parliament in affairs of the higheſt importance; and particularly was at the head of ſeveral embaſſies, ſent on purpoſe to determine the great differences between the Crowns of England and France. In 1354, he was, by order of Parliament, diſpatched to the Court of Rome, with Henry, Duke of Lancaſter, and others; to treat (in the Pope's preſence) of a peace, then in agitation between the two Crowns above mentioned (o). This journey proved fatal to him; for he died at Avignon, where the Pope then reſided, on the 6th of January 1354-5, and was buried with great ſolemnity [D], in the cathedral church of that city (p). With regard to his perſon, we are told that he was of an agreeable countenance; and tall, handſome, and well made. He was, likewiſe, a man of ſtrict juſtice and piety, punctual in the diſcharge of his duty, and of a friendly and compaſſionate diſpoſition (q). But he was a ſtout defender of his rights, and would not ſuffer himſelf to be injured, or impoſed upon, by any one (r) [E]. He gave a cheſt with a hundred pounds to Trinity-hall, to be lent to poor ſcholars (s).

(o) Peck, ubi ſupra. H. de Knyghton, de Eventibus Angliæ, apud Scriptores X. edit. Lond. 1652, col. 2607. Tho. Walſingham, Hiſt. Angl. &c. edit. 1603. p. 170.

(p) Peck, ut ſupra.

(q) Peck, ubi ſupra.

(r) Ibid.

(s) Anglia Sacra, P. i. p. 803. & Fuller's Hiſt. of Cambridge, p. 61.

every circumſtance, the truth ſeems to be this; Gonville-college was dedicated by its founder, Edmund Gonville, to the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary (7); now, as Biſhop Bateman was executor to Gonville, and finiſhed and ſettled what the other had begun; hence viſibly aroſe the miſtake, and to this it was owing, that Biſhop Bateman came to be reputed, and called by ſome, the founder of Gonville-hall, or College. But, upon the ſtricteſt examination, it doth not appear, that he otherwiſe founded a diſtinct Hall of the Annunciation; eſpecially conſidering, how ſlender a foundation his own Hall of Trinity originally was.

(7) Vide Caii Hiſtor. ut ſupra, p. 64.

[D] And was buried with great ſolemnity.] He was attended to his grave by the College of Cardinals, and by the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and all the other great men at the Pope's court. The funeral ſervice was performed by the Patriarch of Jeruſalem (8).

(8) See Peck, as above, p. 3.

[E] And would not ſuffer himſelf to be injured, or impoſed upon, by any one.] Of his reſolution in this point, we have this remarkable inſtance. Robert, Lord Morley, having killed ſome deer in his parks, and miſuſed his ſervants, he made him do public penance for the ſame; that is, he obliged that nobleman to walk, uncovered and barefoot, with a wax-taper of ſix pounds in his hands, through the city of Norwich to the cathedral, and there to aſk his pardon. And all this was done notwithſtanding an expreſs order of the King to the contrary, and though his Majeſty had ſeized the Biſhop's revenues, for his obſtinacy. But the King was ſoon after reconciled to him (9). M.

(9) Anglia Sacra, ut ſupra, p. 415. & Godwin, ubi ſupra.

BATES (William), an eminent Nonconformiſt Divine of the laſt century, was born in November 1625 (a), and, after a ſuitable ſchool education, was ſent to Cambridge, where he was admitted of Emanuel college, from which he removed to King's, in 1644. He commenced Bachelor of Arts in 1647, and applying himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity, became a diſtinguiſhed preacher among the Preſbyterians. In a courſe of time he was appointed Vicar of St. Dunſtan's in the Weſt, London; and joined with ſeveral other Divines in preaching a morning exerciſe at Cripplegate church. At this exerciſe Dr. Tillotſon preached, in September 1661, the firſt ſermon which was ever printed by him (b). Upon the Reſtoration of Charles the Second, Mr. Bates was made one of his Majeſty's Chaplains; and, in the November following, was admitted, together with Mr. Thomas Jacomb and Mr. Robert Wilde, to the degree of Doctor in Divinity in the univerſity of Cambridge, by royal mandate. The King's letter to this purpoſe was dated on the 9th of that month (c). About the ſame time, he was offered the Deanery of Litchfield and Coventry, which he refuſed (d); and it is ſaid that he might afterwards have been raiſed to any Biſhopric in the kingdom, if he would have conformed to the eſtabliſhed Church (e). Dr. Bates was one of the Commiſſioners at the Savoy-conference in 1660, for reviewing the public Liturgy, and was concerned in drawing up the exceptions againſt the Common Prayer (f). He was, likewiſe, choſen on the part of the Preſbyterian Miniſters, together with Dr. Jacomb and Mr. Baxter, to manage the diſpute with Dr. Pearſon, afterwards Biſhop of Cheſter, Dr. Gunning, afterwards Biſhop of Ely, and Dr. Sparrow, afterwards Biſhop of Ely (g). In 1665, he took the oath required of the Nonconformiſts [A] by the act commonly called the Five Mile Act, and which had paſſed in the Parliament held that year at Oxford, on account of the plague's being in London. When, about January 1667-8, a treaty was propoſed by Sir Orlando Bridgman, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, and countenanced by the

(a) Calamy's continuation of the account of the ejected Miniſters, Vol. i. p. 73.

(b) Birch's Life of Tillotſon, p. 19. ad edit.

(c) Biſhop Kennet's Regiſter and Chronicle, p. 308.

(d) Ib. p. 302.

(e) Calamy's account of the ejected Miniſters, Vol. ii. p. 50.

(f) Kennet, ubi ſupra, p. 502.

(g) Ibid. p. 503. 505. 508.

[A] He took the oath required of the Nonconformiſts.] It was to this purpoſe; that they ſhould ſwear, 'that 'it was not lawful, upon any pretence whatever, to 'take arms againſt the King; and that they abhorred 'the traiterous poſition of taking arms, by his autho-'rity, againſt his perſon, or againſt thoſe, that are 'commiſſioned by him, in purſuance of ſuch commiſ-'ſion; and that they would not at any time endeavour 'any alteration in the government, either in Church 'or in State.' Thoſe who refuſed this Oath were to be reſtrained from coming (except upon the Road) within five miles of any city or corporation, or any place which ſent Burgeſſes to Parliament, or where they had been Miniſters, or had preached ſince the Act of Oblivion. The Act, which impoſed this oath, openly accuſed the Nonconformiſt Miniſters of ſeditious doctrines and practices. Hereupon ſome of them ſtudied how to take the oath lawfully; and Dr. Bates conſulted the Lord-Keeper Bridgman, who promiſed to be preſent at the next Seſſions, and openly to declare from the bench, that by Endeavour to change the Government in Church was meant only Unlawful Endeavour; which ſatisfying him, he thereby ſatisfied others; and accordingly twenty of them came in at the Seſſions, and took the oath. Dr. Bates wrote a letter hereupon to Mr. Baxter, repreſenting the caſe, and the reaſons upon which the Miniſters acted; but Mr. Baxter, who gives us this account (1), tells us, that the arguments uſed in the letter ſeemed to him not ſufficient to enervate the force of the objections againſt their taking the oath.

(1) Reliquiæ Baxterianæ, &c. Part iii. p. 2, &c.

Lord-

Lord-Chief-Baron Hale, for a comprehenſion of ſuch of the Diſſenters as could be brought into the communion of the Church, and for a toleration of the reſt, Dr. Bates was one of the Divines who, on the Preſbyterian ſide, were engaged in drawing up a ſcheme of the alterations and conceſſions deſired by that party. He was concerned, likewiſe, in another fruitleſs attempt of the ſame kind, which was made in 1674 (b). Dr. Bates bore a moſt excellent character [B], and was honoured with the eſteem and acquaintance of Lord Keeper Bridgman, Lord Chancellor Finch, and his ſon, the Earl of Nottingham (i). Dr. Tillotſon had ſuch an opinion of our Nonconformiſt's learning and temper, that it became the ground of a friendſhip between them, which continued to the death of that moſt excellent Prelate (k). Dr. Bates uſed his intereſt with the Archbiſhop, in procuring a pardon for Dr. Nathaniel Crew, Biſhop of Durham, who, for his conduct in the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion, had been excepted out of the act of indemnity, which paſſed in 1690 (l). When the Diſſenters preſented their addreſs to King William and Queen Mary, on their acceſſion to the throne, the two ſpeeches to their Majeſties were delivered by Dr. Bates (m). The Doctor was much reſpected by King William the Third; and Queen Mary often entertained herſelf in her cloſet with his writings (n). His reſidence, during the latter part of his life, was at Hackney, where he preached to a reſpectable ſociety of Proteſtant Diſſenters; and at that place he died, on the 14th of July, 1699, in the 74th year of his age (o). He publiſhed the Lives of ſeveral eminent Perſons, in Latin [C]; and after his death, his Works [D], which had been ſeparately printed, were collected into one volume in folio; beſides which a poſthumous piece of his appeared in octavo, containing ſome Sermons on the everlaſting Reſt of the Saints (p). He wrote, likewiſe, in conjunction with Mr. Howe, a Prefatory Epiſtle to Mr. Chaffy's Treatiſe of the Sabbath, upon its being reprinted; and another before Lord Stair's Vindication of the Divine Attributes (q). Dr. Bates is univerſally underſtood to have been the politeſt writer among the Nonconformiſts of the laſt century. It is reported, that when his library came to be diſpoſed of, it was found to contain a great number of romances. It ſhould be remembered that the romances of that period, though abſurd in ſeveral reſpects, had a tendency to invigorate the imagination, and abounded in heroic ſentiments of honour and virtue. B. and K.

(b) Birch, ubi ſupra, p. 42, 43.

(i) Reliquiæ Baxterianæ, Part iii. p. 13.

(k) Life of Tillotſon, ubi ſupra, p. 16, 17.

(l) Ibid. p. 138.

(m) Ibid. p. 156, 157. Calamy's Abridgment, Vol. i. p. 423—425.

(n) Calamy, ubi ſupra, Vol. ii. p. 49, 50.

(o) Palmer's Nonconformiſt's Memorial, Vol. i. p. 103. Calamy, ubi ſupra, p. 51.

(p) Ibid.

(q) Calamy's Continuation, Vol. i. p. 74.

[B] He bore a moſt excellent character.] Mr. Baxter (2) ſtiles him a learned, judicious, and moderate Divine. Mr. John Howe, formerly Fellow of Magdalen-college in Oxford, in his Funeral Sermon for him, has given his character at large. He repreſents him as a man of the moſt graceful appearance and deportment; of ſtrong natural abilities, and extenſive learning; of an admirable memory; a great collector and devourer of books; of the moſt agreeable and uſeful converſation; and remarkable for a peculiar ſpirit of moderation, and zeal for union among Chriſtians (3).

(2) Ib. p. 94.

(3) Vid. Funeral Sermon for that excellent Miniſter of Chriſt, the truly Rev. William Bates, D. D. Lond. 1699.

[C] The Lives of ſeveral Eminent Perſons, in Latin.] They were written by different perſons; and the copies being grown ſcarce and valuable, Dr. Bates collected them into one volume, intitled, Vitæ Selectorum aliquot Virorum, qui doctrina, dignitate, aut pietate inclaruere. London, 1681, 4*to*. The Authors of the Acta Eruditorum (4) have diſtributed theſe Lives into three claſſes. The firſt contains the Lives of Princes, and men of ſuperior rank and quality. Among theſe are, The Funeral Oration upon Henry Prince of Wales, by Francis Neatherſole, Orator of the Univerſity of Cambridge; Optitius's Funeral Oration upon Ulderic, the King of Denmark's ſon; Frederic Spanheim's Funeral Oration upon Frederic Prince of Orange; the Life of John Picus, Prince of Mirandula and Concordia, by John Francis, his ſon, Prince of Mirandula; John Hales's Funeral Oration upon Sir Thomas Bodley; and Gerard Voſſius's Commentary concerning the Life and Actions of Fabian a Dona. To the ſecond claſs are referred the Lives of men eminent in the Church; among which are, Dr. Arthur Duke's Life of Henry Chichley, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; William Budden's Life of William Waynflete, Biſhop of Winchester, and Lord-Chancellor of England; John de la Caſa's Life of Cardinal Bembo, and of Cardinal Gaſpar Contareni; the Life of Jerom Savanarola, by John Picus, Prince of Mirandula; Sir John Cheke and Nicholas Carr's Letters concerning the Death of Martin Bucer; the Life of Bernard Gilpin, by Dr. George Carleton, Biſhop of Cheſter; and the Life of Archbiſhop Uſher, with a Catalogue of his Works. The third claſs contains the Lives of men diſtinguiſhed for their Learning; particularly, the Life of Eraſmus, with a Catalogue of his Works, by Rhenanus; of William Budæus, by Ludovicus Rhegius; of Chriſtopher Longolius; of Vincent Pinnellus, by Gualdus; of Scævola Sammarthanus, by Gabriel Michael Rupimalletus; of Julius Cæſar Scaliger, with an Account of his Writings; Daniel Heinſius's Letter to Iſaac Caſaubon concerning the Death of Joſeph Scaliger; the Life of Hugo Grotius, with an Account of his Writings; the Life of Peter Pithæus; an Elogium upon Janus Gruter, with a Catalogue of his Writings, by Balthaſar Venator; the Life of Julius Cæſar Lagalla, by Leo Allatius; of William Camden, by Degory Wheare; of Anthony Wallæus; of Peter Puteanus, by Rigaltius; of Dionyſius Petavius, by Henry Valeſius; of James Sirmondus, with a Catalogue of his Works, by the ſame author; of Peter Molinæus: and of Henry Valeſius, by his brother Hadrian.

(4) For January, 1682, p. 12.

[This diſtribution of the lives into three claſſes was made by the authors of Acta Eruditorum, and doth not take place in the work itſelf. It was dedicated to the famous Lord William Ruſſel.]

[D] His Works.] They conſiſt of Sermons and Diſcourſes on the moſt important Subjects, ſuch as The Harmony of God's Attributes, The Final Happineſs of Man, the Four laſt Things, &c. With regard to his manner of treating what he undertook, Mr. Howe tells us (5), Biſhop Wilkins's Character of Mr. Baxter might be applied to him, that he cultivated every ſubject he handled, and that, if he had lived in an age of the Fathers, he would have been one. His Panegyriſt particularly celebrates him for the critical exactneſs of his Method, and the inimitable politeneſs and refinement of his Style. B.

(5) Funeral Sermon, &c.

BATHE (Henry de), a learned Knight, an eminent and ſkilful Juſticiary of the thirteenth century (a), was a younger brother of an ancient family of that name, (which we find variouſly written) [A] born, moſt probably at that ancient ſeat of this family

(a) Speed's Hiſt. of Great Britain, p. 610.

[A] A younger brother of an ancient family of that name, which we find variouſly written.] We have three obſervations to make upon this paragraph, viz. 1ſt, The various manners in which we find the name written;

mily, called Bathe-houſe in the county of Devon. Being a younger brother, it is not unnatural to imagine he might, upon that account, apply himſelf to the ſtudy and profeſſion of the laws of his country, in the knowledge of which he grew ſo eminent, that he was advanced by King Henry III. in 1238, to be one of the Juſtices of the Common-Pleas (b); and in 1240, was conſtituted one of the Juſtices Itinerant (as they were then called), for the county of Hartford (c); and in 1248 he was appointed the ſame for Eſſex and Surry; in 1249 for Kent, Berks, Southampton, and Middleſex; and in 1250 for Lincolnſhire; at which time he had allowed him out of the Exchequer, by a peculiar favour, an hundred pounds a year for his ſuſtentation in the diſcharge of his office (d). But the year following he fell from the King's grace and favour; the occaſion of which were certain crimes laid to his charge, which if true [B], he cannot be juſtified; although upon a due examination of the matter we may obſerve ſome circumſtances that will greatly alleviate, if not totally expunge and blot them out [C] (e). He is however reported, unfortunately to have been of a narrow, ſqueezing diſpoſition, which was encouraged by the arts of an extravagant, rapacious wife, proud of her origin, as ſprung from the Baſſets and Sandfords, great men in thoſe days (f), ſo that what through his own natural diſpoſition, and her ſtrenuous encouragement, he, in a very ſhort time accumulated a prodigious eſtate: in one circuit only he is ſaid to have gotten land of inheritance to the value of 200 pounds per annum (g). This charge, viz. That he had not exerciſed his office uprightly, but to his own private gain, having perverted juſtice through bribes, upon an occaſion of a ſuit betwixt him, and one Everard Trumpington, was chiefly ſupported againſt him by one Philip de Arcis, Knt. who alſo added treaſon to that of infidelity in his office. The accuſed was attached in the King's-Court; but one Manſel, who was now become a great favourite at court, offered bail for his appearance: King Henry refuſed this, the caſe, as he alledged, not being bailable, he terming him guilty of high-treaſon (h). Fulk Baſſet however, then Biſhop of London, and a great many of De Bathe's friends interceding, the King at laſt gave orders that he ſhould be bailed, twenty-four Knights becoming ſureties for his appearing and ſtanding to the judgment of the court. But De Bathe ſeems to have been conſcious of his own demerits, or the prepoſſeſſion of his Judges againſt him; for he was no ſooner ſet at liberty, than he wrote to all his relations either by blood or marriage, deſiring that they would apply to the King in his favour, at firſt by fair ſpeeches and preſents, and that if theſe did not prevail, they ſhould appear in a more warlike manner, thereby to intimidate the court (i): this they faithfully and unanimouſly promiſed to do, upon the encouragement given them by a bold Knight, one Nicholas de Sandford. But the King, imagining, that his own power and the intereſt of De Bathe's accuſers infinitely outweighed all the (b) Dugdale's Chron. Series, p. 11.

(c) Matth. Paris, p. 538. n. 30.

(d) Henry de Bath habet C.L. annuatim percip. de Scac. ad ſe ſuſtentandum in officio Juſtiarii. Liberatæ de anno, 34 H. III. 1350, Chron ſeri. p. 15.

(e) Danmonii Orientales Illuſtres, p. 50.

(f) Matth. Paris, p. 811.

(g) Ubi ſupra, & Speed's Hiſt. of Great Britain, p. 616.

(b) Matth. Paris, p. 811. 1250.

(i) Matth. Paris, p. 812. 1250.

written; 2dly, The antiquity of the family; and 3dly, Of his being a younger brother. The name appears among various authors very differently written; as DE BAA, DE BADA, DE BATHON, DE BATHOND, DE BATHONIA, DE BATH, DE BATHE, DE BASH, DE BACH, &c. (1). Which name the family either took from, or left unto an ancient ſeat of that name, called Bathe-Houſe (in the pariſh of North Taunton, in the heart of the county of Devon), the principal place of the family's reſidence, where we find it of ſo long ſtanding, that our author ſays (2) it ran ſo very far back, that he could not trace out and overtake the original; of which he alſo adds, that the honour and reputation of it was not at all diminiſhed by Sir Walter de Bathon, Kt. who was High-Sheriff of Devon 1 Hen. III. 1217, and after that in the ſecond year of the ſame reign, he was again advanced to the ſame honourable office, in which he continued fourteen years together; unto which Sir Walter, adds our author, 'we take 'Sir Henry, of whom we are treating, to be a younger 'brother, being expreſsly ſaid to be a branch of this 'family *.'

(1) See Matth. Paris. Speed's Chron. Riſdon's Deſcript. MS. Mr. Iſaac's Catalogue of Sheriffs, &c. Fuller's Worthies, &c.

(2) Danmonii Orientale Illuſtr. p. 50.

* Danmonii Orient. Illuſtr. p. 50.

[B] Which if true.] There are very good reaſons to imagine that this proſecution was incited and carried on by the intereſt of the court, at the inſtigation perhaps of a few, whom he might poſſibly have injured or diſobliged in the execution of his office, or the envy and malice of others, whom he then excelled in favour and fortune. Nor is it at all to be wondered at that the King himſelf (as we find) ſhould be his chief enemy in this affair, ſince his beggarly circumſtances at this time were ſuch, that Hiſtorians inform us, he, his Queen, the young Prince, and his court, went about upon their own invitation from houſe to houſe, where, beſides their own entertainment, they generally expected large donatives. It was no wonder then if a Prince, thus needy and diſtreſſed, ſhould encourage any proceedings which could favour ſuch a charge (againſt ſo wealthy and envied a ſubject as De Bath was) as might infer treaſon and forfeiture of eſtate. For farther proofs of his innocency ſee the next note.

[C] Although, upon a due examination of the matter, we may obſerve ſome circumſtances that will greatly alleviate, if not totally expunge and blot out his crimes.] Theſe we ſhall endeavour to prove from the following particulars, viz. That ſo great a number of perſons of the firſt quality took his part, powerfully defending him from any intended miſchief to his perſon. Another no inconſiderable circumſtance in behalf of his innocence is, that the King's own brother, Richard Earl of Cornwall, was ſo zealous an interceſſor for him, urging the danger of the time, the diſcontentment of the kingdom, and how the proceeding in ſuch a manner with one of his Council, whom he had uſed in ſo great buſineſs, would diſcourage others to ſerve ſuch a maſter, who upon malicious accuſations ſhould ſo forſake them whoſe places were ever expoſed to envy and detraction (3); concluding his ſpeech with theſe words: We muſt not forſake gentlemen in their right, nor in preſerving the tottering peace of this kingdom (4). The Biſhop of London alſo, and ſeveral others, became mediators in his behalf with the King, which it is not natural to ſuppoſe they would, had he been ſo notorious a criminal.—Another argument of his innocence, or at leaſt of his not being ſo guilty as ſuſpected, may be gathered from hence, that after this ſtorm was blown over, the King took him again into his good grace and favour.——But leſt it may be imagined, that this gentleman's reſtoration to ſo weighty a truſt ſhould be the act of the King's mere arbitrary pleaſure, we are informed it was done by the advice and proviſion of the Lords and great men of his council, as appears from this clauſe in the writ 'Hi omnes (ſpeaking of Sir 'Henry and his aſſociates) per proviſionem magnatum 'Angliæ, qui ſunt de concilio regis ad meliorationem 'ſtatus totius regni, aſſignati erant (5). Theſe all by the 'providing of the great men of the kingdom, who are of 'the King's council, were appointed for the better eſtate 'of this realm.'—That this gentleman ſhould be re-admitted to the diſpenſation of public juſtice is a manifeſt argument that he either was not guilty of the corruption he had been accuſed of, or that thoſe great men who entruſted him in that office were not innocent (6). All theſe arguments together, with note [B], do almoſt amount to a proof he was not guilty, or at leaſt not in ſo heinous a manner as is ſuggeſted in our chronicles.

(3) Daniel's Hiſt. of England, p. 166. 1250.

(4) Speed's Hiſt. of Great Britain, in the reign of Hen. III. p. 610.

(5) Dugd. Chron. Series, p. 19.

(6) Danmonii Orient. Illuſtr. p. 52.

preparations of the others, appeared the more inexorable upon the intimation of theſe proceedings: he rejected all preſents from the friends of the accuſed, and put on an air as if nothing but his puniſhment ſhould ſatisfy his and the nation's juſtice. De Bathe knew well to what all this outward inflexibility tended; but was certain that if Henry perſiſted in his reſolution, he himſelf muſt periſh. He therefore had recourſe to a more prudent meaſure: he applied himſelf to the Biſhop of London, and other his ſpecial friends, and with a great poſſe of theſe goes to Richard Earl of Cornwall (afterwards King of the Romans) (k), whom by prayer and fine promiſes he won over to his intereſt [D]. The King continued deaf to all his remonſtrances, and about the end of February (l) De Bathe was ſummoned and obliged to appear to anſwer what ſhould be laid to his charge. This he accordingly did, but ſtrongly defended by a great retinue of armed Knights, Gentlemen, and others, viz. his own and his wife's friends and relations, among whom was the family of the Baſſets and the Sandfords; a band as undaunted as his perſecutors were violent (m). We may, from what our hiſtorian has delivered upon this occaſion, conclude, that the aſſembly was divided between thoſe who depended upon the King for their poſts and preferments, and thoſe who (though a great majority) were ſo thoroughly exaſperated at the meaſures of the court, that they were reſolved not to find De Bathe guilty (n). It was not long before the King perceived this, and upon that occaſion, he made an unjuſt and impolitic ſtretch of his prerogative, in an unheard-of proclamation [E]. A new charge was now brought againſt De Bathe, and perhaps the chief and only one, at leaſt that had exaſperated King Henry, viz. he was impeached (not only on the former articles, but particularly) for alienating the affections of the Barons from his Majeſty, and creating ſuch a ferment all over the kingdom, that a general ſedition was now on the point of breaking out (o). This ſpeech was enforced from Bathe's Brother-Juſticiary, who declared to the aſſembly, that he knew the accuſed to have diſmiſſed without any cenſure, for the ſake of lucre, a convicted criminal (p). Many other complaints were urged againſt De Bathe, but they ſeem to have been diſregarded by all but the King and his party; who was ſo much exaſperated to ſee De Bathe likely to be acquitted, that he mounted his throne, and with his own mouth made proclamation, That whoſoever ſhould kill Henry de Bathe, ſhould have the royal pardon for him and his heirs [F]; after which ſpeech he flung out of the room in a great paſſion. Many of the Royal party who were exceedingly keen upon this occaſion, would readily have executed the King's terrible doom, and were for diſpatching De Bathe in court: but his friend Manſel, one of the King's Council, and Fulco Baſſet, Biſhop of London, interpoſed ſo effectually, that he was ſaved [G]; and afterwards, by the powerful mediation of his friends (among whom was the Earl of Cornwall, the King's brother, and the Biſhop of London), and the application of a ſum of money, viz. 2000 marks † to the King, he obtained not only a pardon, but all his former places and favour with the King, who re-eſtabliſhed him in the ſame ſeat of judicature, as he was in before, and rather advanced him higher; for he was made Chief-Juſtice of the King's-Bench (q), after about three years diſcontinuance from his office of a Judge, in which honourable poſt he continued for eight years after, till the time of his death, as Dugdale informs us (r): for in the year 1260, we find that he was one of the Juſtices Itinerant for the counties of Huntingdon, Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambridge, which was the year before he died (s). Where his aſhes were laid, or what family or iſſue he left we do not find.

(k) Ypodigma Neuſtriæ per T. de Walſingham, p. 467. 43.

(l) The 13th of the Calends of March. Matth. Paris, Feb. 16. Holinſhed.

(m) Danmonii Orientales Illuſtres, p. 5. Matth. Paris, p. 814.

(n) Hiſtory of England by Guthrie, p. 757.

(o) Matth. Paris, p. 814.

(p) Holinſhed, Speed, Matth. Paris, &c. ut ſupra.

† 1333 l. 6 s. 8 d.

(q) Dugdale, Chron. Scri. Juſtic. ad plac. coram Rege, 1253, 37 Hen. III. Henricus de Bathonia, Pat. 37 Hen. III. m. 5.

(r) Chron. Scrip. p. 19.

(s) Henric de Bathon. Defunctus, an. 45 Hen. III. Chronica Series, p. 19. Holinſhed places his death in 1260.

[D] Whom by prayer and fine promiſes he won over to his intereſt.] The motives which determined the Earl to befriend the accuſed, proves the wretched ſituation of the kingdom at this juncture; for De Bathe ſwore by a ſolemn oath, that if the King ſhould attempt his life, or even the forfeiture of his eſtate, he would raiſe ſuch a diſturbance as ſhould not be in the power of the government to ſuppreſs (7); knowing that the diſaffection of the kingdom, at Henry's partiality to Foreigners, would render this the more practicable. The Earl was conſcious what great cauſes the people had of rebellion, and how ſmall a matter might kindle it. So that partly through fear, and partly, as our Hiſtorian ſays (8), through rich preſents, and the prayers and entreaties of De Bathe and his friends, he at laſt came entirely into the ſentiments of De Bathe's parties, and applied to the King in his favour.

(7) Matth. Paris, p. 812.

(8) Ut ſupra.

[E] Upon that occaſion he made an unjuſt and impolitic ſtretch of his prerogative, in an unheard-of proclamation.] The King was ſo reſolved upon the downfal of De Bath, that he had public proclamation made, that whoſoever had any action or complaint againſt Henry De Bath, ſhould come in, and they ſhould be heard (9). 'A ſtrange encouragement this for envy and malice to 'break in upon and confound the greateſt innocence; 'though we do not find that any one thereupon urged 'any thing againſt him, which is no mean evidence 'that he was not ſo guilty as repreſented (10).' This however was a miſtake of Mr. Prince's; for all the authors that mention this affair take notice, that there were many accuſations againſt him, though none of them were at all regarded; by which we may indeed imagine they were very inconſiderable, or far from being proved upon him.

(9 Daniel's Hiſt. of Engl. p. 160.

(10) Danmonii Illuſtr. p. 50.

[F] That whoſoever ſhould kill Henry De Bathe ſhould have the royal pardon for him and his heirs (11).] Holinſhed (12) varies theſe words a little, viz. If any man will ſlay Henry De Bath, he ſhall not be impeached for his death, for I do here plainly declare him acquit and guiltleſs for the ſame.——Others have it, Whoſoever ſhall kill Henry De Bath ſhall be quit of his death, and I do hereby acquit him.——This is the neareſt the words of Matth. Paris (13), which are, 'Si 'quis Henricum de Bathionâ occidet quietus ſit a 'morte ejus, & quietum eum proteſtor.'

(11) Guthrie's Hiſt. of England, p. 757.

(12) Vol. i. p. 244.

(13) Page 814.

[G] But his friend Manſel, and Fulco Baſſet, Biſhop of London, interpoſed ſo effectually, that he was ſaved.] They aſſuaged their fury with the following words (14): 'Domini mei et amici non eſt neceſſe, quod in ira 'præproperè dicitur, proſequamur, pœnitebit fortè do-'minum noſtrum, jam elapſo iræ tempore hæc intonu-'iſſe: Præterea ſi aliquid violentiæ ipſi Henrico intu-'leritis ecce epiſcopus Londinenſis qui ſpiritualem, et 'alii amici ejus militares, qui vindictam exercebunt 'materialem, &c.' Gentlemen, it is not at all neceſſary that we ſhould put in immediate execution what the King has thus too haſtily commanded, which perhaps, when his paſſion is paſt, he may repent him of: beſides, if any violence or outrage be offered to De Bath, his friends are here ready to aſſiſt and revenge him, ſome by ſtrength of arms, and others by their prayers and good wiſhes, &c.

(14) Matth. Paris, p. 815.

O.

BATHE (William). The family of the Bathes were heretofore of conſiderable conſequence in the counties of Dublin and Meath, and diſperſed into many branches [A]. But what by rebellions, extravagance of heirs, or one misfortune or other, it has been reduced to narrow bounds, inſomuch that not one of them remains now of any rank in their country. The perſon who is now our ſubject was of a citizen's family, though deſcended from Bath of Dullardſton, and was born in Dublin in 1564 (a). We have it by tradition, that he was of a ſullen, ſaturnine temper, and diſturbed in his mind that his family was reduced from its ancient ſplendor. His parents, who were Proteſtants, had a greater regard to the learning of their child, than his religion; and therefore put him in his green years under the tuition of an eminent Popiſh ſchoolmaſter, who thoroughly corrupted his principles, and fitted him for that ſtation of life which he afterwards embraced. He removed to Oxford, where he ſtudied ſeveral years with indefatigable induſtry: but the inquiſitive Anthony Wood (b) could not diſcover in what college or hall he ſojourned, or whether he took any univerſity degree. The ſame writer alledges (c), that growing weary of the hereſy profeſſed in England, (as he uſually called the Proteſtant faith) he quitted the nation and his religion together, and in the year 1596 was initiated among the Jeſuits, being then between thirty and forty years of age; though one (d) of his own order ſays, he was then but twenty-five, which certainly is erroneous. Having ſpent ſome time among the Jeſuits in Flanders, he travelled into Italy, and compleated his ſtudies at Padua; from whence he paſſed into Spain, being appointed to govern the Iriſh ſeminary at Salamanca. He is ſaid (e) to have had a moſt ardent zeal for the gaining of ſouls, and was much eſteemed among the people of his perſuaſion for his extraordinary virtues and good qualities; though he was of a temper not very ſociable. At length, taking a journey to Madrid to tranſact ſome buſineſs of his order, he died there on the 17th of June 1614, and was buried in the Jeſuits convent of that city (f), bearing among his brethren a reputation for learning; which nevertheleſs from the titles of his books, as given in the remark [B], one would not judge to be his talent, but rather that of devotion. D.

(a) Church Regiſter.

(b) Ath. Oxon. Vol. i. p. 394.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Sotvellus, Bibl. Script. Soc. Jeſu ſub Gulielmo Batheo.

(e) Ath. Oxon. ibid.

(f) Bibl. Script. Societ. Jeſu ſub Batheo.

[A] The family of the Bathes were diſperſed into many Branches.] There were ſeven or eight families of conſideration of this name; as, I. Sir Luke Bath, Baronet, who had his eſtate ſeized and ſequeſtered in the Rebellion of 1641, but was reſtored to it by the Act of Explanation of the Act of Settlement (1). —— II. Luke Bath of Athcarne, who was in like manner reſtored for his great ſervices to the King againſt the Pope's Nuncio. — III. Bath of Dromconrath, near Dublin, of which James was Chief-Baron of the Exchequer in the reigns of Philip and Mary, and Queen Elizabeth, and under that name had a grant (2) of the lands of Ballybought near Dublin, parcel of the poſſeſſions of Mary's abbey, made to him, on condition of maintaining a Foot Archer, ſufficiently armed, on his lands of Dromconrath.—IV. Bath of Dullardſtoun, of whom William was active in the Rebellion of Thomas Fitz-Gerald in 1534, and was that year attainted (3) of high-treaſon, and executed. — V. Bath, of Colper in the county of Meath, who furniſhed his quota of men at the general hoſting (4), at the hill of Tarah, on the 29th of September, 1593, equal to many men of rank of that county. — VI. Bath of Rathfeigh, who ſent as many to the ſaid hoſting as the Baron of Skrine.—VII. Bath of Caſhel and Morton. —And VIII. Bath of Laundeſton.

(1) Stat. Ir. 17, 18 Car. II. cap. ii.

(2) Pat. 8 Dec. 3 Eliz.

(3) Irrot. in dorſo Rot. 3 Eliz. in Officio Cancel. Hib.

(4) MS. Jac. Waræi.

[B] One would not judge of his learning by the titles of his books.] Here follows a catalogue of them, as given by Allegambe (5), and Anthony Wood (6). I. An Introduction to the Art of Muſic; wherein are ſet down exact and eaſy rules, with arguments, and their ſolutions, for ſuch as ſeek to know the reaſon of the truth. London, 1584, 4*to*. He wrote this treatiſe while he was a young ſtudent at Oxford, being then very fond of Muſic. — II. Janua Linguarum: Seu modus maximè accommodatus, quo patefit aditus ad omnes linguas intelligendas. Salamanticæ, 1611; i. e. An Entrance into the Languages. — This book was much uſed in Spain for the inſtruction of youth, and was publiſhed under the inſpection of the Jeſuits of Salamanca. — III. A Methodical Inſtitution of the principal Myſteries of the Chriſtian Faith; with a Method annexed for the right exerciſe of General Confeſſion. He publiſhed (7) this tract in Engliſh and Latin, but without his name; however, Allegambe (8) aſcribes it to him.—IV. He wrote alſo in Spaniſh, and publiſhed it under the name of Peter Manrique, A Preparation for the Sacrament of Penance, intitled, Aparejos para adminiſtrar el Sacramento de la Penitentia, con mas facilidad y fruto; en Milan, 1604, 4*to*, rather 1614, as appears at the end of the work.

(5) As before.

(6) As before.

(7) Archdekin's Theologia Tripartita. Venet. 4*to*, p. 401.

(8) Allegambe, as before.

[The whole title of the Treatiſe on Muſic is, 'A 'brief Introduction to the true Art of Muſicke, 'wherein are ſet downe exact and eaſie rules for ſuch 'as ſeeke but to know the trueth, with arguments 'and their ſolutions, for ſuch as ſeeke alſo to know 'the reaſon of the trueth: which rules be meanes 'whereby any by his owne induſtrie may ſhortly, 'eaſily, and regularly attaine to all ſuch thinges as 'to this arte do belong: to which otherwiſe any can 'hardly attaine without tedious difficult practiſe, by 'meanes of the irregular order now uſed in teaching, 'lately ſet forth by William Bathe, Student at Oxen-'ford. Imprinted at London by Abel Jeffes, dwel-'ling in Sermon Lane neere Paule's Chain, anno '1584.' Small oblong quarto, black letter. In this work, which is dedicated by William Bathe to his uncle Gerald Fitzgerald, Earl of Kildare, the author diſplays a good opinion of his own performance. However, he thought proper, ſome years after its firſt publication, to write it over again in ſuch a manner, as ſcarcely to retain a ſingle paragraph of the former edition. This latter edition was printed by Thomas Eſte, without a date, with the title of 'A briefe Introduction to the Skill of Song: con-'cerning the practice; ſet forth by William Bathe, 'Gentleman.' From Sir John Hawkins's account of both theſe productions, and his extracts from them, it doth not appear that they have any great merit. The ſtyle, in particular, is very perplexed and diſagreeable (9).] K.

(9) Hiſt. of Muſic, Vol. iii. p. 356—360.

BATHURST (Ralph), a diſtinguiſhed wit, and a celebrated Latin Poet, was deſcended of an ancient family (a), and was born at Howthorpe, a ſmall hamlet belonging to the pariſh of Theddingworth in Northamptonſhire, near Market-Harborough in Leiceſterſhire, anno 1620 (b). He received the firſt part of his education at the free-ſchool in Coventry

(a) Thoreſby's Leon. Ducat. p. 14 & 607.

(b) Regiſt Trin. Coll. Oxon.

ventry (c), where his father ſeems to have reſided in the latter part of his life [A]. Here our author made ſo quick a progreſs in the claſſics, that at the age of fourteen he was ſent to Oxford, and entered October 10, 1634, in Glouceſter hall, now Worceſter college (d); but was removed thence in a few days to Trinity college in the ſame univerſity (e), and probably placed under the immediate tuition of his grandfather Dr. Kettel, then preſident [B], in whoſe lodging he reſided, and at whoſe table he had his diet, for two years. In this ſituation, his merit concurring, he was elected ſcholar of the houſe, June 5, 1637 (f), and having taken the degree of A. B. January 27th following (g), he was appointed fellow June 4, 1640 (h). He commenced A. M. April 17, 1641 (i), and on March 2, 1641, conformably to the ſtatutes of his college, he was ordained prieſt (k) by Robert Skinner Biſhop of Oxford [C], and read ſome theological lectures in the college hall in 1649. Theſe, which he called Diatribæ theologicæ, philoſophicæ, & philologicæ, are ſaid to diſcover a ſpirit of theological reſearches, and an extenſive knowledge of the writings of the moſt learned Divines (l). He likewiſe kept his exerciſe for the degree of B. D. but did not take it. The confuſion of the times promiſing little ſupport or encouragement to the miniſterial function, he reſolved to follow the example of his friend the famous Dr. Willis (m) changed his propoſed plan, applied himſelf to the ſtudy of Phyſic, and entering upon that line agreeably to the ſtatutes of the univerſity, he performed his exerciſe, and proceeded to accumulate the degrees in that faculty [D], June 21, 1654 (n). Before this time he had ſufficiently recommended himſelf as a perſon of competent ſkill in his new profeſſion (o); and he had not been long engaged in it, when he was employed in the ſervice of the ſtate, in the quality of phyſician to the ſick and wounded of the navy, which office he executed with equal diligence and dexterity, to the full ſatisfaction both of the ſea-commanders, and the commiſſioners of the admiralty. We find him ſoon after ſettled at Oxford, and practiſing phyſic in concert with his friend Dr. Willis [E], with whom he regularly attended Abingdon market every Monday (p). To the ſtudy and (c) Three of his ſchool proved perſons of note: Holyoake, author of a learned dictionary; Dr. Hen. Clark preſident of Magdal. coll. and fellow of the college of phyſicians; and Dr. Alleſtree, canon of Chriſtch. and provoſt of Eaton college. E cod. A. Wood MSS. in Muſ. Aſhmol. Dict. qu. ſub tit. School notes.

(d) Regiſt. Mat. Univ. Oxon. He was entered Plebeii filius.

(e) Ibid. in a note.

(f) Regiſt. Coll. Trin.

(g) Idem.

(h) Idem.

(i) Regiſt. Univ. Oxon.

(k) His deacon's orders do not appear.

(l) Warton's life of Dr. Bathurſt, p. 34.

(m) See his article in this work.

(n) Wood's Faſti Oxon. Vol. ii. col. 106.

(o) In the firſt lecture for his degrees, De Reſpiratione, he brings an example from this department. See Warton in Bathurſt's literary remains, p. 152.

(p) Warton, p. 39.

[A] His father ſettled at Coventry, &c.] His mother was Elizabeth Villiers, daughter and coheir of Edward Villiers, Eſq; of the ſame place. They had iſſue thirteen ſons (1), and four daughters. Six of the ſons loſt their lives in the ſervice of King Charles I. during the grand rebellion: the reſt, beſides one who died young, were Ralph (of whom we now treat) Villiers, Edward, Moſes, Henry, and Benjamin, father of the late Earl Bathurſt, who was grandſon and heir of Edward Villiers, Eſq; whoſe grandfather died ſeized of the manor of Howthorpe, &c. 26 June, 5 Hen. VIII. and was fifth ſon of Sir John Villiers, of Brookeſby, Knt. grandfather of Sir George Villiers, father of George Duke of Buckingham. George Bathurſt, who was the youngeſt ſon of Lancelot of Franks in Kent, had with his wife the manor of Howthorpe, where he ſettled (2). He died 1656, aged ſeventy-ſeven. He was buried with his wife in the church of Howthorpe, where there is a monument erected to their memory.

(1) Collins mentionsonlytwelve, leaving out Edward, who ſurvived the rebellion. Life of Dr. Bathurſt, p. 30.

(2) Collins's Peerage, Vol. iv. p. 289. edit. 2d, 1741.

[B] Dr. Kettel the Preſident.] This gentleman had formerly married our author's grandmother Villiers, relict of Edward Villiers, Eſq; and his father George Bathurſt had been educated in the ſame college, where he married in 1610 Elizabeth Villiers above mentioned, then living with her mother and younger ſiſter in the Preſident's lodgings. George, at the time of his marriage, was worth 300 l. a year, and all his children were very ingenious and proſperous in the world, and moſt of them handſome (3). Two of Ralph's brothers likewiſe, at the time of his admiſſion there, were members of that foundation. One was George, elected ſcholar June 6, 1626, fellow of the houſe June 8, 1634, an elegant ſcholar, and author of an oration ſpoken at the burial of George Allen, fellow of Trinity college, the famous mathematician and antiquary. He was created B. D. July 7, 1640, and died 1644, of a wound in his thigh, received in defending the garriſon of Farringdon in Berks againſt the rebels. The other was Edward, a ſcholar of the ſame houſe, his father's ſecond ſon. He died Nov. 1668, ætat. 54. being then Rector of Cheping Warden in Northamptonſhire, where there is a monument to his memory by his ſiſter and heir Judith, and a Latin inſcription, probably written by his brother Ralph. He was a perſon of ſingular learning and probity (4). He was nominated with Seth Ward as a candidate for the Preſidentſhip in 1659 (5), and conſigned by his will, dated 1667, certain lands in Northamptonſhire to his college for charitable uſes, after the death of his ſiſter Judith, He likewiſe erected, at his own expence, the ſtatue of the founder of the ſaid college over the entrance into the hall in 1665. It appears that our author Ralph reſided in the lodgings, and took his diet at the table of Dr. Kettel for about two years before his election into the foundation (6).

(3) Aubrey, MSS. lives in Muſ. Aſhmol. part i. No. 10. fol. p. 36. Cod. Aſhmol.

(4) He aſſiſted Wood in his account of Arthur Wilſon, who had been a fellow collegian with him about 1631. See Wood's article.

(5) Warton, p. 35. note (‡), from the college regiſter.

(6) Idem, p. 34. from papers communicated by the reverend Mr. Pryce, Prebend of Wells.

[C] Ordained prieſt by Biſhop Skinner.] Divinity was the profeſſion to which he originally dedicated his life. Accordingly he performed the exerciſe for the degree of B. D. but did not take it, 'when, Dr. Duppa 'obſerves (7), that degree was not only diſuſed by 'moſt men, but generally abuſed; and the wearers 'of that holy badge contemned by the bad men in 'thoſe worſt of times, and rather kicked back, than 'ſet forward to any preferments.'

(7) Duppa's letter to the college, dated May 2, 1661. See Coll. regiſter.

[D] He accumulated his degrees in Phyſic.] However, while engaged in this profeſſion, he did not entirely diſclaim his clerical character. When Dr. Skinner, Biſhop of Oxford, was deprived during the uſurpation, the parliament allowed him the revenues of his rectory of Launton near Burceſter in Oxfordſhire for the ſupport of himſelf and his family. Being releaſed upon bail from the Tower of London, to which he had been committed, as one of the twelve proteſting Biſhops, he retired to his living, and, when occaſion offered, privately ordained ſuch ſtudents of Oxford as deſired epiſcopal ordination. On this buſineſs, in which it was dangerous to be concerned, Bathurſt frequently and readily aſſiſted his friend the Biſhop. He was now in prieſt's orders, and whenever any candidate ſolicited to be ordained, he privately applied to Bathurſt, who examined him, and appointed a day for meeting him at the Biſhop's houſe; at which time, under pretence of viſiting patients, he attended the ſolemnity at Launton, in which he officiated as Archdeacon. This ſervice he executed with the utmoſt fidelity and punctuality till the Reſtoration (8). The ceremony was ſometimes performed in the chapel of Trinity college (9). Skinner, who had been tutor to Chillingworth at Trinity college, was ſuppoſed to be the only Biſhop who conferred holy orders during the ſuppreſſion of the church and hierarchy; of whom it is likewiſe recorded, that immediately after the Reſtoration, he ordained one hundred and three perſons at once in Weſtminſter Abbey (10).

(8) Warton, p. 36, 37.

(9) Wood's Athen. Oxon. Vol. ii. edit. 2. col. 906.

(10) Idem, col. 1158.

[E] He joined Dr. Willis.] The friendſhip and eſteem with which Bathurſt regarded Willis, appears by the two mandates of imprimatur, which, when Vice-chancellor, he prefixed to the two parts of Willis's Pharmaceutice Rationalis; nor was Willis wanting in public teſtimonies of reciprocal regard to Bathurſt, to whom his diſſertation De urinis is addreſſed, as being the reſult of ſeveral converſations with him on that ſubject, undertaken by his advice, and publiſhed at his requeſt (11). Willis's Anatomy of the Brain was

(11) Preface to that diſſertation, p. 332. Lond. 1677, 12*mo.* and the laſt paragraph of the diſſertation itſelf.

and practice he joined every branch of philoſophical knowledge: he attended the lectures of Peter Sthael, a Chymiſt and Roſicrucian [F], who had been invited to Oxford by Mr. R. Boyle, and was afterwards Operator to the Royal Society about 1662 (q). About the ſame time he had alſo a ſhare in forming the rudiments of that Society (r); and when it was eſtabliſhed, he was elected Fellow, and admitted Auguſt 19, 1663 [G]. While this Society was at Greſham college in London, a branch of it was continued at Oxford, and the original Society books of this Oxford department are ſtill preſerved there in the Aſhmolean Muſæum (s), where their aſſemblies were held. Their latter Oxford meetings were ſubject to regulations made among themſelves; according to which Dr. Bathurſt was elected Preſident April 23d, 1688, having been before nominated one of the members for drawing up articles, February 29, 1683-4 [H]. Hitherto we have viewed our author in the light of a Phyſician and Philoſopher: but in the mean time he ſeems to have been chiefly diſtinguiſhed as a claſſical ſcholar. At the univerſity acts, in the collections of Oxford verſes, and on every public occaſion, when the ingenious were invited to a rival diſplay of their abilities, he appears to have been the moſt principal and popular performer. Upon the publication of Hobbes's Treatiſe of Human Nature, &c, 1650, Bathurſt prefixed a recommendatory copy of Latin Iambics, written with ſo much ſtrength of thought, and elegance of expreſſion, that they moſt deſervedly and univerſally eſtabliſhed his character as a maſter of Latin poetry (t); and what was better, recommended him to the notice of the Duke of Devonſhire, the eldeſt ſon of Hobbes's patron (u), by whoſe intereſt he afterwards obtained the Deanery of Wells. He had thought fit, by a temporary compliance, to retain his Fellowſhip at Oxford, under the conditions of the parliamentary viſitation in 1648 (v). This ſtep was manifeſtly prompted by prudential motives: and upon the like principles, after the death of Oliver, whoſe power died with him, our Doctor procured a majority of the Fellows of his college, in 1659, to elect Dr. Seth Ward Preſident [I], who was abſolutely diſqualified for it by the college-ſtatutes (w). After the Reſtoration, he reaſſumed the character of a Clergyman, and returned to his theological ſtudies. But his long attachment to Philoſophical purſuits, ſeems to have alienated his mind from Divinity, or at leaſt to have extinguiſhed all hope and ambition of ſucceeding in a ſtudy, which he had ſo long neglected: however, he entirely relinquiſhed his profeſſion of Phyſic, and was made King's Chaplain in 1663 (x). He was choſen Preſident of his college September 10, 1664, and the ſame year he was married, December 31, to Mary the widow of Dr. John Palmer, Warden of All Souls college, a woman of admirable accompliſhments (y). June 28, 1670, he was inſtalled Dean of Wells, procured, as before mentioned, by the intereſt of the Duke of Devonſhire. In April 1691, he was nominated by King William and Queen Mary, through the intereſt of Lord Somers, to the Biſhopric of Briſtol, with licence to keep his Deanery and Headſhip in commendam [K]. But he declined the acceptance of that valuable offer (z), from a perſuaſion that ſuch a preferment might too much detach him from his (q) Wood's Diary, by Hearne, p. 559.

(r) See Dr. Wallis's article.

(s) Muſ. Aſhmol. MSS. 600 V. p. 23, 24.

(t) They are in his literary remains, publiſhed by Warton, p. 255, 256.

(u) William Cavendiſh, the firſt Duke of Devonſhire, the eldeſt ſon of Hobbes's patron William Cavendiſh, third Earl of Devonſhire.

(v) Several others, not out of diſloyalty, did the ſame thing. See Howel's and Langbain's articles.

(w) This was the more extraordinary, as our Doctor's own brother Edward was nominated a candidate together with Ward. See remark [B], and Athen. Oxon. Vol. ii. col. 827.

(x) He ſeems to have owed this to Seth Ward, by whoſe advice he reſumed his clerical profeſſion. Letter of his to Ward. Warton, p. 54. & ſeq.

(z) Wood, ubi ſupra, ſays, he declined the biſhopric that he might be a benefactor to the college, and his church of Wells, to which laſt he gave 100l. in his life-time, and 100l. more by his will. Warton, p. 197.

(y) By this marriage he became poſſeſſed of an eſtate at Bampton Oxon. Id. part from the Doctor's will.

was alſo ſubmitted to his inſpection and judgment. That elegance and purity, ſo celebrated in Willis's Latin diction, were greatly owing to the friendly aſſiſtance of Dr. Bathurſt, in whoſe hand writing there have been ſeen frequent corrections, and even large interlineations in the manuſcript copies of Willis's Works, particularly of the Pharmaceutice Rationalis. While he continued a regular practitioner in Phyſic, moſt of his motions ſeem to have been regulated, and his deſigns directed by Dr. Willis. It appears that Bathurſt had been ſolicited by Aubrey to attend him on his travels, which, however agreeable or advantageous, was declined by Bathurſt, who alledged, that he could not leave his friend Willis, with whom he was ſo cloſely connected, and who was not likely to engage in the party (12). About 1651, we find him concerned with Dr. Willis, Petty, and others, in the recovery of Anne Green (13), and he prefixed a copy of verſes to the pamphlet, called News from the Dead: but that piece is attributed to our author by Denham through miſtake. It was written by one Richard Watkins, a ſtudent of Chriſtchurch, afterwards Vicar of Ambroſden near Oxford, &c. (14)

(12) Warton, p. 41. from a collection of original letters, MSS. Muſ. Aſhmol. No. 15. fol. in Aſhmole's ſtudy, Vol. i.

(13) See Sir W. Petty's article.

(14) Ath. Oxon. Vol. ii. col. 59.

[F] He attended the lectures of Peter Sthael.] Mr. Wood's remark upon Locke's behaviour at theſe lectures will be mentioned in that antiquary's article. Nor was it diſconſonant to that Philoſopher's manner on ſuch occaſions; who, though remarkably cautious and reſerved upon the ſubject of ſtate affairs, was, in reſpect of arts and ſciences, as remarkably inquiſitive, and ſufficiently converſable and communicative (15).

(15) See his article in remark [CC], and that of Dr. Pococke in remark [QQ].

[G] Elected a member of the Royal Society.] His name does not appear in the catalogue of propoſed members made Nov. 28, 1660. But Feb. 6, 1660-1 (16), the members were directed to enquire whether Dr. Bathurſt, with many others, deſired to be of the ſociety (17). This was before the royal charter was granted, July 15, 1662. He was appointed, March 30, 1664, one of the committee for improving and conſidering all mechanical inventions; and again, on the ſame day, for collecting all the phænomena of nature hitherto obſerved (18). Nov. 16, 1674, he communicated a relation of an extraordinary bleeding of a little child (19), and his name occurs in the letter book of the ſociety concerning an extraordinary caſe of fits, Oct. 11, 1685 (20).

(16) Birch's Hiſt. of the Royal Society, Vol. i. p. 4. 13.

(17) Ibid. p. 15.

(18) Ibid. p. 406, 407.

(19) Phil. Tranſ. No. 109. p. 193.

(20) Id. Vol. iv. p. 424.

[H] He was nominated a member for drawing articles for the Oxford department.] This ſeparate committee held at Oxford has not, I believe, been diſtinctly or circumſtantially mentioned in the accounts of the Royal Society (21), of which it was an appendage. Dr. Bathurſt's engagements at Oxford about this time prevented his attendance on the grand meetings at Greſham college, for the ſupport and advancement of which, however, he generouſly contributed ſeveral ſums of money at different times, and 10l. at his death (22).

(21) See Birch, ubi ſupra, Vol. ii. p. 180.

(22) See the articles of his will, by Warton, p. 195.

[I] He procured the election of Seth Ward, &c.] When Ward's predeceſſor, W. Hawes, was elected in 1658, the Biſhop of Wincheſter's power being abrogated, it was thought expedient to order his election by a mandate from the protector. But Seth Ward, as appears by the college regiſter, was elected by Dr. Bathurſt and his friends, in open contempt and defiance of the uſurping powers (23).

(23) Warton, p. 53.

[K] Nominated to the ſee of Briſtol in April 1691.] This date is adopted from Wood, ubi ſupra, but it could not be ſo early; for that ſee became vacant by Ironſide's tranſlation to Hereford, which was on the death of Croft, May 18, 1691 (24).

(24) Godwin de præſulib. p. 497. edit. by Richardſon, who ſays, p. 567. the biſhopric was offered him by King James II.

college, and consequently prevent or interrupt the completion of those improvements in its buildings, which he had already begun. An account of them is inserted below [L]. Had Dr. Bathurst exerted his activity and interest alone for the service of his society, he might have fairly claimed the title of an ample benefactor; but his private liberality concurred with those public applications he made for completing his design. He expended near 3000*l.* of his own money upon it; to which we must add, besides gratuities hereafter mentioned, that he purchased for the use of the fellows, the perpetual advowson of the rectory of Addington upon Otmere near Oxford, with the sum of 400*l.* A. D. 1700. Nor was he less serviceable to its advantage and honour in other respects. His discipline and his example, his vigilance as a governor, and his eminence as a scholar, actually contributed to raise its reputation to an extraordinary height, and filled it with students of the first rank and family. He is said to have constantly frequented early prayers in the chapel, then at five in the morning, till his eighty-second year. He punctually attended the public exercises of the college, inspected the private studies, relieved the wants, and rewarded the merit of his scholars. In the mean time he was a man of the world, and his lodgings were perpetually crowded with visitants of the first distinction. October 3, 1673, he was appointed vice-chancellor of the university, and continued for the two following years, the Duke of Ormond being chancellor (aa). During the execution of this office, he reformed many pernicious abuses, introduced several necessary regulations, defended the privileges of the university with becoming spirit, and to the care of the magistrate added the generosity of the benefactor. He established the present practice of obliging the bachelors of arts to stipulate for their determination: he endeavoured, at the command of the King, to introduce a more graceful and oratorial manner of delivering the public sermons at St. Mary's (bb) [M]: he procured an addition of 20*l.* per annum to the places of each of the inferior beadles: he restored the practice of the vice-chancellor's court, and added several other improvements in the academical œconomy. As Dr. Bathurst was intimately acquainted with the most eminent literary characters of his age, so few remarkable productions in literature were undertaken or published without his encouragement and advice [N]. Besides those mentioned below, Dr. Sprat was one of his chief admirers. Dr. South, Dr. Busby, Dr. Allestree, Creech the translator, Sir George Ent, a celebrated physician, and defender of the Harveyan system, with others, were of his common acquaintance. Such were his friends: in the mean time he had his enemies, who have hinted that he was unsettled in his religious principles. This insinuation most probably arose from his Iambics prefixed to Hobbes's book, which are a mere sport of genius, written without the least connection with Hobbes [O], and contain no defence or

(aa) Wood's Fasti for those years.

(bb) See his programma, in his literary remains at the end of his life, by Warton, p. 107, & seq.

[L] His improvements in the college buildings.] The next year after his promotion to the Presidentship, viz. anno 1665, he undertook the foundation of the north side of the new quadrangle in the Fellows garden, laying the first stone himself. The building was begun at the expence of the college (25), but carried on by contributions collected by him from various benefactors; the first of which was Archbishop Sheldon, formerly a member of the college (26). The architect was Sir Christopher Wren, and the edifice was finished about 1668. The west side of the same court, undertaken and conducted in the same manner, was completed in 1682. The building near the east end of the chapel being intended as an enlargement of the President's lodgings, was raised entirely at Dr. Bathurst's own expence, viz. 430*l.* in 1687. The lodgings themselves he had before considerably repaired and adorned, at the expence of 150*l.* (27) The chapel, with its tower, &c. was begun, himself laying the first stone, July 9, 1691. He had before, in 1682, given 200*l.* with a view to this noble design. The shell was completed at his own expence, to the amount of near 2000*l.* (28) The furniture and decorations of the inside were defrayed from large collections, which he had solicited, with his usual address and activity, from many persons of the first rank, Lord Shaftesbury, Craven, and Somers; the Bishops of Chester, Wincheſter, &c. The architect was probably his friend Dean Aldrich (29). But the original plan received some improvements from Sir Christopher Wren. It was finished in three years, and consecrated by Bishop Fell, April 12, 1694 (30). Mr. Warton had been informed that this chapel was professedly built in imitation of the Duke of Devonshire's at Chatsworth.

In these improvements of the buildings of a particular college, it is observable that Dr. Bathurst became by example a general benefactor, being the first who introduced the just and genuine proportions of Grecian architecture into the university, which have ever since been so successfully followed. The venerable beauties of Gothic magnificence prevailed, till his new court at Trinity college appeared: particularly, the splendid decorations and exquisite finishings of modern art were absolutely unknown in Oxford, till the first effort of these elegancies was exhibited in the chapel of his college, in a stile of which other specimens are not now uncommon. It was reserved for the taste, the genius, and the spirit of Dr. Bathurst to work the reformation; and in this respect he reminds us of a King of Athens, mentioned, I think, by Plutarch, who first placed the statues of the graces in an ancient temple of Minerva (31).

[M] St. Mary's church.] To this church, which still retained many marks of fanatic barbarism, he freely gave the sum of 300*l.* towards paving the choir, which was reduced to a heap of rubbish, with marble, and for erecting the organ, with its gallery, the seats and pews in the body of the church, together with the galleries on the west (32). He likewise asserted the right of the university to one copy of every book from the company of Stationers at London (33); in which he was assisted by Dr. Wallis, the Custos Archivorum. He also asserted the privilege of the university in regard to granting wine licences (34).

[N] Books undertaken or published by his encouragement.] Besides some instances of this already mentioned, Wood acquaints us, that Dr. Bathurst procured him an admission into the tower of the schools, to the end he might advance his esurient genius in antiquities (35). He wrote a letter to Dr. Langbain, to encourage the publication of Dugdale's Monasticon (36). He promoted the design (though without success) of publishing Aubrey's Monumenta Britannica (37). He was a singular patron and promoter of Dr. Plot's Natural History of Oxfordshire and Staffordshire (38). He was instrumental in advancing Dr. Derham to the Notice of Seth Ward, &c. (39), and in reclaiming S. Parker from the ridiculous severities of puritanism (40).

[O] He had no connection with Hobbes.] The verses before-

(25) Wood's English MS. Hist. and Antiq. of the Univerſity of Oxf. in Trin. college.

(26) Register of Trinity college. See also his article.

(27) Register of the college.

(28) Warton, from Mr. Payne of Wells.

(29) The building is intirely in the style of the parish church of All-saints in Oxford, designed by Dr. Aldrich, and esteemed a finished specimen of his knowledge and skill in architecture.

(30) Warton, p. 72.

(31) Id. p. 87, 88.

(32) See a poem on this subject, intituled, Templum Academicum instauratum. Mus. Angl. Vol. iii. Oxon. 1717. p. 159. & ibid. p. 161.

(33) See his speeches at his entrance upon his discharge from the vice-chancellorship, in his literary remains, ubi supra.

(34) Ibid.

(35) Wood's diar. ut supra, sub anno 1660, p. 532.

(36) Preface to Tanner's Notitia monastica, 1st edit.

(37) Gibson's edition of Camden's Britannia.

(38) Oxfordshire, p. 131. edit. 1755. Staffordshire, p. 380.

(39) Biog. Brit. art. Derham.

(40) Ib. art. Parker.

or illuſtration of his pernicious doctrine. Several paſſages of his life, mentioned in the courſe of this memoir, ſhew this charge to be a groundleſs calumny; and in the preamble to his will, he formally declares himſelf a true and dutiful ſon of the Church of England, and deſires to live and die in an obedience to that religion, which is ſo happily by law eſtabliſhed. And the ſincere and laſting intimacies he maintained with Skinner, Fell, South, Alleſtree, Aldrich, and ſeveral others, are alone an obvious and unanſwerable refutation of this unfavourable imputation. At length our author, having conſtantly enjoyed a perfect ſtate of health, and being unviſited at the laſt with the ſevere diſeaſes of old age, died in his eighty-fourth year, June 14, 1704. He had been blind for ſome time; and his death was occaſioned by the accident of breaking his thigh, while he was walking in the garden, which, on the failure of his eyes, became his favourite and only amuſement. Under this malady he languiſhed for ſeveral days in acute agonies. It is ſaid that at firſt, and for ſome time, he refuſed to ſubmit to the operations of the ſurgeon, declaring in his tortures, that there was no marrow in the bones of an old man. He had loſt his memory a year or two before his death. He was interred on the ſouth ſide of the anti-chapel of Trinity college chapel without the leaſt appearance of pomp and extravagance, according to his own appointment. He left legacies, in his will to his friends, ſervants, and the college, to the amount of near 1000 l. [P]. As to his character, it is obſerved that his temperance in eating and drinking, particularly the latter, was ſingular and exemplary. Amidſt his love of the polite arts, he had a ſtrong averſion to muſic, and diſcountenanced and deſpiſed the ſtudy of all external accompliſhments, as incompatible with the academical character. His behaviour in general was inoffenſive and obliging. The caſt of his converſation was rather ſatirical, but mixed with mirth and pleaſantry. He was remarkably fond of young company, and indefatigable in his encouragement of a riſing genius [Q]. John Philips was one of his chief favourites, whoſe Splendid Shilling was a piece of ſolemn ridicule, perfectly ſuited to his taſte, and which gave him infinite pleaſure. Old men are apt to fall into peculiar capricious humours [R]: he before-mentioned, upon Mr. Hobbes's Human Nature, were written, ſays Mr. Wood, in Athen. vol. ii. p. 20. at the deſire of one Bowman, a ſtationer of Oxon, as I have heard the Doctor ſay. The Doctor had then no acquaintance with Hobbes. I have, ſays Mr. Warton, before me, a letter of Bathurſt to Hobbes, dated May 27, 1651, by which it appears that Hobbes ſent him two copies of his Leviathan, in acknowledgment for the Iambics. Among other things, he tells Hobbes—I hope your learned book of optics, and that other De corpore, if it be yet finiſhed, may no longer lie concealed, eſpecially ſince now the beſt wits, as well here as in other countries, are ſo greedy to liſten after works of that nature, and to vindicate themſelves from the chimerical doctrines of the ſchools; under which (to the bane of true knowledge), they have for theſe many hundred years ſo miſerably laboured. And thus much I am the rather bold to ſuggeſt to you, becauſe, if by your other works already publiſhed, you have gained ſo high an eſteem, how much more ſhall thoſe be received with honour, in whoſe argument no man's Diana will be brought into queſtion (41)? In behalf of Dr. Bathurſt it is obſerved, that the orthodox clergy of thoſe times judged more favourably of this and the preceding work of Hobbes, than we do at preſent. At the publication of this piece, they perceived the aim of Hobbes's philoſophy as perfectly as they ever could, yet they did not apprehend that its principles tended to impiety, which Hobbes always profeſſedly diſavowed. His books, they conceived, inculcated the doctrine of ſubjecting the eccleſiaſtical to the civil power, in point of order and diſcipline; that religion ſhould diſpoſe men to mutual love, and not be proſtituted to the purpoſes of ſedition, as it had been for many years paſt. This doctrine, while the ſectaries continued triumphant, and could alone be affected by it, was thought innocent enough, and its author a very wiſe man (42).

(41) Warton, p. 49 in a note.

(42) Id. p. 51, 52. Alſo Hobbes's article in this work, Vol. iv. remark [E].

[P] His legacies, &c. amounted to 1000 l.] It is not known what was the Doctor's eſtate, beſides his preferments. The following extract from Mr. Thoreſby's Ducat. Leod. may throw ſome light on this particular. After a pedigree of the Bathurſt's family, I ſhall here, ſays that author, add a note I find at the end of the manuſcript (43), whence I extracted this pedigree; that John the Alderman, Sir Edward the Baronet, Sir Edward the Knight, Moſes, Benjamin, Dean RALPH, Theodore and Charles, had an eſtate of 9000 l. per annum, and each their coaches at the ſame time (44).

(43) A parchment penes Ch. Bathurſt, Eſq;

(44) Thoreſby, p. 14.

[Q] He was fond of young company.] The late Earl Bathurſt, who was entered in Trinity college at fifteen, when his uncle the Doctor was upwards of eighty, remembered that he had been often charmed with his converſation; that no man ever poſſeſſed a greater ſhare of chearful, engaging, and unaffected wit; that although he maintained the moſt exact diſcipline in his college, his method of correction chiefly conſiſted in turning the faults of the delinquent ſcholars into ridicule, in which expedient he always effectually ſucceeded; and that all the young ſtudents admired and loved him (45).

(45) Id. from the information of Lord Bathurſt, p. 199, 200.

[R] Old men are apt to fall into capricious humours, &c.] The inſtance given above of this caprice had its uſe. But there is another inſtance aſcribed to his zeal for his college, and imputed to the dotage of old age, as the beſt apologies for the caprice. Baliol college had ſuffered ſo much in the outrages of the grand rebellion, that it remained for the moſt part in a ſtate of deſolation for ſome years after King Charles's return. Dr. Bathurſt was perhaps ſecretly pleaſed to ſee a neighbouring and once a rival ſociety reduced to this condition, while his own flouriſhed beyond all others. One afternoon he was found in his garden, which then ran almoſt contiguous to the eaſt ſide of Baliol college, throwing ſtones at the windows with much ſatisfaction, as if happy to contribute his ſhare in completing the appearance of its ruin (46).

(46) Warton, p. 203.

[Though Dr. Bathurſt and Mr. Anthony Wood ſeem, in general, to have been upon good terms, and Wood hath ſeveral times ſpoken of the Doctor with reſpect, yet at other times he uſes a different language. In one place, he ſays, 'Upon the deſire of 'Dr. Bathurſt, Preſident of Trinity College, A. W. 'did communicate to him part of the hiſtory and 'antiquities of the Univerſity of Oxon; but he be-'ing a moſt falſe perſon, did ſhew ſeveral parts of it 'to other perſons, particularly to Anth. Etterick, 'ſometime a Commoner of Trin. Coll. who acci-'dentally came to give him a viſit, who finding 'a paſſage therein, which reflected, as he thought, 'on the credit of Dr. John Bidgood, a phyſician of 'the city of Exeter, he did forthwith acquaint him 'by letters. Et hinc Lachrymæ, &c. Several com-'plaining letters he ſent to Dr. Bathurſt, to have that 'paſſage expurged (expunged), wherein the author 'was very ſlightly mentioned, &c. See Ath. et Faſti 'Oxon. Vol. ii. p. 806. He the ſaid Dr. Bathurſt 'did alſo ſhew to Dr. John Wallis the Memoire 'of his Election to the Cuſtodie of the Archives, 'under he delighted to ſurprize the ſcholars, when walking in the grove at unſeaſonable hours; on which occaſions he frequently carried a whip in his hand, an inſtrument of academical correction, then not entirely laid aſide. But this he practiſed, on account of the pleaſure he took in giving ſo odd an alarm, rather than from any principle of approving, or intention of applying an illiberal puniſhment (cc). His writings, under the title of literary remains, &c. are annexed to the account of his life, by Mr. Warton, who has given a characteriſtic account of them, well worthy the peruſal of all who have any curioſity in ſuch matters. We ſhall only here take notice, that he chiefly excelled in Latin poetry: Ovid was (cc) Warton, p. 202.

' under the year 1657, as Dr. Wallis did afterwards ' intimate to the author; but when the hiſtory or annals of the ſaid univerſity were printed, that memoire was omitted, becauſe the annals reached no farther than the latter end of 1648. When the author alſo communicated to the ſaid Dr. Bathurſt his ſecond book of the ſaid hiſtoire, he daſhed out many things relating to Trin. Coll. and ſomething of the epitaph of Dr. Rob. Harris there: which epitaph Dr. Bathurſt had made, but afterwards was aſhamed of it (47).' As to Mr. Wood's calling Dr. Bathurſt a moſt falſe perſon, few friends of the Doctor, as Mr. Warton juſtly obſerves, who are acquainted with Wood's manner, will be offended at this expreſſion (48). Dr. Robert Harris had been appointed Preſident of Trinity College by the parliamentary party, when Dr. Hannibal Potter was ejected from his Headſhip. In Dr. Harris's epitaph, Dr. Bathurſt had ſtiled him Præſes æternum celebrandus, which are the words ſaid to have been ſtruck out (49). In another place, Mr. Wood writes thus: ' James ' of Ch. Ch. made his logic ſpeech at the ſchools, ' and reflected on Dr. Bathurſt late Vice-Chancellor, ' for his former carriage in this office. Dr. Bathurſt ' is no great friend to the Maſters, and hath ſaid it ' often, that many of them deſerved to be put out ' of the houſe (50).' What ground there was for this laſt aſſertion, we are not able to ſay: but it is certain, from Dr. Bathurſt's ſpeech, when he quitted the Vice-Chancellorſhip, that there were ſome perſons who had, though we believe very unjuſtly, impugned his conduct (51). Anthony Wood, who appears to have been no admirer of women in general, expreſſes himſelf in his uſual ſplenetic manner concerning Mrs. Bathurſt. ' Dr. Bathurſt took his ' place of Vice-Chancellor, a man of good parts, ' and able to do good things, but he has a wife ' that ſcorns that he ſhould be in print; a ſcornful ' woman ſcorns that he was Dean of Wells: no ' need of marrying ſuch a woman, who is ſo conceited, that ſhe thinks herſelf fit to govern a college or univerſity (52).' No judicious reader will hence be induced to form an opinion to the lady's prejudice. Dr. Bathurſt himſelf gave the following character of her, in the epitaph which he wrote to her memory: ' Beſides the graceful comelineſs of her ' perſon, ſhe was endowed with all the accompliſhments of education, fit for her ſex and quality. ' Her prudence, piety, and other virtues, were very ' exemplary; and ſo ſtudious was ſhe in her younger ' time, till the cares of her eſtate and family tooke ' her off, that ſhe underſtood moſt of the chiefe languages, both ancient and moderne, beſides other ' parts of learning, without the leaſt vanity or oſtentation (53).'

(47) Life of Anthony Wood, p. 228. 230.

(48) Warton, ubi ſupra, p. 145. Note.

(49) Life of Anthony Wood, p. 230. Note.

(50) Ibid. p. 271.

(51) Bathurſt's Remains, p. 83.

(52) Wood, ubi ſupra, p. 257.

(53) Life of Bathurſt, ubi ſupra, p. 215, 216.

Among the letters written by Dr. Bathurſt, to promote the deſign of carrying on the improvements of his college, there is one which ſo agreeably diſplays the union of vivacity and benevolence in his character, that we cannot withhold it from our readers. It was in return to one from a lady of quality, who, having been applied to for a benefaction, pleaded the gout in her right hand, and the payment of ſeveral thouſand pounds to her five grand-children.

' MADAM,

' I had ſooner returned my thanks for the honour ' of your ladyſhip's letter, had not the carrier's times ' been miſtaken by my ſervant. I am ſorry to underſtand by it, that your ladyſhip has been ſo ſeverely handled by that malady, which is uſually accounted the companion of the rich; and that my ' letter ſhould have the ill fortune to come when it ' was in your right hand, which the ſcripture makes ' to be the giving hand. But ſince I find it ſo well ' recovered as to write with its wonted accurateneſs, ' I hope it will alſo e'er long be able to extend itſelfe ' toward the promoting of that pious worke, which ' now humbly craves your aſſiſtance. The many ' thouſands your ladyſhip is pleaſed to mention yourſelfe engaged in, do but ſharpen our appetites, and ' encreaſe our hopes, that, though the feaſt goes ' another way, yet a ſmall crumb may poſſibly fall ' from ſo plentifull a table. Five or ten pounds will ' not be miſſed amongſt ſuch great ſums; and yet ' will make a welcome addition to our ſlender ſtock. ' Beſides the honour that will accrue to us, when ' preſent and future times ſhall find ſo worthy a name ' recorded among our benefactors.

' Whatever be the event, yet your ladyſhip's undeſerved favours to myſelfe, and affectionate inclinations expreſſed toward the worke we are now ' about, ſhall ever, with the utmoſt reſpect and gratitude, be acknowledged by,

' Hon. Madam,

' Your ladyſhip's moſt humble, &c.

' Oxon, Trin. Coll. R. BATHURST.

' March 17, 1693-4 (54).'

Dr. Bathurſt, in his poem on Hobbes's Treatiſe on the Nature of Man, hath carried his encomium upon that philoſopher very far. He repreſents him as capable of Prometheus's bold exploit, and aſks what God had inſpired him with a divine light, and enabled him to penetrate into things, which for ages had been entirely concealed. He deſcribes his mind as equal to the comprehenſion of every mind, while none could conceive the extent of Mr. Hobbes's; and ſays, that he enjoyed the ſingular praiſe of doing the next thing to creating a ſoul, the ſhewing what it is.

(54) Ibid. p. 76, 77.

' Conſultor audax, et Promethëi potens
' Facinoris, anime! quis tibi dedit Deus
' Hæc intueri Sæculis longè abdita,
' Oculoſque luce tinxit ambroſiâ tuos?
' Tu mentis omnis, at tuæ nulla eſt capax.
' Hâc laude ſolus fruere: divinum eſt opus
' Animam creare; proximum huic, oſtendere (55).'

(55) Bathurſt's Literary Remains, p. 256.

To what hath been ſaid in the note [O], it may be added, that Hobbes, notwithſtanding his erroneous and dangerous principles, diſplayed great ſagacity in many of his obſervations. He contributed to emancipate the learned from the ſhackles of the ſchool philoſophy, and to introduce a bold and liberal method of enquiry into the nature and operations of the human mind. By this means, however great the miſtakes might be into which he fell, he threw out uſeful hints, which were afterwards improved upon by more ſober philoſophers. Neither is it ſurpriſing, that ſome ſhould be ſo far dazzled with the ſplendor of his firſt apprehended diſcoveries, as not to be able immediately to perceive the full tendency of his opinions. His real excellencies and defects will be the ſubject of future conſideration.

Dr. Bathurſt's productions, though they have great merit in their particular way, and may be read with much pleaſure, are not written in ſuch a taſte as entitles them to imitation. This is acknowledged by Mr. Warton. ' His Latin orations, ſays that ingenious ' Biographer, are wonderful ſpecimens of wit and ' antitheſis, which were the delight of his age. ' They want upon the whole the purity and ſimplicity of Tully's eloquence, but even exceed ' the ſententious ſmartneſs of Seneca, and the ſurpriſing turns of Pliny. They are perpetually ſpirited, and diſcover an uncommon quickneſs of ' thought. His manner is conciſe and abrupt, but ' yet perſpicuous and eaſy. His alluſions are delicate, and his obſervations ſenſible and animated. ' His ſentiments of congratulation or indignation are ' equally forcible: his compliments are moſt elewas the principal pattern, and his favourite claſſic. One of his pupils having aſked him what book among all others he choſe to recommend? he anſwered, Ovid's Metamorphoſes. The pupil, in conſequence of this advice, having carefully peruſed the Metamorphoſes, deſired to be informed what other proper book it would be moſt neceſſary for him to read after Ovid; upon which Dr. Bathurſt adviſed him to read Ovid's Metamorphoſes a ſecond time. He had ſo mean an opinion of his performances in divinity, that in his will he enjoins his executors, in a more particular manner, entirely to ſuppreſs all his papers relating to that ſubject, and not even to permit them ſo much as to be peruſed by any, excepting by a very few ſuch friends as were likely to read them with candour (dd). We are told, however, that on Sunday, March 20, 1680, he preached before the houſe of Commons at St. Mary's, the univerſity church, and gave great content (ee).

' gantly

(ee) Of the King's coming to Oxford. MSS. Wood's diary, qu. in Muſ. Aſhmol.

(dd) Mr. Warton, p. 220, & ſeq. has given ſome ſpeciment which ſhew them to be much in the manner of Dr. South, but with more elegance of alluſion and quickneſs of imagination.

'gantly turned, and his ſatire is moſt ingeniouſly ſe-
'vere. Theſe compoſitions are extremely agreea'ble to read, but in the preſent improvement of 'claſſical taſte, not ſo proper to be imitated. They 'are moreover entertaining, as a picture of the times,
'and a hiſtory of the ſtate of academical literature.
'This ſmartneſs does not deſert our author even on 'philoſophical ſubjects (56).' Among Dr. Bathurſt's Oratiunculæ, his addreſs to the convocation, about forming the barbers of Oxford into a company, is a moſt admirable ſpecimen of his humour, and of that facetious invention, with which few Vice-Chancellors would have ventured to enforce and enliven ſuch a ſubject (57). With regard to the Doctor's Latin poetry, though his hexameters have an admirable facility, an harmonious verſification, much terſeneſs and happineſs of expreſſion, and a certain original air, they will be thought, nevertheleſs, too pointed and ingenious by the lovers of Virgil's ſimple beauties. The two poems which he hath left in iambics (58) make it to be wiſhed that he had written more in that meaſure. 'That pregnant brevity,
'ſays Mr. Warton, which conſtitutes the dignity 'and energy of the iambic, ſeems to have been his
'talent (59).' Dr. Bathurſt's Engliſh poetry has that roughneſs of verſification which was, in a great degree, the fault of the times. How manly and beautiful his conceptions were, will appear from the following compariſon, in the lines upon the death of Mr. Selden.

'We aſk not now for anceſtors, nor care
'Though Selden do no kindred boaſt, nor heir;
'Such worth beſt ſtands alone, and joyes to be
'To't-ſelf both founder and poſteritye.
'As when old Nilus, who with bounteous flowes
'Waters an hundred nations as he goes,
'Scattering rich harveſts, keeps his ſacred head
'Amidſt the clouds ſtill undiſcovered (60).'

(60) Ibid Remains, p. 291.

Though Dr. Bathurſt was truly reſpectable as an author, he doth not appear to have had any great ambition of ſhining in that light. The pieces written by him were moſt of them drawn from him by particular occaſions and circumſtances. He chiefly contented himſelf with having a large ſtore of learning in his own mind, and with being a zealous encourager of literary purſuits and undertakings. His prime glory undoubtedly ariſes from his admirable government of his college, from the reputation to which he raiſed it, from the active benevolence of his temper, and from his noble benefactions. He had, beſides, a vivacity and chearfulneſs of manners, with a turn of humour in his character, which have rendered his memory peculiarly agreeable. This we have obſerved to be the caſe with Dr. Aldrich, and a few others; who have hence left ſuch a pleaſing remembrance behind them as hath not been attained by learned men, of equal general merit, who happened to have received a more ſevere and ſolemn caſt of diſpoſition.] K.

(56) Life, ubi ſupra, p. 216, 217.

(57) Ibid. p. 218. Remains, ubi ſupra, p. 98. 10.

(58) The Verſes to Hobbes, and thoſe on the peace with Holland, in 1654. Vide Remains, p. 255. 259.

(59) Life p. 225, 226.

END OF THE FIRST VOLUME.

CMC
MVSEVM
BRITANNICVM